THE

TO THE READER.

BY way of preface to this work, ſome things there be, of which I think fit to advertiſe the reader, and ſome things in which I ſhall beg his favour. And,

Firſt, Becauſe it may be uſeful to read the epiſtles of St Paul, not in the order in which they are placed in our Bibles, but rather in that order of time in which they were written; I here think fit to place them according to that order, following the chronology of Biſhop Pearſon.

A. D. 52.	The firſt epiſtle to the Theſſalonians.
A. D. 53.	The ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians.
A. D. 57.	The firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians.
	The epiſtle to the Galatians.
	The ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians.
	The epiſtle to the Romans.
A. D. 62.	The epiſtle to the Epheſians.
	The epiſtle to the Philippians.
	The epiſtle to the Coloſſians.
	The epiſtle to Philemon.
A. D. 63.	The epiſtle to the Hebrews.
A. D. 65.	The firſt epiſtle to Timothy.
	The epiſtle to Titus.
A. D. 67.	The ſecond epiſtle to Timothy.

I have, in the prefaces to theſe epiſtles, given the reaſons why I place the writing of them about the time aſſigned; only of the time of writing the epiſtle to the Galatians, I have there ſaid nothing: I therefore here ſubjoin the reaſon why it is placed in the ſame year with the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, viz. becauſe St Paul, at his firſt coming to Galatia, converts them to the Chriſtian faith, Acts 16. 6. at his ſecond advent, he ſtrengthens the brethren there, Acts 18. 23. and in his epiſtle to them, he marvels that they were ſo ſoon removed from him that called them to another goſpel, chap. 1. 6. it therefore could not be written long after he had been with them to ſtrengthen them, which yet was before he had begun his three years abode at Epheſus, Acts 19. 1. 31. at the very cloſe of which, the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians is ſuppoſed to have been written.

I deſire the reader to take an eſtimate of the true date of theſe epiſtles, not from what may have ſlipped from me by the by in a note, and hath been overlooked in the review of my papers, but from what is here ſet down, and is confirmed in the prefaces to theſe epiſtles.

The uſe that may be made of obſerving this order, I ſhall exemplify in two inſtances. Of which the Firſt is that of Demas, concerning whom Dr Lightfoot, Harm. p. 137. Beza, Eſthius, and others ſay, that though he left St Paul for a ſeaſon, yet after he returned to him: Becauſe, ſay they, in two epiſtles, written after that to Timothy, in which he is ſaid to have forſaken him, having loved this preſent world, 2 Tim 4. 10. he is reckoned among the co-workers with St Paul, viz. Col. 4. 14. Philem. 24. But I have deſtroyed the foundation of this argument, by eſtabliſhing the opinion of the ancients, that the ſecond epiſtle to Timothy was the laſt that St Paul writ; and therefore the opinion of Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, that he did μετὰ ταῦτα ῥᾳθυμῆσαι, afterwards become ſlothful, and, ſaith Oecumenius, returned again εἰς Ἑλληνισμὸν, to Heatheniſm, is the more probable.

The ſecond relates to that opinion of Grotius, that St Paul ſpake for a time, as if he had believed that the day of judgment might happen in his time, and that this is proved from 1 Cor. 15. 53. 2 Cor. 5. 1. 2. 3. Whereas in his ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, writ four years before thoſe to the Corinthians, he ſaith what is ſufficient to ſhew, he could not be of that opinion, or have declared any thing of that nature, and therefore could not afterwards ſay any thing to that purpoſe. See the note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 15.

Secondly,

Secondly, I advertiſe the reader, that this work has been retarded by the animadverſions of Mr Le Clerc upon the Reverend and Learned Dr Hammond; which having peruſed, I found ſo many things ſaid in favour of the Arians, and ſo many unworthy reflections upon the writings of St Paul, that I choſe rather to review and tranſcribe a conſiderable part of this work, than ſuffer thoſe things to paſs without an antidote. I acknowledge him to be a learned perſon, and honour his parts; and I know he cannot juſtly be offended with me, for being concerned for what I judge to be the truth, and for the honour of St Paul, who has been ſomewhat rudely handled by him.

Thirdly, That I have been ſo often forced to differ from the ſame Reverend perſon he attacks ſometimes ſo indecently, is to me a matter of regret; but it hath truly been obſerved by others, that this great man had two darling opinions, viz. That the hereſy of the Gnoſtics, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, were the great things to which no little part of theſe epiſtles had relation; in which I have offered my reaſons why I diſſent from him, retaining ſtill a juſt veneration for his parts and piety.

Fourthly, I advertiſe him, that though, in this fourth edition of the epiſtles, I have put the whole paraphraſe of every chapter before the annotations belonging to that chapter, that ſo they might the better agree with the goſpels contrived in that method; and that the chief additions to, or alterations in the annotations, are now tranſferred to their proper places; yet they are alſo printed apart, for the uſe of them who have the firſt edition.

Laſtly, I advertiſe him, that I have, as exactly as I could, made indexes, 1. of all the Greek words and particles, 2. of all the ſcripture-phraſes explained, and, 3. of all the material doctrines handled in theſe annotations.

The things in which I beg the reader's favour, are,

1. That where he finds, or thinks, that I have erred either in point of doctrine, or the interpretation of the ſcriptures, as doubtleſs in the latter I have ſometimes done, he would be ſo kind as to let me know my errors; which, upon conviction, I will not only own, but do it with all due acknowledgments and thankfulneſs to him who ſhall do that kind office to me.

2. That if in any thing I ſeem to him to differ from the received doctrine of the church of England, as ſome may haply conceive I do in the annotations on the fifth chapter to the Romans; he would do me the juſtice to believe, that, as he thinks I do, ſo I conceive I do not, contradict her doctrine; and alſo would conſider, that even the church of Rome allows her commentators to vary from the ſenſe of any particular ſcripture on which they build their doctrines, provided they ſay nothing which doth expreſsly contradict them.

3. That if he ſhould receive any advantage from this work, eſpecially if it ſhould be ſo happy as to ſuggeſt to him any thing which may render him the better man, he would give God the glory of it, and pray for

His friend and ſervant,

DANIEL WHITBY.

This Book contains, beſides the Paraphraſe and Commentary upon all the Epiſtles,

A General preface, proving the truth and certainty of Chriſtian faith.

Five particular prefaces.

1. To the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, aſſerting the reſurrection of the ſame body that dieth, and anſwering the objections againſt it.
2. To the epiſtle to the Galatians, concerning the nature of faith, and touching juſtification by faith.
3. To the ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, concerning the man of ſin.
4. To the epiſtle to Titus, concerning this epiſcopal juriſdiction of Timothy and Titus, and the ſucceſſion of biſhops in all Chriſtian churches.
5. To the epiſtle of St John, inquiring whether this propoſition, That Jeſus is the Chriſt, be all that is neceſſary to be believed to juſtification, or to make a member of Chriſt's church and body.

And eight appendixes.

1. To the eleventh chapter to the Romans, proving that there will be a general converſion of the Jewiſh nation to the Chriſtian faith.
2. To 1 Cor. 1 30. concerning the imputation of Chriſt's perfect righteouſneſs to us for juſtification.
3. To the ſixth chapter of the ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, touching the neceſſity of divine aſſiſtance for the due performance of our duty, and explaining the reaſon and the manner of it.
4. An advertiſement relating to the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians.
5. To the firſt chapter of the ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, proving, that the eternal puniſhment of thoſe who die in their ſins, is well conſiſtent both with the juſtice and the goodneſs of God.
6. A diſcourſe, by way of inquiry, whether the apoſtles, in their writings, ſpake as conceiving the day of judgment might be in their days.
7. A parallel betwixt the Jewiſh and the Roman antichriſt.
8. To the whole, touching the true ſenſe of the millennium mentioned, Rev. 20. 4.

CONCERNING

CONTENTS.

I. That what is delivered in these epistles as necessary to be believed or done, must be as necessary to be believed and done, as what is contained in the gospels: that there are some things necessary to be believed and done, contained in these epistles, which are not clearly delivered in the holy gospels, § I. The truth of the Christian religion proved, 1. From what our Saviour promised and undertook, and what the apostles declared concerning the gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, § II. 2. From plain matter of fact concerning this effusion of the Holy Ghost, and his miraculous gifts related in the epistles, § III. 3. From the confident appeals of the apostles and primitive professors, to those gifts, in their contests and debates with friends and adversaries, believers and rejecters of the Christian faith, § IV. 4. From the prayers and thanksgivings made for them, the exhortations and directions given in these epistles concerning these miraculous gifts, § V. 5. From what is required to be done and suffered by all Christians upon no other inducements or enjoyments, than what depended on the truth and certainty of these gifts, § VI. 6. That these epistles were indited whilst the apostles lived, and are proved genuine by more authentic arguments than can be produced for any book, writing, charter, law, or statute. The external arguments to prove them genuine, § VII. The internal arguments, § VIII. The truth of Christianity proved, 7. From a particular consideration of these gifts: as, (1.) The gift of healing, § IX. (2.) Of ejecting devils out of men, their temples, and their oracles, § X. (3.) From the gift of tongues, § XI. (4.) Of prophecy, § XII. Of discerning spirits, § XIII. That these extraordinary gifts were conferred upon all other churches not mentioned in these epistles, § XIV. That they continued in the two first ages of the church, § XV. What engagements the truth of Christianity lays upon us to live suitably to the rules delivered in those sacred records, § XVI.

THAT these epistles were indited by divine assistance, and were received from the beginning, as epistles written by the conduct and assistance of the Spirit of God, I have endeavoured to evince in the general preface to the gospels.

§ I. Hence then it follows, that what the apostles have delivered in these epistles as necessary to be believed or done by Christians, must be as necessary to be believed and practised in order to salvation, as what was personally taught by Christ himself, and is contained in the gospels; they being, in the writing these epistles, the servants, apostles, ambassadors, and ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God; and the doctrines and precepts they delivered in them, being the will, the mind, the truth, and the commandments of God.

Now, evident it will be to any one who judiciously reads these epistles, that they contain some things delivered and done, which were not clearly taught by Christ whilst he was on earth, nor are clearly delivered in the gospels; as we may learn,

1. From the doctrines contained in these epistles: as, v. g. That by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified, Rom. 13. 20. That both Jew and Gentile, being under condemnation, were only to be justified freely by God's grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God had set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, ver. 25. That if righteousness came by the law, then was Christ dead in vain, Gal. 2. 21. That as many as are of the law, are under the curse, chap. 3. 16. That if we be circumcised, Christ shall profit us nothing; Christ is become of none effect to them that are under the law, they are fallen from grace, chap. 5. 2. 5. That the law was to continue only till the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 10. and was then to be disannulled for the weakness and unprofitableness of it, chap. 7. 18. That Christ is a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, chap. 5. 5. 6. That he hath an unchangeable priesthood; that he in heaven is continually making interceſſion for us, and therefore is able to ſave us to the utmoſt, chap. 7. 24. 25. For all theſe doctrines clearly delivered in theſe epiſtles, are either not to be found at all, or not ſo clearly in the goſpels.

2. In theſe epiſtles only have we inſtructions about many great and neceſſary duties; as, v. g. That all our thankſgivings are to be offered up to God in the name of Chriſt, Eph. 5. 8. 20. 1 Theſſ. 5. 18. Heb. 13. 14. 15. The duties which we owe to our civil governors are only hinted in theſe words of Chriſt, Render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, but are enlarged upon in the epiſtles to the Romans, chap. 13. to Titus, chap. 3. 1. and in the firſt epiſtle of St Peter, 1 ep. 2. 10. 17. So alſo are the duties we owe to our ſpiritual ſuperiors taught more expreſsly in theſe epiſtles, Gal. 6. 6. 1 Theſſ. 5. 12. 13. Heb. 13. 17. 18. In fine, all the particular duties belonging to the relations of huſband and wife, parents and children, maſters and ſervants, are particularly handled in theſe epiſtles, Eph. 5. 28. 33. 6. 1. 9. Col. 3. 11. 25. but are ſcarce ever mentioned in the goſpels. But it may be objected,

Obj. 1. That "theſe epiſtles were written to thoſe who were in the faith already, and ſo could not be deſigned to teach "them the fundamental articles, and points neceſſary to ſalvation, or to inſtruct them in what was neceſſary to make them "Chriſtians."

Anſ. It follows not from their being Chriſtians already, that the apoſtles deſigned not to write to them in theſe epiſtles of any fundamental articles or points neceſſary to ſalvation; for it is very plain they do ſo. St Paul in his epiſtle to the Corinthians, 1 ep. 15. 3. writes of the reſurrection of the dead, and of Chriſt's death and reſurrection, as of doctrines neceſſary to be believed: and in his epiſtle to the Galatians, of ſeeking juſtification by the works of the law, as a thing oppoſite to, and deſtructive of the grace of Chriſt. And ſince there were among them falſe apoſtles, and deceitful workers, who corrupted the word, and handled the word of God deceitfully, 2 Cor. 2. 17.; 4. 2. yea, corrupted their minds from the ſimplicity of Chriſt, chap. 11. 3. turned them from him that called them to another goſpel, Gal. 1. 6. ſought to deprive them of their reward, Col. 2. 18. 19. and ſeparate them from their head Chriſt Jeſus; who put away a good conſcience, and ſo made ſhipwreck of the faith, 1 Tim. 2. 19. whoſe doctrine did ſpread as a gangrene, and overthrew the faith of ſome, 2 Tim. 2. 16. many diſputers of corrupt minds, turning from the truth, 1 Tim. 6. 5. many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, who ſubverted whole houſes, teaching things that they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake, Tit. 1. 10. 11. Muſt not theſe things adminiſter occaſion to theſe ſacred penmen, to endeavour to eſtabliſh and confirm them in the faith, by letting them they wrote to, know the moment of thoſe articles, the neceſſity of that faith they had been taught, and the pernicious conſequences of thoſe practices to which they were ſeduced by theſe deceivers?

Again, ſeeing theſe writings were intended as a rule, not to them only to whom they were ſent, but to all future ages of the church; and the Spirit expreſsly told them, that in the latter days ſome ſhould depart from the faith, giving heed to ſeducing ſpirits, and doctrines of devils, 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2.; that the time would come, when they would not endure ſound doctrine, but would turn their ears from the truth, 2 Tim. 4. 3. 4.; when falſe prophets ſhould ariſe among them, bringing in damnable doctrines, whoſe pernicious ways many ſhould follow, 2 Pet. 2. 1. 2.: ſeeing they knew, that after their departure grievous wolves would enter in, not ſparing the flock, Acts 20. 29. 30.: Muſt not all theſe conſiderations give juſt occaſion to them to write of the great articles of Chriſtian faith, and of the neceſſary points of Chriſtian converſation, to preſerve them, and thoſe that come after them, from their damnable doctrines, and pernicious ways?

Moreover, this objection is therefore inſignificant, becauſe the apoſtles do inform us, that they found it ſafe to write the ſame things to them they had heard, Phil. 3. 1. though they knew the truth and were confirmed in it, 1 John 2. 21. that they might have theſe things always in remembrance, 2 Pet. 1. 12. 15. and that ſome, who, for the time of their converſion, might have been great proficients in the faith, had yet need to be taught again the firſt principles of the oracles of God, Heb. 5. 12.

Obj. 2. It alſo may be ſaid, "That theſe epiſtles were writ upon particular occaſions, and without thoſe occaſions had "not been written; and ſo cannot be thought neceſſary to ſalvation."

Anſ. This objection is neither exactly true of all the epiſtles, nor of all that is contained in them: not of all the epiſtles, for it appears not that five of the general epiſtles, or that the epiſtle to the Romans, to the Epheſians, and to the Hebrews, were writ upon particular occaſions, unleſs the inſtructing men in the faith, and preſerving them from hereſy, or apoſtaſy, be called particular occaſions; and where this doth appear, it is very evident, that when the apoſtles had writ what they thought proper upon thoſe occaſions, they add many excellent rules of piety and virtue.

Anſ. 2. 2dly, Were it exactly true, that all the epiſtles were writ upon particular occaſions, it will not follow hence that they were not directed, in writing them, by the Holy Spirit; or, that they contain nothing neceſſary to be believed or done, in order to ſalvation. For the book of pſalms was not only writ upon particular occaſions, but was alſo adapted to, and fitted for them. The prophets were all ſent by God, to teſtify againſt, and call the Jews to repentance for ſins committed in their time, to reform their manners, or comfort them in their diſtreſſes, that is, upon particular occaſions; but will it therefore follow, that they did not write by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, or that there is nothing in the pſalms, or in the prophets, which was neceſſary to be believed or practiſed by the Jews? Moreover, the goſpel of St Luke was writ upon a particular occaſion, viz. to inſtruct Theophilus in the certainty of the things he had been taught; and yet Epiphanius informs us, that (a) "the Holy Ghoſt compelled and ſtimulated him to the work." The goſpel of St Mark was writ, ſay the ancients, at the requeſt of the converts at Rome; and yet he writ it, ſaith (b) Epi-phanius, πνέυματι ἁγίῳ ἐμπεφορημένος, by the impulse of the Holy Ghost. They also say, that St John was importuned by all the Asiatics to write his gospel; and yet, saith (c) Epiphanius, "the Holy Spirit did inwardly impel him to the writing "of it." The gospel of St Matthew, say (d) they, was indited at the request of the Hebrews, that he might supply, by writing, the want of his presence with them. So that we see the writings of the apostles and evangelists may be occasionally penned, and yet be the products of the Holy Ghost, and contain things necessary to be believed and done.

Ans. 3. 3*dly*, The particular occasions of some of these writings being the errors or waverings of Christians in fundamental points, as appears from the epistles to the Corinthians, Galatians, &c. and in others, the busy industry of false apostles and deceitful workers, to pervert them from the faith; that these epistles were writ on such occasions, is rather a presumption, that they were writ upon some fundamental points, than that they could not be indited upon these occasions.

Moreover, great advantages arise from the occasional writing these epistles, and such as might induce the Holy Spirit to excite them to that work. For,

1. All the occasions which they took to write from the disorders, errors, heresies, mistakes, which at first crept into the church, render these writings standing rules for the decision of like cases through all future ages.

2. The deportment of the apostles towards these erroneous persons, and disorderly walkers, the care they used to recover, or inform them better, the zeal and tenderness they shewed, and the rules they laid down in those cases, are excellent precedents and directions for all church-governors, in cases of like nature.

3. All the occasions which they had to write for the direction of church-governors, how to behave themselves in the church of God, to give rules for the qualifications of those who were to be admitted to those offices, and touching their behaviour in them, for the settlement of the affairs of the church, and the decent and regular performance of divine service, afford us standing rules of government, and of admitting and ordaining a succession of those divers orders in the church.

Lastly, These various occasions give us full assurance, that these epistles must be written in those very times when these disorders happened, and these errors crept into the church, and so take off all jealousy, or suspicion, that they were writings contrived in the following ages of the church; whereas, had their writings been only systems of theological doctrines, and rules of life, which equally concerned all the ages of the church, it might have been more plausibly objected, that they were framed by some Christian bishops assembled for that end.

Obj. 3. But if all, or most of the truths declared in these epistles, were to be received and believed as fundamental articles, what then became of those Christians who were fallen asleep before those things in the epistles were revealed to them?

Ans. 1. This question equally concerns the evangelists, and more especially the gospel of St John, which, say the ancients, were either the (e) last portion of scripture which was written, or the last, save his epistles, it being written after his return from his exile in Patmos, to Ephesus; and so, if it contain any fundamental articles, as necessary rules of life, what became of those Christians who died before they were revealed in it?

Ans. 2. We say not, that all, or most of the truths, declared, either in the epistles or gospels, are to be accounted fundamental, or necessary articles; but only that some of them ought to be so accounted, especially those which have this character of a necessary article, or rule of life; that the denial, or non-practice of them, is represented as that which will endanger our salvation, or cut us off from the communion of the church.

Ans. 3. It is also a precarious supposition, that they who died before the epistles were writ to them, must die before the necessary things contained in them were revealed to them, seeing we know that the apostles writ the same things which they had preached before; and St Luke writ his gospel, that Theophilus might know the certainty of the things he had been taught: and in those times of the effusion of the Spirit of wisdom and of knowledge, they had an unction which could teach them all things, 1 John 2. 27. and so supply the unavoidable defects of outward teachers.

Obj. 4. The gospel was to be preached to the poor; now, they are not capable of sublime notions, nor can they comprehend mysterious reasonings.

Ans. 1. Whether this objection be intended against the necessity of believing the epistles of St Paul only, or also the gospel of St John, is uncertain; the sublime notions and mysterious reasonings being common to both.

Ans. 2. There seemeth no necessity of troubling the poor common people with sublime notions, or mysterious reasonings, since both the ancient church, and our own catechism declare, that all the articles of Christian faith, common to all that bear that name, are comprised in the apostles creed. For when the child saith, "My godfathers and my godmo-"thers promised I should believe all the articles of the Christian faith," since it is evident they only stipulated for the belief of the apostles creed in baptism, and when he doth rehearse those articles, he only doth rehearse the apostles creed; it is certain, that, by our catechism, it must be supposed to contain all the articles of the Christian faith.

Moreover, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to make such persons have a right conception of the spiritual nature, and the attributes of God, or to enable them by reason, to prove the providence of God, or the immortality of the soul; but yet these things must be proposed to them as articles or foundations of their faith. And as it is not very difficult for them to learn from ſcripture the truth of theſe things; ſo neither is it difficult from the ſame ſcripture to learn the truth of all the articles of the apoſtles creed, even in that ſenſe in which all Chriſtian ages did receive them.

In a word, were theſe mechanics as much concerned for ſpirituals, as they are for temporals, as many of them have attained to great proficiency in their reſpective arts, ſo might they alſo, by a Chriſtian diligence, attain a competent proficiency in all the neceſſary articles of Chriſtian faith, and in the rules of Chriſtian piety, or of their duty to God and man. Now, Chriſtianity being that doctrine which is after godlineſs, Tit. 1. 1. I believe nothing is propoſed in it as neceſſary to be believed to ſalvation, which hath not ſome tendency to the promotion of true piety.

§ II. Having thus eſtabliſhed the divine authority of theſe epiſtles, I ſhall endeavour to confirm the truth of Chriſtian faith, from what is copiouſly delivered in them.

This is of abſolute neceſſity in this degenerate age, in which all manner of impiety exceedingly abounds, and men are by their lives diſpoſed, and even concerned to queſtion the truth of that religion, and of thoſe writings, which threaten the ſevereſt puniſhments to their enormities; and do induſtriouſly, and even impudently, purſue this black deſign both in their diſcourſes and writings.

Now, to prove againſt theſe enemies of revealed religion, the truth and certainty of Chriſtian faith, from what is copiouſly delivered in theſe epiſtles, it will be only requiſite to ſhew, that they contain a declaration of ſuch things as could not poſſibly be true, but they muſt alſo be a full and convincing demonſtration of the truth of Chriſtian faith, and that we have great reaſon to believe the truth of what is thus related by them. And,

I. That they contain a declaration of ſuch things as could not poſſibly be true, but they muſt alſo be a full and convincing demonſtration of the truth of Chriſtian faith, the declaration they afford will be ſufficient to evince: for it was this,

" That the miraculous gifts and powerful operations of the Holy Ghoſt, were plentifully afforded to them who preached " the goſpel to the world, and alſo to thoſe Chriſtian churches which received the goſpel, and embraced the faith they " taught."

By way of preface to what I ſhall collect from theſe epiſtles, concerning theſe miraculous gifts and operations of the Holy Ghoſt, it may deſerve to be conſidered, that as the bleſſed Jeſus ſpake as never man ſpake, that is, delivered ſuch juſt, holy, beneficial commands, as never were before made known to the world; and did, for confirmation of his doctrine, the works that no other man did: ſo was he pleaſed to lay the truth of his prophetic office upon ſuch future and miraculous events, as no impoſtor, that had any wit, would undertake, or could be able to perform.

For the prophecies which he had undertaken to fulfil, and his own frequent declarations, made it neceſſary, 1. That he ſhould die a peculiar death, i. e. by being lifted up upon the croſs. 2. That in three days he ſhould riſe again. 3. That after his reſurrection his goſpel ſhould, in the ſpace of forty years, or before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, be propagated throughout the world, or the whole Roman empire. 4. That in order to the propagation of it, the Holy Ghoſt ſhould plentifully be vouchſafed to his apoſtles, and ſhould endue them with power from on high, and even enable them to do greater works than he himſelf had done, John 14. 12.

At the great day of the feaſt of tabernacles, when all the Jews aſſembled at Jeruſalem were joyful in their Beth Haſchoavah, or houſe of drawing water, and were, ſay their traditions, in expectation that the Holy Ghoſt would fall upon them, Jeſus ſtood and cried, ſaying, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me, and drink; he that believeth in me, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living waters. This ſpake he of the Spirit, which they that believed on him ſhould receive, John 7. 37. 38. And at the cloſe of his life on earth, he comforts his diſciples with the promiſe of this Holy Ghoſt, who ſhould continue with them, not only to teach them all things, and bring all things to their remembrance; but alſo to convince the world of ſin, becauſe they believed not in him; and of his righteouſneſs, who was ſo glorioufly exalted to the right hand of God his Father; and of a future judgment, becauſe the prince of this world, being caſt out from thoſe he had poſſeſſed, was judged, John 16. 7. 11. And after his reſurrection he ſpeaks thus to them: Behold, I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you; for ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, not many days hence, Luke 24. 49. And ye ſhall receive power, after the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you, and ye ſhall be witneſſes to me both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the utmoſt parts of the earth, Acts 1. 8. And, laſtly, to encourage others to believe the doctrine which they taught, he ſaith, Theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe; in my name ſhall they caſt out devils, they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues, they ſhall take up ſerpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it ſhall not hurt them; they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover. Now, I deſire to know whether any thing of this nature was ever undertaken, or laid as the foundation of their credit, by any other author of any doctrine, religion, ſect, or hereſy? whether they ever made their own violent death and reſurrection, the foundation of their veracity? or promiſed the like powers and aſſiſtances, when they were riſen, to thoſe who ſhould promote, or ſhould embrace their doctrine? or whether that which no man elſe durſt undertake, was not performed by the holy Jeſus ſo effectually, as that his doctrine preſently prevailed, and was received throughout the world, in ſpite of all the oppoſition of men and devils made againſt it, and wrought in Chriſtians ſuch a laſting faith, as time and vice, though moſt concerned to do it, was never able to deface?

But though we have no inſtances of any other perſons that made the like attempts, yet do our Lord's diſciples tread exactly in their maſter's ſteps: for the firſt thing which they declared to the world was this, that the forerunner of their Lord, John the Baptiſt, when Jeruſalem, and all Judea, and all the regions about Jordan, and in particular the Phariſees and Sadducees, the publicans and ſoldiers, repaired to his baptiſm, declared in the audience of them all, there was one ſhortly to come after him, one that ſtood then among them, who would baptize them with the Holy Ghoſt and fire, Matth. 3. 11. They alſo add that their Lord, both before and after his reſurrection, made a like promiſe to them, that he would ſuddenly ſend down down upon them the Spirit promiſed by the Father, that they ſhould receive power from on high, and be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo ſhould be enabled to be witneſſes of his reſurrection, and of his doctrine.

When theſe apoſtles had themſelves received the Holy Ghoſt, they declare, they only had received what God had promiſed by his prophet Joel, ſaying, chap. 2. 28. It ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days, I will pour my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream dreams, Acts 2. 16. where note, that it is a received rule among the Jews, that the laſt days, when uſed by the prophets, do ſignify the times of the Meſſiah. See the note on 1 Tim. 4. 1. Note alſo, that God of old revealed his will to his people by viſions, dreams, and by prophetic revelations; ſo that this is a promiſe, that in the days of the Meſſiah God would miraculouſly pour his Spirit upon men, and by that Spirit would enable them to propheſy, and to reveal his will to others. Yea, they ſay boldly to all that ſtood amazed at it, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the Holy Ghoſt; for the promiſe is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. Here then we ſee how fully they both claim a promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt made by their Maſter to them, and alſo promiſe the like gift to them who ſhould believe, and be baptized in his name.

Now, theſe promiſes were actually performed, and made good before they were indited, and put in the records of the Chriſtian faith, the writings of the apoſtles and evangeliſts, or they were not; if all theſe promiſes were fulfilled before the records which contain them were indited, then had Chriſt ſent the Holy Ghoſt upon the apoſtles, and given them the promiſe of the Father, then the believing Jews and Gentiles were actually baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and were enabled to ſpeak with tongues, and propheſy; and ſo Chriſt muſt have given certain demonſtration both of his reſurrection, and his promiſes: but if theſe promiſes were not made good before theſe records were indited, then the whole ſtory of St John, and of the Acts of the apoſtles, might eaſily have been convinced of falſehood by many thouſand living witneſſes, both in Jeruſalem, and in all other places where they lay the ſcene of this great diſpenſation; becauſe they had heard nothing of theſe things, but from their hiſtories: then, by the ſuffrage of our own evangeliſts, our Lord's forerunner muſt be a deceiver, when he declared the Meſſiah ſhould baptize them with the Holy Ghoſt and fire, whom he had then baptized with water; yea, in thoſe very hiſtories deſigned to convince others that Jeſus was Chriſt, they muſt leave on record a promiſe, made not to them only, but to all believers, which never was fulfilled; the apoſtles alſo muſt be falſely introduced, ſaying, This was that which was ſpoken by the prophet Joel, and with the greateſt impudence promiſing that Holy Ghoſt to others, which they themſelves had not received; and ſurely then thoſe Jews, which after all Chriſt's miracles required a ſign, would have required of the apoſtles, Where is that great effuſion of the Spirit promiſed by the prophet Joel, which may aſſure us, that the times of Meſſiah are now come? Where is that fiery baptiſm? where are thoſe rivers of ſpiritual water, which your pretended Chriſt, and his forerunner, promiſed? Let us ſee them, that we may believe him. With what face could St Peter promiſe that Holy Ghoſt to others, upon faith in Chriſt, which they themſelves had not received? Or with what face could Luke declare he did this before ſuch an audience, of which the greateſt part muſt be then living, and ſo as with that promiſe to convert three thouſand ſouls, had neither theſe converts, nor this audience, found any experience of that affair? In fine, if theſe apoſtles were not aſſiſted with theſe miraculous powers of the Holy Ghoſt, they muſt be well aſſured, that he who had ſo oft engaged whilſt he lived to ſend this Comforter to them, and at his reſurrection promiſed, that in few days they ſhould all be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, was a deceiver and falſe prophet; and then what motive could they have, or how could they conceive it a thing poſſible, to be his witneſſes ſucceſsfully to the uttermoſt parts of the earth? If by the coming of the Holy Ghoſt upon them they were indeed enabled to ſpeak all languages; this gift was a ſufficient confirmation of the reſurrection and aſcenſion of that Jeſus who thus made good his promiſe to them. If they had no ſuch gift, how was it poſſible that ſuch unlearned perſons, who only underſtood their mother-tongue, ſhould diſcourſe in their ſeveral languages to the Romans, Grecians, Egyptians, Perſians, Armenians, Scythians, Indians, and all the barbarous nations of the world? And to what purpoſe was it for them to travel to thoſe nations, to ſtand mute among them, or elſe to tell a ſtory to them of which they could not underſtand one word? If, as the ſacred ſtory doth inform us, they preached the word "with "demonſtration of the Spirit, and power; if they went forth preaching every where, the Lord working with them, and con- "firming the word with ſigns following, God alſo bearing witneſs to them by ſigns and miracles, and by divers powers and "diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt;" then might they boldy ſay, "We are his witneſſes of theſe things, and ſo is the Holy "Ghoſt, which God hath given to thoſe that obey him," Acts 5. 32. But if no ſuch aſſiſtance was vouchſafed to them, what evidence could they give to the world, that he had ſent them on this errand? Or how could they expect to reverſe all the ancient laws and religions of the world, and to perſuade all nations to own and worſhip, as the great Saviour of the world, one who was lately hanged on a tree? Their compliance therefore with this miſſion, and their continuance in this teſtimony under thoſe dreadful miſeries they ſuffered for it, as well as their incredible ſucceſs in propagation of the Chriſtian faith to every nation, will not ſuffer us to doubt that they were well aſſured of the completion of this promiſe to them, and ſo of Chriſt's miraculous aſſiſtance of them.

§ III. Moreover, theſe epiſtles do almoſt ſeverally contain ſufficient proofs of the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon believers, and of his miraculous aſſiſtance of the firſt preachers of the Chriſtian faith, and jointly do concur to make this evidence triumphant over infidelity. For,

1. St Paul writes to the Romans thus: "I long to ſee you, that I may impart to you ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end "you may be eſtabliſhed," Rom. 1. 11. See the note there. "For I know," ſaith he, "that when I come to ſee you, I "ſhall come in the fulneſs τῆς εὐλογίας, of the bleſſing of the goſpel of Chriſt," chap. 15. 29. i. e. that fulneſs of ſpiritual gifts with which all Chriſtians were bleſſed in Chriſt Jeſus, according to that promiſe of the prophet Iſaiah, chap. 44. 2. 3. "Fear not, Jacob my ſervant, and Iſrael whom I have choſen; for I will put my ſpirit on thy ſeed, καὶ τὰς εὐλογίας μου, "and my bleſſings on thy children." Now, that the apoſtle came to Rome, both ſcripture, and the whole current of antiquity atteſts. Either then he came to them with the fulneſs of the bleſſings of the goſpel of Chriſt, and did impart unto them thoſe ſpiritual gifts which tended to confirm them in the Chriſtian faith, or he did not: if he did impart them, he gave them an aſſured demonſtration of the certainty of Chriſtian faith; if he did not, he himſelf miniſtered to them a full objection againſt his own apoſtleſhip: for this muſt render him a vain boaſter of things he was not able to perform, and a deceiver of the church of Rome. And why then doth he ſpeak thus to them? "I have whereof I may glory through Jeſus "Chriſt in thoſe things which pertain to God; for I will not dare to ſpeak of any thing which Chriſt hath not wrought by "me, to make the Gentiles obedient in word and deed, in the power of ſigns and wonders, and in the power of the Spirit "of God," Rom. 15. 18. 19. Theſe powers, ſaith he, have accompanied my preaching "from Jeruſalem, round about "unto Illyricum;" and this grace, ſaith he, "was given to me of God, that I ſhould be the miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the "Gentiles, miniſtering the goſpel of God to them, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being ſanctified by "the Holy Ghoſt." Where he compares himſelf, preaching the goſpel, to the prieſt, converſant about his ſacrifice, to prepare and fit it to be offered: the Gentiles dedicated by him to the ſervice of God, are his ſacrifice, or oblation; the Holy Spirit conferred upon them, is the libamen by which they are ſanctified, and rendered acceptable to God. Moreover, the epiſtle to the Romans muſt be falſe, or elſe it muſt be ſent by the apoſtle before he had ſeen Rome; for it containeth an intimation that he had not then ſeen them, a deſire to ſee them, and a promiſe to come to them; for, ſaith he, "I make it "my requeſt to God, if by any means, now at length, I might have a proſperous journey by the will of God, to come to "you, for I long to ſee you," Rom. 1. 10. 11. 13. And, "I often purpoſed to come to you, but was let hitherto." And again, "I have been much hindered from coming to you; having therefore a great deſire theſe many years to come to "you, whenſoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you," chap. 15. 22. 23. 24. It is alſo certain that he afterwards did ſee them; for, after his appeal to Cæſar, he was ſent to Rome, and lived there at leaſt two years: he therefore muſt have ſent his epiſtle to them, and they muſt have received it, before that time. In a word, from thoſe words in the cloſe of this epiſtle, chap. 15. 25. 26. "But now I go to Jeruſalem to miniſter to the ſaints; for it hath pleaſed them "of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor ſaints that are at Jeruſalem;" it is evident he writ this epiſtle before that collection was carried by him to Jeruſalem in the third year of Nero, and ſent it from Corinth, as the poſtſcript ſaith. Note alſo, that this epiſtle is often cited by St Clemens and Polycarp.

In this epiſtle to the church of Corinth, he declares, they were "enriched with all utterance, and knowledge, or in "tongues and prophecy," 1 Cor. 1. 5. (See the note there.) That they abounded "in every thing, in faith, in utterance, "and knowledge," 2 Cor. 8. 7. "ſo that they came behind the other churches in no gift." His twelfth chapter begins thus: "Now concerning ſpiritual gifts, I would not have you ignorant, that no man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God, calleth "Jeſus accurſed; and that no man can ſay, that Jeſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt. Now there are diverſities of "gifts, but the ſame Spirit; and there are differences of adminiſtrations," (or offices in the church to which theſe gifts belong), "but" (all proceeding from) "the ſame Lord; and there are diverſities of operations" performed by theſe gifted men, "but it is the ſame God who worketh all theſe operations in them all," verſ. 4. 5. 6. Then he proceeds to the enumeration of the gifts conferred upon the officers and members of the church, viz. The gifts of knowledge, wiſdom, prophecy, and the diſcerning of ſpirits; the gift of miracles, of faith, of healing, of divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them; ſaying, that God had placed in the church, firſt, apoſtles; ſecondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; after that miracles, then gifts of healing; helps, governments, diverſities of tongues; concluding with this queſtion, "Are all "apoſtles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? have all the gifts of healing? do all ſpeak with "tongues? do all interpret? But covet earneſtly the beſt gifts, and yet ſhew I to you a more excellent way, even that of "charity. For though I have the gift of prophecy, and underſtand all myſteries, and all knowledge; and though I have "all faith, ſo that I can remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing," chap. 13. 1. 2. "For prophecies ſhall "fail, and tongues ſhall ceaſe, and knowledge ſhall be done away; but charity never faileth," ver. 8.

Now, this epiſtle muſt be indited and ſent to them whilſt their ſchiſms, contentions, and diſorders remained, becauſe it was deſigned to correct them, and whilſt St Paul was in a capacity to come to them, and ſo before his bonds, becauſe he ſaith, The reſt will I ſet in order when I come, chap. 11. 34. Hence, after notice given of their ſchiſms, contentions, and diviſions, he adds, Theſe things have I in a figure tranſferred to myſelf and Apollo for your ſakes, that you might learn in us, not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up, one againſt another, chap. 4. 6. ſaying, I have alſo ſent Timotheus to you, and I myſelf will come unto you ſhortly; and then he puts the queſtion to them thus, What will you that I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs? ver. 16. 17. 18. 19. Chap. 5. he commands them to put away from them, and to deliver up to Satan, the inceſtuous perſon; and that accordingly they did ſo, his ſecond epiſtle ſhews, in which he writes to them to forgive, and comfort him, 2 Cor. 2. 7.

Moreover, he writes part of this epiſtle in anſwer to ſome queſtions they had ſent to him, which required a ſpeedy anſwer, as being caſes of conſcience which concerned their converſation, their freedom from idolatry, and the preſervation of weak Chriſtians. The reſt of his epiſtle is ſpent in endeavouring to correct their great diſorders about the ſacrament, their church-aſſemblies, and the uſe of their ſpiritual gifts, chap. 11. and 14. and their great error touching the reſurrection, chap. 15. and to give directions touching their charity, chap. 16. All which things required ſpeedy inſtructions;

and that this epiſtle was ſent accordingly, the words do manifeſt: "When I come, whomſoever you ſhall approve by "your letters, them will I ſend to bring your liberality to Jeruſalem; and if it be meet that I go alſo, they ſhall go with "me," chap. 16. 3. 4. "Now I will come to you when I paſs through Macedonia, and it may be that I will abide, "yea, and winter with you," ver. 5. 6. I ſay, hence it is evident, that they ſoon received this epiſtle; for they accordingly made their collections, with which he went up to Jeruſalem; and in his ſecond epiſtle, he apologiſes for not coming to them, according to thoſe words, chap. 1. 16. 17. Moreover, the ſecond epiſtle is a ſtrong confirmation of the firſt, in which he hath pointed out unto them, thoſe diſorders which he would have remedied, thoſe things he would have done before his coming; for in this he tells them, their obedience to his former letter had filled him with joy and comfort, that his inſtructions concerning the inceſtuous perſon had found ſo good effect, that they approved themſelves to be clear in this matter, and cauſed him to rejoice: that he could have ſuch confidence in them in all things, chap. 7. Whence it is evident, they had not only then received, but in ſome meaſure had complied with the inſtructions given them in that epiſtle.

Add to this, that Clemens Romanus, with the whole church of Rome, in an epiſtle ſent to the Corinthians, not many years after this of St Paul's was written, declares, (§ 2.) That there was πλήρης πνεύματος ἁγίου ἔγχυσις ἐπὶ πάντας, a full effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon them all; and that St Paul had written to them an epiſtle touching their diviſions about himſelf, (§ 37.) and Cephas and Apollo; which is a great confirmation, both of the early knowledge, and uſe of this epiſtle in the church, as alſo of the truth of what St Paul relateth in it, touching the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt conferred upon them.

In his epiſtle to the Galatians, he compares himſelf with the chief of the apoſtles, and the pillars of the church, declaring, That he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion, was as efficacious in him towards the Gentiles; that theſe pillars ſaw, and perceived by the grace given to him, that the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed to him, as the goſpel of the circumciſion was to Peter, and therefore gave to him the right hand of fellowſhip; that he with Barnabas ſhould go to the Gentiles, and they to the circumciſion, chap. 2. 7. 8. 9. adding for conſolation to the Gentiles, that Chriſt had redeemed them from the curſe of the law, that the bleſſing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles, that they might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith, chap. 3. 13. and alſo, that through the Spirit they did wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith, chap. 5. 5.

Now, in this epiſtle, he mentions the life that he now lived in the fleſh, chap. 2. 20. his fear of them, his deſire to ſee them, and the deſire of the falſe brethren to exclude him from any ſhare in their affections, and the perſecutions he yet ſuffered in the fleſh, chap. 3. 2. chap. 4. 11. 15. 17. 20. chap. 5. 11. And he concludes it thus: You ſee how large a letter I have written to you with my own hand; and from henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus, chap. 6. 11. 17. Which words demonſtrate, that this epiſtle muſt be written, and ſent to them whilſt he lived, after he had ſuffered greatly for the name of Chriſt. Moreover, the occaſion of it ſhews, it muſt be written by St Paul himſelf; for it was writ upon occaſion of ſome Judaiſers, who preached up the neceſſity of circumciſing the Gentiles, and requiring them to obſerve the law of Moſes, and who endeavoured to diſparage this apoſtle who had taught the contrary, as inferior to other apoſtles, and his doctrine as contrary to what they taught: now, theſe diſtempers requiring a ſpeedy remedy, we cannot doubt but the apoſtle ſent this epiſtle to them, as ſoon as he had heard how they had been perverted from the ſincerity of the faith. It is alſo cited by Polycarp ad Philip. § 5.

In his epiſtle to the Epheſians, he tells them, he was made a miniſter of the goſpel according to the gift of the grace of God given to him, by the effectual working of his power, chap. 3. 7. And, that to every one of us is given grace according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. For, he aſcending up on high, gave gifts unto men: and, he gave ſome apoſtles, ſome prophets, ſome evangeliſts, ſome paſtors and teachers; and that all theſe had their ſpiritual gifts. See the note on chap. 4. 7. 8. 11. and adds, That after they believed, they were ſealed with the Spirit of promiſe, which is the earneſt of our inheritance, till the redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, chap. 1. 13. 14.

Now, in this epiſtle he makes mention of his bonds, and of his being then an ambaſſador in bonds, chap. 6. 20. ſaying, I Paul the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, for you Gentiles; I Paul, the priſoner of the Lord, beſeech you, chap. 3. 1. chap. 4. 1. This epiſtle, therefore, muſt be ſent unto them, whilſt he was in bonds at Rome; and ſo it muſt be ſent unto them anno Chriſti 62, ſince Paul was ſet at liberty the next year. He alſo adds, that it was ſent by Tychicus, whom he ſent to them on purpoſe, to make known his affairs whilſt he abode at Rome; and begs their prayers for courage in making known the myſtery of the goſpel, whilſt he was thus in bonds, chap. 6. 19. 20. 21. 22.

Moreover, this epiſtle is cited by St Clemens, (ep. ad Cor. § 46.) about ſix years after the writing of it. It is twice cited by Polycarp, (§ 1. 12.) in his epiſtle to the Philippians. Ignatius (§ 12.) in his epiſtle to the Epheſians, ſaith, That St Paul, in his whole epiſtle, made mention of them in Chriſt Jeſus. So early was this epiſtle known to, and read by the Chriſtians.

In his epiſtle to the Coloſſians, he declares, That he had laboured in preaching the goſpel to them, according to the energy of him that wrought with him, ἐν δυνάμει, by a mighty power, chap. 1. 29. and ſaith, Let the word of God dwell in you richly in all wiſdom, teaching and admoniſhing one another, in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, chap. 3. 16. Now, in this epiſtle he ſaith, that he then rejoiced in the afflictions which he ſuffered for them, chap. 1. 24. He alſo ſpeaks of his ſolicitude for them, and thoſe of Laodicea, and for as many as had not ſeen his face in Chriſt, of his ſalutation with his own hand, chap. 4. 18. and of his bonds, and of his ſending Tychicus and Oneſimus, to give them an account of his affairs, and of the ſalutations of many brethren. He therefore, and they alſo, muſt be all alive when this epiſtle was ſent to them.

In

In his epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, he teſtifies his goſpel came unto them not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance, and that they received the word with much affliction, but yet with joy of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. 6. and for this he appeals to their own experience, adding theſe words, Ye know what manner of perſons we were amongſt you for your ſakes; whence he infers, that he that deſpiſed his admonitions, deſpiſed not man, but God, who alſo had given them his Holy Spirit, chap. 4. 8.

Now, in this epiſtle, he ſpeaks of his abſence from them, and of his great deſire to ſee them, 1 Theſſ. 2. 17. of his ſolicitude for their ſtedfaſtneſs under their ſufferings, chap. 3. 5. 6. his ſending Timothy to give him an account of it, his comfort when he heard that they ſtood firm; and maketh Sylvanus and Timotheus his aſſociates in ſending it. This epiſtle, therefore, muſt be written whilſt both they and he were living, and it is cited by Polycarp in his epiſtle to the Philippians, § 11.

In his epiſtle to Titus, he ſpeaks thus, chap. 3. 5. 6. According to his mercy, he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſhed on us abundantly, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Now, of epiſtles thus written to particular perſons, I think it needleſs to prove, that they were written whilſt both St Paul and they were living, and were not ſent unto them from, or in another world: though that is here ſufficiently proved from theſe words, chap. 3. 12. When I ſhall ſend Artemas to thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come to me to Nicopolis.

Arg. 2. § IV. 2dly, That God vouchſafed to the profeſſors and firſt propagators of the Chriſtian faith, theſe admirable powers and various diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, is farther evident from this conſideration, that the apoſtles, in all their conteſts and debates with friends and adverſaries, believers and rejecters of the Chriſtian faith, falſe apoſtles, antichriſts, corrupters of it, and apoſtates from it, appeal with greateſt confidence to theſe miraculous operations and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt.

In their firſt controverſy, touching the reſurrection of our Lord, gainſaid by the rulers of the Jews, St Peter ſpeaks thus to them: The God of our fathers hath raiſed up Jeſus, whom ye ſlew, and hanged on a tree. Him hath God exalted to his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins: and we are his witneſſes of theſe things, and ſo is alſo that Holy Ghoſt whom God hath given to them that obey him, Acts 5. 30. 31. 32. And again, This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, whereof we all are witneſſes; therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, he hath ſhewed forth this which ye now ſee and hear, Acts 2. 32. 33. Now evident it is, this plea could not be offered to convince theſe rulers, by an appeal to their own ſenſes, without the higheſt impudence, and plain confuſion of their cauſe, had there been no effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt imparted to the apoſtles who atteſted, and believers which embraced this faith; nor could it have been publiſhed in that generation, and recorded by St Luke, as made by the apoſtles before ſo great an auditory, if it had been falſe, ſo many witneſſes being then living to confute his ſtory.

2dly, The next diſpute aroſe betwixt St Peter and the converts of the circumciſion, accuſing him as a tranſgreſſor, for eating and converſing with Cornelius, and other uncircumciſed perſons; in which caſe his apology runs thus: As I began to ſpeak, the Holy Ghoſt fell on them, as upon us at the beginning. Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he ſaid, John indeed baptized with water, but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt: foraſmuch then as God gave them the like gift, as he did to us, who believed on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, what was I that I could withſtand God? Acts 11. 15. 16. 17. And thus he puts to ſilence the zealots for the circumciſion, men too tenacious of their rites, too zealous for the law, to be ſatisfied with any thing that did not carry with it a convincing evidence.

3dly, A third conteſt aroſe at Antioch, where ſome believing Jews contended, that it was neceſſary to circumciſe the Gentile converts, and to command them to obſerve the law of Moſes: this vain pretenſion St Peter baffles by this argument, That God who knows the hearts, bare them witneſs, that whilſt uncircumciſed, they were accepted with him, by giving them the Holy Ghoſt even as he did to us, and putting no difference betwixt them and us, purifying their hearts by faith: and thence concluding, that by endeavouring to put this yoke on the believing Gentiles, they would tempt, that is, would diſbelieve, and even oppoſe themſelves to that God who had vouchſafed ſo clear a demonſtration of his acceptance of them, not being circumciſed, Acts 15. 8. 9. Hence alſo the whole college of the apoſtles write unto them thus: It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, to lay upon you no ſuch burthen, ver. 28.

4thly, When the ſame zealots had infected the church of the Galatians with the pernicious doctrine of the neceſſity of circumciſion, and of the obſervation of the law of Moſes, St Paul writes thus to them: O fooliſh Galatians! who hath bewitched you, that ye ſhould not obey the truth? This only would I learn of you: Received ye the Spirit (in his miraculous gifts and operations) by (obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Gal. 3. 1. 2. If by the latter, as ye know ye did, this is a demonſtration that your juſtification and acceptance with God is the fruit of faith in Chriſt, not of obedience to the law of Moſes; this the apoſtle reaſſumes, ſaying, He that miniſtereth the Spirit to you, and worketh miracles among you, doth he it by (virtue of your obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? We ſee then, this was the chief argument which carried the cauſe in the council at Jeruſalem, and which is urged by St Paul to confirm the Galatians in the truth, and ſilence thoſe who laboured to prevail upon them to admit of circumciſion, and the obſervance of the law of Moſes: this confirmation therefore of the truth of Chriſtian faith, was ſuch, as none concerned to do it then, were able to gainſay, much leſs can any now find reaſon to doubt of it.

In the epiſtle to the church of Corinth, he is even forced to prove the truth of his apoſtleſhip, againſt thoſe falſe apoſtles, and deceitful workers, who had ſet up againſt him, and for the ſatisfaction of thoſe Corinthians who ſought a proof of Jeſus Chriſt ſpeaking in him, 2 Cor. 13. 3. He therefore juſtifies and confirms it by declaring, that the ſigns of an apoſtle have been wrought among them by him, in all patience, in ſigns and wonders, and in mighty deeds, 2 Cor. 12.

12. 12.; that he was not a whit behind the very chief of the apoſtles in theſe gifts, chap. 11. 5. 6.; that both he, and his fellow-labourers among them, approved themſelves as the miniſters of Chriſt by the Holy Ghoſt, by the word of truth, and by the power of God, chap. 6. 6. 7.; that they to whom he writ were manifeſtly declared to be his letters commendatory, as being the epiſtle of Chriſt miniſtered by him, written not with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God, chap. 3.; and that they came behind the other churches in no gift, chap. 12. 13. To the Galatians infected with the like diſtemper, he declares, that he who wrought effectually in Peter to the apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion, was as efficacious in him towards the Gentiles; and that this was ſo manifeſt even to the chief of the apoſtles, that they were by the grace vouchſafed to him convinced that the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was by Chriſt committed to his charge.

Some there ſeem to have been among the members of the church of Corinth, who had not the knowledge of the truth, and who even queſtioned whether Chriſt was among them or not: to them he teſtifieth, that the church of Corinth came behind the other churches in no gift, and that by this the teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed among them, 1 Cor. 1. 5. 6. 7.; ſee the note there; that the word he preached was not delivered in the enticing words of human wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power, that their faith might not ſeem to conſiſt in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of the Holy Ghoſt, chap. 2. 4. 5.; that God had eſtabliſhed them in Chriſt, by giving the earneſt of his Spirit in their hearts, 2 Cor. 1. 21. 22. Now, for the truth of what he thus delivers, he makes a ſolemn and religious appeal to their own hearts and conſciences, ſaying, We are made manifeſt to God, and we truſt alſo we are made manifeſt in your own conſciences, 2 Cor. 5. 11. for we are not as many who corrupt the word, but as of ſincerity, as of God, in the ſight of God ſpeak we in Chriſt, chap. 2. 17. We do by manifeſtation of the truth commend ourſelves to every man's conſcience in the ſight of God, chap. 4. 2. Yea, he appeals to all the prophets and ſpiritual men among them, not only for the truth, but alſo for the divine authority of his epiſtles, ſaying, If any man be a prophet, or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of God, 1 Cor. 7. 3. 7. Now evident it is, that arguments of this nature, neither could be urged by this apoſtle without confuſion to his cauſe, and the impairing of his credit; nor being offered, could prevail upon the churches of Achaia, and other churches, to own him as a true apoſtle, and his epiſtles as the commandments of the Lord, had not the matter of fact, on which they did entirely depend, been inconteſtable. For, had theſe things been falſe, or queſtionable, they whom he ſtyleth falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers, muſt have been able to reply, that he himſelf, in his appeal to the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghoſt for confirmation of his doctrine and apoſtleſhip, muſt have been guilty of that very crime he laid to their charge; and all the churches to which he had directed theſe epiſtles, muſt rather be confirmed in the ſuſpicions they had entertained againſt him, than wrought off from them by theſe vain pretences, and falſe ſurmiſes of thoſe diſtributions of the Holy Spirit of which they had found no experience, and had received no convincing evidence.

The believing Jews lay under two dangerous diſtempers: the firſt was that which St James takes notice of in his epiſtle, viz. That faith alone would be ſufficient to ſave them without works; and upon this the heretics mentioned by (a) Irenæus, and others, grounded their licentious doctrines, that they might live as they liſted, they being not to be ſaved by good works, but by faith only. The ſecond was a proneneſs to apoſtaſy, or falling back from the faith to Judaiſm, to avoid perſecution: and this the heretics alſo ſo far improved, as to declare it lawful, in times of perſecution, (b) to commit idolatry, and to deny Chriſt with the mouth. Now, in oppoſition to the firſt aſſertion, St Paul, in his ſecond chapter of the epiſtle to the Hebrews, ſhews the neceſſity of taking more abundant heed to the precepts of Chriſtianity, as being all confirmed by ſigns and miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore puts the queſtion to them thus: If the word ſpoken by angels was firm, and every tranſgreſſion and diſobedience received a juſt recompenſe of reward; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed to us by them that heard it? God alſo bearing them witneſs both with ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, according to his own will. In oppoſition to their proneneſs to apoſtaſy, he declares it a moſt dreadful thing to fall from the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, after they had received ſuch ſtrong convictions of it, by thoſe gifts of the Holy Ghoſt they had received with it: for, ſaith he, it is impoſſible for them who were once enlightened, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and yet fall away, to be renewed to repentance, ſeeing they crucify again the Son of God, and put him to an open ſhame, chap. 6. 4. 5. 6. See the note there. Again, to ſuch, there remains no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a fearful looking-for of judgment and fiery indignation, ſeeing they trample under foot the Son of God, and count the blood of the covenant, by which they were ſanctified, an unholy thing, and reproach the Spirit of grace, chap. 10. 26. 29. See the note there. Now, viſible it is, that the foundation of both theſe arguments depends upon the certainty of this matter, that God confirmed the truth of the doctrine delivered by Chriſt and his apoſtles, by divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and that Chriſtians then were made partakers of thoſe gifts.

Laſtly, againſt the ſeductions of the antichriſts, and the deceivers, which were then crept into the church, St John fortifies the believers with theſe words: Theſe things have I written concerning them that deceive you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any one teach you, but as the ſame anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie; and even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him, 1 John 2. 26. 27. And again, beloved, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits whether they are of God, for many falſe prophets are gone out into the world. By this ye ſhall know the Spirit of God: Every ſpirit that confeſſeth Jeſus Chriſt coming in the fleſh, is of God; and every ſpirit that confeſſeth not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is not of God, chap. 4. 1. 2. 3. See the ſtrength of the argument in the note there. And it is the Spirit that witneſſes that Jeſus is the Son of God, becauſe the Spirit is truth, chap. 5. 6. He that believeth in the Son of God hath the witneſs in himſelf, ver. 10. Now, when men thus lay claim, in their epiſtles to their converts, to the power of God co-operating with them in the promotion of the faith, declaring, that he teſtified to the truth of what they preached by divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; when they confidently ſpeak of an unction of the Spirit of truth abiding in them, of which they to whom they write were made partakers, and by this very argument endeavour to convince them, what a dreadful thing it would be for them to deſpiſe the admonitions they had given, or to neglect the great ſalvation they had tendered to them; there can remain no cauſe of doubting the truth of theſe aſſertions, eſpecially when they to whom they write, not only do continue ſtedfaſt in the faith, but alſo do admit thoſe writings which aſſert theſe things, as divine records, and the word of God.

And this argument will be much ſtrengthened from this conſideration, that the primitive profeſſors, in all the conflicts with Jews, Gentiles, magicians, falſe prophets, heretics, and falſe pretenders to be the ſucceſſors of the apoſtles, ſtill uſed this argument from the miraculous operations the Chriſtians then performed, and the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt they ſtill received and exerciſed, as an effectual confirmation of the Chriſtian faith, and a ſufficient confutation of the pretences of their adverſaries, v. g.

1*ſt*, From this they prove to the Jews, That God had deſerted them, and was now graciouſly preſent with the Chriſtian aſſemblies; that the Schechinah and (c) prophetic gifts, which were long ſince departed from them, were ſtill extant among Chriſtians, and exerciſed both by men and women.

2*dly*, Hence they triumph over the (d) Heathen deities, that by the name of Jeſus ſuch cures were wrought on the diſeaſed, as none of their ſuppoſed deities could perform; and that they by this name expelled thoſe devils which their conjurers could not expel, and forced them to confeſs they were evil ſpirits.

3*dly*, They triumph over the (e) Simonians and Gnoſtics, the magicians and heretics of their times, by the ſame arguments, that they could neither cure all diſeaſes, nor expel all kinds of devils, as the Chriſtians did.

4*thly*, By this they, after the example of St Paul, 1 Cor. 12. 3. and of St John, 1 John 4. 1. 2. 3. taught Chriſtians to diſtinguiſh (f) betwixt true and falſe prophets; and by this they confuted the Montaniſts, becauſe they left no ſucceſſion of prophets, which yet continued in the true church of Chriſt. Some heretics finding themſelves unable even to pretend to ſuch a gift of prophecy as the goſpel of St John had promiſed, and the epiſtles of St Paul mentioned, rejected both that goſpel, and thoſe epiſtles. Now, theſe, ſaith (g) Irenæus, are unhappy men, qui gratiam prophetiæ repellunt ab eccleſia, "who go about to exclude the grace of prophecy from the church, and thereby make themſelves falſe prophets," i. e. aſſertors of things in God's name which they have not received from him.

Laſtly, As for the true ſucceſſors of the apoſtles, (h) Irenæus informs us, that cum ſucceſſione apoſtolatus chariſma veritatis certum ſecundum beneplacitum Patris acceperunt, "with their ſucceſſion they received the gift of truth;" and hence infers, that ubi igitur chariſmata Domini poſita ſunt, ibi diſcere oportet veritatem, "where therefore theſe gifts "of the Lord are placed, there the truth is to be learned."

Arg. 3. § V. The prayers and the thankſgivings made for theſe divine aſſiſtances, the charges the apoſtles give concerning them, the exhortations and directions which they ſend to Chriſtian governors and churches, touching theſe gifts and operations of the Holy Ghoſt, are a convincing demonſtration that they were frequent, and notoriouſly exerciſed in the church of God. For inſtance, "I thank my God," ſaith the apoſtle to the church of Corinth, "for the grace of God "which is given you by Jeſus Chriſt, that in every thing ye are enriched by him in all utterance and all knowledge" (or in tongues and prophecy), "ſo that ye come behind the other churches in no gift," 1 Cor. 1. 5. 6. 7. See the note there. He begins his epiſtle to the church of Epheſus thus; "Bleſſed be the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath "bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things in Chriſt," Eph. 1. 3. See the note there. Praying that the ſame God would "give to them the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation in the knowledge of him," ver. 17. He prays for the Romans, that they may "abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghoſt," chap. 15. 13. And for his Coloſſians, that "they may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding," chap. 1. 9.

Having convened the Aſiatic biſhops, he requires them to take heed "to the flock over which the Holy Ghoſt had made "them overſeers," Acts 20. 28. To the church of Rome he ſpeaks thus: "Having therefore χαρίσματα διάφορα, dif"ferent gifts, whethether prophecy, let us do it according to the proportion of faith; or miniſtering, let us wait on our "miniſtering; or he that teacheth, on teaching," Rom. 12. 6. 7. 8.; ſee the note there. He exhorts the Epheſians and Coloſſians to "be filled with the Spirit, ſpeaking to themſelves in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs," Eph. 5. 18. 19. Col. 3. 16. Two of his admonitions to his Theſſalonians are conceived in theſe words: "Quench not the "Holy Spirit, deſpiſe not prophecy," 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. 20. To his ſon Timothy he ſpeaks thus: "Neglect not the "gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy," 1 Tim. 4. 14. And in his ſecond epiſtle, "Stir up the gift "that is in thee by the puting on of my hands," chap. 1. 6. For, ſaith he, "God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, "but of power, love, and wiſdom," ver. 7. He exhorts him alſo, to "keep the good thing committed to him by the "Holy Ghoſt that dwelleth in him," ver. 14. Now, in theſe epiſtles he ſpeaks of himſelf as a priſoner, and a ſufferer for the cauſe of Chriſt, ſaying, "Be not thou aſhamed of the teſtimony of the Lord, nor of me his priſoner;" he tells him, he was "ready to be offered, and the time of his departure was at hand;" informs him, that "Demas had forſaken "him, and deſires him "when he came to him, to bring Mark with him," 2 Tim. 1. 8. 2. 8. 10. 4. 6. 10. 11. 12. He ſpeaks of "Hymenæus and Alexander, whom he had delivered up to Satan;" and ſaith, "Theſe things I write unto "thee, hoping to come to thee ſhortly," 1 Tim. 1. 20. 3. 14. All which are evident proofs, that theſe epiſtles muſt be ſent to Timothy, whilſt St Paul was living, and was a priſoner at Rome. St Peter advertiſeth the converted Jews, that the goſpel was preached to them by the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven; and he gives theſe inſtructions to them for the uſe of their extraordinary gifts: "As every man hath received the gift, ſo let him miniſter, as good ſtewards of the "manifold grace of God; if any man ſpeak, let him ſpeak as the oracles of God; if any man miniſter, let him do it as "of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt," 1 Pet. 4. 10. 11. Now, the meſſenger by which he ſent this epiſtle, and the ſalutations in the cloſe of it, ſhew that it was written whilſt St Mark and Silvanus were living.

But the great ſcene of theſe directions and admonitions lies in the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he exhorts them to covet earneſtly ſpiritual gifts, but chiefly that of prophecy, 1 Cor. 14. 1. "to covet to propheſy, and forbid not to "ſpeak with tongues," ver. 39. Moreover, he directs them in the due exerciſe of theſe ſpiritual gifts, after this manner: "Foraſmuch as ye are zealous of ſpiritual gifts, ſeek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church," ver. 12. "Wherefore let him that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret;" ver. 13. And again, "If any "man ſpeak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at moſt by three, and let one interpret; but if there be be no "interpreter, let him keep ſilence in the church," ver. 27. 28. "Let the prophets ſpeak two or three, and let the "others judge," ver. 29. "If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace, for ye may "all propheſy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted," ver. 30. 31. In the ſame chapter he chides them for uſing theſe ſpiritual gifts without profit to the hearer, and ſo as to breed confuſion in the church. "How is it," ſaith he, "brethren, that when you come together, every one of you hath a pſalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath "a revelation, hath an interpretation? Let all things be done to edifying," ver. 26. declaring that by uſing tongues not underſtood in the aſſembly, they would give to the infidel and unbeliever occaſion to "ſay they were mad," ver. 23. "But if all propheſy," ſaith he, "and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all; "he is judged of all, and thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt, and ſo falling down on his face, he will wor"ſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth," ver. 24. 25. So notorious are theſe gifts ſuppoſed to be, not only to the ſaint, but to the infidel, and ſo powerful for his converſion. Now, had theſe great apoſtles given thanks for gifts conferred upon theſe churches which they never had enjoyed; had they exhorted them to deſire, and earneſtly to covet, to ſtir up, and excel in gifts they never had, and which were not imparted to any members of the church; had they given theſe grave directions, and ſolemn charges touching thoſe gifts of propheſy and revelation, of tongues and the interpretation of them, which never had been exerciſed in that of Corinth, or any other Chriſtian church; had they ſeverely chid them for abuſing thoſe gifts they never had, and ſhewed themſelves ſo much concerned to correct an abuſe of which they were incapable, as having not the uſe of what they are ſuppoſed to abuſe: had they condemned the murmurings of them who had them in a leſs, the boaſtings of them who had them in a higher meaſure, by ſuch inquiries as theſe, "What haſt thou which thou haſt not received? and if thou haſt received (them,) wherefore doſt thou boaſt; as if thou "hadſt not received (them)?" 1 Cor. 4. 7. ſee the note there: and ſhewing the neceſſity that there ſhould be ſuch a diverſity of gifts and operations in the body, 1 Cor 12. 14.—27. and done and ſaid all this without a juſt foundation; this muſt have rendered thoſe epiſtles in which theſe paſſages are contained, the matter of their deriſion and diſdain, rather than worthy to be owned as the oracles of God: and thoſe apoſtles which indited them, muſt rather have been eſteemed by them brainſick enthuſiaſts, than men inſpired by the Spirit of God.

Since then theſe writings generally were received as divine records by all Chriſtians, and by thoſe very churches to which they were indited, it muſt be certain, that in all theſe aſſertions they contained matter of unqueſtionable truth, and only ſpake of thoſe ſpiritual gifts, of which theſe churches had a full experience; there being, ſaith Clemens Romanus, in his epiſtle writ ſoon after to them, "a full effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt" upon them all.

Anſ. 4. §. VI. This will ſtill be more evident, if we conſider what Chriſtianity, the author, and the propagators of it, required of all that would embrace the Chriſtian faith, and what were the encouragements they tendered as the chief inducements ſo to hope, believe, and act, or ſuffer, as Chriſtianity required. And,

1ſt, They call upon all Chriſtians to take up the croſs of Chriſt daily, and for his ſake to "forſake father and mother, "wife and children, goods and relations, and even life itſelf," declaring that without this "they cannot be Chriſt's di"ſciples," Luke 14. 26. 27. informing them, "that all that will live godly muſt ſuffer perſecution," 2 Tim. 3. 12. that "through many tribulations they muſt enter into the kingdom of God," Acts 4. 22. that they were "called to ſuffer, "and were appointed to this very thing," 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. 4. 1 Pet. 2. 21. Accordingly we find, "that the Corinthians

" were partakers with them of their ſufferings," 2 Cor. 1. 7. that the " Galatians had ſuffered many things," Gal. 3. 4. that to the " Philippians it was given, not only to believe in Chriſt, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake," Philip. 1. 29. that St Paul commends the Coloſſians for their " ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith under all their perſecutions," chap. 1. 11. and prays " they may be ſtrengthened with all might, according to his glorious goſpel, to all patience, and long-ſuffering, with joy-" fulneſs," chap. 2. 5. He ſaith the Theſſalonians ſuffered the ſame from their countrymen, as did the believing Jews from theirs, 1 Theſſ. 2. 14. that he ſent Timothy to " ſtabliſh and to comfort them concerning their faith," and to exhort them " not to be moved at thoſe afflictions to which they were appointed," chap. 3. 34. adding. that " he gloried in them " in the churches of God, for their patience and faith in all their perſecutions," 2 Theſſ. 1. 4. In his epiſtle to the Hebrews, he ſaith, " they ſuffered a great fight of afflictions, partly while they were made a gazing-ſtock, both by " reproaches and afflictions, and partly whilſt they became companions of them who were ſo uſed," and that they took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods; and he exhorts them not to caſt away their confidence, becauſe they had need of patience, Heb. 10. 32. 36. and after the example of that cloud of witneſſes which he had ſet before them, " to run their " Chriſtian race with patience," chap 12. 1. St Peter tells the ſame believing Jews, " they were in heavineſs for a ſeaſon " through manifold temptations," 1 Pet. 1. 6. deſiring them " not to think it ſtrange concerning the fiery trial which was " come to try them," chap. 4. 12. Theſe tribulations they exhort them to endure with faith and courage, patience and perſeverance, joy and triumph; and yet the only thing they offer them to raiſe this joy and comfort, engage them to this perſeverance, and to ſupport them under their fiery trials, is the promiſe, or the actual vouchſafement of the Holy Ghoſt helping their infirmities, that as they were partakers of the ſufferings of the apoſtles, " ſo ſhould they be alſo of their con-" ſolations," 2 Cor. 1. 7. that " if they ſuffered for the name of Chriſt, happy were they, for the Spirit of glory and of " God ſhould reſt upon them," 1 Pet. 4. 14. This, ſay they, ye have found; " for you became followers of the Lord, " and of us, having received the word with much affliction, and with joy of the Holy Ghoſt," 1 Theſſ. 1. 6. and may well ſuffer hardſhip as good ſoldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, for " God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, but τῆς δυνάμεως, of courage," to endure, of that love which caſts out fear, and of that prudence which will inſtruct us how to bear, or to eſcape them, 2 Tim. 1. 7. Now, if this promiſe was ſenſibly made good to them under theſe afflictions, they by it did receive an earneſt of the truth of Chriſtian faith, and an aſſurance of God's concern to comfort and reward their Chriſtian patience in his cauſe. But if under theſe fiery trials they found no ſenſible experience of the Holy Ghoſt thus helping their infirmities, no inward joys, ſupports, and conſolations of the promiſed Comforter, what reaſon had they to continue to take joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods, the loſs of credit, life, and all their worldly comforts, for the profeſſion of that faith which had ſo palpably deceived them, in the chief motive which it offered, to engage them to ſuffer for the name of Chriſt, or for the truth and divine authority of thoſe epiſtles which contained theſe apparent falſehoods?

This argument may be enforced from the conſideration of the multitude of Chriſtian martyrs in the three firſt ages of the church, all which could have no other motive thus to ſuffer, but this promiſed aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt at preſent, and the aſſurance which this earneſt of the Spirit gave them of an eternal ſtate of happineſs hereafter; and ſo if they had no experience of this aſſiſtance under ſufferings, and no aſſurance of ſuch an earneſt of the Spirit in their hearts, muſt ſuffer all theſe dreadful things without juſt ground or motive, which even an Heathen (k) Cicero doth repreſent as a thing impoſſible to be performed, the hardneſs of ſome Jewiſh zealots, and ſome deluded Chriſtian ſects, in ſuffering, being no inſtance to the contrary; for though they miſtake in application of this future happineſs, in proſpect of which they thus endure, to themſelves, the principle upon which they ſuffer is indiſputably true, and owned even by Epicurus himſelf; ut voluptates omittantur majorum voluptatum adipiſcendarum cauſa, aut dolores ſuſcipiantur majorum dolorum effugiendorum gratia, " That we ſhould part with our temporal enjoyments for a ſeaſon here, for a better and more enduring ſub-" ſtance, and ſuffer theſe light afflictions which are for a moment, that we may eſcape more laſting and intolerable tor-" ments;" this being only, ſaith (l) Torquatus, the choice which the wiſe man of Epicurus ought to make. In a word, the manner of their ſufferings doth give us full aſſurance that the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, which Chriſt and his apoſtles promiſed to the true believers, was accordingly vouchſafed to the Chriſtian martyrs and confeſſors, they being enabled to bear the greateſt ſufferings, not only with undaunted courage, " putting off the body," ſaith (m) Origen, " more chearfully " than a philoſopher would put off his coat;" " deſpiſing death," ſaith (n) Lucian, " and willingly ſubmitting to it;" but with great joy and exultation, being ſtrengthened to all long-ſuffering with joyfulneſs, Col. 2. 5. and and rejoicing when they were in heavineſs through manifold afflictions, 1 Pet. 1. 6 yea, ſometimes with (p) miraculous experience of conſolations under all their ſufferings, cauſing this joy and gladneſs in them; and ſometimes with a perfect freedom from all ſenſe of pain under the moſt afflicting torments; as in the caſe of the (q) evangeliſt St John, and of (r) Blandina, theſe ſufferings not being able to extort from them one complaint or (s) groan. Now, this being done as well by (t) children and the weakeſt ſex, by the idiot as well as by the wiſeſt ſages, gives a full demonſtration of the truth of that aſſertion of (u) Euſebius, That the love of Chriſt, the hopes of immortality, and the Spirit of the Father, inſpired them with this courage; for what elſe could create ſuch joys and exultations, or ſuggeſt ſuch comforts and ſupports under the ſharpeſt trials? What could procure to them a freedom from the ſenſe of pain under the greateſt torments, and moſt intolerable burthens to fleſh and blood?

2*dly*, Again, they engage all Chriſtians in the moſt difficult acts of ſelf-denial, and mortification of all carnal luſts, in the cutting off their right hands, and the plucking out their eyes; in patience under, and the forgiveneſs of the greateſt injuries; in love and charity to the worſt of enemies, in temperance as to the pleaſures and honours of this preſent life, in a deadneſs to the world, and the enjoyments of it, in piety and purity, and heavenly-mindedneſs, becauſe they cannot otherwiſe be Chriſt's diſciples, cannot be worthy of him, Matth. 10. 37. 38.; they cannot enter into his kingdom, Matth. 19. 23. 24.; but ſhall hereafter be denied and rejected by him, Matth. 10. 32. 33. Now, what could ſuch threats ſignify to them who were not by his miracles, and by experience of the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven, convinced, that he was indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world? The encouragement they give them to be thus ſtedfaſt, immoveable, always abounding in the fear of the Lord, was only the promiſe of a future and unſeen reward, chiefly to be enjoyed after the reſurrection of the body, which, to the Sadducees among the Jews, and the whole race of Heathen ſages, ſeemed a thing incredible. It is therefore not to be imagined, that ſo many myriads of Chriſtian converts ſhould renounce all the pleaſures of the fleſh, all the gratifications of this preſent world, all their old rites, religions cuſtoms, evil habits, ſubmit to all this ſelf-denial and mortification, only to be partakers of theſe unſeen bleſſings after the reſurrection, without a full aſſurance that they hereafter ſhould enjoy them. Now, the only aſſurance which the apoſtles and holy ſcriptures did afford them of this bleſſed reſurrection, and eternal happineſs, was the miracles by which their doctrine was confirmed, the powers, gifts, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt vouchſafed to them. After the diſſolution of this body, we expect, ſay they, "an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens: we groan, deſiring to be clothed with this houſe from "heaven, that morrality may be ſwallowed up of life. Now, he that hath wrought this hope within us, is that God who "hath given us the earneſt of the Spirit," 2 Cor. 5. 1.—5. And again, The promiſes of God are all yea and amen, or ſure and certain, in Jeſus Chriſt; and he who hath eſtabliſhed us with you, in expectation of them, is that God who hath anointed us, and ſealed us, and given the earneſt of his Spirit in our hearts, 2 Cor. 1. 20. 21. enabling us by the Spirit to wait for the adoption, even the redemption of the body, Rom. 8. 23. adding, that by the Spirit of adoption they were enabled to cry Abba, Father, ver. 15. 16. that he bore witneſs with their ſpirits that they were the ſons of God, the love of God being ſhed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghoſt, which God had given them, Gal. 4. 6. Hence they continually declare, that after they believed, they were ſealed with the Spirit of promiſe, which was the earneſt of their inheritance till the redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, Eph. 1. 13. 14.; that by him they were ſealed up to the day of redemption, chap. 4. 30.; that he was the earneſt of their future inheritance; that they were not aſhamed of their hope, they, through the Spirit, waiting for the hope of righteouſneſs, Gal. 5. 5. and abounding in hope through the power of the Holy Ghoſt. Rom. 15. 13. Hence he is ſtyled by St John, the witneſs of God within them, 1 John 5. 10. and by this, ſaith he, do we Chriſtians know, that God abideth in us, and we in him, even by the Spirit that he hath given us, chap. 4. 13. By all which ſayings, it appears, that if theſe things were true, they to whom this aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit was vouchſafed, muſt be very ſenſible of his dwelling, and his acting in them; that they could plainly know they had this unction from the holy One, and could be hence aſſured of the divine affection to them, and of their future hopes and expectations, ſince otherwiſe he could be no ſuch ſeal, pledge, and earneſt to them, and no ſuch witneſs of God within them, and no ſuch confirmation of their faith, or token of the love of God: and if theſe things were falſe, and they had no ſuch ſenſible experience of the good Spirit acting and abiding in them, if they found no ſuch confirmation of their hopes from any inward teſtimony or outward operations of the Holy Ghoſt, they muſt not only have no certain ground or motive to aſſure them of that future recompenſe, which was the only reaſon which could induce them to embrace, and to continue ſtedfaſt in the Chriſtian faith; but muſt have a convincing demonſtration, that the whole doctrine of Chriſtianity depended on a falſe ſuggeſtion of ſuch a ſenſible and certain teſtimony of theſe future hopes, of which they never had, nor could have any knowledge or experience; and that the apoſtles and firſt aſſertors of this faith had laid the whole foundation of their hopes upon a falſe and a precarious appeal to their own conſciences, concerning that of which they had no knowledge or experience. And being once aſſured of this, that the great fundamentals of the Chriſtian faith were bottomed on a confident appeal to their perception of thoſe things, of which they who embraced this faith, had not yet found the leaſt experience, it is incredible to believe they ſhould continue ſtedfaſt in, and endure ſuch continual perſecutions for that faith, and ſhould receive thoſe very records as the word of God, which made theſe falſe appeals unto their conſcience and experience.

§ VII. I think I have ſufficiently made it appear, that theſe epiſtles, which contain theſe things, muſt be indited whilſt the apoſtles lived, and ſo they muſt be ſent by thoſe churches and perſons to whom they are directed, at a time when all the members of thoſe churches muſt be able to diſcern the truth or falſehood of what is thus aſſerted in them: yet becauſe the pretence that it might be otherwiſe, containeth the whole ſtrength of ſcepticiſm, let it be farther noted,

1*ſt*, That theſe epiſtles from which theſe things are cited, one alone excepted, bear the names of the apoſtles by whom they are ſuppoſed to be written: now, had they not been really indited by them, this could not have been done by any, but he muſt put a cheat upon all Chriſtians, and ſubſtitute his own inventions for the word of God.

2*dly*, That all of them, excepting one, which is yet proved to be genuine in the preface to the epiſtle to the Hebrews, have been delivered down unto us by the perpetual and uncontrolled tradition of the whole church of Chriſt, as the undoubted works of theſe apoſtles, and as the word of God. Moreover, it is apparent from the writings of St Clement, St Ignatius, Polycarp, Juſtin M. Irenæus, that even from the apoſtles days they have been cited, read, and generally received as ſuch. Now, this is a tradition more general, and of a firmer credit than any other book, writing, charter, law, or ſtatute whatſoever can pretend to. Conſider,

3*dly*, That the tradition which concerns theſe books was a tradition concerning things of the higheſt moment, and which it was the intereſt of all Chriſtians to be well aſſured of, theſe writings being at preſent the chief ground of their ſupport under their ſharpeſt trials, and of their future hopes; they therefore muſt be writings which they were concerned to get and keep, to hear and read. They were books written to whole churches and nations, yea, to all that called on the name of Chriſt Jeſus in every place; who could not eaſily have received and yielded ſuch a firm aſſent unto them, as we know they did, had the apoſtles, by whom they were converted, given no intimations of them. They were alſo books of the greateſt oppoſition to the vain tradition of the Jews, and to the ſuperſtition of the Heathens, to the falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers, and which denounced upon them the greateſt plagues and judgments, which muſt oblige them narrowly to ſearch into the flaws that could be ſpied in them, and, as much as poſſible, to labour to diſcover the falſehood or impoſture of them; and yet theſe works were not denied by them to be the books of thoſe apoſtles whoſe names they bear, though the apoſtles themſelves, eſpecially St Paul, was perſecuted by them with a reſtleſs malice, as an apoſtate from the law; and upon this account, all his epiſtles were rejected by thoſe Jewiſh Chriſtians, who maintained the neceſſity of the obſervance of the law of Moſes: moſt of them alſo are writ about that very controverſy, and againſt thoſe very men who pleaded the neceſſity of circumciſion, and of obſerving the whole law of Moſes; which yet could be no controverſy after the ruin of Jeruſalem, and the deſtruction of the temple, ſeeing that rendered the obſervation of the precepts of that law for the moſt part impoſſible. They were books which could not be ſpread abroad in the apoſtles days, and in their names, unleſs the apoſtles had indited, and ſent them to theſe churches; or be eſteemed as the great charters of the Chriſtian faith, if the apoſtles were ſo forgetful of them as not to let thoſe perſons for whoſe ſake they were written, know it. They were books which pretended to a commiſſion from the holy Jeſus, to leave a rule of life and doctrine to mankind, which was intruſted only in the hands of the apoſtles, all others ſtill pretending to deliver only what they received from them. They alſo were indited, partly to confirm the Chriſtian faith, and to engage men to believe it; partly to put an end to the contentions, and rectify the errors which had crept into the church in the apoſtles days, and needed ſpeedy reformation; partly to juſtify themſelves againſt falſe brethren, and to aſſert the truth of their apoſtleſhip; and partly to preſerve their proſelytes from ſuch as did pervert the faith, and to inſtruct them how to bear up in fiery trials, and to ſupport the ſouls of Chriſtians under the miſeries they ſuffered from a perſecuting world: and therefore they were written on ſuch grounds as did require a quick diſpatch, upon theſe errands to the churches for which they were intended; and ſo the apoſtles muſt be ſuppoſed to give early notice of them, and to divulge them to the Chriſtian world, whilſt they to whom they were committed, were able to diſprove them if they had been falſe.

Let us conſider all the writings which paſs for true authentic records in the world, and we ſhall find there is not any reaſon to conceive them ſuch, which is not with advantage applicable to theſe books.

The arguments which can be offered to prove a book or writing genuine, are only of two kinds, external from the teſtimony of perſons who lived near to the times of the author; and internal from the things contained in, and aſſerted by thoſe writings, and the firm faith they obtained among them to whom they were directed and committed.

The external teſtimonies have their force, partly from the number and the eminence of the teſtators, their nearneſs to the times when ſuch a book is ſaid to be written, or ſuch a writing publiſhed by the original copies, preſerved by thoſe to whom they were at firſt committed, and from the general reception and citation of them as ſuch writings and records.

Now, as for theſe external evidences, no writings can compare with thoſe epiſtles I have mentioned, they having all the circumſtances by which any writing can be proved genuine, and many others of great weight which are peculiar to them, and which no other writing can pretend to. I ſay, they have all the circumſtances to prove them genuine, which any other writing can pretend to. For,

1. Their

1. Their originals were preſerved in their reſpective churches till Tertullian's time; who ſpeaks thus to the heretics of his age, or of the third century: (a) Go to the apoſtolical churches, where their authentic epiſtles are ſtill recited, repreſenting the voice and face of each of them.

2. They were not doubted of, but, as (b) St Clement and Origen ſay, all that I have cited, excepting only the epiſtle to the Hebrews, mentioned by St Peter, were generally received by all orthodox Chriſtians throughout the world.

3. The writers by whom they were cited, lived either in thoſe times when they were written, as St Clemens Rom. or in the very next age, as Ignatius, Polycarp, Juſtin Martyr, Irenæus, and were therefore ſtyled apoſtolical men.

4. They were very eminent both for their learning, and for their ſufferings for the faith contained in them, or for their oppoſition to it, as Celſus was: now ſure we have unqueſtionable certainty of ſuch books as have been handed down to us by the tradition of all ages of the church, inſerted into all her catalogues, cited by all her writers as books of a divine authority, and by her very adverſaries, preſerved ſo long in their originals, and of which never any doubt was made by any genuine member of the church of Chriſt. I add,

2. That there are many circumſtances of great weight to confirm theſe teſtimonies, which are peculiar to theſe writings: As,

1. A general diſperſion of them through thoſe places which were converted to that faith which the apoſtles preached: for the apoſtles, ſaith Irenæus, "firſt preached the goſpel, and after, by the will of God, in ſcripturis nobis tradiderunt, "delivered it to us in the ſcriptures, to be hereafter the pillar and foundation of our faith," lib. 3. cap. 1. Euſebius ſaith, "that the firſt ſucceſſors of the apoſtles, leaving their countries, preached to them who had not yet heard of the Chriſtian "faith, and then delivered to them, as the foundation of their faith, τὸν τῶν θείων εὐαγγελίων γραφὴν, the writings of the "holy evangeliſts." Hiſt. eccleſ. 3. c. 37.

2. The tranſlation of them into other languages; that of the Syriac being ſo ancient that it leaves out the ſecond epiſtle of St Peter, and the ſecond and third epiſtle of St John, and the Revelations, as being for a time controverted in ſome of the eaſtern churches: that of the Latin, ſtyled in Jerom's time the old tranſlation, and very probably made from the beginning of a ſettled church among them; for the Latin church could not be well without a Latin verſion, it being the cuſtom of all churches to read theſe ſcriptures on the Lord's day; which ſure they would not do in a language not underſtood by thoſe that heard it.

3. The conſtant reading of them in public, and in private, in their aſſemblies, and in their cloſets and families. "On "Sunday, (c) ſaith Juſtin. M. "all the Chriſtians in the city or country meet together, and then we have read unto us the "writings of the prophets, and τὰ ἀπομνημονεύματα τῶν ἀποστόλων, the monuments of the apoſtles;" and having read them, they did publicly (d) τοῖς θείοις ἐμπνεῦσι γραφαῖς, expound them to the people. That they were alſo read by the moſt eminent and pious Chriſtians every day, that (e) diſcat unuſquiſque ex ſcripturis ſanctis officium ſuum, "every one might learn his "duty from the holy ſcriptures," we learn from the queſtion in the (f) "conſtitutions of St Clement, Whether a man ought, "the day after he had done the duties of wedlock, or been ſubject to any unvoluntary defilement, σχολὴν ἄγων, touch the "book;" and the declaration of (g) St Clement, that "the matrimonial duties ſhould not be done, ἐκτὸς εἰ τύχοι τῆς ἀναγκαίας "ὁ καιρὸς, when was the time of prayer, or reading of the ſcriptures; and that (h) the ſacrifices of the true Gnoſtic, were "εὐχαί τε καὶ αἶνοι, καὶ αἱ περὶ τῆς ἱστάσεως ἐντεύξεις τῶν γραφῶν, prayers and praiſes, and the reading of the holy ſcriptures be-"fore meals." And (i) ſeeing Irenæus ſaith, that "he who had a care of his ſalvation might read the form of his "faith in the epiſtle of Polycarp to the Philippians;" ſince that (k) epiſtle, and the (l) epiſtle of St Clement to the church of Corinth, which were their genuine works; yea, the epiſtle (m) of St Barnabas, and the book of (n) Hermas, which two were reckoned as apocryphal, were read publicly in many churches, doubtleſs they muſt be more concerned to read the undoubted writings of the apoſtles, which they eſteemed the rule of faith, which they ſtyled (o) libri deifici, "books which "transformed them into a divine nature;" which they looked upon as the records of their eternal intereſts, as books by which they muſt be judged at the laſt day, and according to which they ſhould be puniſhed or rewarded everlaſtingly.

4. The early peruſal of them both by Jews and Heathens, who writ againſt them, and did endeavour to deſtroy them, that ſo they might cauſe the Chriſtian faith to periſh, but never did deny them to be indeed the works of the apoſtles, whoſe names they bore: by Jews; for (p) Trypho ſpeaks thus at leaſt of the goſpels; "The precepts contained in your goſpels are ſo

" great, that I ſuſpect no man can keep them, ἐμοὶ γὰρ ἐμέλησεν ἐντυχεῖν αὐτοῖς, for I took care to read them." The (q) Ebionites, who alſo were Jews, rejected all the epiſtles of St Paul, as gathering from them, that he was an apoſtate from the law of Moſes. The Heathens; for (r) Celſus not only boaſts that he knew all things belonging to the Chriſtians, but often carps at the writings of the evangeliſts, and of St Paul. And indeed the Chriſtians freely offered them to be peruſed by them: " For that we may not ſeem to impoſe upon you," ſaith Juſtin Martyr to the Roman emperor, " we offer to you ſome of " the doctrines of Chriſt; and you, being (s) emperors, may ἐξετάσαι, ſearch whether we truly have been taught, and teach " theſe doctrines." And again, " The prince of evil ſpirits is by us called a ſerpent, Satan, and the devil, (t) ὡς καὶ " ἐκ τῶν ἡμετέρων συγγραμμάτων ἐρευνήσαντες μαθεῖν δύνασθε, as you may learn by ſearching into our writings." " Thou who " thinkeſt we are not concerned for the ſafety of Cæſar," ſaith (u) Tertullian, " look into the words of God," quas neque ipſi ſupprimimus, & plerique caſus ad extraneos transferunt, " which we do not ſuppreſs, and which many accidents " bring into the hands of Heathens." From their endeavours to deſtroy the Chriſtian faith by burning theſe books, came the edicts of (x) Diocleſian, " τὰς γραφὰς ἁφανεῖς πυρὶ γίνεσθαι προστάξοντα, commanding that the ſcripture ſhould be con- " mitted to the flames," and the (y) actual burning of them where they could be found, and the tormenting of the Chriſtians to deliver up the ſcriptures.

5. The direful toremens which the Chriſtians choſe to ſuffer, rather than they would deſert the faith contained in theſe books, or deliver them up to their tormentors; and the infamy of thoſe that did ſo, they being branded with the odious name of traditors. Now, what writings in the world have been ſo generally diſperſed, and ſo much peruſed by all ſorts of perſons, friends, foes, aſſertors of, and enemies to the faith of Chriſtians? What laws, or writings whatſoever have been ſo early tranſlated into other languages? who were ſo much concerned to peruſe them as were all Chriſtians to peruſe the laws of Chriſt? who ſuffered ſo much for them as the Chriſtians did? Since then this early reading of them in public, and in private by the Chriſtians, this general diſperſion of them through all Chriſtian churches, this quick tranſlation of them into other languages, this conſtant ſuffering for them, are all corroborating circumſtances of the unqueſtionable evidence all Chriſtians had obtained that they were genuine works, and truly what they did pretend to be; it is alſo clear theſe writings are more worthy to be received as genuine, and writings of unqueſtionable truth, than any profane writings in the world.

§ VIII. The internal arguments which uſually are, or can be offered to prove other writings genuine, are only taken from the things contained in them, that they were proper to the times in which the author was ſuppoſed to write, and from the freedom of them from any thing which is not well conſiſtent with thoſe times, which are all mean and trifling things, compared to thoſe internal arguments which theſe epiſtles do afford: that they are the authentic records of thoſe apoſtles whoſe names they bear, and that thoſe things which they aſſert, touching the gifts and powerful operations of the Holy Ghoſt, both exerciſed by them, and conferred on other churches, were unqueſtionably true. For,

1. It is not once nor twice, it is not by the by, but it is frequently, profeſſedly, and upon all occaſions, they refer to theſe miraculous powers, and ſpiritual gifts, as yielding a full proof and confirmation of the teſtimony they gave of Chriſt, and that Chriſt was among them, and as a demonſtration of the truth of their apoſtleſhip againſt all oppoſers, and of the preference of that faith which was attended with them, above the law which ſome deſired to obſerve; ſpending whole chapters in diſcourſing of theſe ſpiritual gifts, diſtinguiſhing them ſomewhat nicely into gifts, adminiſtrations, and operations, ranking them under nine ſeveral heads, and ſpecifying the very names of thoſe who did by office exerciſe them, and ſhewing the neceſſity there was of this variety of gifts and operations in the body, appealing to the ſenſes, the conſciences, and the experience of thoſe to whom they wrote, touching the truth and certainty of what they had aſſerted, touching thoſe ſpiritual gifts, by ſuch inquiries as theſe: " What? know ye not that Chriſt is among you?" 2 Cor. 13. 5. " Am I not an a- " poſtle? ſurely I am ſo to you, for the ſeal of my apoſtleſhip are ye in the Lord," 1 Cor. 9. 1. 2. " It is manifeſt you " are the epiſtle of Chriſt miniſtered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God," 2 Cor. 3. 3. " Surely the ſigns of an apoſtle have been wrought among you in all patience, in ſigns and wonders, and mighty deeds," 2 Cor. 12. 12. " Have you received from the falſe apoſtles another ſpirit which ye have not received from us?" chap. 11. 14. " This only would I learn of you, he that miniſtered to you the Spirit, and wrought miracles among you, did he it " by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye ſo fooliſh? having begun in the Spirit, are ye (deſirous to " be) made perfect in the fleſh?" Gal. 3. 3. 4. 5. " Our goſpel came not to you in word only, but in power, and in " the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance, as ye know what manner of perſons we were among you," 1 Theſſ. 1 5. Which words are either plain inquiries upbraiding their doubtfulneſs and heſitation in ſo plain a caſe, or elſe appeals unto their certain knowledge of theſe things; nor is it to be wondered that they ſhould make theſe confident inquiries and appeals, ſeeing the external miracles, and the internal gifts and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt mentioned in thoſe epiſtles, were either ſuch of which even infidels might from the nature of them be convinced, or ſuch as from ſome outward and ſenſible appearances and effects, or by their inward operations, made themſelves known to them who heard and ſaw them. For inſtance, the working of miracles, the caſting out of devils by the name of Jeſus, and the healing the ſick through faith in his name, the gift of prophecy, or foretelling things future, the diſcerning of ſpirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them, if truly done, were things ſelf-evident, and could not well be exerciſed without a ſenſible demonſtration to all that ſaw, perceived, heard, or felt them, that they were performed; and therefore God, by aſſiſting the apoſtles, and by enabling others to perform them, must give full testimony to the word of his grace: and the apostles, by this constant appeal to them as to things which their own eyes had seen, and their consciences bore witness to, and they in person had performed, must appeal to the senses, and experience of those to whom they writ in matters subject daily to their experience, and to the senses of the members of those respective churches, touching the truth of their apostleship, and of the confirmation they pretend to have given of it. Now, as it seemeth highly incredible that persons able to write the deepest mysteries, and the exactest precepts of morality, should be so foolish as to confirm them only by an appeal to the senses and experience of those very men of whom they were assured that they had never seen or done, or found the least experience of any of the things they mentioned; so is it still far more incredible, that an appeal of such apparent falsehood, made to the consciences of men who never saw these miracles, or found these comforts of the Holy Ghost, and never had these gifts of tongues, interpretation, healings, prophecy, which these epistles tell us were their daily exercise, should embrace these very epistles as divine, these records as the word of God. And yet we know both they, and other churches, did thus actually esteem them, and receive them as such, and therefore must be well assured, that what they thus asserted of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, were things confirmed to them by their own senses and experience.

2*dly*, Add to this, that these men, in these very writings, confidently say, that this was their rejoicing, even the testimony of their conscience, that, in simplicity and godly sincerity, they had their conversation in the world, and more abundantly towards them, 2 Cor. 1. 13. and that they writ no other things than what they did acknowledge, and they trusted would acknowledge to the end, chap. 5. 11. We are, say they, made manifest to God, and we trust also we are made manifest in your consciences, chap. 5. 11. They represent it as a great absurdity, that they should be found false witnesses of God, 1 Cor. 15. 15. They distinguish themselves from others they call false apostles, and deceitful workers, by this very character of their sincerity. For we, say they, are not as many who corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, as of God in the sight of God speak we in Christ, 2 Cor. 2. 17. We have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth, commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God, chap. 4. 2. Yea, for this they appeal to the searcher of all hearts, and to the consciences of those to whom they write, saying, Our exhortation was not of deceit or guile, for neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know; nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others; ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblameably, we behaved ourselves among you that believe, 1 Thess. 2. 3. 5. 6. 10. Now, with what face could these things be asserted by men, who knew that they, in these epistles, had told such things as even the senses and experience of those to whom they wrote must know to be the greatest falsehoods? Or how could they to whom they wrote, give credit to such impudent untruths as these must be, if the relations which they made of these miraculous operations of the Holy Ghost had been fictitious things? This therefore is a farther evidence of their sincerity and truth in these relations.

3*dly*, Let us consider how the apostle treats those churches of Corinth and Galatia, in which he speaks most copiously of these operations of the Holy Ghost, and how they stood affected to the apostle Paul. The Corinthians, in his first chapter, are represented as schismatical; in his 3d, as carnal; in the 5th, as glorying in an incestuous person; in the 6th, as contentious, to their own shame, and to the scandal of Christianity; in the 8th, as murtherers of them for whom Christ died; in the 10th, as murmurers, tempters of Christ, fornicators, idolaters, partakers of the table of devils; in the 11th, as coming to the Lord's supper, not for the better, but the worse, offending in it both against the rules of charity, and temperance, and faith in not discerning the Lord's body; in the 12th and 14th, as guilty of emulations, schisms, and contentions touching spiritual persons, and of vain-glory, scandal, and confusion in the exercise of their spiritual gifts; and in the 15th, as deniers of that resurrection, which was the great foundation of all the future hopes of Christians. In his second epistle he declares his fears, that he might find among them debates, envyings, wrath, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings; and that he should find among them many who had not yet repented of the uncleanness, fornication, and lasciviousness which they had committed, 2 Cor. 12. 20. 21. And for these things, if not reformed, he threatens he would use sharpness, and come to them with a rod, 2 or. 10. 6. 13. 2. He charges the Galatians with apostasy, admiring that they were so soon removed from him that called them, to another gospel, chap. 1. 6. and represents them as foolish and bewitched for falling from that gospel, by which they had received these spiritual gifts, to the beggarly elements of the law, chap. 3. 1.—5. Now, how could the Corinthians be guilty of such emulations about spiritual persons, or such disorders in the exercise of their spiritual gifts, provided there were among them no such persons, and they had no such gifts? How could they fear the lashes of his rod, on the account of crimes of which they neither were nor could be guilty? Why should they not be rather for Cephas or Apollo, than for Paul, if Paul imposed upon them with false stories, and sensible untruths? Or why should not the Galatians even quit that gospel in which he endeavoured to confirm them only by an appeal to that which they must know to be a lie?

Moreover, the affections of the members of these churches were not so firm to him, their esteem of him was not so great as that he might securely lessen it by venturing on these arts of falsehood, for he found some of his Corinthians puffed up against him, and perferring others much before him, 1 Cor. 4. 18. charging him with lightness and inconstancy, 2 Cor. 1. 17. and walking according to the flesh, chap. 10. 2. looking upon him as a man too much transported, and almost besides himself, 2 Cor. 5. 13. as base in person, and in speech contemptible, chap. 10. 10. He complains, that they were straitened in their bowels of affection towards him, and that the more he loved them, the less he was beloved by them, 2 Cor. 12. 15. that they questioned his apostleship, and even sought a proof of Christ speaking in him, chap. 13. 3. He represents the Galatians as men who questioned his apostleship and doctrine, or at least thought him much inferior in both to others, chap. 1. and in the second, as supposing he dissembled with them, and elſewhere preached himſelf that circumciſion he condemned in them, chap. 5. 11.; yea, who looked upon him as their enemy, and were even ready to exclude him, chap. 4. 16. 17. Now, under theſe circumſtances could he hope to repair his credit with them, and to eſtabliſh the apoſtleſhip they queſtioned, by an appeal to, and a relation of ſuch things as both their ſenſes and experience knew to be manifeſt untruths? But,

4*thly*, Could it be ſuppoſed that theſe churches were ſo ſtupid and inſenſible, that they did not, or ſo partially affected to the apoſtles, that they would not take notice of theſe things? Theſe epiſtles inform us of other ſubtile and induſtrious adverſaries, men zealous to oppoſe, and to adulterate the goſpel which he preached, and deſirous to find occaſions to depreſs and leſſen the promoters of it, and to advance themſelves above them, 2 Cor. 10. 12.; 15. 11. 12. St Paul complains, that the Corinthians had among them falſe apoſtles, and deceitful workers, who transformed themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt, when in truth they were miniſters of Satan, 2 Cor. 11. 13. 15.; men who corrupted the word of God, chap. 2. 17. and ſought to corrupt them from the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt, chap. 11. 3. That among the Galatians there were evil agents who troubled them, and would pervert the goſpel of Chriſt, chap. 1. 7.; falſe brethren, who came in privily to ſpy out their liberty, chap. 2. 4.; men that deſired to exclude the apoſtles, that they might be affected by them, chap. 4. 17.; men who conſtrained them to be circumciſed, and obſerve the law, and yet keep it not themſelves, but only did this, leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt, chap. 6. 12. 13. wiſhing they were cut off who did thus trouble them, chap. 5. 12. The like he ſaith, Philip. 1. 15. 16. chap. 3. 18. Col. 2. 4. 8. 19. 20. 1 Tim. 1. 5. 6. chap. 6. 3. 4. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 17. 18. 19. chap. 3. 5. 8. Tit. 1. 10. 11. Now, if he himſelf were a vain talker, and deceitful worker, one who endeavoured to impoſe upon them with falſe tales, with what face could he object thoſe things to others, of which he was himſelf ſo guilty? Or how could they whom he ſo confidently doth accuſe as guilty of theſe things, neglect this obvious reply to ſuch an accuſation, that he himſelf in his appeal to the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghoſt, for confirmation of his doctrine and apoſtleſhip, had done the very thing he laid to their charge? We have no reaſon to ſuſpect, that all, or any of theſe adverſaries neglected any pains or diligence to ſearch into the truth of what St Paul thus offered to confirm his doctrine, and magnify his office, and to vindicate himſelf from the aſperſions which they caſt upon him. Since then we never find the truth of theſe relations queſtioned by any of thoſe Jews who ſo inſatiably thirſted for his blood, or by thoſe Judaiſing Chriſtians, thoſe of the circumciſion, who ſo vehemently inveighed againſt his doctrine, his perſon, and his office; and ſince we are aſſured by the event, that if they ever made any ſuch attempts, they all proved ineffectual, and inſufficient to impair the credit of thoſe writings in the Chriſtian world; it may be certainly concluded, that theſe epiſtles could not be convinced of falſehood, but contained matter of unqueſtionable truth in theſe aſſertions touching the powerful operations of the Holy Ghoſt.

Laſtly, Let us conſider what the apoſtles ſuffered for this teſtimony, and what it coſt them to propagate this faith throughout the Chriſtian world, and in what tragical expreſſions they are ſet forth in ſcripture. God, ſaith St Paul, hath ſet forth us the apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a ſpectacle to the world, to angels, and to men. Even to this preſent hour we both hunger, and thirſt, are naked, and buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labour working with our hands. Being reviled, we bleſs; being perſecuted, we ſuffer it; being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things to this very day, 1 Cor. 4. 9.—13. That they died daily; or ſtood in jeopardy of it every hour, 1 Cor. 15. 31. That they approved themſelves as miniſters of Chriſt in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, in ſtripes, in impriſonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in faſtings, 2 Cor. 6. 4. 5. We were, ſaith he, preſſed above meaſure, beyond ſtrength, inſomuch that we deſpaired of life, 2 Cor. 1. 8. And in the eleventh chapter he gives ſuch a dreadful account of his own afflictions as can ſcarcely be read without trembling. Now, by what motive could they be acted in the publication of that faith, for which they ſuffered all that wit and malice could inflict upon them, but the conviction of the truth of what they publiſhed; ſeeing they actually loſt all in this, and could expect no bleſſings in another world for calling God to witneſs to a lie? The moraliſts aſſure us, that it is impoſſible for men to act without appearance of ſome good to be purſued by that action; that love of life, and a deſire of ſelf-preſervation, is common to us with the brutes, and it is as natural both for them and us, to avoid miſery and torments: If then the apoſtles did actually abandon all the enjoyments and expectations both of this and of a better life, and wilfully ſubject themſelves unto the worſt of miſery and torments, in propagation of a teſtimony from which they could expect no profit or advantage, they muſt be even bereft of common ſenſe, renounce the natural inſtincts of mankind, and be in love with miſery and ruin. I confeſs, it is poſſible for men to lay down their lives for falſe opinions, provided they believe them true; but if the apoſtles were guilty of any cheat at all in this matter, they muſt be guilty of a known impoſture, and ſo muſt ſacrifice their lives for falſehood, i. e. for that from which they could expect no good at all; which ſeems ſo inconſiſtent with the common principles of reaſon and ſelf-love, that nothing can be more incredible.

And this, I hope, may be ſufficient to convince any reaſonable perſon, that theſe epiſtles muſt be written whilſt the apoſtles lived, and be their genuine writings, and then the truth of what they do ſo copiouſly aſſert concerning the miraculous gifts and operations of the Holy Ghoſt, vouchſafed to the believers of thoſe times, cannot be reaſonably conteſted.

1*ſt*, From a particular conſideration of the gifts they mention.

2*dly*, From the reaſon we have to believe that theſe extraordinary gifts were equally conferred upon all other Chriſtian churches, as upon thoſe which the apoſtles mention in their epiſtles, and alſo were of a laſting continuance among them.

1*ſt*, From

1*ſt*, From a particular conſideration of the miraculous operations, and the gifts they mention. Now, they were of two ſorts:

The healing of the ſick, and the curing of the lame, blind, and maimed, the raiſing of the dead, the ejecting of devils out of men, and from their oracles and temples; which being performed by the apoſtles and primitive profeſſors of Chriſtianity upon others, I ſtyle outward operations.

Or elſe thoſe inward gifts by which the underſtanding was enlightened, and was enabled to diſcern that which their natural powers could not reach, as the gift of ſpeaking with unknown tongues, of prophecy, of diſcerning ſpirits. I begin with

The gift of healing the ſick and the diſeaſed. Of which let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That this gift was not confined to the apoſtles, but was conferred on the inferior clergy, and other members of the church indifferently: For amongſt the gifts conferred upon the church, the apoſtle mentions χαρίσματα ἰαμάτων, thoſe of healing, 1 Cor. 12. 19. and ver. 29. they who exerciſed thoſe gifts are reckoned after apoſtles, prophets, teachers, as being both diſtinct from them, and inferior to them; and verſe 30. the queſtion is thus put, Have all the gifts of healing? St James directs the ſick and the diſeaſed to the rulers of the church, which promiſe that the prayer of faith, joined with the holy oil, ſhould heal the ſick, Jam. 5. 14. 15. And this is by our Saviour promiſed as one of the ſigns that ſhould follow them that believed in his name, They ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover, Mark 16. 18. This being therefore made as well the matter of a promiſe, as of their frequent prayers; had not theſe prayers been anſwered, and this promiſe verified, Chriſtianity would have, in probability, been blaſted by it.

2*dly*, This gift continued frequent and notorious in the three firſt ages of the church, and the ſalutary influences of it were diſperſed throughout the world. Soon after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Chriſtians, ſaith (a) Epiphanius, returned from Pella, σημεῖα μεγάλα ἐργαζόμενοι ἰάσεων, working great miracles of healing. Amongſt the operations of the Holy Ghoſt conferred at baptiſm upon the converts of his time, (b) Juſtin Martyr enumerates τὸ τῆς ἰάσεως, the gift of healing. (c) Irenæus proves the certainty of our Lord's reſurrection, from thoſe miracles which his diſciples performed ſtill in his name: "For ſome of them," ſaith he, "caſt out devils, others heal thoſe that are diſeaſed, and even now the "dead have been raiſed, and continue with us many years. The ſpirits of many dead men have returned again, and the "man hath oft been given to the prayers of the ſaints, the whole church of that place requeſting it with prayer and faſting." Even to this day, ſaith (d) Origen, "there remain footſteps of that Holy Spirit, who appeared in the ſhape of "a dove among the Chriſtians, for ἐξιπάδουσι δαίμονας, καὶ πολλὰς ἰάσεις ἐπιτελοῦσι, they caſt out devils, and perform many "cures." And again, (e) "Even now the name of Chriſt exempts men from eccſtaſies, ſcares away δαίμονας ἀδῆ δὲ καὶ νόσους, "devils and diſeaſes. Some footſteps and remainders of the miracles which Chriſt performed (f) ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις καὶ μέχρι νῦν γίνεται, are to this day done in the churches by the name of Jeſus." And laſtly, to that inquiry of Celſus, "What magnificent work hath your Jeſus done?" he anſwers, (g) "This is one magnificent work, that μέχρι σήμερον, even to this day, his name doth heal diſeaſes." Now, of the truth of what they thus deliver, they pretend,

1*ſt*, To be themſelves eye-witneſſes. We can produce, ſaith (h) Origen, a vaſt number of Greeks and Barbarians who believe in Chriſt; "ſome of whom, as a token of the power of that faith they have embraced, heal diſeaſes by in"vocation of the name of God and Chriſt: καὶ ἡμεῖς ἑωράκαμεν, and we ourſelves have ſeen many delivered by theſe "things from dangerous ſymptoms, eccſtaſies, and madneſs, and ten thouſand other evils, which neither men nor devils "could exempt them from."

2*dly*, They call the God of heaven to witneſs to the truth of what they ſay: We have ſeen many ſuch things, ſaith (i) Origen, "being preſent, and beholding them with our eyes, which ſhould we write, the Heathens would laugh at them as "things feigned; ἀλλὰ γὰρ Θεὸς μάρτυς τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ συνειδήσει, but God is witneſs to my conſcience, that I do not en"deavour by falſe teſtimonies to commend the doctrine of Chriſt."

3*dly*, They appeal to the teſtimonies of their very enemies. For thus (k) Tertullian ſpeaks to Scapula, a judge in Carthage: "All theſe things may be ſuggeſted to thee from thy office, and the advocates of it, who have received theſe ad"vantages from Chriſtians; for the notary of one, the child and kinſwoman of another, have been freed by us from devils:" Et quanti boneſti viri (de vulgaribus enim non decimus) aut a dæmoniis, aut valetudinibus remediati ſunt? "And "how many honourable men (for we ſpeak not of the vulgar) have been delivered from devils or diſeaſes by the Chri"ſtians? It was Proculus," ſaith he, "the Chriſtian, that healed with oil Evodus; which ſo ingratiated him to Severus, "that he kept him in his palace to his death." And,

Laſtly, By this very argument they triumph over the like attempts of heretics and heathens, who pretend to do theſe things by magic, or that their gods performed the ſame. 1. Over thoſe heretics, who knowing theſe miraculous cures were frequently performed by the orthodox, were forced to pretend the like. Thus Irenæus comparing the miracles of Chriſtians with the magical operations of Simon M. Carpocrates, and others of that gang: (l) "This," ſaith he, "is ſufficient "to

" to confute them, that they can neither give ſight to the blind, nor hearing to the deaf, nor cure the weak, the lame, " the paralytic, nor thoſe that are diſeaſed in any other part of the body; which yet," ſaith he, " was often done by " Chriſtians to the benefit of the heathens." 2. Over the like pretences of the heathens, who boaſted that (m) πολλοὶ σωμάτων πηρώσεις ἰάσαντο, that their gods did many cures, " that they gave (n) morbis medelam, ſpem afflictis, opem miſeris, " medicine to the diſeaſed, hope to the afflicted, help to the miſerable;" and that their gods had often cured (o) multorum hominum morbos valetudineſque, " the diſeaſes of many." For to this they do not only anſwer, by ſaying they had no aſſurance that their dæmons, however courted by them, could heal the infirmities of human bodies, as (p) Origen replies to Celſus; and that if they had any thing of this kind, it was only by applying medicines, and directing them to ſuch meats, ſuch potions, and ſuch juices of herbs, that is, ſaith Arnobius, " by ſhewing the ſkill of a phyſician rather " than the power of a God:" But that they could do nothing of this nature worthy to be named with that which Chriſt and his epiſtles did; he, ſay they, " with a word commanded the blind to ſee, the lame to walk, and cured all diſeaſes " with a touch of his hand." Now, can you ſhew us any among all your magicians, (q) conſimile aliquid Chriſto milleſima ex parte qui fecerit, " who have done any thing in the leaſt reſembling Chriſt?" Yea, (r) quid ſimile dii omnes quibus opem dicitis ægris, & periclitantibus latam? " What like to this have any of your gods, to whom you do aſcribe " the cure of the ſick, performed?" That whereas their gods could not tranſmit their ſuppoſed power to others, our Jeſus derived this power to the meaneſt, to " ruſtics, fiſhermen, day labourers, (s) and did himſelf nothing which he gave " not them alſo power to do:" and that the name of Jeſus reſtored them to perfect health, who were incurable by all the powers of human art, the aſſiſtance of the dæmons, or of heathen deities. Seeing you have the confidence, ſay they, " to bring the cures of heathen deities into conteſt with thoſe of Chriſt, how many thouſands ſhall we inſtance in, who " have in vain repaired with ſupplications to all the temples of the gods, in vain have tired the ears of your admired Æſculapius? (t) Quid ergo prodeſt oſtendere unum aut alterum fortaſſe curatos, cum tot millibus ſubvenerit nemo? " And " what availeth it, to tell us of the good ſucceſs of two or three, when the complaints of thouſands receiving no help " from them, ſhew their want of power to aſſiſt the needy?"

Let it be then conſidered, that the Chriſtians, for three whole centuries together, healed many myriads throughout the world, who laboured under thoſe diſeaſes which were incurable by all the arts of men and devils; that they made frequently the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, the blind to ſee, and ſometimes raiſed the dead by invocation of the name of Jeſus; and we ſhall find juſt reaſon to conclude, " This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes."

§ X. 2*dly*, Our Lord promiſed, that they who belived in him ſhould caſt out devils, which promiſe he performed with ſuch a conſtant ſcene of glorious inſtances, and ſuch amazing circumſtances, if in this matter we may credit the primitive profeſſors of, and martyrs for Chriſtianity, that it is not poſſible for any man to doubt the truth and certainty of Chriſtian faith, who does not look upon them as impudent untruths, and lying legends. For,

1*ſt*, Let us conſider to whom this power was committed over this ſtrong man armed, over theſe principalities, and the rulers of the darkneſs of this world. Our bleſſed Saviour having ſaid, Behold, I give you authority over all the power of the enemy, great multitudes of Chriſtians gave a continual demonſtration of the truth of this prediction. For, " that our " Lord was ſent for the deſtruction of theſe evil ſpirits, ᾧ γνῶ ἐκ τῶν ὑπ' αὐτῶν γινομένων μαθεῖν δύνασθε, you may now learn, ſaith (u) Juſtin M. " from what is done before your eyes; for many Chriſtians throughout all the world, and in the very city " of your empire, having healed many that were poſſeſſed of the devil, and ſtill do they eject them by invocation of the " name of Jeſus, whom none of your inchanters, conjurers, or ſorcerers were able to expel." " Thoſe Chriſtians are not " few," ſaith (x) Origen, " who eject devils from them that are poſſeſſed with them, and thus they do without all curious " arts, or any ſorcery or magic, only by prayers, and ſimple adjuration of them, ὡς ἱκανὸν γὰρ ἰδιῶται τὸ τοιοῦτον πράξωσι, " for moſtly this is done even by the meaneſt Chriſtians, the grace aſſiſtant to the word of Chriſt demonſtrating by this the " devil's weakneſs; that to expel them from the ſoul or body of a man, there is no need of men of wiſdom, or powerful in " demonſtration of the faith. (y) Now," ſaith he, " were not Chriſt of a divine compoſition, the devils would not thus " quit the bodies they poſſeſs at the bare invocation of his name." Fidelis quiſque dæmonibus imperat, " every Chriſtian " hath command over the devils," ſaith (z) Clemens." " Yea, ſuch is the efficacy of the name of Jeſus," ſaith (a) Origen, " ὡς ἔστ' ὁ τι καὶ ὑπὸ φαύλων ὀνομαζόμενον ὠφέλιμον, that it ſometimes profits when it is uſed by wicked men," according to our Lord's prediction, that, at the dreadful audit, many ſhould be rejected who could make this plea, In thy name we have caſt out devils, Matth. 7. 22. It was ſometimes efficacious even when uſed by them who were no followers of the holy Jeſus; as in the inſtance mentioned by John, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name, and we forbade him, becauſe he followed not us, Mark 9. 38.: and this gave courage to the Jewiſh exorciſts, the ſons of Sceva, to adjure evil ſpirits by the name of Jesus, Acts 19. 4. And not the (b) Jews only, but other inchanters also, saith (c) St Austin, "mixed the "name of Jesus with their incantations."

2*dly*, This name was efficacious against all evil spirits whatsoever, none of them being able to resist the power of it. "Even now," saith (d) Justin Martyr, "we who believe in Jesus, τὰ δαιμόνια πάντα καὶ πνεύματα πονηρὰ ἐξορκίζοντες, ὑπο- "τασσόμενα ἡμῖν ἔχομεν, adjuring the whole herd of devils and malignant spirits, have them all subject to our power." And again, "By the name of the Son of God, πᾶν δαιμόνιον ἐξορκιζόμενον νικᾶται, καὶ ὑποτάσσεται, all kinds of devils, being "adjured, are overcome, and brought into subjection." "It is evidently seen," saith (e) Origen, "that by the name of "Jesus ten thousand devils have been expelled from the souls and bodies of those who were possessed by them." On this account they triumphed over the heathen exorcists, that by the name of Jesus they expelled those devils "which none of "their inchanters, sorcerers, or magicians," saith (f) Justin M. "could expel;" and over all the heathen deities. "Bring "one possessed, mad, and raging," saith (g) Lactantius, "to your Jupiter, or, because he is not skilful in those matters, bring "him to Æsculapius, or Apollo; let both their priests adjure him in the name of their supposed deities, to quit his station; "they in vain attempt it: but let the same devils be adjured in the name of the true God, and instantly they fly: Quæ "ratio est ut timeant Christum, Jovem non timeant? Were this Jove any better than themselves, why do they fear our "Christ, and not their Jupiter?" And on the same account, they triumphed over those heretics which then appeared to corrupt the truth: "For we by this," saith (h) Irenæus, "confound the heresies of Simon M. Carpocrates, and the whole "tribe of those deceitful workers, that they cannot omnes dæmones effugare, expel all kinds of devils, but only such as are "confederate with them, if they indeed do that." Consider,

3*dly*, That they expelled them not only out of men, but also from their temples, oracles, and altars. "We are so "far," saith (i) Origen, "from worshipping of demons, that we expel them ἀπὸ τόπων ἐν οἷς αὐτὸς ἱδρύκασιν, from the "places where they are seated." "Go no more," saith (k) Clemens of Alexandria in his exhortation to the Greeks, "to your Castalian, or other fountains: all these prophetic streams are now dried up, and they are passed away with their "own fables." "Divination and oracles," saith (l) Strabo, "were by the ancients much regarded; but now they are "as generally neglected and contemned, the oracle at Delphos, and at Hammon being wholly silent." "Not above one "or two remains," saith (m) Plutarch, "the rest are wholly silent, or entirely desolate." "The spirit of the gods," saith the apostate (n) Julian, "comes now σπανιάκις μὲν καὶ ἐν ὀλίγοις, but rarely and to very few." Thus are the very Heathens forced, with (o) Porphyry, to confess the triumphs of our Jesus over their supposed deities. Nor did they only silence their oracles, and stop the mouths both of their priests and of those dæmons that inspired them; but they did open them, at the same time, to force them to confess, even before their priests and votaries, that they were evil spirits. "This most "men," saith (p) Minutius, "know, and some of you, that all your dæmons, when they are forced out of bodies by our "words and prayers, do with grief confess what they are, not belying their own filthiness, even in your presence; ipsis "testibus esse eos dæmones de se verum confitentibus credite, believe their testimony when truly they confess themselves to "be but devils." "All the dominion we have over them," saith (q) Tertullian, "proceedeth from the name of Christ, "and the commemoration of those things they are to suffer from him as their judge; this causeth them, at our command, "to come forth of the bodies they possess, with great reluctance, and grief, and shame, when you are present: you "who have credited their lies, believe them when they speak the truth of themselves, for none will lie to their disgrace, "but for their honour; they are more to be believed who confess against themselves, than who deny for themselves." "These devils," saith (r) St Cyprian, "being adjured by the true God, do instantly confess, and are compelled to come "out of the bodies they possess; you may see them by our voice, and by the power of the invisible Majesty, as it were, "whipped and scorched, and as their torment doth increase, you may hear them howling, groaning, deprecating, con- "fessing, even in the audience of their votaries, whence they come, and when they will depart." (s) Donatus, this is made one property of a Chriſtian, "to force impure ſpirits to confeſs what they are, and to urge "them by their powerful ſtrokes to depart." Conſider,

4*thly*, That this was done not in Rome and Carthage only, and other cities of the chiefeſt note, but, as it is obſerved by (t) Juſtin Martyr, κατὰ πάντα τὸν κόσμον, throughout all the world, not only for ſome weeks or months together, but, as theſe records teſtify, from the firſt riſe of Chriſtians to the days of Conſtantine; for even about that time (u) Lactantius ſpeaks thus: "As Chriſt himſelf, whilſt he converſed with men, did with a word expel all kind of devils, ita nunc ſectatores ejus, ſo now his followers expel theſe filthy ſpirits by their maſter's name, and by the ſign of his paſſion." (x) Euſebius adds that, "διότι καὶ νῦν, even now he ſhews the virtue of his divine power, by expelling wicked and hurtful "devils from the bodies and the ſouls of men, only by mention of his name, ὡς αὐτῇ πείρᾳ κατειλήφαμεν, as from experience "we have found." This they did,

Laſtly, Say theſe authors, without the uſe of medicines, or magical incantations, only by "invocation of the name of "Jeſus, or by reciting the ſacred books," ſaith (y) Origen; "without deceit, or without gain," ſaith (z) Irenæus; "ſine "præmio, ſine mercede, without advantage, or reward," ſaith (a) Tertullian; it being then conceived criminal to gain by ſuch ſpiritual gifts, and contrary to that injunction of their Lord, Matth. 10. 8. Freely ye have received, freely give. And truly, to conceive theſe things were done by any medicines, or magical inchantments, is the greateſt folly; for how ſhould multitudes of mean and ſimple Chriſtians arrive at ſuch a ſkill in any of thoſe arts, which neither Jew or Gentile, who had long exerciſed them, could attain unto, and which none of theſe numerous apoſtates or heretics which fell off from them in the times of perſecution, could diſcover, or inſtruct others to perform, or themſelves exerciſe? And much leſs is it to be thought that Satan ſhould aſſiſt them to build Chriſtianity upon the ruins of his own kingdom, and to promote an intereſt as contrary both to his nature and deſigns, as is light to darkneſs. Moreover, that none might doubt the truth of theſe particulars,

1*ſt*, They frequently appeal even to the ſenſes of the very infidels. "If you are willing," ſaith (b) Juſtin M. "καὶ νῦν ἐκ "τῶν ὑπ' ὄψιν γινομένων ῥᾴδιον ὑμῖν πιστῶσαι, it is eaſy for you, even now, to be aſſured of theſe things with your own eyes." "Dictis non ſtetis, ſi oculi veſtri & aures permiſerint vobis, Diſbelieve theſe things," ſaith (c) Tertullian, "if your eyes and "ears will ſuffer you to do ſo." Admirable are thoſe words of (d) Cyprian to Demetrianus, a perſecutor of the Chriſtians, Veni & cognoſce vera eſſe quæ dicimus, "Come and experiment the truth of what we ſay; and ſince thou ſayeſt thou wor- "ſhippeſt the gods, believe the gods thou worſhippeſt; or if thou wilt believe thyſelf; for he that now dwells in thy "breaſt, and holds thy ſoul in ignorance, ſhall in thy audience ſpeak of thee; thou ſhalt ſee them intreating us whom thou "intreateſt, them whom thou feareſt, fearing us; thou ſhalt ſee them bound, and trembling under our hand, whom thou "adoreſt as gods; ſure this muſt be ſufficient to confound thee in thy errors, when thou ſeeſt and heareſt thy gods, at "our command, inſtantly confeſſing what they are, and not daring to conceal their cheats in thy preſence."

2*dly*, They appeal alſo to their conſciences: "We expel devils out of men," ſaith (e) Tertullian, "ſicut plurimis no- "tum, as very many know." "Moſt men are very well acquainted with theſe things," ſaith (f) Minutius, "pars veſtrum, "and ſo ſome of you Heathens are." They appeal,

3*dly*, To the confeſſions of the very devils, as hath been proved already from the teſtimonies of Tertullian, Minutius, Cyprian; and by this very argument (g) Theophilus proves them to be evil ſpirits, that μέχρι τῆ σήμερον, even at this day, being exorciſed by the name of the true God, they confeſs themſelves to be deceitful ſpirits. And,

4*thly*, They appeal to the effects produced upon the perſons thus diſpoſſeſſed, even their converſion by this means to the Chriſtian faith. "Some Chriſtians," ſaith (h) Irenæus, "have the gift of caſting out devils ſo firmly, and ſo certainly, "ὥστε πολλάκις πιστεύειν αὐτοὺς ἐκείνης καθαριζομένους ἀπὸ τῶν πονηρῶν πνευμάτων, that many times they who are healed, and "delivered from theſe evil ſpirits, believe, and do continue in the church." Hæc denique teſtimonia deorum veſtrorum Chriſtianos facere conſueverunt, "Theſe teſtimonies of your gods do oft make Chriſtians," ſaith (i) Tertullian; "believing "them, we believe in Chriſt, they advance the credit of our writings, and build up our hope; for you worſhip them even "with the blood of Chriſtians, they therefore would not loſe ſuch profitable votaries, leſt turning Chriſtians, you ſhould, "with us, expel them," ſi illis, ſub Chriſtiano volente vobis veritatem probare, mentiri liceret, "if they durſt lie to a "Chriſtian attempting to confirm you in the truth." (k) Lactantius, accounting for the multitude of Chriſtians, ſaith, This is no ſmall reaſon of it, "that the devils being caſt out by Chriſtians, omnes qui reſanati fuerint, adhæreant religioni cu- "jus potentiam ſenſerunt, they who are healed, embrace that faith whoſe benefit and power they have felt."

5*thly*, They encourage others to embrace the Chriſtian faith, by promiſing to them this power of ejecting devils, when they ſhould cordially embrace it. "Be ye baptized," ſaith (l) Clemens, "in the name of the Holy Trinity; and then, "if you believe with an entire faith, and with true purity of mind, etiam ex aliis vos malignos ſpiritus effugetis, & dæmones, you ſhall expel impure ſpirits and devils out of others, and free men from diſeaſes; for the devils know and own "thoſe who have given up themſelves to God, and ſometimes at their very preſence are caſt out; we exhort you therefore "to be of our religion, and we aſſure you that when you do advance to the ſame faith and innocence of life with us, erit "par vobis atque eadem etiam contra dæmones poteſtas, you ſhall obtain like power over the evil ſpirits."

Laſtly, They offer upon pain of death, and all that could be dear to them, to make this experiment before the eyes of Heathens, i. e. not only to eject thoſe very dæmons they invoked, but even to force them to confeſs they were cheats, and own themſelves to be but devils. "I come now," ſaith (m) Tertullian, "to the demonſtration of the point: Edatur hic "aliquis coram tribunalibus veſtris, Let any one be placed before your tribunals, who manifeſtly is poſſeſſed by the devil, "being commanded by any Chriſtian to ſpeak what he is, he ſhall as certainly truly confeſs himſelf to be a devil, as elſe-"where he doth falſely profeſs to be a god; produce any other of them who profeſs to be inſpired by any of your gods, "niſi ſe dæmones confeſſi fuerint, Chriſtiano mentiri non audentes, ibidem illius Chriſtiani procaciſſimi ſanguinem fundite, "if they do not confeſs themſelves to be devils, not daring to lie to a Chriſtian, let the blood of that malapert Chriſtian be "ſhed before you in that very place. What is more manifeſt than this experiment, more faithful than this proof? Here "is plain evidence laid before you, whoſe virtue will aſſiſt itſelf; here can be no ſuſpicion; even ſay, that magic, or ſome "ſuch fallacy, is impoſed upon you, if your eyes and ears will permit you."

All this we have delivered upon certain knowledge, and confirmed to us with the higheſt atteſtations, by men of greateſt wiſdom, to diſtinguiſh betwixt truth and falſehood, and ſo diſcern matters of real fact from vain impoſtures; by men of that ſincerity, and undiſguiſed piety, as renders their veracity, in matters ſubject to their ſenſes and their experience, inconteſtable; by men who ſuffered all that is terrible to human nature, for the profeſſion of a faith, whoſe truth depended on the certainty of theſe events; and which, in this world, called for continual acts of ſelf-denial, and auſterity, and the renouncing all that tends to gratify the ſenſual appetite, only for the enjoyment of inward and ſpiritual pleaſures here, and of celeſtial joys hereafter. Again, all this is ſaid in their diſcourſes directed to Heathen emperors, and judges, or to the Heathen world, partly to mitigate their hatred of them, and their ſeverities againſt them, and partly to engage them to embrace the Chriſtian faith, which ſure no perſon of ſincerity would, no men of wiſdom could attempt by ſuch untruths as might be eaſily detected by them: for could they boaſt of their continual triumphs over Satan's kingdom throughout all the world, and ſend the Heathens to Rome and Carthage, and other famous cities, to be convinced of the truth of what they ſaid? Would they talk of the multitude of converts they had made to the Chriſtian faith, by diſpoſſeſſing men of devils, or forcing evil ſpirits in their preſence, to confeſs they were but devils? Would they encourage others to embrace the Chriſtian faith, by promiſe of like power when they did cordially believe and practiſe ſuitably to it? Would they appeal to the ſenſes, to the ears and eyes, to the conſcience and experience of their moſt ſpiteful adverſaries? would they provoke them to make the experiment of the truth of what they ſaid with the hazard of their lives, and even encourage them to ſhed their blood, if, upon trial, they ſhould fail of the performance? Or could they by ſuch means as theſe prevail upon the world, and daily gain new proſelytes, had not the evidence of truth confirmed their ſayings? And if, in theſe aſſertions, they ſpeak the words of truth and ſoberneſs, they give they cleareſt evidence of the power of that Jeſus whoſe name ſo mightily prevailed over the hoſt of theſe infernal legions. For is it reaſonable to conceive, theſe devils, without conſtraint from a ſuperior power, ſhould not only quit the power they ſo long had exerciſed over the bodies and the ſouls of them who worſhipped them as gods; but alſo ſhould confeſs ſo oft, even in the preſence of their votaries, at the command of them who ſought the ruin of their kingdom, and uſed their confeſſions to that purpoſe, that they were evil ſpirits? Or could the name of Jeſus, without the power to which he pretended, have been ſo great a terror, and a torment to them, or be thus efficacious even in the mouths of wicked men, and thoſe who followed not him, had not this alſo tended to the confirmation of his power? Did ever any of the Heathen jugglers, with all their arts of magic, extort ſuch plain confeſſions from them? Did they thus force them to deſert the bodies and the temples they poſſeſſed, and to exert their power to the ruin of themſelves, and the amendment of thoſe ſouls they had inſnared? This therefore being only done by our Jeſus, or others in his name, demonſtrates his divine commiſſion.

Obj. Againſt this ſignal demonſtration of the truth of Chriſtian faith, the only cavil which the infidels and ſceptics raiſe, is this, that we find no mention of perſons thus poſſeſſed with the devil among Jews or Gentiles, before our Saviour's advent; nor have we now experience of any ſuch thing, either among Chriſtians, or in the Heathen world; and therefore cannot eaſily believe it was ſo then, but rather, that the perſons repreſented as demoniacs were only perſons afflicted with ſome ſtrange diſeaſes, fits of the mother, convulſions, falling-ſickneſs, madneſs, and the like.

Anſ. 1*ſt*. To this I anſwer, That were this granted, yet muſt this be a demonſtration of the power of Chriſt, and of the truth of the Chriſtian faith, that it enabled its profeſſors every where, by virtue of the name and invocation of the holy Jeſus, thus to heal all manner of diſtempers, which no phyſicians could cure by their art, much leſs by ſpeaking of a word.

2*dly*, Moreover, I have ſufficiently confuted this cavil, by ſhewing, that the Chriſtians of thoſe times ejected devils, not only out of men, but alſo from their temples, oracles, and altars; and that ſo ſignally, that even the beſt hiſtorians of thoſe ages, though by religion Heathens, and ſome of them profeſſed enemies of Chriſtianity, are forced to confeſs their oracles were ſilent, and that Chriſtianity had thus triumphed over their ſuppoſed deities; and alſo by

ſhewing, that they forced theſe evil ſpirits to confeſs they were but devils. Beſides, we find both in the ſacred records, and in the writings of thoſe fathers, a conſtant and a plain diſtinction betwixt theſe two things, the curing diſeaſes, and the caſting out of devils; ſo Mark 1. 34. He healed many that were ſick of divers diſeaſes, and caſt out many devils, and ſuffered not the devils to ſpeak, becauſe they knew him. Matth. 10. 1. He gave to the apoſtles power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out, and to heal all manner of ſickneſs and diſeaſes. "The Chriſtians," ſaith (n) Irenæus, "truly caſt "out devils, and heal the ſick by impoſition of hands. Ἐξαπάδουσι δαίμονας, καὶ πολλὰς ἰάσεις ἐπιτελοῦσι, they caſt out "devils, and heal many diſeaſes," ſaith (o) Origen. "How many honeſt men have by us been healed, or freed from devils?" is the inquiry of (p) Tertullian.

3*dly*, The falſehood of the ſuggeſtion, that men poſſeſſed with evil ſpirits were not known among the Jews in former ages, appears from the plain teſtimonies of (q) Joſephus, who ſaith, "That God taught Solomon this wiſdom, for "the benefit of men; and that he left behind him thoſe ways of exorciſing dæmons, which ſo effectually expelled them, "that they never entered into them more; and from that time to this hath that way of curing thoſe who were poſſeſſed, "being very powerful." He alſo talks of a ſtrange herb, or ſhrub, which being artificially pulled up, (r) τὸ καλούμενον δαιμόνιον ταχέως ἐξελαύνει, preſently expels devils. We alſo read, in the Acts, of ſeven ſons of one Seva a Jew, who were exorciſts, Acts 19. 13. and of their children caſting out devils, Matth. 12. 25. And both (s) Juſtin Martyr, and (t) Irenæus inform us, that they did this before the time of our Saviour, "by the invocation of the God of Abraham, Iſaac, "and Jacob."

That among the Heathens there were perſons thus poſſeſſed, appears ſufficiently by this, that otherwiſe the Chriſtians could not have pretended to caſt them out; and from the exorciſts and magicians in every nation, of whom (u) Plutarch ſaith, "That they adviſed thoſe who were poſſeſſed, to repeat the Epheſian letters:" And (x) Lucian mentions it as a thing known to all, that they had thoſe "who did diſpoſſeſs dæmons. (y) Juſtin martyr ſaith, The Jews exerciſed them, τῇ τέχνῃ ὥσπερ καὶ τὰ ἔθνη χρώμενοι, uſing that art as the heathens did. The names of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, are uſed, ſaith (z) Origen, not only by the Jewiſh exorciſts, ἀλλὰ γὰρ σχεδὸν καὶ πάντας τοὺς τὰ τῶν ἐνθέων καὶ μαγικῶν πραγματευομένους, but almoſt by all that practiſe the art of magic or inchantment. So that it is certain, that the hiſtory of Chriſt and his apoſtles caſting out devils in Judea, and of the Chriſtians caſting them out throughout the world, was therefore never queſtioned by Jew or Gentile, becauſe they had among themſelves in every place pretenders to it.

And if, after the triumphs of the goſpel, there now continue among Chriſtians no footſteps of this power of Satan, this is a teſtimony of the truth of what our Lord foretold, Now is the prince of the world caſt out, John 12. 31.

§ XI. Of thoſe internal gifts, which ſhew the power of the Holy Ghoſt engaged to promote the Chriſtian faith, Firſt, That of tongues is moſt illuſtrious. This was a gift exceeding requiſite to the ſpeedy propagation of the goſpel, which in the ſpace of forty years was, by our Lord's prediction, Matth. 24. 14. to ſpread itſelf throughout the world. And therefore it was daily exerciſed among the heathens to convert them, and by themſelves, when they embraced the Chriſtian faith; for the family, the friends, and kindred of Cornelius received the Holy Ghoſt; and, to the amazement of the Jewiſh converts, ſpake with tongues, and magnified God, Acts 10. 46. Upon the twelve diſciples of the baptiſt, the apoſtle lays his hands, and they receive the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpeak with tongues, Acts 19. 6. St Paul, in his epiſtle to the church of Corinth, ſaith, They were enriched with, and they abounded ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ, in all tongues, 2 Cor. 1. 5.; ſee the note there. Among the gifts imparted to them, he reckons divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them, 1 Cor. 12. 9. and puts the queſtion to them thus, ver. 30. Do all ſpeak with tongues? This he objecteth as their crime, That when they came together, every one had his tongue, 1 Cor. 14. 26. and adds, that if they thus continued to uſe this gift, it would breed confuſion in their churches, and cauſe their auditors to ſay, That they were mad, ver. 23. Whence he adviſeth them who uſed theſe tongues, to pray they might interpret, ver. 23. permitting only two or three to ſpeak with tongues in one aſſembly, and that by courſe, and with interpretation, ver. 26. 27. 28. impoſing ſilence on them, when no interpreter was preſent; and order, ſaith he, being thus obſerved, let no man forbid to ſpeak with tongues, ver. 39. And if this gift was ſo abundantly conferred upon that church, in which the apoſtle found ſo great miſcarriages, and of which he only ſaith, They came behind the other churches in no gifts; we reaſonably may ſuppoſe others, and better churches, had an equal ſhare in this gift. Accordingly, "we have heard," ſaith Irenæus, (l. 5. c. 6.) "many brethren who have received the Spirit of God, καὶ πάντοδαπαῖς λαλοῦντων διὰ πνεύματος "γλώσσαις, and by that Spirit ſpake all languages."

And now, what can the unbeliever offer to invalidate the ſtrength of this convincing demonſtration? Will he aſcribe this gift to the aſſurance of the devil? Let him produce one inſtance of like nature from any Heathen writer, to ſhew, that ever this was done by any beſides Chriſtians: or tell us, why that ſubtile ſpirit ſhould thus concern himſelf to propagate, and to confirm that faith, which bears the cleareſt oppoſition both to his nature and deſigns? Will they aſcribe it to ſome fit of melancholy, or ſome diſtemper of the brain? What can be more abſurd, than to aſſert, that at the preaching of a ſermon, the ruſhing of a mighty wind, the laying on of an apoſtle's hands, or the baptizing of a perſon in the name of Jeſus, ſuch unaccountable diſeaſes ſhould ſeize on many thouſands, and ſhould enable them to ſpeak a language they had never learned? Or, is it reaſonable to think, this diſtemper ſhould be ſo peculiar to Chriſtian conſtitutions, as that no other perſons ſhould pretend to it? and that it ſhould wholly ceaſe from them, when once the Chriſtian faith had ſpread itſelf over all nations, Chriſtians themſelves never pretending that it laſted beyond the ſecond century?

§ XII. The ſecond internal gift of which the ſcripture maketh frequent mention, is that of prophecy; of which let it be noted,

That ſeeing the Jews, from the foundation of their church to the completion of the canon of the Old Teſtament, had a continual ſucceſſion of prophets to inſtruct them in the mind of God, it ſeemeth highly requiſite, that the like gift ſhould for ſome ſeaſon be conferred upon the church of Chriſt, which was not only to ſucceed, but highly to excel the Jewiſh œconomy. Eſpecially, if we conſider, that their own prophet Joel had foretold, touching the times of the Meſſiah promiſed to the Jews, God would then pour his Spirit upon all fleſh, and their ſons and daughters ſhould propheſy, Joel 2. 18.; and alſo that our Lord had promiſed to ſend the Spirit of truth to his diſciples, to lead them into all truth, and to declare unto them things to come, John 16. 13. and to ſend to the Jewiſh nation, prophets and wiſe men, Matth. 23. 34. and ſome of theſe muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak, when he engageth, That he that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, ſhall receive a prophet's reward, Matth. 10. 41. So that you ſee, the Chriſtians had juſt reaſon to expect the ſpirit of prophecy ſhould be again revived in their days, and plentifully conferred upon them; and that both Jew and Gentile muſt have had ſufficient cauſe to queſtion the whole truth of Chriſtian faith, had not this ſpirit of prophecy been found among them: and therefore of the completion of this promiſe, we are aſſured, Firſt, From the catalogue of Chriſtian prophets, mentioned in the New Teſtament, and ancient writers of the church. For Acts 11. 27. 28. mention is made of Chriſtian prophets coming from Jeruſalem; and of Agabus, who foretold the famine that happened in the days of Claudius Cæſar, as (a) Joſephus, (b) Suetonius, and (c) Dion teſtify. In the 13th chapter, we are told of five prophets in the church of Antioch, who, whilſt they were employed in the public miniſtry, received a divine afflatus, commanding them to ſeparate Barnabas and Saul to ſome ſpecial work, to which the Holy Spirit had deſigned them, ver. 3.; and chap. 15. 32. we read of Judas and Silas, who being prophets, exhorted the brethren with many words; and chap. 19. 6. of twelve diſciples, who, when St Paul had laid his hands upon them, ſpake with tongues and propheſied. In the Revelations of St John, mention is made of Chriſt's ſervants, the prophets, chap. 16. 6. and of the blood of the prophets ſlain by the beaſt, chap. 18. 20. 24. and of the prophets his brethren, chap. 19. 10. (d) Euſebius cites an ancient author, who ſpeaks of Quadratus and others, as πνευματοφορηθεντες προφηται, inſpired prophets, and who declared, that the prophetic gift continued ſtill in the church. Moreover, as Joel had foretold, that in theſe days their daughters and their handmaids ſhould propheſy; ſo we read in the hiſtory of the Acts, of four daughters of Philip the evangeliſt, who did propheſy, Acts 21. 9.; in the epiſtle to the Corinthians, of women propheſying, 1 Cor. 11. 5.; and in the eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, of (e) Ammia of Philadelphia, a propheteſs.

In a word, there was not any church in which this gift of prophecy was not frequent. We read of prophets at Jeruſalem the mother of all churches, Acts 11. 27. in the church of Antioch, Acts 13. 1.; of the gift of prophecy in the church of Rome, Rom. 12. 6. in that of Corinth and of Theſſalonica, 1 Theſſ. 5. 20.; and of ſpiritual perſons in the church of Galatia, chap. 6. 1. They are ſaid to be placed in the church in general; for God, ſaith the apoſtle, hath ſet ſome in the church, 1ſt, apoſtles; 2dly, prophets; 3dly, teachers: as therefore the apoſtles and the teachers, ſo did the prophets exerciſe their functions in all churches. They were given to the church for ends which equally concerned all their aſſemblies, Chriſt having given ſome apoſtles, ſome prophets, ſome evangeliſts, ſome paſtors and teachers, for the perfecting of the ſaints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying the body of Chriſt, Eph. 4. 11. 12. Now, theſe are ends in which all churches muſt be equally concerned, and therefore we have reaſon to believe, that as apoſtles, evangeliſts, and paſtors, ſo prophets alſo were vouchſafed to them all.

Moreover, it ſeems evident, that at the firſt foundation of a Chriſtian church among the Gentiles, there were no ſettled paſtors to perform the public offices in their aſſemblies; but they were generally performed by prophets, or by ſpiritual men, who had the gift of prophecy, or were in the aſſembly excited to that work by an afflatus of the Holy Spirit. To clear up this, let it be noted, Firſt, That as ſoon as any perſon then embraced the Chriſtian faith, they received with it the gift of prophecy, or of the Holy Ghoſt; ſo when Peter and John laid hands on the Samaritan converts, they received the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 8. 15. When Peter preached to Cornelius and his friends, the Holy Ghoſt fell on all them that heard the word, and they ſpake with tongues, and magnified God, Acts 10. 44. 46. So alſo the twelve diſciples of the Baptiſt, when St Paul laid his hands upon them, ſpake with tongues and propheſied, Acts 19. 6.; ſo that this gift of prophecy was ſtill contemporary with a Chriſtian church, or family of Chriſtian converts.

Note, Secondly, That the apoſtles did not preſently, upon the converſion of any number of perſons to the Chriſtian faith, ordain them elders in every church, but left them for a ſeaſon to the conduct of thoſe prophets and ſpiritual men the Holy Ghoſt had fitted for that work. The church of Antioch was converted, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, in the fortieth year of our Lord, and a great number of them turned to the Lord, Acts 11. 21. and yet no elders were ordained among them, till the fiftieth year, Acts 14. 23. But in this interval, there were prophets among them who miniſtered in their aſſemblies to the Lord, chap. 13. 2. The inhabitants of the iſle of Crete, were converted for ſome conſiderable time before St Paul ſent Titus to them, to ſet in order the things which were lacking, and ordain elders in every city, chap. 1. 5. How were they then in the mean time ſupplied with teachers, and men that miniſtered in their aſſemblies, unleſs by men aſſiſted by that Spirit which was ſhed on them abundantly at their converſion? chap. 3. 5. 6. And if we may take an eſtimate of other churches, by what was certainly performed in the aſſemblies of the church of Corinth, we cannot reaſonably doubt the truth of this aſſertion. For, whereas all the public offices performed then in the church, were prayer and pſalmody, expounding or preaching of the word, and euchariſtical oblations; all theſe are in the fourteenth chapter of the firſt epiſtle aſcribed to the prophets in that church, or to the men endowed with ſpiritual gifts among them: for when they came together, ſome of them prayed, others compoſed ſacred hymns by their ſpiritual gift, ver. 15. Their prophets did then teach for edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3. and 31. they alſo did then εὐλογεῖν, bleſs, which is the word uſed for conſecration of the euchariſt, chap. 10. 16. and εὐχαριστεῖν, give thanks, which is the word uſed in our Lord's inſtitution of this ſacrament, 1 Cor. 11. 21. and at this thankſgiving, the people anſwered, Amen, (t) as they were wont to do at the celebration of the ſacrament, ver. 16. 17. That all, or any of theſe things were done by ſtated paſtors, we never read in the epiſtles to that church. And this ſeems yet more probable, touching the church of Corinth, becauſe there ſeems no order obſerved among them in their propheſying, and no ſubjection of the prophets in their aſſemblies, to any ruler in that church. When the inceſtuous perſon was to be delivered up to Satan, this was done by the authority of St Paul, with the concurrence of the whole aſſembly: When you are met together, ſaith he, deliver ſuch a one to Satan, 1 Cor. 5. 4. Put away from yourſelves that wicked perſon, ver. 13. And when he ſpeaketh of this act of diſcipline, he calls it ἐπιτιμία ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, the puniſhment inflicted by many, 2 Cor. 2. 6. See the note there. And when the ſame perſon was to be abſolved, there is no direction ſent to any rulers of the church to give him abſolution, but all ſeems immediately to be done by the authority of St Paul, and by the whole aſſembly. And, laſtly, in the epiſtle ſent from Corinth to the church of Rome, we find not any ſalutation ſent to Rome, from any biſhop or elder of the church of Corinth, but only from the kindred of St Paul, from Gaius the hoſt of that church, Eraſtus the chamberlain of the city, and Quartus a brother, chap. 16. 21. 22. 23. All which things put together, render it more than probable, that there were then no ſettled paſtors in the church of Corinth, which makes it neceſſary, that the affairs of their church-aſſemblies ſhould be wholly managed by their prophets and ſpiritual perſons.

It ſeemeth alſo highly probable, this was the caſe of other churches, ſince the apoſtle directing his epiſtles to many of them, maketh no mention of any church-governors amongſt them, either in the beginning of them, as he doth in his epiſtle to the Philippians, or the ſalutations at the cloſe of them, as he doth in that to the Hebrews, ſaying, Salute all them who have the rule over you, chap. 13. 24. For inſtance, there is no direction of the epiſtle writ to the Galatians to any church-governors among them, no ſalutation of them in the cloſe of it, no charge againſt them for ſuffering thoſe great diſorders which had obtained in that church, no exhortation to them to take heed to their miniſtry, or to oppoſe themſelves to the deceivers then crept in among them; but there are plain directions given to the ſpiritual men, or to the prophets then among them, in theſe words, Brethren, if any man be overtaken with a fault, ye that are ſpiritual, i. e. who are endowed with thoſe ſpiritual gifts which enable you for public miniſtrations in the church, reſtore ſuch a one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, chap. 6. 1. (ſee the note there); which makes it highly probable, that church was managed, not by ſtated paſtors, but by prophets, and ſpiritual teachers of the word.

Thus alſo ſeems it to have been in the church of Theſſalonica. For, 1*ſt*, we find no notice taken of them in the front of the epiſtles to them, no ſalutation of them in the cloſe; the words of ſalutation being only theſe, Salute all the brethren with an holy kiſs. 2*dly*, We find no directions given to them in particular, but only to the brethren in general, touching ſuch matters as muſt have related to their office only, or chiefly, had they been ſettled rulers in that church. The charge, 1 Theſſ. 5. 14. runs thus: We exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak. And, 2 Theſſ. 2. 6. thus: We command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw yourſelves from every brother that walks diſorderly, and not according to the tradition which ye have received from us. And ver. 13. 14. And ye brethren, —— if any man obey not the word by this epiſtle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be aſhamed; yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother. And laſtly, to theſe brethren the adjuration mentioned, chap. 5. 27. is directed, charging them by the Lord, that this epiſtle be read to all the holy brethren.

The ſame may be obſerved of the epiſtle directed by the ſame apoſtle to the church of Rome; for it is directed in the general, To all that are in Rome, beloved of God, and ſaints called; and among the numerous ſalutations in the cloſe, we find not one directed to any ſtated paſtors of that church: but this we find, that having finiſhed his great diſpute concerning juſtification, and the rejection of the Jews, he exhorts them to be wiſe to ſobriety, as God had diſtributed to every one the meaſure of faith, chap. 12. 6. and adds, Having therefore gifts differing according to the grace given to us, whether it be prophecy, let us propheſy according to the proportion of faith, ver. 6. or miniſtry, let us wait on our miniſtry, or he that teacheth on teaching. Now, evident it is, that both the prophets and teachers in thoſe times, are reckoned as men who exerciſed thoſe offices by a ſpiritual afflatus, and were enabled to perform them by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit then vouchſafed to them; whence they are ſtyled, in the words now cited, χαρίσματα, Spiritual gifts. Hence, therefore, it is highly probable, theſe were the men who then preſided in their assemblies, and exercised sacred offices in the church of Rome. Now, if these things were so, all Christian churches, at their first conversion to Christianity, must have a sensible and constant demonstration of the exercise of these spiritual gifts in their assemblies, and so a certain evidence of the divine presence with them, and of the truth of the profession they embraced.

This will be farther evident, if we consider what is ascribed to these prophets, what demonstrations they afforded, that they were truly acted by a divine afflatus.

In prosecution of this head, I do acknowledge, that prophecy doth, 1 Cor. 14. signify expounding the scriptures, for exhortation, edification, and comfort, but then it signifies the doing this by a divine afflatus; and when this gift was exercised by singing, or by praising God, this was still done, as holy scripture doth inform us, ὠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς, in psalms, and hymns, and odes, composed by the immediate impulse and assistance of the Holy Ghost; for upon that account alone could this be styled praying, and singing in the Holy Ghost, and mentioned as an instance of their spiritual gifts: and such a manifestation of the Spirit did attend them in this exercise, as made it easy for others to discern that they were prophets; for either with the gift of prophecy they had the gift of tongues, as in the first effusion of the Holy Ghost, when they spake with other tongues the wonderful things of God, Acts 2. 11. and thereby shewed the spirit of prophecy, which God had promised by his servant Joel, was fulfilled upon them, and on Cornelius and his kinsmen, the first Gentile converts; for by this were the Jews convinced, that God had shed on them also the gift of the Holy Ghost, that they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God, Acts 10. 44. 45. Or, 2dly, They foretold things future and contingent, according to our Saviour's promise, that the Spirit he would send, should shew them things to come, John 16. 13. Thus we find mention in the sacred story of the prophet Agabus, who foretold the year before, that dearth which happened in the reign of Claudius, Acts 11. 27. that other Christian might be moved by this prediction, to send their charity to their brethren where the famine pinched them most, as it did in Judea, saith Josepheus; and of Timothy, chosen to be an evangelist, according to the foregoing prophecies concerning him; whence by the ancients this gift was styled, ὁ τῆς προγνώσεως, the gift of foreknowledge.

Moreover, in the epistles of St Paul we find not only mention of prophets settled in the church, and of prophecy reckoned among the gifts of the good Spirit, but we find him comparing it with other gifts; particularly, 1. with that of tongues, and preferring it before that gift; as being such a gift as tended more to the edification of the church: For greater is he that prophesieth, than he that speaketh with tongues, saith the apostle; for he that speaketh with tongues edifieth himself only, but he that prophesieth edifies the church, 1 Cor. 14. 2. 5. Hence he declareth his desire, that they should rather prophesy than speak with tongues. 2. He compares it with that of charity, declaring in that case that charity excels it, because, though we have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, yet if we have no charity, we are nothing, 1 Cor. 13. 2. and because prophecies shall cease, but charity never ceaseth, ver. 8. Moreover, he gives directions to prophets, to prophesy according to the proportion of faith, Rom. 12. 6. to prophesy successively, or one by one, and let the other prophets judge, 1 Cor. 14. 29. and to hold their peace when any thing is revealed to another prophet, ver. 10. He also blames them for prophesying all together, in a confused manner, and without observation of due order, and for suffering their women to prophesy in the church, ver. 39. And, yet after all these directions, he exhorts them to covet prophecy, and saith, Quench not the Holy Spirit, despise not prophecies, 1 Thess. 5. 19. 20. Now, these things give us an unquestionable evidence, that this gift was then plentifully conferred upon the church of Christ; for could the apostle talk with so great confidence, in his epistles directed to Christian churches, of prophets, and a gift of prophecy vouchsafed to them, and settled in the church by God? Could he speak so much of the edification which the church received by those who had the gift of prophecy, and of the revelations which they made by virtue of it, and of the effect it had on unbelievers, to force them to acknowledge, that God was present with the church? Could he compare it with other gifts then extant in the church, and give it the pre-eminence above them; and with the grace of charity, exalting that even above tongues and prophecy? Could he give directions to the prophets then among them, how to exercise this gift, and chide them for abusing it? Could he say to them, Covet and despise not prophecies, and could he close those sayings with these words, If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge, that the things I write to you are the commandments of God, 1 Cor. 14. 37.: I say, could he have written all these things, in such epistles as were embraced as the word of God, had it not been beyond exception, that there was such a gift of prophecy vouchsafed to, and exercised in the church of God?

Lastly, Of the continuance of this gift of prophecy, not only in the age of the apostles, but also in the age succeeding, we have sufficient evidence from the best writers of the Christian church. For,

1. Hermas, contemporary with St Paul, speaks of this gift as still remaining, and usually practised in the church of Christ: for he professedly gives rules, by which all Christians might distinguish betwixt true and false prophets, those who were acted by an evil spirit, and those who were acted by the Holy Ghost; saying, "that he who had the earthly spirit, "came not into the congregation of just men; or if he came thither," (lib. 2. cap. 11.), obmutescit, nec quidquam potest loqui, "he was presently struck dumb, and had no power to speak before them. But (z) when a man comes," saith he, "who hath the Spirit of God, into the congregation of the just, and prays to God, he is then filled with a divine afflatus, "and speaketh as God will." Whence two things are evident.

1. That he supposeth, there were then men in the church inspired with the spirit of prophecy: 2. That this prophetical afflatus came upon them, and was exerted by them in the assemblies of the church.

Of the continuance of this gift in the second century, we have a signal testimony of the church of Smyrna, declaring,

(z) Cum ergo venerit homo qui habet Spiritum Dei in ecclesiam justorum habentium fidem Dei, & oratio fit ad Deum, tunc nuncius sanctus divinitatis implet hominem illum Spiritu Sancto, & loquitur in turba sicut Deus vult.

That

That Polycarp their biſhop was διδάσκαλος ἀποστολικὸς, καὶ προφητικὸς, an apoſtolical and prophetical teacher; for, ſay they, (h) every word he ſpake, hath been already fulfilled, and will be fulfilled.

Euſebius makes mention of (i) Quadratus as an apoſtolical man, and one of the firſt order of their ſucceſſors, who was, ſaith he, προφητικῇ χαρίσματι διαπρέψας, celebrated for his prophetical gift.

Juſtin Martyr ſpeaks of himſelf, as a diſciple of the apoſtles; and Methodius ſaith, "He was not far from the apoſtles;" now he expreſsly ſaith to (k) "Trypho, παρ' ἡμῖν καὶ μέχρι νῦν προφητικὰ χαρίσματα ἐστι, we have ſtill prophetical gifts "among us."

Irenæus was alſo near to the apoſtles times, ſaith Baſil and St Auſtin; and he not only declares, that ſome Chriſtians had then (l) "προγνῶσιν τῶν μελλόντων καὶ ὀπλασίας, καὶ ῥήσεις προφητικὰς, the knowledge of things future, and viſions, and pro-"phetical predictions;" but confirms this from what he and others had then heard; "for," ſaith he, "St Paul calls them "perfect, who had received the Spirit, and by him ſpake with all tongues; καθὼς καὶ ἀκούομεν πολλῶν ἀδελφῶν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ "προφητικὰ χαρίσματα ἐχόντων, (m) as alſo we have heard many brethren in the church, who had prophetical gifts, and by "the Spirit ſpake with all tongues, and diſcovered the ſecrets of men, and expounded the myſteries of God." Moreover, three things are in this matter very remarkable.

1. That, by this very argument, the Chriſtians of the ſecond and third century endeavoured to convince the Jews, that their religion was to give place to Chriſtianity; that God had left their ſynagogues, and was now efficaciouſly preſent with thoſe churches who had embraced the Chriſtian faith, becauſe that gift of prophecy which formerly had been peculiar to the Jewiſh church, had now entirely left them, and was tranſlated to the aſſemblies of Chriſtians, among whom it remained μέχρι νῦν, to that preſent time, as hath been proved already by the teſtimony of Juſtin Martyr, in his dialogue with (n) Trypho. Thus to Celſus, pleading in the perſon of a Jew for that religion againſt Chriſtianity, Origen declares, that the divinity of Chriſt had transferred his providence from the Jews, to the converted Gentiles; "for," ſaith he, "we may ſee "them, after the coming of our Lord, entirely deſerted, and having nothing venerable that remains among them, they ha-"ving now no prophets, and no miracles, (o) ὧν κἂν ἴχνη ἔτι πόσον παρὰ Χριστιανοῖς ἐυρίσκεται, καὶ τινὰ γὰ μιζονα, of which "ſome conſiderable footſteps have ſo long remained among Chriſtians."

2. The caſe of Montanus, and his followers, pretending to this gift of prophecy, hath in it many circumſtances, which plainly ſhew, this gift did ſtill continue in ſome meaſure in the church. For,

1. Euſebius informs us, that when Montanus, Alcibiades, and Theodotus in Phrygia, pretended to the gift of prophecy, (p) "many believed they might be prophets, becauſe many extraordinary operations of the divine gifts were ſtill perform-"ed in divers churches."

2. They confute the Montaniſts pretence to this gift, by the falſehoods which they uttered; Maximilla, one of his propheteſſes, having declared, that "after her there ſhould be no prophets, but the conſummation of all things;" and be-cauſe they left no prophets to ſucceed them, "whereas," ſay they, (q) "the prophetic gift is to continue in all churches;" which ſhews, it did continue then, for otherwiſe this objection muſt have been as ſtrong againſt the church of Chriſt, as a-gainſt the ſect of the Montaniſts. And, laſtly, They confute them from their way of prophefying, they ſpeaking ſtill in ec-ſtaſies and ſtrange emotions of their minds; "whereas," ſay they, (r) "the prophets under the Old Teſtament, and ours "under the New, Agabus, Judas, Silas, Quadratus, and many others, were never ſubject to ſuch ecſtaſies;" whence they "concluded, μὴ δεῖν προφήτην ἐν ἐκστάσει λαλεῖν, that prophets muſt not ſpeak in ecſtaſies."

Laſtly, It farther is obſervable, that ſome heretics denied the goſpel of St John, becauſe he had ſo fully ſpoken of the promiſe which our Lord had made to his diſciples, that he would ſend the Comforter to teach them all things, and ſhew them things to come. They rejected alſo the epiſtles of St Paul, becauſe, in his epiſtle to the Corinthians, he had ſo fully ſpoken de propheticis chariſmatibus, of the prophetical gifts. Now, "theſe," ſaith (s) Irenæus, "are unhappy men, who chuſe "themſelves to be falſe prophets," i. e. "to ſpeak in God's name, when they confeſs they are not taught of God, "and who endeavour to repel the grace of prophecy from the church;" which words ſuppoſe it was extant in the church of God.

§ XIII. There is one other divine gift which beareth ſome affinity to that of prophecy, which therefore I ſhall briefly handle, that of diſcerning ſpirits. Now, this imports not only the ſkill of diſcerning betwixt true and falſe prophets, which he that had ſeems by (t) St Clemens to be ſtyled, ὁ σοφὸς ἐν διακρίσει τῶν λόγων, a wiſe man in diſcerning words, or in diſ-tinguiſhing betwixt the lying wonders and magical operations of evil ſpirits, and the powers of the Holy Ghoſt, which muſt be in ſome meaſure common to all Chriſtians, they being all injoined to try the ſpirits whether they be of God, 1 Theſſ. 5. 20. 1 John 4. 1.; but chiefly it ſignifies the power of diſcerning the inward operations of the ſoul, and of diſcovering the ſecrets of mens hearts. Thus of the prophets of the church of Corinth; Every one, ſaith St Paul, hath his revelation. And again, If ye all propheſy, and there come into your aſſembly one who is an unbeliever, or unlearned, he is convinced of all, ἀνακρίνεται ὑπὸ πάντων, his actions are diſcerned by all the prophets; and thus are the ſecrets of his heart laid open, and ſo falling down upon his face, he will worſhip God, and declare that God is in you of a truth, 1 Cor. 14. 24. 25. So Peter diſcerned the heart of Ananias and Sapphira, ſaying to Ananias, Why hath Satan filled thy heart to lie to the Holy Ghoſt? and to Sapphira, Why have you agreed to tempt the Holy Ghoſt? Acts 3. 5. 9 i. e. Having joined yourſelves to the aſſembly of Chriſtians, where you have had ſo great experience of the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, to declare the ſecrets of men, why, after ſuch experience, have you dared to lie in the aſſemblies of thoſe men in which the Holy Spirit thus reſides, and thereby ſhew you doubt his power to reveal what you have fraudulently concealed? He alſo knew the heart of Simon Magus; for to him he ſpeaks thus, Acts 8. 22. 23. I perceive thy heart is not right before God, but thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity. It was by this gift that St Paul at Lyſtra, looking upon a blind man, ſaw that he had faith to be healed, Acts 14. 9. (u) Ignatius alſo ſpeaks of the ſpirit in him that did τὰ κρύπτα ἐλέγχειν, reprove things ſecret; and (x) Irenæus, that the brethren which had the ſpiritual gift, did τὰ κρύφια τῶν ἀνθρώπων εἰς φανερὸν ἄγειν, diſcover the hidden things of men.

It was diſcovered in diſcerning mens fitneſs or qualifications for any office in the church; and accordingly in ſetting them apart for that office. Thus the Holy Ghoſt, in the prophets, ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them. Thus is the Holy Ghoſt ſaid to have made the biſhops and preſbyters in Aſia the overſeers of the churches there, Acts 20. 28. Becauſe, as (y) Clemens Romanus ſaith, "the apoſtles conſtituted biſhops and deacons, δοκιμάζοντες τῷ πνεύματι, approving of them by the Spirit." And (z) Clemens of Alexandria, that "St John ordained to be "of the clergy, τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος ἁγίου σημαινομένους, them who were ſignified to him by the Spirit." And (a) Ignatius ſaith of the biſhops of his time, that they were "conſtituted not by men, but Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμῃ, by the counſel of Chriſt "Jeſus."

§ XIV. I proceed, laſtly, to ſhew the reaſon we have to believe, that theſe extraordinary gifts were equally conferred upon the other churches, as upon thoſe which the apoſtles mention in their epiſtles. This we may gather,

1*ſt*, From theſe expreſſions of St Paul to the church of Corinth, in which they were ſo plentifully exerciſed; for his inquiry to them runs thus: What is it wherein you were inferior to other churches? 2 Cor. 12. 13. and his aſſertion thus, In every thing you are enriched by him in all utterance, and in all knowledge, ſo that ye came behind the other churches in no gift, 1 Cor. 1. 5. 7.; which words plainly inſinuate, that all the other churches were plentifully endowed with theſe gifts.

2*dly*, This alſo may be gathered from the reaſon of the thing: for the operations of the Holy Ghoſt are ſaid to be deſigned for theſe ends. 1. The confirmation of the teſtimony, and the faith of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 1. 6. and their eſtabliſhment in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 1. 21. 22. 2. The edification of the body of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 12. 7. Eph. 4. 11. 12. 3. To be a pledge and earneſt of their adoption, and their future happineſs, Rom. 8. 23. 2 Cor. 1. 22. Gal. 4. 6. 7. Eph. 1. 13. 4. To be their comfort under perſecutions, Rom. 5. 3. 5. 2 Cor. 1. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 14. Now, theſe are ends as neceſſary for all, as for any Chriſtian churches, who muſt all equally need the confirmation of their faith, the work of the miniſtry, the perfecting the ſaints, and the edification of the body of Chriſt, the ſupport and comfort of the Spirit under perſecutions, the pledge and earneſt of their future hopes.

3*dly*, This alſo may be gathered from that account which the apoſtle giveth of ſpiritual gifts, and ſpiritual perſons in the church. The gifts given for the edification of the church in general are theſe, the word of wiſdom, and of knowledge, the gifts of healing, the working of miracles, prophecy, diſcerning of ſpirits, kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of them, 1 Cor. 12. 8. 9. 10. The perſons exerciſing them are mentioned thus: God hath ſet ſome in the church, firſt, apoſtles, ſecondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers, after that miracles, then the gifts of healing, &c. ver. 28. And in the epiſtle to the Epheſians thus, He gave ſome apoſtles, ſome prophets, ſome evangeliſts, ſome paſtors and teachers, for the perfecting of the ſaints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying the body of Chriſt, Eph. 4. 11. 12. Which places evidently ſhew, that theſe were gifts deſigned for the benefit of all the churches of Chriſt in general, and exerciſed by theſe perſons as they went about to plant, or to confirm the churches; the power of miracles, and the gift of healing, being alſo exerciſed by them in confirmation of that faith they preached, according to our Saviour's promiſe. So that ſome gifts ſeem for ſome time conſtantly exerciſed by the members of each church in their aſſemblies, and others by thoſe perſons who preached the goſpel firſt among them, or travelled to confirm the churches, and ſo all had experience, more, or leſs, of theſe ſpiritual operations done among them.

Laſtly, From the conſideration of that baptiſm which they all generally received; for as the promiſe ran to the Jews in general, that they ſhould be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, Matth. 3. 11. to every one that would believe, and be baptized, that they ſhould receive the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 2. 38. and that becauſe the promiſe was to them, and to their children, καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς εἰς μακρὰν, and to all that were afar off, even as many as the Lord ſhould call; ſo was this promiſe ſignally fulfilled to the believers of the Jewiſh nation, who being enlightened, φωτισθέντες, that is, baptized, they alſo taſted of the ſpiritual gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the powers of the world to come, Heb. 6. 4. 5. (See the note there:) And great grace was upon them all, Acts 4. 33. To the believers in Samaria, for when the apoſtles, Peter and John, laid their hands upon them, they received the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 8. 17. To the converts of the Gentiles; for by one Spirit they were all baptized into one body, 1 Cor. 12. 13. and after they believed, they were all ſealed with the Spirit of promiſe, Eph. 1. 13. they being ſaved by the waſhing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, which was ſhed on them abundantly through Jeſus Chriſt, Tit. 2. 5. 6. All Chriſtians therefore being made members of Chriſt's body by baptiſm, all Chriſtian churches and bodies muſt have theſe powerful gifts conferred upon, and exerciſed by ſome of the members of thoſe churches, to the edification of the reſt.

Accordingly it is declared by Juſtin Martyr of them who were converted to the Chriſtian faith, that "being (b) baptized in the name of Chriſt, they received, ſome the ſpirit of knowledge, ſome of counſel, ſome of fortitude, ſome of healing, ſome of foreknowledge, ſome of doctrine."

§ XV. To conclude, the primitive profeſſors, and martyrs for the chriſtian faith, afford us a full teſtimony of the continuance of theſe gifts and operations of the Holy Ghoſt in the next ages of the church. (c) Clemens Romanus, in his epiſtle to the church of Corinth, ſaith, There was πλήρης πνεύματος ἁγίου ἔγχυσις ἐπὶ πάντας, a full effuſion of the Holy Spirit upon them all. (d) Ignatius ſaith of the church of Smyrna, that ſhe was λελειμένη ἐν παντὶ χαρίσματι, favoured with all gifts, and was deficient in none. (e) Juſtin ſaith, "That even their men and women had the gifts of the holy Ghoſt." Euſebius, having mentioned the firſt order of the ſucceſſors of the apoſtles, ſaith, that (f) "even then they performed "many wondrous works by the Holy Ghoſt." It is needleſs, ſaith (g) Irenæus, to inſiſt upon particulars, "for the miraculous gifts which the church throughout the world enjoys, and the beneficial miracles ſhe worketh for the good of "Heathens, are innumerable." This he ſaith after he had enumerated among the gifts then given to believers, "the "caſting out of devils, prophecy, the knowledge of things future, the healing the ſick, and the raiſing the dead." And when Montanus appeared, there was not only in the church the gift of prophecy, but in divers churches (h) "many other "ſtrange works performed by the divine gifts."

Here then we find, by all theſe early teſtimonies, that in the two firſt centuries many gifts of the Holy Ghoſt were ſtill continued in all churches, that every one at their baptiſm received ſome or other of them. Theſe alſo are relations not of things paſt, or of things done in a corner, but of things commonly performed in the face of the aſſemblies, and ſo confirmed by the joint teſtimonies of all Chriſtian churches; they were miracles which their own eyes had ſeen, tongues and prophetic gifts which their own ears had heard; gifts which they uſed againſt the Jews and heretics for their conviction; and beneficial miracles ſo truly wrought upon the Heathen, that they were efficacious to engage them to eſpouſe and perſevere to the end, in the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith. This therefore is, ſaith (i) Origen, οἰκεῖα ἀπόδειξις τῷ λόγῳ, the proper demonſtration of our Jeſus, no other pretender to the power of doing ſigns or wonders, having ever derived that power from himſelf to others, engaged that believers ſhould ſo generally receive it; none ever pretending to enable their followers to ſpeak with tongues, diſcover the ſecrets of mens hearts, or confer all, or any of theſe gifts upon their proſelytes. It alſo muſt be owned as a moſt convincing demonſtration of the truth, and the divine original of that faith which miniſtered theſe gifts ſo plentifully to its profeſſors.

§ XVI. And oh that all who, by this demonſtration of the Spirit, are convinced of the truth of Chriſtian faith, would ſeriouſly conſider how much it does concern them, in point of intereſt and wiſdom, to yield obedience to all the precepts of that faith! For, if the Gentiles were given up to vile affections, and a reprobate mind, Rom. 1. 24. 26. only for ſins committed againſt the dim and imperfect light of nature; if the Jews received a juſt recompenſe for every tranſgreſſion of the law delivered by Moſes to them; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect this great ſalvation, which at the firſt was ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed by them that heard, God bearing witneſs to it by divers ſigns and wonders, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt? Heb. 2. 3. 4. And to this end conſider,

1*ſt*, That by our diſobedience to the Chriſtian precepts we contradict the great deſign of all theſe demonſtrations of the Holy Spirit, they being all intended, ſaith St Paul, to make the Gentiles obedient in word and deed, Rom. 15. 18.

2*dly*, That all our certainty of Chriſtian faith doth highly aggravate the guilt of our tranſgreſſion of the Chriſtian precepts: For the ſtronger is the motive to believe, the greater is the guilt of diſobedience, becauſe ſuch motives may be eaſily diſcerned, and ſo our ignorance of them muſt be leſs excuſable; and we cannot reſiſt their evidence, but we muſt offer violence to the convictions of our conſciences, and ſo we have no cloak for our ſin.

3*dly*, That though we own the Chriſtian faith, and our Lord Jeſus; yet whilſt we live in diſobedience to his precepts, God looks upon us as mere infidels, ſuch as in words profeſs to know him, but in works deny him, being diſobedient, Titus 1. 16. Our faith at leaſt muſt be irrational and abſurd; for why call ye me Lord, Lord, ſaith Chriſt, and do not the things that I ſay? Luke 6. 46. And it will be as unprofitable, as it is irrational; for though we know theſe things, we only can be happy if we do them, John 13. 17.

To conclude, all our convictions of the truth of Chriſtian faith add ſtrength to thoſe engagements and encouragements, which that religion offers towards a virtuous and holy life; for if all that is delivered in theſe ſacred records be the revealed will of God, then all the promiſes and comfortable paſſages contained in them, will be aſſuredly made good to all obedient Chriſtians, and the aſſurance of ſuch ineſtimable bleſſings as the goſpel promiſeth, muſt lay upon us ſtrong engagements to be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, as knowing that our labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. 58.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to the ROMANS.

IT is the general note of the ancient commentators, that though this epistle be in place the first of all St Paul's epistles, yet was it not first written by him *, but was the last of all he wrote from Asia, Macedonia, and Achaia, before he went to Rome; the epistles to the Thessalonians, to the Corinthians, and the epistle to the Galatians, being writ before it. They therefore think that it was placed first, either as being written † to the Imperial city, as some thought, or for the excellency of the doctrine contained in it, as others do conjecture. So saith Theodoret in his preface.

It was written from Corinth, as the same ancients note, for he calleth Erastus the chamberlain of the city from whence he writ it, chap. 16. 23. and he had his abode at Corinth, 2 Tim. 2. 4. He calleth Gaius his host, i. e. the man with whom he lodged, chap. 16. 23. now he was a Corinthian, 1 Cor. 1. 14. He commendeth to them Phœbe, a servant of the church at Cenchræa, chap. 16. 1. now Cenchræa was a port of Corinth. Moreover, it was written thence, not when St Paul travelled through Greece, Acts 20. 2. for that then he came to Corinth, is not said; nay, it is gainsaid by St Paul himself, who, in his second epistle to the Corinthians, writ the same year with this, excuses himself for not coming to them, chap. 1. and declares, that the third time he was ready to come to them, chap. 13. 1. Add to this, that when he writ this epistle to the Romans, he knew the contributions of the church of Corinth were actually made, and even deposited in his hands, he being then going up with them to Jerusalem, Rom. 15. 25.—28.; whereas, when he travelled Greece, and came to Macedonia, Acts 20. 1. 3. they either indeed were not so, or at the least he knew not that they were so, and therefore sent first Titus, and then his second epistle to them, that they might be so, chap. 8. 9.

It was written to the Romans when he had not seen them, chap. 1. 11. and before he was gone up to Jerusalem, for he was but then going thither, Rom. 15. 15. and purposed from thence to go by Rome to Spain, ver. 28. And so it must be written, anno Dom. 57. for we find him at Jerusalem, Acts 21. 6. and a prisoner under Felix in the fourth year of Nero. See Dr Pearson, Annal. Paulin. p. 15. 16.

That the church of Rome consisted partly of the Jews then dwelling there, we learn both from the 14th chapter, where the Gentiles are exhorted to bear with their weakness; and from the 15th chapter, where he speaks thus, I have written unto you more boldly, ἀπὸ μέρους, as to the Gentile part. See the note there, ver. 15. 16.; and from the salutations sent to them at Rome, they being chiefly sent to them of the Jewish nation.

The two great doctrines laid down in this epistle, are, 1. That of justification by faith alone, without the works of the law: of which see the preface to the epistle to the Galatians. And, 2. The mystery of the calling of the Gentiles, the rejection at present of the Jews, and the recalling of them when the fulness of the Gentiles was to come in.

Lastly, It is observable, that among all his salutations to those of Rome he hath not one directed to St Peter, nor doth he give us any hint that St Peter then had ever been at Rome, or planted any church there; which, as it makes it highly probable he had not then been there at all, so doth it make it certain, that St Paul knew no-of his being there when this epistle was endited.

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

EPISTLE to the ROMANS.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. PAUL, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, called to be an apoſtle, [a] ſeparated unto the goſpel of God,

2. Which (goſpel) he had promiſed afore by his prophets in the holy ſcriptures (ſpeaking in them),

3. Concerning his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, who was made of the ſeed of David, according to the fleſh, (Acts 2. 30. 2 Tim. 2. 8. and)

4. [b] Declared to be the Son of God (inveſted) with power, according to the Spirit of holineſs (reſiding in him without meaſure, John 3. 34.), by the reſurrection from the dead:

5. By whom (thus raiſed and inveſted with all power, and acting now not as a prophet, but as Lord of all, by the whole fulneſs of the Godhead) we have received [c] grace and apoſtleſhip (i. e. the office of an apoſtle, and the grace belonging to it) for obedience to the faith among (Gr. in) all nations.

6. Among whom are ye alſo the called of Jeſus Chriſt.

7. (I Paul write) to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be ſaints, (Gr. Saints called. See note on 1 Cor. 1. 1. wiſhing) grace (may) be (given) to you from God our Father, and (from) the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

8. (And) firſt, I thank my God through Jeſus Chriſt (the fountain of all our bleſſings, Eph. 1. 3.) for (the converſion wrought in) you all, (ſo viſibly) that your faith is ſpoken of throughout the whole world.

9. (This happy ſucceſs of the goſpel being very grateful to me), for God is my witneſs, whom I ſerve with my ſpirit in the goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing (Gr. how inceſſantly) I make mention of you,

10. Making requeſt (Gr. requeſting) always in my prayers to come to you, if by any means now at length, I might have a proſperous journey by the will of God.

11. For I long to ſee you, [d] that I may impart to you ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end you may be eſtabliſhed;

12. That is, that I may be [e] comforted together with you, by the mutual faith both of you (through faith receiving) and me (by faith imparting theſe gifts.)

13. Now, I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purpoſed to come to you, that I might have ſome fruit among you alſo, even as among other Gentiles, (though through many hinderances I have not been able to accompliſh my purpoſe, chap. 15. 22.)

14. For (as) [f] I am a debtor both to the Greeks, and the Barbarians; both to the wiſe, and to the unwiſe, (as having by God the diſpenſation of the goſpel committed to me for their ſakes, 1 Cor. 9. 6.)

15. So,

15. So, as much as is in me, I am ready to [e] preach the goſpel to you that are at Rome alſo.

16. For I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt: for it is (attended with) the power of God to ſalvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, (to whom it was by God's appointment to be firſt preached, Acts 3. 26. and 13. 46.), and alſo to the Greek.

17. For therein is [h] the righteouſneſs of God revealed [i] from faith to faith, (Gr. the righteouſneſs of God by faith is revealed to beget in men faith): as it is written, [k] But the juſt ſhall live by faith.

18. (And this way of juſtification, or obtaining remiſſion of ſins, is neceſſary to exempt all men, whether Jew or Gentile, from the wrath of God); for (to begin firſt with the Gentiles) [l] the wrath of God is revealed from heaven [m] againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of (thoſe) men who hold the truth (they know by the light of nature) in unrighteouſneſs.

19. Becauſe that which may be known of God (by the light of nature), is manifeſt in (or to) them; for God hath ſhewed it to them.

20. For the inviſible things of him [n] from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, (or, are clearly ſeen (even) from the creation of the world), being underſtood by the things that are made, (i. e. by his works), even his eternal power and Godhead; ſo that they are without excuſe; (viz. who do not worſhip him alone as God, who is the Creator of all things, but rather give the worſhip due unto him to the works of his hands):

21. Becauſe when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, (by giving him the honour due to the Deity), neither were thankful (to him who giveth to all men life, breath, and all things, Acts 17. 28. and 14. 17.), but became vain in their imaginations (of him), and their fooliſh heart was darkened.

22. Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, (and uſurping that name, ver. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 20. 21.), they became (in their actions) fools:

23. And changed [o] the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things.

24. Wherefore God alſo gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts, to diſhonour their bodies among themſelves, (as did the Sodomites and Canaanites of old, ἀπολλῦσαι ὀπίσω σαρκὸς ἑτέρας, Jude 7.)

25. (As being alſo men) who changed the truth of God into a lie, (worſhipping as gods them who by nature were no gods, Gal. 4. 8. or only dæmons, 1 Cor. 10. 20.), and ſerved the [p] creature more than the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever. Amen.

26. For this cauſe, I ſay, God gave them (farther) up to vile affections: For even their women did change the natural uſe (of their bodies) into that which is againſt nature. (See Lucian. διάλ. ἑταιρ. Κλωνάριον καὶ Λεαίνιον.

27. And alſo the men, leaving the natural uſe of the woman, burned in their luſt one towards another, men with men working that which was unſeemly (Gr. filthineſs), and receiving in themſelves that recompenſe of their error which was meet; (i. e. being given up thus to diſhonour their own bodies, (See Lucian's ἔρωτες), for the diſhonour they did to God by their idolatry.)

28. And as they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, (ſo) [q] God gave them up [r] to a reprobate mind, to do things which are not convenient; (They)

29. Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whiſperers,

30. Backbiters, haters of God, deſpiteful, proud, boaſters, inventors of evil things, diſobedient to parents,

31. Without underſtanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

32. Who knowing the judgment of God, (viz.) that they who do ſuch things are [s] worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but [t] have pleaſure in them that do them.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἀφωρισμένος, ſeparated.] He in this word ſeems to allude to his former ſeparation when he lived a Phariſee, i. e. one ſeparated from all ceremonial defilement, and from the people of the earth, i. e. the common people, who obſerved not the exact rules of legal purity; ſaying, That he was ſeparated now, not to a nicer obſervation of the Jewiſh rites and cuſtoms, but to the preaching of the goſpel of God. And the affinity betwixt this and the epiſtle to the Galatians, both as to matter and ſtyle, inclines me not to interpret the apoſtle of the ſeparation mentioned, Acts 13. 2. where the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work of the miniſtry, to which I have appointed them; but of God's ſeparating him from his mother's womb, and calling him to that work, Gal. 1. 15.

Ver. 4. [b] Ὁρισθέντος, declared to be the Son of God.] Chriſt, while he was upon earth, declared, that he was the Son of God, whom the Father had ſanctified, and ſet apart to his prophetic office: accordingly the Spirit of God deſcended on him at his baptiſm, and a voice from heaven ſaid, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. This he proved from the powerful works wrought by him, that he was the Son of God, ſanctified and conſecrated to his office by the Spirit of God abiding in him, and ſo was in the Father, and the Father in him, declaring, that he did his miracles by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and by the Spirit of God did caſt out devils, Matth. 12. 28. And thus St Peter repreſents this prophet to Cornelius, ſaying, God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power, who (therefore) went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil, for God was with him, Acts 10. 38. And thus it ſeemeth neceſſary he ſhould act in his prophetical office; a prophet being a perſon ſent from God, and ſpeaking in his name, and acted by his Spirit in the delivery and confirmation of his meſſage. That our great Prophet Jeſus was, as in a more ſublime, ſo in this ſenſe, the Son of God, endowed with power of working miracles by the Holy Ghoſt, for confirmation of his doctrine, God hath demonſtrated, ſaith the apoſtle here, by raiſing him from the dead.

Ver. 5. [c] Χάριν καὶ ἀποστολήν, Grace and apoſtleſhip.] That is, ſaith Oecumenius, χάριν ἥς ἀποστολὴν, grace for the office of apoſtles; the favour to be apoſtles, ſay ſome, becauſe the apoſtle calls this office grace, Rom. 15. 15. Gal. 2. 9. Eph. 3. 2.—7. But where he doth ſo, there is always ſomething added of the gifts and powers by which they were enabled to exerciſe it: v. g. To me is this grace given, that I may be the miniſter of Chriſt to the Gentiles, Rom. 15. 15. 16. In the power of ſigns, and miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 19. James, Cephas, and John, knew the grace given to me, Gal. 2. 9. becauſe God had wrought mightily with me towards the Gentiles, ver. 8. And Eph. 3. 2. there is mention of the grace of God given to St Paul; but then it is added, that he is made a miniſter, according to the gift of the grace of God given to him by the effectual working of his power, ver. 7. I therefore think fit to join both together, and give the ſenſe of the words thus: By whom we have received the office of apoſtles, and grace through his name, to call all nations to the obedience of faith in him; or to yield obedience to the faith preached in his name.

Ver. 11. [d] Ἵνά τι μεταδῶ χάρισμα ὑμῖν πνευματικὸν, that I might impart to you ſome ſpiritual gift.] This is by moſt interpreted of the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge, by which St Paul would inſtruct them: I rather chuſe to refer it to ſome ſpiritual gift he at his coming would beſtow upon them, by the impoſition of his hands upon ſome of them, as the apoſtles uſed to do, Acts 8. 17. and 19. 6. 2 Tim. 1. 6. For, firſt, that is moſt agreeable to the phraſe, μεταδῦναι χάρισμα πνευματικὸν, to give the Spirit, or a ſpiritual gift. And, ſecondly, to his words in the cloſe of this epiſtle, that he ſhall come to them in the fulneſs τῆς εὐλογίας, of the bleſſing of the goſpel of Chriſt, that phraſe being applied to the giving of the Spirit, and his gifts, Gal. 3. 14. Eph. 1. 3. And, thirdly, to the end here aſſigned of the imparting this gift, viz. the eſtabliſhment of the Romans in the faith: for the vouchſafement of the Spirit and his gifts unto the churches, is ſtill called βεβαίωσις, the confirmation of them in the faith, 1 Cor. 1. 5. 6. 2 Cor. 1. 21. 22. and 5. 5. Gal. 5. 5. 1 Theſſ. 1. 5.

Ver. 12. [e] Συμπαρακληθῆναι, to be comforted together with you.] It being both a comfort and eſtabliſhment of faith in them, to receive theſe gifts of the Spirit, and in him to be able to impart them to them, and to find God ſo effectually working by him.

Ver. 14. 15. [f] For I am a debtor, &c. ὅτω.] Here it is obſervable, that our tranſlators begin the 14th verſe with For, though there is nothing that anſwers to it in the Greek. I would render the words thus: I am a debtor to the Greek, and the Barbarian, to the wiſe, and the unwiſe, viz. ὅτω, or ὅτω καὶ, and therefore, as much as in me lies, I am ready to preach the goſpel to you alſo that are in Rome. For though ὅτω and ὅτως, when joined with ὡς, ſignify generally ſo; yet when they are put abſolutely, and eſpecially when they begin a ſentence, they ſignify idcirco, itaque, and anſwer to Al Chen, in the Hebrew: So Rev. 3. 16. ὅτως ὅτι χλιαρὸς εἶ, wherefore becauſe thou art lukewarm; upon which place the critics note, that ὅτως hic non eſt ſimilitudinis, ſed ratiocinativum, valetque Al Chen, igitur: So Rom. 6. 11. Knowing that Jeſus Chriſt, being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; ὅτω καὶ ὑμεῖς λογίζεσθε, therefore alſo reckon ye yourſelves dead unto ſin, 1 Cor. 15. 44. 45. ὅτω καὶ γέγραπται, and therefore it is written; ſo Luke 24. 26. ſo it is written, καὶ ὅτως, and therefore Chriſt ought to ſuffer; and John 4. 6. Jeſus then being weary with his journey, ἐκαθέζετο ὅτως, ſat therefore upon the well.

Ver. 15. [g] Ὑμῖν τοῖς ἐν Ῥώμῃ εὐαγγελίσασθαι, to preach the goſpel to you at Rome.] St Paul here ſeems plainly to challenge Rome as part of his province, as being the apoſtle of the Gentiles. So again, chap. 11. 13. I ſpeak to you, Gentiles, in as much as I am the apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnify my office; and chap. 15. 15. I have written the more boldly to you in part, i. e. as to the Gentile part among you, as putting you in remembrance of the grace given to me of God, ver. 16. that I ſhould be the miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the Gentiles; and ſo on to ver. 3. And here, I purpoſed to come to you Gentiles, for I am a debtor, &c. When therefore the ancients tell us, that St Peter was biſhop of Rome, as well as St Paul, this can be only true of Peter as to the Jewiſh converts there, whilſt St Paul was the apoſtle and biſhop of the Gentiles at Rome, according to the agreement made between them, that Paul and Barnabas ſhould go unto the Gentiles, St Peter and John to the circumciſion, Gal. 2. 9. And ſo the biſhop of Rome, if he will be St Peter's ſucceſſor, muſt only preach to the Jews, or be the biſhop of the circumciſion. Moreover, it ſeems highly probable that St Peter was not yet come to Rome, much leſs had ſettled his ſee there; for if ſo, why ſhould St Paul be ſo deſirous, ſo often purpoſing to come to them, that he might impart ſome ſpiritual gift to them, to the end they might be eſtabliſhed, unleſs St Peter were either inſufficient for, or very negligent in that work? See the preface to this epiſtle.

Ver. 17. [k] Δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, the righteouſneſs of God.] This phraſe, in St Paul's ſtyle, doth always ſignify the righteouſneſs of faith in Chriſt Jeſus dying, or ſhedding his blood for us. So chap. 3. 20. 21. The righteouſneſs of God without the law is manifeſt, to wit, the righteouſneſs of God through faith in Jeſus Chriſt. The ſame apoſtle having declared, that the Gentiles, who followed not after righteouſneſs, had attained to righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs of faith; but Iſrael not believing, had not attained to the law of righteouſneſs, Rom. 9. 30. 31. He proves the ſecond aſſertion thus: For they being ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and ſeeking to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, (which is of the law), have not ſubmitted τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, to the righteouſneſs of God; i. e. to the righteouſneſs of faith in Chriſt, to which the Gentiles had ſubmitted, chap. 10. 3. For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, i. e. for juſtification through faith in Chriſt, ver. 10. See the note on 2 Cor. 5. 21. The righteouſneſs of God is therefore manifeſtly taken for goſpel-righteouſneſs, as Mr Clerk notes on Rom. 3. p. 263. But when he adds, that is, for ſanctity of life conſequent upon repentance, he is miſerably out; for this righteouſneſs conſiſts not in our ſanctification, but in our juſtification, or abſolution from our ſins paſt, through faith in the blood of Chriſt, ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins.

Ibid. [l] Ἐκ πίστεως εἰς πίστιν, from, i. e. by faith to faith.] Ἐκ being here put for διὰ, as in this very verſe, The juſt ſhall live ἐκ πίστεως, by his faith. So chap. 3. 20. It is one God who will juſtify the circumciſion ἐκ πίστεως, through faith, and the uncircumciſion διὰ πίστεως, by the ſame faith. So ἡ ἐκ πίστεως δικαιοσύνη is the righteouſneſs that is by faith, chap. 9. 30. and 10. 6. δικαιοσύνη ἡ τῆ πίστει, and διὰ πίστεως τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the righteouſneſs by faith in Chriſt. Vain therefore is the deſcant of Mr Le Clerk upon theſe words, That from the faith whereby the Jews believed the prophets, and the Gentiles their anceſtors, they might proceed to another faith: for if he means they ſhould proceed from the one faith to the other, this is true of the Jews, who were to add to their faith in God, and in his prophets, faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, John 14. 4. But it is falſe as to the Gentiles, who were to renounce and turn from the faith of their anceſtors, that they might believe in Chriſt. If he means by proceeding from faith to faith, renouncing the one to embrace the other, this is true of the Gentiles, but falſe when applied to the Jews, who were not to renounce their faith in the prophets, but by virtue of it to embrace this righteouſneſs of God, teſtified by the law and the prophets. The ſenſe of theſe words ſeems plainly to be this: The righteouſneſs of God, which is by faith, is revealed in the goſpel to beget faith in men.

Ibid. [k] Ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, the juſt ſhall live by his faith.] In God's promiſes; whence it appears, that faith doth not include obedience, but only a firm belief of God's promiſes obliging to obedience. Hence the apoſtle argues from this very place, Gal. 3. 10. 11. that the law is not of faith, becauſe it ſaith, The man that doth theſe things ſhall live in them, making obedience the condition of juſtification by the law.

Ver. 18. [l] Ὀργὴ Θεοῦ, the wrath of God.] This was before more expreſsly revealed againſt the unrighteouſneſs of the Jews, God, in the mean time, ſo far winking at the unrighteouſneſs of the Gentiles, as to make no expreſs denunciation of his wrath againſt them; but now he calls all men every where to repent of their unrighteouſneſs, becauſe he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, Acts. 17. 30. 31.

Ibid. [m] Ἐπὶ πᾶσαν ἀσέβειαν καὶ ἀδικίαν ἀνθρώπων, againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men.] The ungodlineſs of men ſignifies their impiety in robbing God of his honour, and giving it to graven images, or to them which by nature were no gods, and ſo being ungrateful to him who was the author of all their bleſſings, ver. 11.—26. Their unrighteouſneſs is their injuſtice to one another, from ver. 26.—30. And they are ſaid to retain the truth in unrighteouſneſs, by acting contrary to the notions of it they had, or might have learned from the law of nature, and by ſuppreſſing or corrupting the dictates of their natural conſcience. So of the builders of the tower of Babel, (a) Philo ſaith, That it ſufficed them not, τὰ πρὸς τὰς ὁμοφύλους συγχεῖν δίκαια, to confound the laws of juſtice among men, but alſo they invaded heaven, ἀδικίαν μὲν σπείροντες, ἀσέβειαν δὲ θερίσοντες, ſowing unrighteouſneſs, and reaping ungodlineſs.

Ver. 20. [n] Ἀπὸ τῆς κτίσεως κόσμου, from the creation of the world.] This phraſe ſeems not to ſignify the means by which they came to the knowledge of God, for that is afterwards expreſſed in theſe words, ποιήμασι νοούμενα, being made known by his works; but rather to import, that, from the beginning of the world, the Heathens had this means of knowing the true God from the works of the creation; ſo ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου is from the beginning of the world, Matth. 24. 41. ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, from the foundation of the world, Matth. 13. 35. Luke 11. 50. Heb. 4. 3. and 9. 26. Strange is the conceit of a learned perſon, who interprets theſe, and all the following words of this chapter, of the Gnoſtics; for who ever heard that the Gnoſtics changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to birds, and four-footed beaſts, and creeping things? Who of the ancients ever ſaid, Their women changed the natural uſe of the body for that which is againſt nature? or, How is it poſſible that the apoſtle ſhould here accuſe them of all this idolatry and image-worſhip, and yet in the next chapter ſay of the ſame Gnoſtics, according to the interpretation of the ſame perſon, Thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege? ver. 22. Doubtleſs the apoſtle ſpeaks here of that knowledge of God, which, by the light of nature, was in the heart of the Gentiles, and ſo was manifeſt in, and to them, even from the time of the creation of the world, by his works, becauſe the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy-work, Pſal. 19. 1.; and therefore doth not here ſay, that his mercy, and grace, and love to mankind, but that his eternal power and Godhead was ſhewed by theſe works; which yet in reaſon he ſhould have mentioned here, as he doth elſewhere, had he ſpoken of the diſcoveries God made of himſelf by the goſpel-revelation.

Ver. 23. [o] Τὴν δόξαν τοῦ ἀφθάρτου Θεοῦ, the glory of the incorruptible God.] The deſcription of God in the New Teſtament is this, that he dwelleth in light inacceſſible, 1 Tim. 1. 16.; that he is light, 1 John 1. 5. 6. And thus he always exhibited himſelf to men in a mighty ſplendor of flame and light, as a viſible token of his ſpecial and majeſtic preſence. Thus he appeared to the Antediluvians, to Adam, ſaith the learned Biſhop of Ely on Gen. 2. 15. and 3. 8.; and to Cain and Abel, when they brought their offerings to the Lord, i. e. to the place where his Schechinah or glorious preſence uſed to appear; for God had reſpect to Abel and his offering, i. e. ſaith Theodotius's tranſlation, ἐπέχρισεν, he ſet it on fire by a ſtream of light, or flame from the Schechinah, which then uſually appeared at the place of worſhip: Why elſe doth Cain complain thus, From thy face ſhall I be hid? Or why is he ſaid to go out from the preſence of the Lord? Gen. 4. 4. 14. So, after the flood, we may preſume he appeared to Noah offering burnt-offerings to him; for God accepting his oblation, as he did that of Abel's, it is reaſonable to conceive that he gave the like token of that acceptance. So he appeared to Abraham, when he ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thine own country, in a lamp of fire conſuming his ſacrifices, Gen. 15. 17. When St Stephen ſaith, ὁ Θεὸς τῆς δόξης, the God of glory appeared to our father Abraham, Acts 7. 2. In this viſible majeſty God appeared to him again, chap. 17. 1. for in the concluſion of that chapter it is ſaid, God went up from Abraham; i. e. the glory of the Lord aſcended, ſaith the Chaldee paraphraſe, and B. Uziel. So he appeared to Moſes in the buſh, Exod. 3. 2.; ſo to the people on mount Sinai, Exod. 24. 16. 17. where τὸ εἶδος τῆς δόξης τοῦ Κυρίου ὡσεὶ πῦρ, the ſight of the glory of the Lord was like fire. This viſible appearance of God in light is above thirty times in the Old Teſtament ſtyled the glory of the Lord: ſee note on Philip. 2. 8. and on Heb. 1. 3. And this Schechinah was not only given to the Jews after the law, but to the Gentiles before the law, as a preſervative from idolatry, or to inſtruct them to make no other reſemblance of him, or ſymbol of his preſence, beſides that which he from the beginning had choſen to appear in: but this, ſaith the apoſtle, they changed into the ſimilitude of men, and birds, &c. And of the Jews making the golden calf, God ſays, they changed δόξαν αὐτῶν, their glory into the ſimilitude of a calf, Pſal. 106. 20. And of the ſame Jews departing from God to idols, it is ſaid, My people ἠλλάξατο τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, hath changed its glory for that which cannot profit them, Jer. 2. 11.

Ver. 25. [p] Ἐλάτρευσαν τῇ κτίσει, they ſerved the creature.] In the 23d verſe they are charged only with falſe repreſentations of God, in this alſo with a falſe object of their worſhip, by giving the divine honour to a creature.

Ver 28. [q] Εἰς ἀδόκιμον νοῦν, to a reprobate mind.] To a mind that could not be approved of by God or men, to do τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα, things not agreeable to nature, or to reaſon.

Ibid. [r] Παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, God gave them up to a reprobate mind.] Ver. 24. God gave them up in the luſtings of their hearts to uncleanneſs. Ver. 26. God gave them up to diſhonourable affections.] Here the fathers carefully inform us, that theſe phraſes cannot be ſo underſtood as to lay upon them of whom St Paul ſpeaks, a neceſſity of being thus unclean and unnatural in their affections, or thus perverſe

in their minds; for then (b), ſay they, this would not be their fault, nor would it be blame-worthy in them to do all theſe things.

2*dly*, They poſitively tell us, that the apoſtle here puts the phraſe, (c) He gave them up, for he permitted them to be given up.

3*dly*, That this was done, 1. (d) By leaving them naked and deſtitute of his former providence and care of them; not giving them any warning of his diſpleaſure againſt them for theſe things by his prophets, as he did to the old world, and Nineveh, or by his judgments, in order to their reformation. 2. By giving them up to (e) Satan, that unclean ſpirit, who will not fail, when he hath permiſſion, to provoke them to ſuch uncleanneſs, and who is that god of the world who blinds mens eyes, that they ſhould not ſee the truth, 2 Cor. 4. 4. So the Lord moved David to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah, 2 Sam. 24. 1. i. e. Satan provoked him to do it, 1 Chron. 21. 1. And thus, ſay they, a phyſician gives up his patient to do what he will, when he finds he will not follow his preſcriptions. Laſtly, They obſerve, that they were thus deſerted and given up by God, as the juſt puniſhment of their iniquities committed againſt the law of nature, which they had received, becauſe they held the truth revealed in unrighteouſneſs, ver. 18.; becauſe when they knew God, they did not glorify him as God, nor were they thankful, ver. 21.; and becauſe, knowing that they who did theſe things were worthy of death, they not only did the ſame, but had pleaſure in them that did them; and ſo indeed (f) they were delivered up to do theſe things by their own wickedneſs, ver. 24. 26. Whence the ſame apoſtle ſaith, ἑαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν, they gave themſelves up to all laſciviouſneſs, Eph. 4. 19.

Thus, on the contrary, we ſay, Such a man's money deſtroyed him, when it was not the money, but his intemperate and evil uſe of it that did ſo. And ſuch a man's flatterers corrupted him, when it was his hearkening to them, and being perſuaded by them, which did it; whereas he had it in his power not to hearken to them. And in this permiſſive ſenſe the word παρέδωκεν, he gave them up, is uſed almoſt an hundred times in the Old Teſtament, when God is ſaid to give men up into the hands of their enemies, to give them up to the ſword. Thus the three children παρέδωκαν, gave up their bodies to be burned, Dan. 3. 20. Thus David prays he may not be given up into the hand of his oppreſſors, i. e. that God would not leave him to their power, Pſal. 119. 121. And the ſon of Syrach, That God would not give him up to a proud look, Ecclus 23. 4. And ſo God gave his people up to their own hearts luſts, i. e. he let them follow their own inventions, Pſal. 81. 12. And this is further evident from ver. 32. where they are ſaid to have done all theſe things againſt their knowledge of the judgment of God upon ſuch evil-doers.

He that would ſee a larger comment upon verſes 29. 30. 31. let him conſult the learned Grotius. I ſhall only obſerve from the Greek commentators, 1. That from theſe words, being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, it ſeemeth reaſonable to interpret almoſt all that follows, as ſome ſpecies of unrighteouſneſs or injuſtice. 2. That πονηρία ſignifies that wickedneſs which cauſes men to do miſchief againſt their neighbour by treachery; κακία, to do it out of malice; κακοήθεια, to accuſtom themſelves to do ſo. 3. That ψιθυρισταὶ are they that whiſper things to the damage of others when they are preſent; καταλάλοι, they that openly deſame them being abſent. 4. Ὑπερηφάνια, is that pride which puffs us up on the account of the things which we do enjoy; ἀλαζονία, that boaſting we make of things which we have not.

Ver. 32. Ἄξιοι θανάτου, worthy of death.] That murder, adultery, and unnatural luſts, deſerved death, they knew, not only by the light of nature, and of conſcience, but by their own laws, condemning them who did them to death. That all theſe ſins being ſpecies of injuſtice, condemned by the law of nature, rendered them obnoxious to the diſpleaſure of that God who is the governor of the world, and the avenger of all unrighteouſneſs; and ſo obnoxious to death for violating the laws he had given them to govern themſelves by, they might know by the light of nature.

(b) Non enim vi res agitur, neque neceſſitate in alteram partem animæ declinatur, alioquin nec culpa ejus, nec virtus poſſet aſcribi, nec boni electio, præmium, nec declinatio mali, ſupplicium mereretur; ſed ſervatur ei in omnibus libertas arbitrii, ut in quodcunque voluerit, ipſa declinet. Origen in locum.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. THerefore (ſince God hath ſhewed his diſpleaſure thus againſt the Gentiles for ſinning againſt the law of nature) thou art inexcuſable, O [a] (Jewiſh) man, whoever thou art that judgeſt (ſo ſeverely of them): for wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thyſelf; for [b] thou that judgeſt, doſt the ſame things, (offending as much againſt the law of Moſes, as they have done againſt the law of nature.)

2. But (whatſoever thou mayſt think) [c] we are ſure that the judgment of God is according to truth, againſt them which commit ſuch things, (it being equitable that he ſhould, and certain that he will, deal with men according to his word.)

3. And (then) thinkeſt thou this, O man, who judgeſt them who do ſuch things (againſt the law of nature), and doſt the ſame (againſt the law of Moſes), that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God, (which they have ſo ſeverely felt?)

4. Or deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs (to thee above them, in giving the law, covenant, and promiſes to thee, chap. 9. 4.), and (his) forbearance and long-ſuffering (exerciſed hitherto to thee, who haſt long deſerved his wrath, chap. 9. 22.); not knowing (or diſcerning) that the goodneſs of God (naturally) leadeth thee to repentance, (and is a powerful motive to engage thee to it? 2 Pet. 3. 9. 15.)

5. But after the hardneſs and impenitency of thy heart (which will not ſuffer thee to repent and believe the goſpel), treaſureſt (yet) up (more) wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, (Rom. 9. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. & 5. 9.);

Ibid. Mr L. here reads ἐκ γινόσκων ὅτι, and renders the words thus, who knowing the judgment of God, knew not, that they who did theſe things were worthy of death; but this reading cannot ſtand; for what righteous judgment of God could they know to be due to them who did theſe things, who knew not that they were worthy of death, and to whom ſin, ſaith he, could not be imputed without a poſitive law, which we know the Gentiles had not? See the reading of the text largely confirmed, Examen Millii in locum.

Ibid. [d] Συνευδοκεῖτε τοῖς πράσσουσι, have pleaſure in them that do them] This, ſay the Greek commentators, is much worſe than the bare doing of them: for a man may do them through the power of temptation, and by conſideration, may afterwards become ſenſible of his folly, and repent of it: but when he is arrived at the height of wickedneſs, that he not only approves, but delights in ſeeing the like things done by others, he demoſtrates ſuch a ſtrong affection to them as is incurable.

6. Who will render to every man (Jew and Gentile) according to his deeds.

7. To them, who [a] by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality; eternal life:

8. But to them who are contentious (againſt) and [b] obey not the truth (of the goſpel, as generally you Jews do not), [c] but obey unrighteouſneſs (or falſehood); indignation and wrath;

9. Tribulation and anguiſh (I ſay) ſhall be upon every ſoul of man that worketh evil, upon the Jew firſt, (as being under greater light, and as having the goſpel firſt preached to them, Acts 13. 46. and to whom Chriſt was firſt, and in perſon ſent, Acts 3. 26.), and alſo upon the Gentile; (for though God winked at the times of their former ignorance, Acts 17. 30. yet now he hath revealed his wrath from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs, chap. 1. 17. they muſt expect his juſt diſpleaſure who turn not from it to the way of truth, as the goſpel is called, 2 Pet. 2. 2.)

10. But glory, honour, and peace ſhall be to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, (as being the church of God, to whom the promiſes of the Meſſiah chiefly did belong, Rom. 9. 4.), and alſo the (believing) Gentile, (they being by faith Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 29.)

11. (I ſay to the Gentile alſo), for there is [d] no reſpect of perſons with God.

12. (Tribulation and anguiſh, I ſay, ſhall be on every ſoul that worketh evil, whether Jew or Gentile), for [e] as many as have ſinned without the (written) law, (which is the caſe of the Gentiles), ſhall alſo periſh without (that) law, (being condemned by the law written in their hearts): and as many as have ſinned in (or under) the law, (which is the caſe of the Jews), ſhall be judged (and condemned for their evil deeds) by the law.

13. For (know this, O thou Jew, that) [l] not the hearers (only) of the law are (upon that account) juſt before God, but the doers of it (only) ſhall be juſtified, (i. e. accepted of God, as acting ſuitably to their profeſſion).

14. (And ſay not, that the Gentiles therefore cannot be juſtified, or accepted with God, becauſe they having not the law, cannot be doers of it); for [k] when the Gentiles who have not the law (of Moſes), do by nature the things contained in the (moral) law; they having not the (written) law, are a law (a rule of living) to themſelves:

15. (Doing thoſe things) which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſciences alſo bearing witneſs (to it), and their thoughts mean while (or their reaſonings within themſelves) accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another; (and ſo the uncircumciſion keeping the righteouſneſs of the law, and fulfilling the law, ſhall be by God accounted for circumciſion, and be as acceptable to him as the circumciſion, ver. 26. 27.)

16. (And theſe rewards and puniſhments will be diſtributed to Jew and Gentile) in the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of mens (hearts) by Jeſus Chriſt, according to my goſpel, (or as my goſpel teſtifies he will; for the Heathens are not to be judged according to the tenor of the goſpel, but according to the light of nature, ver. 12.)

17 Behold (thou who glorieſt in this, that) [l] thou art called a Jew, (one of that nation which God hath known above all the families of the earth, Amos 3. 2. to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the covenants, Rom. 9. 4.) and reſteſt in (the outward performances of) the law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God, (as the author and patron of thy religion, and thy God in covenant);

18. And (that thou) knoweſt his will, and approveſt the things that are moſt excellent, being inſtructed out of the law (concerning them);

19. And art confident that thou thyſelf art (able to be) a guide [m] to the blind (Gentile), a light of them (that ſit) in darkneſs;

20. An inſtructor of [n] the fooliſh, a teacher of babes, which haſt the form of knowledge, and of truth in the law, (i. e. a ſcheme or draught of the affirmative precepts of the law, which inſtruct thee what to do, and of the negative precepts, which teach thee what to leave undone.)

21. Thou therefore [o] which teacheſt another, (i. e. who undertakeſt to be a guide unto, and teacher of the Gentile), teacheſt thou not thyſelf (to practiſe thine own leſſons?) thou that preacheſt (or proclaimeſt) a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal? (and ſo condemneſt thyſelf out of thine own mouth.)

22. Thou that ſayſt a man [p] ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? [q] thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege? (robbing God of his honour another way.)

23. Thou that makeſt thy boaſt of (thy ſkill in) the law, through breaking the law (in thoſe inſtances which the conſcience of the very Heathen doth condemn), diſhonoureſt thou (the name of) God (among the Gentiles?)

24. For [r] the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles, through you (Jews, pretending to be ſo dear to God, and ſo great favourites of heaven, and yet living ſo licentiouſly as you do, and ſo it hath happened to you according) as it is written (of you, Iſ. 52. 5. Ezek. 36. 23.)

25. (This violation of the law cuts off the benefit of your circumciſion.) For circumciſion verily profiteth, if thou keepeſt the law, (as circumciſion obligeth thee to do, Gal. 5. 2.): but if thou art (ſtill) a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made (of no more advantage to free thee from God's condemnation than) uncircumciſion [s].

26. (Therefore (on the other ſide) if the uncircumciſion (i. e. the Gentile, though uncircumciſed) [t] keep the righteouſneſs of the law, ſhall not his uncircumciſion be accounted for circumciſion? (i. e. ſhall he not be as acceptable to God as if he had been circumciſed?)

27. And ſhall not (the) [u] uncircumciſion which is by nature, (i. e. the Gentile, who continues uncircumciſed as he was by nature), if it fulfil the law, judge (and condemn) thee, who by the letter (i. e. having the letter of the law) doſt tranſgreſs the law?

28. For he is not (in God's account) a Jew, (i. e. one beloved of him), who is one (only) outwardly, (by profeſſion); neither is that (valued by him as true) circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh (only.)

29. But he is a Jew (in God's eſteem), who is one inwardly, (by the purification of his heart from inward filth, and evil diſpoſitions and affections); and (the) circumciſion (valued by him) is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, (wrought in us by the Spirit), and not in (or by) the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, (who are not able to diſcern it), but of God, (who is the ſearcher of the heart.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

THe apoſtle had, in the former chapter, laid down this as the foundation of his diſcourſe, That the goſpel of Chriſt was the power of God to the ſalvation both of Jew and Gentile, ver. 16. and that there only was revealed that righteouſneſs of God through faith, by which alone life and ſalvation was to be obtained. He had alſo ſhewed the neceſſity of this faith, becauſe the wrath of God was revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs of men, who held the truth in unrighteouſneſs; and that this the Gentiles had done, by acting againſt the light of nature; and that God had been angry with, and puniſhed them for it, he had ſhewn from ver. 19. to the end of that chapter.

Theſe Gentiles were by the Jews reputed as unclean, great ſinners, and ſo incapable of ſalvation; and their great quarrel againſt the goſpel was this, that it admitted ſuch men to the favour of God without circumciſion and obedience to the law of Moſes. To thoſe Jews the apoſtle in this chapter directeth his diſcourſe, proving here, that they who lived under the law wanted this juſtification as much as others, being alſo great ſinners; and in the following chapters, that neither they nor the Gentiles could obtain this juſtification by the law. See ver. 13. and 17.

Ver. 1. [b] Τὰ γὰρ αὐτὰ πράσσεις, for thou doſt the ſame things.] If to any one it ſeem ſtrange that the apoſtle ſhould pronounce the Jews guilty of the ſame ſins of which he had accuſed the Gentiles, chap. 1. let him conſider what their own (i) Joſephus hath recorded of them, and he will ceaſe to wonder. For, firſt, he aſſures us, there "was not "a nation under heaven more wicked than they "were. What, ſaith he, have you done of all the "good things required by our Lawgiver? what "have ye not done of all thoſe things which he "pronounced accurſed? So that, (k) had the Romans delayed to come againſt theſe execrable "perſons, I believe, ſaith he, either the earth "would have ſwallowed up, or a deluge would have "ſwept away their city, or fire from heaven would "have conſumed it, as it did Sodom; for it brought "forth a generation of men far more wicked than "they who ſuffered ſuch things." There is not a ſin mentioned, chap. 1. of which he doth not in that hiſtory accuſe them, not excepting that of unnatural luſts: for of their zealots he ſaith, "(l) It "was ſport to them to force women; they freely "gave up themſelves to the paſſions of women, "exerciſing and requiring unnatural luſts, and filling the whole city with impurities." And again, "They committed all kinds of wickedneſs, omitting "none which ever came to the memory of man, "eſteeming the worſt of evils to be good, and finding that reward of their iniquity which was meet, "and a judgment worthy of God."

Ver. 2. [c] But we are ſure, Οἴδαμεν δὲ, or, and we know.

Ver. 7. [a] Καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, by patient continuance in well-doing.] This good work being put in the ſingular number, ſeems to intimate ſome work eminently ſo. Now, when the Jews asked our Saviour, What ſhall we do that we may work the works of God? his anſwer was, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent, John 6. 28. 29. The preaching of this faith is ſtyled emphatically the work, Acts 5. 31. and 13. 2. and 14. 26. and 15. 38.; and ſometimes the work of Chriſt, Philip. 2. 30.; the work of the Lord, 1 Cor. 16. 10. The faith wrought by it is ἔργον πίστεως, the work of faith, 2 Theſſ. 1. 2. And he that begets it in us, is ſaid to begin in us ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, the good work, Philip. 1. 6. And in this ſenſe it accords well with the ſcope of the apoſtle, whether it be joined with the word patience, or with the following words; for the apoſtle had ſaid in the former chapter, that the goſpel of Chriſt was the power of God through faith to ſalvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile, Rom. 1. 16. This he here proſecutes, ſaying, That to them who by patience in the faith of Chriſt, ſeek the glory, honour, and immortality promiſed in the goſpel, God will give eternal life.

Ver. 8. ᵉ Καὶ ἀπειθοῦσι μὲν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, and obey not the truth.] The goſpel being ſtyled the truth of God, Rom. 3. 7. and 15. 8.; the word of truth, Eph. 1. 3. Col. 1. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 15. James 1. 18.; the knowledge of it being ἐπίγνωσις ἀληθείας, the knowledge of the truth, 1 Tim. 2. 4. and 4. 3. 2 Tim. 2. 25. Titus 1. 1. Heb. 10. 26.; the belief of it being πίστις ἀληθείας, the belief of the truth, 2 Theſſ. 2. 13.; obedience to it being obedience to the truth, Gal. 1. 3. and 5. 7.; walking according to it, being walking according to the truth, 1 John 2. 4. and 3. 3.; the goſpel itſelf being emphatically ſtyled the truth, Eph. 4. 21. 2 John ver. 2. 3. 3 John ver. 12.; to know it, being to know the truth, 1 John 2. 21.; to profeſs it, to be of the truth, 1 John 3. 19.; to reject it, not to believe the truth, 2 Theſſ. 2. 12.; to err from it, to err from the truth, Titus 1. 14. James 5. 19.: I ſay, this being ſo, οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, they that are contentious here, and obey not the truth, may be, firſt, the unbelieving Jews, or falſe apoſtles, coming from them, who preached Chriſt ἐξ ἐριθείας, out of contention againſt Paul, Philip. 1. 16. And, ſecondly, the Gentiles, which ſpake againſt the truth, and rejected it; and both theſe obeyed, and gave up themſelves to falſehood: the Gentiles, by changing the truth of God into a lie, chap. 1. 25. the Jews, by adhering to their vain traditions, which made void the commands of God, and owning them as derived from Moſes, when they were only the doctrines of men.

Ibid. ᶠ Πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, but obey unrighteouſneſs.] Here Chryſoſtom notes that the apoſtle doth not ſay, βιαζομένοις, τυραννημένοις, who are forced to, but who obey unrighteouſneſs, ἵνα μάθῃς ὅτι προαιρέσεως τὸ πᾶσμα, ὃκ ἀνάγκης τὸ ἔγκλημα, ὅθεν κὰ ἀσύγγνωστον, that thou mayſt learn, that they offend of choice, and not of neceſſity, and therefore are unworthy of pardon.

Ver. 11. ᵍ Οὐ προσωπολημψία, no reſpect of perſons.] i. e. He is not one who will connive at men doing wickedly, becauſe they are Jews, whilſt he puniſheth the like wickedneſs in the Gentiles; or afford juſtification and ſalvation to the Jew believing, and working that which is good, and not to the believing and obedient Gentile, Rom. 3. 29. 30.

Ver. 12. ʰ Ἀνόμως ἀπολοῦνται καὶ ἀνόμως κριθήσονται, As many as have ſinned without law, ſhall alſo periſh without law; and as many as have ſinned in the law, ſhall be judged by the law.] Here (m) Mr Dodwell ſays, "That ſome advantage may be taken from "the words ἀπολοῦνται, and κριθήσονται, that which is "called periſhing in the caſe of the Gentiles, and "ſo may be underſtood as well of ceaſing to be, "as of any poſitive inflictions, being oppoſed to "be judged in the latter clauſe relating to the "Jews." But, 1. The word ἀπολλύω, to periſh, is often uſed in the New Teſtament, and eſpecially in the epiſtles of thoſe Chriſtians, who, by his own hypotheſis, are to periſh, by being ſubject to eternal puniſhments, as in thoſe words, μὴ ἀπόλλυε, deſtroy not with thy meat thy brother for whom Chriſt died, Rom. 14. 15. and in 1 Cor. 8. 11. κὰ ἀπολεῖται, and ſo ſhall thy brother periſh for whom Chriſt died; ſo alſo 2 Cor. 15. 4. 5. 2 Theſſ. 2. 10. 2 Pet. 3. 9.: yea, this criticiſm would exempt not only Judas the traitor, that υἱὸς ἀπωλείας, ſon of perdition, John 17. 12. but even the very devils, from this future puniſhment; for their queſtion is, ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; Art thou come to deſtroy us before the time? Mark 4. 34. It is uſed in the goſpels of Chriſt's little ones in thoſe words, It is not the will of my Father ἵνα ἀπόληται, that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh, Matth. 5. 29. 18. 14.; of loſing the ſoul by denying Chriſt, Matth. 10. 39. 16. 25. And, laſtly, it is uſed of the deſtruction of ſoul and body in hell, Matth. 10. 28. 2. Κριθήσονται here applied to the Jews, ſignifies καταδικασθήσονται, they ſhall be condemned, as appears from the oppoſition it bears to δικαιωθήσονται, they ſhall be juſtified, ver. 13. And this it ſtill doth, and muſt do, when it relates to the judgment paſſed upon the wicked at that day; ſo John 3. 18. 12. 48. 16. 11. 2 Theſſ. 2. 12. Heb. 13. 4. And this being introduced as a proof, that in that day there ſhall be tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul that worketh evil, whether he be Jew or Gentile; and that becauſe God is no reſpecter of perſons; ſhews that both Jew and Gentile working evil muſt fall under that tribulation and anguiſh. And the reaſon of the variation of the words may be probably this, that the Gentile being condemned by the law written in his own heart, and ſo being as it were a confeſſed criminal, there needs nothing more than to ſentence him to the perdition which his ſin deſerves; whereas the Jew being to be ſentenced by a written law, which he may think he has not violated, ſo as to deſerve condemnation, he muſt be judged and condemned by the ſentence which the law hath pronounced againſt him.

Ver. 13. ⁱ Οὐ οἱ ἀκροαταὶ τῷ νόμῳ, not the hearers of the law.] The Jewiſh religion was very much corrupted at our Saviour's coming, ſo that they thought it ſufficient to obtain God's favour, and to ſecure them from his judgments, 1. That they were of the ſeed of Abraham; and hence the Baptiſt ſpeaks thus to them, Bring forth fruits meet for repentance, and (think it not ſufficient to) ſay within yourſelves, We have Abraham for our father, Matth. 3. 8. 9. The Chaldee paraphraſts do often mention their expectation of being preſerved for the merits or good works of their forefathers Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; and their writers add, that (n) hell-fire hath no power over the ſinners of Iſrael, becauſe Ab aham and Iſaac deſcend thither to fetch them thence. 2. They held that circumciſion was of ſufficient virtue to render them accepted of God, and to preſerve them from eternal ruin; for they teach (o), that no circumciſed perſon goes to hell, God having promiſed to deliver them from it for the merit of circumciſion; and having told Abraham, that when his children fell into tranſgreſſion, and did wicked works, he would remember the odour of their foreſkins, and would be ſatisfied with their piety. And, 3. they taught, That (p) all Iſraelites had a portion in the world to come; and that notwithſtanding their ſins, yea, though they were condemned here for their wickedneſs: this is the firſt ſentence in the Capitula Patrum: whereas, of all the Gentiles, without exception, they pronounce that (q) they are fewel for hell-fire. 4. They teach, that to be employed in hearing and ſtudying the law was a thing ſufficient to make them acceptable with God. To this St James ſeems to refer in theſe words, And be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſouls, Ja. 1. 22. Now, moſt of theſe vain opinions the apoſtle in this chapter, and throughout this epiſtle, labours to confute: the firſt here, ver. 9. the ſecond, ver. 25. the third from ver. 2. to 9. and the fourth in this verſe.

Ver. 14. Ὅταν γὰρ ἔθνη, for when the Gentiles.] Moſt interpreters underſtand this of the believing Gentiles, the righteouſneſs of the law being fulfilled in them only who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit, Rom. 8. 4.; and he being only the inward Jew, who hath the circumciſion of the heart in the ſpirit, ver. 29. But all the ancient commentators interpret theſe laſt ſix verſes, not indeed of the idolatrous Gentiles, but of ſuch Gentiles as lived before the law, as Melchiſedec and Job; or were worſhippers of the true God, as Cornelius; or repented, as the Ninevites. Theſe examples, ſaith Chryſoſtom, he ſets before the Jews, as being ſuch as they could not contradict. And in his comment on the 15th verſe, he makes this inference from the words, (r) By theſe things he ſhews that God made man ſufficient of himſelf to chuſe virtue and avoid vice; adding, that this was neceſſary to be ſaid to ſtop the mouths of them who inquired, πῦ τὸν ἔμπροσθεν χρόνον τὰ τῆς τοσαύτης προνοίας ἦν; where were the footſteps of ſuch a providence in former times? This the apoſtle ſeems plainly to inſinuate, by arguing that God did, and will accept the Gentile, living according to the law written in his heart, and therefore owning him as the true God, and honouring or glorifying him as that God, who made the heaven and the earth, becauſe he is no reſpecter of perſons. This ſeems the obvious meaning of thoſe words of St Peter, in the caſe of Cornelius and all his friends, Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons, (i. e. he affects them not barely becauſe they are circumciſed, or of ſuch a nation), but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is acceptable to him, Acts 20. 34. 35. ſuppoſing that there might be ſuch in every nation. And the argument of Origen ſeems here conſiderable; that "(ſ) if God condemned the Gentiles "becauſe they held the truth in unrighteouſneſs, "and when they knew God, did not glorify him as "God, neither were thankful; it ſeems reaſonable "to conceive, that had they done what they culpably neglected, and might have done, i. e. had "they glorified him as God, and been thankful, "they would have done what had been acceptable "to God, and fit to be rewarded by his goodneſs:" i. e. Had they held the truth in righteouſneſs, and abſtained from thoſe actions for which their conſcience did accuſe them, and for which they knew they were worthy of death, as they who were inexcuſable for not doing of them, might have done, they would have eſcaped the wrath of God revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs. But then theſe things may here be offered to conſideration.

1. That this acceptance may not reach ſo far as to put them under the ſame privileges and favours with his church and people; but if they live in ſuch times and places where an exacter knowledge of his will might be obtained, it may induce his providence to find out means of imparting that alſo to them, as in the caſe of Cornelius and his friends, who was told things by which he and his houſe ſhould be ſaved, Acts 11. 14.

2. That though God may and will reward ſuch honeſt Heathens, becauſe otherwiſe they could have no encouragement to own, or ſerve him as their God, ſince he that cometh to God, ſaith the apoſtle,

muſt believe that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6.; yet is he not obliged to give them the glorious reward which he hath promiſed to the Chriſtian; for this not being due to their works, they could not from the light of nature be aſſured of it: and it being ſo peculiarly aſſigned to faith in Chriſt, both affirmatively and negatively, when the apoſtle ſaith, God hath given us eternal life, and that life is in his Son; He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life; This is life eternal, that they know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent; This is the true God and eternal life, 1 John 5. 11. 12. 13. 20. John 17. 3. ſee John 1. 4. and 13. 16. 36. and 5. 24. and 6. 27.; it cannot well be ſaid to belong to any other; and therefore (t) Origen freely grants this, and yet thinks ſuch perſons may not be utterly deprived of a reward; eſpecially it ſeems not equitable that they ſhould be deprived of all reward, purely for want of an impoſſible condition; i. e. becauſe they believed not in him of whom they had not, and very often could not have heard. It may be added,

3. That if any of them did arrive at ſuch a ſtate, as made them indeed to fear God, and work righteouſneſs, they did this not merely by the ſtrength of natural light; for though ſome of them ſeem to ſay, that (u) nature, or philoſophy, was a ſufficient guide to virtue, yet that they meant not this excluſively of the divine aſſiſtance, which they ſaw neceſſary to preſerve them againſt the infirmities of human nature, (x) their own words do fully teſtify. And if God owned any of them as truly righteous, it was by virtue of their faith in God; i. e. that faith by which they believed he was a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him; which being as to kind the ſame with that which the apoſtle ſo highly commends, Heb. 11. even the expectation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen, when it produced in them a ſincere endeavour to ſerve and pleaſe him, according to the light of nature, and cleave to their duty, though they might ſuffer for it in this world, might be imputed unto them for righteouſneſs. I conclude theſe conjectures with Origen on the ſame place, Sed tamen in arbitrio legentis eſt probare quæ dicta ſunt, vel non.

Ver. 17. ι Σὺ Ἰουδαῖος ἐπονομάζῃ, thou art called a Jew.] The apoſtle doth not here begin to ſpeak to the Jew, but to prove farther, and illuſtrate what he ſaid before, as is evident from the words ἰδὲ σὺ, behold thou (to whom I ſpeak) art called a Jew; he therefore may be ſuppoſed to ſpeak this farther, to convince him, that he, doing the ſame things, ſhall not eſcape the judgment of God; and that the hearing of the law he doth not practiſe, will be ſo far from juſtifying him before God, that it will add to his condemnation.

Ver. 20. λ Ἀφρόνων, of the fooliſh.] The fooliſh and the babes ſeem to be here the proſelytes to the Jewiſh law, whom they accounted as infants new born.

Ver. 21. μ Ὁ οὖν διδάσκων ἕτερον, thou that teacheſt another.] This verſe may be illuſtrated out of the Jewiſh writings; for they ſay, that "(y) he who "teacheth others what he doth not himſelf, is like "a blind man who hath a candle in his hand to "give light to others, whilſt he himſelf doth walk "in darkneſs." So appoſite is the firſt queſtion to convince thoſe Jews, who pretended to be guides and lights to the blind Gentiles, that they themſelves were blind. And again, "How can a wiſe man "ſay in the congregation, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, "when he ſteals?" Whence it appears, that in their own account this was ſufficient to cut off their pretence to wiſdom.

Ver. 22. ν Ὁ λέγων μὴ μοιχεύειν, thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, &c.] Of all theſe things the Jewiſh doctors were notoriouſly guilty, and of moſt of them they were accuſed by our Lord; as v. g. firſt, that they ſaid, and did not; that they laid heavy burdens upon others, which they would not touch with their own fingers, Matth. 23. 3. 4.; that they made his Father's houſe a den of thieves, Matth. 21. 13. for this day, or while I ſtay in this place? And ſurely ſuch a wife was little better than a whore. Hence (a) Juſtin Martyr tells the Jews, that wherever they travelled or came, they did, with the permiſſion of their Rabbins, ὀνόμαζι γάμε γυναῖκας ἄγεσθαι, take women, and uſe them as their wives, under pretence of marriage. And the theft and merchandiſe of which they are accuſed, Matth. 21. and John 2. being about holy things, may be well alſo ſtyled ſacrilege; though of this they being accuſed in the times of the prophet Malachi, doubtleſs they were more guilty of it in theſe worſt of times. Accordingly (b) Joſephus doth pronounce them guilty, not only of "theft, treachery, adultery, ſacrilege, "but of rapines and murders, and new ways of "wickedneſs invented by them, of all which the "temple was made the receptacle." Add to this, that the ſame Joſephus informs us, that not long after the writing of this epiſtle, the ſervants of the high prieſts, τὰς τῶν ἱερέων δικάτας ἁλαμβανον βιαζόμενοι, "took away by violence the tithes of the prieſts, "ſo that many of them periſhed for want of food." Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. p. 698. E.

Note alſo from theſe words, thou that abhorreſt idols, the miſtake of thoſe who think the Gnoſtics are here referred to; they being ſo far from abhorring idols, that (c) Irenæus informs us, "they had "their images, they worſhipped idols without fear, "and went firſt to the feaſts celebrated in the idol-"temple." Origen (d) alſo aſſures us, that he, viz. Simon Magus, taught his diſciples to "count ido-"latry as a thing indifferent."

Ver. 22. [1] Thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacrilege?] Robbing that God of his honour this way, who hath required thee to honour him with thy ſubſtance, and the firſt fruits of thy increaſe, Prov. 3. 9. Mal. 3. 8. 9. Ecclus 35. 8. as the idolater doth by giving his honour to an idol. And of this ſin they being accuſed by God himſelf, declaring, by his prophet Malachi, that they had robbed him in tithes and offerings; doubtleſs they were more guilty of it in theſe worſt times of the Jewiſh nation.

Ver. 24. [2] Βλασφημεῖται ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, is blaſphemed among the Gentiles.] Of this (e) Joſephus doth frequently accuſe them, ſaying, "What wickedneſs "do you conceal or hide, which is not known "to your enemies? You triumph in your wicked-"neſs, ſtrive daily who ſhall be moſt vile, making "a ſhew of your wickedneſs as if it were virtue." And thinkeſt thou this, O man, that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God, who puniſheth the Gentiles, when thou art as guilty as they, of acting againſt thy conſcience, and doing that for which thine own mouth condemns thee, or which is as bad as that which thou condemneſt in them, and which doth alſo cauſe them to blaſpheme that holy name by which thou art called? Surely after theſe things ſo ſcandalouſly done, it will be of no advantage to thee that thou art called a Jew, or haſt received the ſign of circumciſion.

Ver. 25. [r] Having thus proved that the ſins of the Jews muſt render them obnoxious to the divine wrath, as well as thoſe of the Gentiles, he proceeds to prove what he ſaid, ver. 7. and 10. that the righteouſneſs of the circumciſed Gentile muſt alſo render him acceptable to God, and rewardable by him, as well as the righteouſneſs of the Jew.

Ver. 26. [s] Τὰ δικαιώματα τῦ νόμε, the righteouſneſſes or ordinances of the law.] The word δικαιώματα is uſed ſometimes for the divine judgments, which being always done in equity, and according to the deſerts of men, are fitly called δικαιώματα, or righteous judgments, chap. 1. 32. Rev. 15. 4.; and ſometimes it relates to the ceremonial inſtitutions which God thought fit for a ſeaſon to preſcribe to the Jews, and then it ſeems beſt to be rendered ordinances, as Heb. 9. 1. 10.; and ſometimes to the moral precepts of the law, as when the apoſtle ſaith, τὸ δικαίωμα τῦ νόμε, the righteouſneſs of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit; which ſeems to be the ſenſe of the phraſe here.

Ver. 27. [t] Ἡ ἐκ φύσεως ἀκροβυστία, the uncircumciſion which is by nature.] Moſt interpreters think that the apoſtle ſpeaks in theſe two verſes of the believing Gentile, and only doth deſign to prove againſt the Jew, that his want of circumciſion, if he be a doer of righteouſneſs, will not hinder his acceptance with God, 1 Cor. 7. 19. Gal. 5. 6. and 6. 15. and that becauſe this righteouſneſs of the law is ſaid to be fulfilled by them who walk according to the ſpirit, chap. 8. 4. i. e. by them who are in Chriſt Jeſus, v. 1.; but Grotius and Oecumenius ſeem to interpret this of the Heathens, ſuch as the centurions in the goſpel were, becauſe the condemnation of the Jew ſeems to ariſe from this, that he who had the letter of the law did not that which they who were without it did.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. (BUT you will ſay, If the uncircumciſed perſon, keeping the righteouſneſs of the law, is to be reckoned as circumciſed, chap. 2. 26. and if the inward circumciſion be that alone which is acceptable to God, ver. 28. 29.) what advantage then hath the Jew (above the Gentile?) or what profit is there of (the) circumciſion (above uncircumciſion)?

2. (I anſwer), Much every way, (chap. 9. 4. but) chiefly, becauſe that unto them were committed the oracles of God, (in which the covenants and promiſes made to them, and chiefly that of the Meſſiah, and of juſtification by faith in him, were contained.)

3. (Which oracles muſt be made good, notwithſtanding their infidelity); for what if ſome of them (to whom theſe oracles and the promiſe of a Meſſiah, or a ſeed in whom the nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed, were committed) did not believe (in the promiſed ſeed), ſhall their unbelief make the faith (or fidelity) of God (in making this promiſe to Abraham) of none effect?

4. God forbid (that ſuch a thought ſhould enter into our hearts): yea, (Gr. but, on the contrary), let God be (acknowledged) true, (and faithful to his word), but every man a liar; (i. e. though all men ſhould prove liars); as it is written, (Pſal. 51. 4.), [a] That thou mayſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, (or mayſt appear juſt and faithful in performing them), and clear when [b] thou art judged, (i. e. when thou judgeſt and contendeſt with men.)

5. But if our unrighteouſneſs commends (illuſtrates and eſtabliſhes) [c] the righteouſneſs of God, (that way of juſtification by faith which he alone approves of), [d] what ſhall we ſay? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance (on the Jew and Gentile for theſe ſins, which thus commend his righteouſneſs, and ſhew the wiſdom and grace of God in admitting this way of our juſtification?) [e] I ſpeak as a man, (i. e. as an Heathen or unbeliever would be apt to conclude from our doctrine of juſtification by faith:)

6. (For) God forbid (that I ſhould have a thought that God can be unrighteous); for how then ſhall God judge the world (for their unrighteouſneſs?)

7. (Speak, I ſay their ſenſe), for (ſay they) if the truth of God hath more abounded to his glory [f] through my lie, (if the truth of his promiſe to juſtify the Gentile through faith in Chriſt, hath appeared more illuſtriouſly to the glory of his grace, through my idolatry, and changing his truth into a lie), why am I alſo judged as a ſinner, (as well as the Jew?)

8. And (why will it) not rather (follow, ὅτι ποιήσωμεν) that we ſhould do evil that good may come, (or that God may be glorified?) as we be ſlanderouſly reported, and as ſome affirm, that (in effect) we ſay, (by aſſerting the doctrine of juſtification by faith, which yet we are ſo far from ſaying, that we declare them who do ſo, men) [g] whoſe damnation is juſt.

9. What then, (or wherefore?) are we better than they? (Do we Jews excel the Gentiles?) [h] No, in no wiſe, (ου πάντως, not altogether, as to the benefit mentioned, ver. 2. but not as to juſtification): for we have before proved (touching) both Jews (chap. 2.) and Gentiles (chap. 1.), that they are all under ſin, (and ſo all ſtand in need of juſtification by faith.)

10. (The Jews, I ſay, as well as the Gentiles), [i] as it is written (of them), There is none righteous, no, not one.

11. There is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God;

12. They are all gone out of the way, they are altogether become unprofitable, there is none that doth good, no not one.

13. Their throat is an open ſepulchre, with their tongues have they uſed deceit, the poiſon of aſps is under their lips; (they are men)

14. Whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs.

15. Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood.

16. Deſtruction and miſery are in their way:

17. And the way of peace have they not known.

18. There is no fear of God before their eyes.

19. (Which words of the pſalmiſt may juſtly be applied to them); for we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, (not applying the words to any others), it ſaith to them that are under the law: that (not only the mouths of the Gentiles, but) every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may (ſee they are) become guilty before God.

20. Therefore by the deeds of the law there ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in his ſight: for by the law is the [k] knowledge of (that) ſin (which rendereth us obnoxious to condemnation.)

21. But now (in the diſpenſation of the goſpel) the righteouſneſs of God without (performing the works of) the law is manifeſted (to the world), being witneſſed (i. e. atteſted to) by the law, (giving us the knowledge of ſin, ver. 20.), and by the prophets, phets, (declaring, that the juſt man ſhall live by faith.)

22. Even the righteouſneſs of God which is by faith in Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all that believe; for (as to the way of juſtification) there is no difference (betwixt Jew and Gentile):

23. For all have ſinned, and (ſo) come ſhort of (attaining) [a] the glory of God, (without a free act of juſtification by grace);

24. Being juſtified (i. e. abſolved from the guilt and condemnation due to us for our paſt ſins) freely by his grace, [n] through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt:

25. Whom God hath ſet forth (or propoſed) to be [o] a propitiation (a propitiatory or mercy-ſeat) through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs (i. e. the way of juſtification by faith, which God alone admits of), [p] for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God, (not imputing their treſpaſſes to them who believe in him, 2 Cor. 5. 19.);

26. (I ſay, God hath now propoſed him as our propitiatory), [r] to declare at this time his righteouſneſs, (or the way of juſtification he allows of): that he (by juſtifying us only through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus) might (appear to) be [s] juſt (in requiring this ſatisfaction for our ſins), and (yet) the juſtifier of them that believe in Jeſus.

27. (And if this be the only way of juſtification, or being righteous before God), where is (there any ground of) boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? (that) of works? Nay, (for he that is juſtified by works hath whereof to boaſt, ἔχει καύχημα, chap. 4. 2.), but by the law of faith (only.)

28. Therefore we conclude, that a man is juſtified by [t] faith (alone), without (reſpect to) the deeds of the law (given to the Jews. For)

29. Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not alſo of the Gentiles, (which have not the law? Hath he vouchſafed to them no means of juſtification or acceptance with him?) Yes, (doubtleſs he is the God) of the Gentiles alſo.

30. Seeing it is one God who will juſtify [u] the circumciſion by faith, and (the) uncircumciſion through (the ſame) faith.

31. Do we then make void the law through (this) faith? (do we contradict it, or ſay, it is an uſeleſs thing, or againſt the promiſes? Gal. 3. 19. 21.) God forbid (that this ſhould be affirmed by us); nay, we eſtabliſh the law, (by declaring, that it gives the knowledge of ſin, ver. 20. gives witneſs to this way of juſtification, ver. 21. and ſo ſhews the neceſſity of faith, and ſo is our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, who is the end of the law, Rom. 10. 4. Gal. 3. 24.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 4. [a] Ὅπως ἂν δικαιωθῇς, that thou mayſt be juſtified.] Theſe words are a confeſſion of King David, that how ſeverely ſoever God ſhould deal with him for his ſin, he could not accuſe him of too much rigor, but muſt juſtify him in his proceedings, and clear him from all imputations of injuſtice; and ſo they cannot be here brought to prove, as Eſthius imagines, that, notwithſtanding our ſins, God will be faithful to his promiſes; but to ſhew, that, though God ſhould reject the Jews for their infidelity, they would have no reaſon to complain of his ſeverity, or charge him with injuſtice or unfaithfulneſs on that account, they having forfeited their right to be the ſeed of Abraham, the father of the faithful, by their infidelity, and the Gentiles, by imitating his faith, being now become his children. Note alſo, that the Hebrew TIZCHE, which we render pure or clean, Pſal. 51. 4. is well rendered by the Septuagint νικήσῃς, might overcome; it bearing oft that ſenſe in the Syriac, and among the Rabbins, as Buxtorf proves in his Lexicon, p. 668.

Ibid. [b] Ἐν τῷ κρίνεσθαί σε, Heb. בשפטך, when thou judgeſt,] or contendeſt with any man, or entereſt into judgment with him, or indicteſt, or accuſeſt him of ſin; ſo the word is very often uſed in the Old and New Teſtament: ſo Job 13. 19. Τίς ἐστὶ ὁ κρινόμενός μοι; Who is he that will contend with me? Eccl. 6. 10. Οὐ δυνήσεται κριθῆναι, He cannot contend with one who is ſtronger than himſelf. Iſ. 43. 26. Put me in remembrance, καὶ κριθῶμεν, and let us plead together. Iſ. 66. 16. Ἐν τῷ πυρὶ κριθήσεται ὁ κύριος, By fire will the Lord plead with all fleſh. Matth. 5. 40. Θελοντί σοι κριθῆναι, To him that will contend with thee. 1 Cor. 6. 1. Τολμᾷ τὶς κρίνεσθαι; Dares any one contend before the unjuſt? See note on 1 Pet. 4. 6.

Ver. 5. [c] Δικαιοσύνην Θεοῦ, the righteouſneſs of God.] That this phraſe in the epiſtles doth ſignify always the righteouſneſs of faith, or our juſtification through faith in Chriſt, hath been ſhewed, note on chap. 1. 17. and on 2 Cor. 5. 21.; and this ſeems to eſtabliſh the expoſition given in the paraphraſe.

Ibid. [d] Τί ἐροῦμεν; μὴ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐπιφέρων τὴν ὀργήν; What ſhall we ſay? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?] The apoſtle had laid down the propoſition, which is the foundation of this diſcourſe, and of the whole epiſtle, in theſe words, The goſpel is the power of God to the ſalvation of every one that believes, Jew or Gentile; for therein is revealed the righteouſneſs of God by faith, to beget faith in both.

both. The neceſſity of this faith he ſhews, 1. with reſpect to the Gentiles, becauſe they being unrighteous, could not otherwiſe be juſtified before God, or eſcape his wrath, revealed againſt all unrighteouſneſs, by any other way than that of faith; and this proof he concludes chap. 1. In the ſecond chapter he ſhews the ſame, touching the Jews, by reaſon of their unrighteouſneſs, and therefore faith here, ver. 9. We have before proved both Jews and Gentiles to be under ſin. Now, this moſt plainly ſerves to commend and eſtabliſh this way of righteouſneſs by faith in Chriſt, from the neceſſity of it to the juſtification both of Jew and Gentile. This then muſt be the import of the objection: If the unrighteouſneſs both of Jew and Gentile tends ſo viſibly to illuſtrate and recommend the wiſdom of God, and the grace or favour of God, in appointing this way of juſtification by faith in Chriſt, is it righteous in God to puniſh both Jew and Gentile, as you ſay he did, chap. 1. 24. 26. 32. and will do, chap. 1. 18. chap. 2. 2. 4. 5. 6. 8. 9. for that unrighteouſneſs that tends ſo highly to the glory of the goſpel-grace?

Ibid. [e] Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I ſpeak as a man,] i. e. As a mere natural man, not acquainted with the revealed will of God, or not acted by his Spirit; ſo Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius, I ſpeak κατ' ἀνθρώπινον λογισμὸν, according to human reaſon; ὁ γὰρ ἐγὼ ταῦτα λέγω, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἄλλων τίθημι λογισμούς, for it is not I that ſay theſe things, but I propoſe the reaſonings of others. That this is the conſtant import of the phraſe, ſee note on 1 Cor. 9. 8. and 15. 32.

Ver. 7. [f] Ἐν τῷ ἐμῷ ψεύσματι, by my lie.] The idols of the Heathens are called lying vanities, Pſal. 31. 7. Jonah 2. 8. numina falſa; the makers of them are ſaid to frame שֶׁקֶר, a lie, Jer. 10. 14. and to have, and frame a lie with their right hand, Iſ. 44. 20.; they who worſhip them are ſaid to turn aſide to lies, Pſal. 40. 5. and to hearken to a teacher of lies, Hab. 2. 18. and to turn the truth of God into a lie, Rom. 1. 25. Hence are the Heathens introduced making this confeſſion, Surely our fathers did inherit lies, ὡς ψεῦδη ἐκτήσαντο οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν εἴδωλα, Jer. 16. 19. Now, this argument being that by which the apoſtle in the firſt chapter proves the Gentiles to be ſinners, worthy of condemnation, and ſo incapable of juſtification by any other way than that of faith, this may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be the thing referred to in this verſe.

Ver. 8. [g] Ὧν τὸ κρίμα ἔνδικόν ἐστι, whoſe damnation is juſt.] They by thus objecting againſt that diſpenſation of divine grace and wiſdom, which they ſhould thankfully embrace and accept, and without which they cannot be juſtified, and ſo rejecting it as abſurd in their imaginations, render it juſt that they ſhould ſtill lie under the guilt of ſin, and under the wrath of God for it.

Ver. 9. [h] Οὐ πάντως, no, in no wiſe.] That theſe words may be rendered, not altogether, as well as οὐ πάντες is rendered not all, 2 Theſſ. 3. 2. Heb. 3. 16. we learn from Oecumenius, who paraphraſes them thus, οὐκ ἐκ πάντος τρόπου, not in every kind (f); ſo οὐ πάντως ſignifies, 1 Cor. 5. 10. viz. I do not altogether forbid you to accompany with fornicators, for then you muſt go out of the world; and then the context will plainly force this rendering, as being that which anſwers to the following reaſon, the words bearing this ſenſe. We do indeed excel them, in having the promiſe of a Meſſiah, and the ſalvation tendered by him, firſt made to us, chap. 2. 10.; in having the knowledge of the law, ver. 17. and the oracles of God committed to us, chap. 3. 2.; but we do not wholly, or in all things excel them, becauſe not in the matter of juſtification by faith, which Jew and Gentile equally ſtand in need of.

Ver. 10. [i] Καθὼς γέγραπται, as it is written.] Theſe words are cited from the 14th pſalm, according to the edition of the Septuagint; but I do not conceive it neceſſary to make good the apoſtle's words, or argument, that they ſhould be ſpoken of the Jews of that age in general, eſpecially ſeeing they are there ſaid to have devoured God's people, and to have ſhamed the counſel of the poor. It is enough, 1. That they ſhould generally agree to the Jews of the age in which the apoſtle writ, as both the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament, and the writings of Joſephus fully prove they do. And, 2. That the law condemning any for theſe crimes, doth more eſpecially condemn thoſe under the law, who at any time are guilty of crimes thus noted, and condemned by the law. And with this concluſion of the apoſtle the Jews themſelves accord, ſaying, There is not a man who is not obnoxious to God, (or might not juſtly be condemned by him), were it not for his mercy and clemency. Moreover, it is farther to be noted, that, in the cloſe of this pſalm, there ſeems to be a prayer for the redemption of the Jews by the Meſſiah, in thoſe words. O that the ſalvation of Iſrael were come out of Zion? ver. 7.; the deliverer that was to come out of Zion being the Meſſiah, as we learn from Iſaiah, chap. 59. 20. and from this apoſtle, chap. 11. 26. Note, 2*dly*, That, according to the doctrine of the Jews, their Meſſiah was to come in thoſe times when the Jewiſh nation was moſt corrupt, and ſo moſt reſembled the deſcription here alledged. See the note on Philip. 3. 1.

Ver. 20. [k] Ἐπίγνωσις ἁμαρτίας, the knowledge of ſin.] This knowledge of ſin being chiefly by the moral law, chap. 7. 7. ſhews, that the apoſtle excludes as well that as the ceremonial from juſtification; and evident it is, that the antitheſis runs all along, not between moral and ceremonial works, but between works in general and faith, ver. 20. 22.; the law of works and faith, ver. 27. chap. 4. 2. 6. and 9. 32. and 10. 5. 6.

Ver. 23. [l] Τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, the glory of God;] i. e. the fruition of God in glory; for being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 1. 2.

Ver. 24. [m] Διὰ τῆς ἀπολυτρώσεως, through the redemption] purchaſed by the death and blood of Chriſt ſhed for us; we having redemption through his blood, the remiſſion of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14.

Ver. 25. [n] Τῶν προγεγονότων ἁμαρτημάτων, of ſins that are paſt:] for in this only conſiſts our firſt juſtification, which is by faith alone. The remiſſion of our future ſins committed againſt the new covenant, eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus, being to be obtained (if they be wilful ſins, which only violate the covenant of grace) by a ſincere and particular repentance for them, which brings us again under that covenant, and ſo under the promiſe of forgiveneſs through the blood of Jeſus. The ἱλαστήριον or mercy-ſeat was ſo called, becauſe God there ſhewed himſelf propitious, by reaſon of the blood of the ſacrifice ſprinkled before it; the apoſtle therefore, in alluſion to it, ſaith, that God hath ſet forth Chriſt to be his mercy-ſeat, i. e. the perſon through whom he will be propitious to us through faith in his blood, ſtyled the blood of ſprinkling, Heb. 12. 24. and preſented before him in the heavens.

Ibid. [o] Ἱλαστήριον, to be a propitiation.] In the Old Teſtament we find the mercy-ſeat ſtill ſtyled ἱλαστήριον, becauſe it was the place where God promiſed to be propitious to them, and where the high prieſt made an atonement for himſelf, and all the congregation, by ſprinkling the blood of the ſin-offering before the mercy-ſeat. When therefore the apoſtle ſaith, that God hath ſet forth Jeſus Chriſt to be a mercy-ſeat to us through faith in his blood, we have reaſon to believe the blood of Chriſt, as our ſin-offering, doth make atonement for, and render God propitious to us. And as, under the Old Teſtament, they who deſired to have God propitious to them, were to come with the blood of their ſin-offering to the mercy-ſeat; ſo under the goſpel-diſpenſation, they muſt expect to find God propitious to them through the blood of Chriſt their mercy-ſeat, by whom they coming to God, as the Jews did by appearing before his mercy-ſeat, ſhould find him gracious in pardoning their iniquities through the redemption that is in Jeſus. Whence I argue againſt the Socinians, for our Lord's ſatisfaction, thus: What is it we do obtain by this redemption? it is, ſaith the apoſtle, remiſſion of ſins. What is it that procures this remiſſion? it is the blood of Chriſt, for we have redemption through his blood, even the remiſſion of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14.; it is the death of Chriſt, Heb. 9. 15. Since then, by the confeſſion of Sclightingius upon the place, our Lord is mentioned here as a piacular victim, and ſeeing it is certain thoſe victims ſtill ſuffered in the ſinner's ſtead, and that whenſoever in the Old Teſtament mention is made of the remiſſion of ſins, the blood of theſe ſacrifices was the thing that made atonement for them, remiſſion of ſins was the thing purchaſed by that blood. Have we not reaſon, from what is here ſaid of Chriſt our piacular victim, to conceive he ſuffered in our ſtead, and that his blood, ſhed for us, procured the remiſſion of our ſins, as it atoned an offended God for our tranſgreſſions?

Ibid. [p] Εἰς τὸ εἶναι αὐτὸν δίκαιον, that he might be juſt.] The Reverend Dr Hammond ſaith, the word δίκαιος is here to be rendered clement and merciful, and that it is commonly taken in that notion, and ſeldom in that of vindictive juſtice: but in oppoſition to this, I aſſert, that the word δίκαιος is uſed about eighty times in the New Teſtament, and not once in that ſenſe of clemency and mercy in which he ſaith it is commonly taken. He himſelf produces but one place, viz. Matth. 1. 19. Joſeph being a juſt man, and not willing to make Mary a public example, was minded to put her away privily: "Where," ſaith Dr Lightfoot, "men torment the word δίκαιος to "make it ſignify clement and merciful, when it "bears clearly the ordinary ſenſe. Thus, Joſeph "being a juſt man, would not cohabit with an "adultereſs, and yet being not willing to make "her a public example, and no neceſſity," as he there ſhews, "lying upon him ſo to do, he was "minded to put her away privily." 2. It is in the New Teſtament diſtinguiſhed from the good and merciful man; as when Joſeph of Arimathæa is ſtyled ἀγαθὸς καὶ δίκαιος, a good man and juſt, Luke 23. 50.; when the law is called δικαία καὶ ἀγαθή, juſt and good, Rom. 7. 12.; and when it is ſaid, chap. 5. 7. that ſcarcely ὑπὲρ δικαίου, for a righteous man will one die, though ὑπὲρ ἀγαθοῦ, for a good man one would even dare to die. And, 3. when it relates to God, as here, it always ſignifies either the equity and congruity of his dealings, as 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. 6. or his faithfulneſs to his word, 1 John 1. 9. Apoc. 15. 3. or his vindictive juſtice, as Rev. 16. 5. 6. 7. and 19. 2. 2 Tim. 4. 8.

Ibid. [q] Τὴν δικαιοσύνην, to declare his righteouſneſs.] This phraſe, the righteouſneſs of God, as I have before obſerved, doth always in the epiſtles ſignify our juſtification by faith in Chriſt, as being the only righteouſneſs that God approves of, and is here ſtyled the righteouſneſs of God through faith, ver. 22.; and therefore this righteouſneſs cannot be demonſtrated, as ſome conceive, by winking at the ſins committed in former ages, Acts 17. 30. but by propoſing, by the goſpel, the way of remitting mens paſt ſins through faith in Chriſt, or his own non-imputation of them.

Ver. 28. [r] πίστει, by faith.] Juſtification from our paſt ſins is from faith alone, without reſpect to any of our works, we being juſtified freely by his grace, ver. 23. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but through his mercy he ſaved us, Titus 3. 5. i. e. he juſtified us by his grace, and ſo put us in the way of ſalvation.

Ver. 30. [s] Note, that ſo the Jews ſay, "If a man "believe not as he ought, circumciſion will not "make him a Jew; but if he believe as he ought, "he is a Jew, though he be not circumciſed." Nitzachon, ſect. 7. ſub. 21.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. WHat ſhall we ſay then, (Gr. what therefore do we ſay, as ſome of our nation), that Abraham our father, [a] as pertaining to the fleſh, hath found? (Gr. hath found juſtification and acceptance with God, by virtue of his circumciſion in the fleſh?)

2. (Surely no); for if Abraham were juſtified by (his own) works, (i. e. his obedience to God's command to circumciſe himſelf and his whole family), he hath whereof to glory, (Gr. ground of boaſting in thoſe works by which he was thus juſtified); but (manifeſt it is he had) not (whereof to boaſt, or glory) before God.

3. For what ſaith the ſcripture? (even this) [b] Abraham believed God, and it (viz. that faith) was counted to him for righteouſneſs.

4. Now, (or whereas), to him that worketh, (and by that obtaineth righteouſneſs), is the reward reckoned not of grace, but of debt, (he having performed all that was required, in order to his being righteous before God.)

5. But to him that worketh not, (i. e. who hath not any thing on account of which he can be deemed righteous by virtue of his works), but believeth [c] on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, (on account of his faith), his faith is accounted for righteouſneſs.

6. (And this account of juſtification is) [d] even (ſuch) as David alſo (the other great perſon to whom God had promiſed a bleſſing to all nations through his ſeed, Iſ. 11. 10. Acts 2. 30. and 13. 23.) deſcribeth (ſpeaking of) the bleſſedneſs of the man to whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works,

7. Saying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered.

8. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute (the) ſin (he hath committed.)

9. Cometh this bleſſedneſs then (of righteouſneſs, by not imputing ſin) upon the circumciſion only, or upon the uncircumciſion alſo? (This queſtion may be decided by the example of our father Abraham); for we ſay, that [e] faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteouſneſs.

10. How was it then reckoned (to him for righteouſneſs? was it) when he was in circumciſion, or in uncircumciſion? not (when he was) in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion; (he believing unto righteouſneſs before he was circumciſed, Gen. 15. 6.)

11. And he received (afterwards) the ſign of circumciſion, (as) a [f] ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith which he had yet being uncircumciſed, (and ſo of his acceptance with that God, who thus entered into covenant with him, and owned himſelf his God, Gen. 17. 1.): that he might be the [g] father of all them that believe, though they be not circumciſed; that righteouſneſs might be imputed to them alſo, (which it could not be, were circumciſion the condition of juſtification and acceptance with God):

12. And (that he might be) the father of (the) circumciſion alſo, (i. e. a father) to them who are not of the circumciſion only, but alſo walk in the ſteps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumciſed.

13. (I ſay, that he might be the father of the uncircumciſed through faith, and of the circumciſion through the like faith, chap. 3. 30.); for the promiſe (made to Abraham, Gen. 12. 3. or to his ſeed, Gen. 22. 18.), that [h] he ſhould be the heir of the world, (i. e. of thoſe bleſſings which ſhould be derived from him to all the families and nations of the earth), was not (made) to Abraham, or to his ſeed, through (or by virtue of their obedience to) the law, but through (and by virtue of) the righteouſneſs of faith.

14. For if they which are of the law be heirs, (according to the promiſe made upon that account), [i] faith is made void, (as being inſufficient to juſtify without the law), and the promiſe is made of none effect, (for then the nations which are not under the law cannot be bleſſed in the ſeed of Abraham.)

15. Becauſe [k] the law worketh wrath (by condemning the tranſgreſſor to that death to which without the law he would not be ſubject): for where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion, (and ſo no condemnation for it.)

16. (And) therefore is (the inheritance, Gal. 3. 18.) of faith, that it might be by grace; (which both Jew and Gentile wanted as to juſtification, chap. 3. 23. 24.); to the end the promiſe (of it) might be ſure to all the ſeed (of Abraham), not to that only which is of the law, but to that alſo which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all,

(i. e. that it might be made good to the Gentile alſo, believing as their father Abraham did.)

17. (I ſay the father of us all), as it is written, (Gen. 17. 5.), I have made thee a [l] father of many nations; (which words, though ſpoken then when Abraham had no ſeed, yet were they certain), before (or in reſpect of) him whom he believed, even (that) God [m] who quickeneth the dead, (and ſo was able to quicken his body, now dead, and the deadneſs of Sarah's womb), and [n] calleth thoſe things which be not (i. e. the Gentiles, which were not then a people) as if they were.

18. Who, I ſay, [o] againſt (all natural grounds of) hope, believed in hope, that he might (Gr. ſhould) become the father of many nations, according to that which was ſpoken (to him, Gen. 15. 5. as the ſtars of heaven), So ſhall thy ſeed be.

19. And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now [p] dead, (or grown already dead), he being about one hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarahs womb, (with whom it had ceaſed to be after the manner of women, Gen. 18. 11.)

20. He [q] ſtaggered not at (Gr. he doubted not of) the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God, (by acknowledging his power to make it good):

21. And being fully perſuaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform.

22. And therefore it (viz. this ſtrong faith) was imputed to him for righteouſneſs.

23. [r] Now it was not written (thus of him) for his ſake alone, that it (viz. his faith) was imputed to him (for righteouſneſs);

24. But for (the benefit of) us alſo, to whom it (viz. the like faith) ſhall be imputed (for righteouſ- neſs), if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead, (that he can and will raiſe us alſo by Jeſus from the dead, and crown us with him);

25. Who was delivered (to the death) for our offences, (to offer up himſelf a piacular victim for them), and was raiſed again for our juſtification;
(i. e. to appear before God with the blood of this vic- tim, to make atonement before God for us, and thereby to procure our juſtification, or our abſolution, from the guilt of ſin.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Κατὰ σάρκα, according to the fleſh;] i. e. By virtue of his obedience to God's command, in circumciſing the fleſh of his foreſkin. So Iſrael κατὰ σάρκα, according to the fleſh, 1 Cor. 10. 18. is, Iſrael according to the circumciſion of the fleſh: to know Chriſt according to the fleſh, 2 Cor. 5. 16. is to know him according to his circumciſion, or being of the ſtock of Abraham: to glory κατὰ τὴν σάρκα, according to the fleſh, 2 Cor. 11. 18. is to glory in being circumciſed. In this the Jews had the greateſt confidence of being acceptable to God, and therefore are repreſented by St Paul as πεποιθότες ἐν σάρκι, having confidence in the fleſh, Philip. 3. 3. 4. declaring, that no circumciſed Jews go to hell, God having promiſed to deliver them for the merit of circumciſion. See the note on chap. 2. 13. Moreover, that vain opinion had obtained among the Jews, that Abraham was not pure, or accepted with God, till after his circumciſion. This is hinted in the Targum of B. Uziel, who renders Gen. 17. 1. thus, Walk before me, Bebeſkercha, i. e. and be thou perfect in thy fleſh: but is in expreſs words aſſerted, Pirk. Eliezer, cap. 29. p. 64. This opinion the apoſtle here confutes, and then, ver. 11. ſhews what his circumciſion ſignified. Mr Clerc interprets this phraſe thus, According to the fleſh, i. e. in the judgment of man, or according to carnal judgment. But there can be nothing more alien from the mind of St Paul than this interpretation: for the apoſtle had been before aſſerting, that the circumciſion acceptable to God was not that made in the fleſh, ch. 2. 28. In the beginning of the next chapter he anſwers the inquiry of the Jews, If it doth not render us more acceptable to God, what then is the benefit of circumciſion? It hath many other advantages, ſaith he, but not that of juſtification before God, that being the reſult of faith; for it is one (and the ſame) God who will juſtify the circumciſion through faith, and the uncircumciſion by faith. What then, ſaith he, do we ſay in this affair? Do we ſay, as the Jews, that Abraham, the father of the faithful, found juſtification (the thing I now diſcourſe of) κατὰ σάρκα, by that laborious work of circumciſion performed upon himſelf, when he was ninety-nine years old, and upon all his family? on which account, ſay the Jews, "(g) God ſmelled the ſweet "odour of their foreſkins, and ſaid, when they "tranſgreſſed he would remember this odour, and "they ſhould be repleniſhed with his mercies." Here is a rational account of the connection and pertinence of the apoſtle's argument. But how comes in the judgment of men with a τί οὖν; what then do we ſay? when nothing at all had been ſaid of their judgment, nor was the apoſtle diſcourſing of

(g) Pug. fid. p. 674.

juſtification according to man's carnal judgment. He goes on, and ſays, "If Abraham was accounted "juſt for his works in the judgment of men, he "hath whereof to glory; he hath καύχημα, boaſting," ſaith he, before men:" but is that the καύχημα, or boaſting, which the apoſtle ſaid was excluded, not by the law of works, but by the law of faith? chap. 3. 27. no, ſure; but boaſting before God. This therefore muſt be here repeated: If Abraham were juſtified by works, i. e. the works of circumciſion performed upon himſelf and his whole family, he hath whereof to boaſt before God, but he cannot have whereof to boaſt before God of any juſtification of this kind; for what ſaith the ſcripture, &c. In fine, κατὰ σάρκα never ſignifies in ſcripture the judgment of man, but the fleſhly luſtings, deſires, and motions of men; John 8. 15. to judge according to the fleſh, is to judge ex carnali affectu, from carnal affection; and 2 Cor. 1. 17. to purpoſe according to the fleſh, is to do it according to carnal principles and advantages; as to walk after the fleſh, is to be governed and acted by carnal principles, Rom. 8. 1. 4. 5. 12. 13. 2 Cor. 10. 2.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἐπίστευσε δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, Abraham believed God.] We learn from the author to the Hebrews, that Abraham had faith before this was ſaid unto him, for by faith Abraham being called, obeyed, and went forth, &c.; and that, by a yet ſtronger faith, he offered up his ſon Iſaac, believing that God was able to raiſe him up from the dead, Heb. 11. 8. 17. But neither of theſe inſtances are pitched upon by the apoſtle, as fit for his purpoſe, becauſe in both obedience was joined with faith; whereas here was a pure act of faith without works; and of this act of faith is ſaid, what is not ſaid of either of the other, it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, ver. 22. 2. God, for this act of faith, and not upon the former, dealt with him as a righteous perſon, by entering into covenant with him, which was a ſign that he accepted him, and pardoned all his ſins paſt; for it is ſaid, In that very day God entered into covenant with Abraham, Gen. 15. 18. which he had not done before. Moreover, this was ſpoken to Abraham before his circumciſion, and ſo is very proper to convince the Jews of the non-neceſſity of circumciſion to juſtification; but Abraham offered Iſaac after his circumciſion, and ſo the apoſtle could not alledge that inſtance of his faith here, ver. 10. 11.; he therefore was accounted righteous by virtue of that faith which excludes boaſting, chap 2. 27. and only juſtifies by grace.

Ver. 5. [c] Ἐπὶ τὸν δικαιοῦντα τὸν ἀσεβῆ, on him that juſtifies the ungodly.] Juſtification being only the non-imputation, or the pardon of their paſt ſins on the account of that faith, which laid the higheſt obligations upon all believers to die unto ſin for the future, there is no abſurdity in ſaying, that God thus juſtifies the ungodly, repenting of, and engaging to ceaſe from their ungodlineſs, ver. 6.

Ver. 6. [d] Even as David λέγει τὸν μακαρισμὸν] ſpeaks of the bleſſedneſs of thoſe to whom God imputeth δικαιοσύνην, juſtification, i. e. exemption from the guilt and puniſhment of ſin, without ſuch works as can juſtly plead for that exemption and freedom from puniſhment, by ſaying, Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no ſin. In which citation there is not one word of any work to make him righteous in the ſight of God, and therefore bleſſed, but only of an act of free grace in the forgiveneſs or the non-imputation of his ſin, in which the evangelical juſtification formally conſiſts. See the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians, ſect. 4.

Ver. 9. [e] Ἐλογίσθη τῷ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ πίστις, faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteouſneſs.] The gloſs of R. Salmon on Gen. 15. 6. is this: "The bleſſed "God reputed this to Abraham for righteouſneſs "and merit, for the faith by which he believed in "him." And the book (b) Ikkarim ſaith thus: "Our father Abraham was praiſed for his faith, as "ſaith the ſcripture, Abraham believed God, and it "was counted to him for righteouſneſs."

Ver. 11. [f] Σφραγῖδα τῆς δικαιοσύνης τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐν τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ, the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, &c.] The apoſtle in this epiſtle inſiſts much upon the juſtification of the uncircumciſed Gentiles, called therefore by the Jews ἡ ἀκροβυστία, the uncircumciſion, Eph. 2. 11. Rom 2. 25. 26. 27. declaring, that God is not the God of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles, ſeeing he will juſtify both the circumciſion and the uncircumciſion through faith, chap. 3. 29. 30.; that the bleſſing of juſtification came not only on the circumciſion, but on the uncircumciſion alſo, ver. 9. faith being accounted to Abraham for righteouſneſs when he was in uncircumciſion, ver. 10. So that theſe words may be rendered thus, And he received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of that faith which is in the uncircumciſion, i. e. of God's acceptance of the uncircumciſed Gentiles through faith in Chriſt.

Ibid. [g] Πατέρα, the father;] i. e. that he might be the father of all nations, whether Jew or Gentile, and they might all be bleſſed in him, according to the promiſe, In thee ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed, Gen. 12. 3.; or as it is Gen. 22. 18. In thy ſeed.

Ver. 13. [h] Τὸν κληρονόμον αὐτὸν εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου, that he ſhould be the heir of the world.] The whole difficulty of this verſe reſts upon the true interpretation of this phraſe, that he ſhould be the heir of the world. Some think, that to be the heir of the world here, is to be heir of the land of Canaan, and the parts adjacent to it, Idumæa, &c.: but this is not only impertinent to the purpoſe of the apoſtle, who is here proving, not that temporal poſſeſſions, but that juſtification is not by the law, but by faith; but ſeemeth flatly contrary to the apoſtle: for the promiſe of the land of Canaan was made to Abraham upon his circumciſion, and to his ſeed, Gen. 17. 7. 8. and the poſſeſſion of, and their continuance in it, was ſtill promiſed to the Jews, upon condition of their obedience to the law of Moſes. Others think, that to be heir of the world, is to be heir of the ſpiritual and heavenly Canaan: but then, as it is hard to find where any ſuch promiſe was made to Abraham and his ſeed, ſo it is as difficult to ſhew how this accords with the main ſcope of the apoſtle, which is to eſtabliſh our juſtification by faith. The ancient Greek ſcholiaſts interpret the words thus: That he ſhould be heir of the world, τοῦτ᾽ ἐν αὐτῷ εὐλογεῖσθαι πάντα τὰ τῆ κόσμῳ ἔθνη, i. e. that all the nations of the world ſhould be bleſſed in him. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Theophylact. Quid enim dicit, Benedicentur in te omnes tribus terræ, hoc eſt, hæredem factum eſſe totius mundi: ſo Origen. And this is confirmed from the parallel place, Gal. 3. 8.; for the promiſe mentioned here muſt be the ſame with the promiſe mentioned there, becauſe the argument is the ſame. Now, 1. The promiſe there is, In thy ſeed, that is, Chriſt, ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed, ver. 12. And, 2. He there ſpeaks of a promiſe made four hundred and thirty years before the law, which term only agrees to the promiſe made, Gen. 12. 3. 3. This is the bleſſing of Abraham that was to come upon the Gentiles, Gal. 3. 14.; for, ſaith the apoſtle, the ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the Gentiles through faith in the promiſed ſeed, preached the goſpel before to Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed: ſo then they that are of faith, are bleſſed with faithful Abraham. He firſt, as being the father of the faithful, and ſo the heir of the believing world; and they after him, as being his ſons and ſeed, by walking in the ſteps of his faith, and ſo becoming heirs with him of the ſame promiſe; for if you be Chriſt's, if by faith you be intereſted in him, ſaith the apoſtle, then are you Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 29. So Heb. 11. 7. Noah is ſaid by his faith to condemn the unbelieving world, and to be τῆς κατὰ πίστιν δικαιοσύνης κληρονόμος, the heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith, i. e. the father of all that believed unto juſtification, or righteouſneſs, after him.

Ver. 14. [i] If they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void.] It is made void to them who are not of the law, becauſe then they cannot by it be made heirs; and it is alſo made void to them that are of the law, becauſe they were heirs before, and may ſtill be ſo without it, ver. 15.

Ver. 15. [k] For the law worketh wrath,] to wit, to the tranſgreſſors of it: for where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion. It is a very great miſtake to think, as ſome do, that the apoſtle lays down this as a general rule, That where there is no poſitive law to which threats and puniſhments are annexed, there is no tranſgreſſion; for the plain conſequence of this would be, that the Heathens, having no poſitive law, could be guilty of no tranſgreſſion, whereas the ſcripture repreſents them as dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, Eph. 2. 1. Col. 2. 13.; as perſons who ſhall be judged hereafter according to their works, Rom. 2. 6. and ſhall receive tribulation and wrath for working evil, ver. 9.; who ſin without a poſitive law, and ſhall therefore periſh without law, ver. 12. and as men who are condemned in their own conſciences by the law written in their hearts, ver. 15. The apoſtle therefore muſt be only conceived to prove, from this general rule, that where there is no law at all, there is no tranſgreſſion; and that if the law of Moſes worketh wrath, there muſt be a tranſgreſſion of it, rendering men obnoxious to the death it threateneth, ver. 19. 20. vide Examen Millii.

Ver. 17. [l] A father of many nations.] The Jews hence prove, that a proſelyte converted to the Jewiſh faith might be legatus ſynagogæ, quia ſcriptum extat, Conſtitui te patrem univerſitatis gentium, becauſe it is written, Gen. 17. 5. I have made thee a father of all nations. Before this time, ſay they, he was only a father of the Syrians, but from this time he was the father of all nations. See Campegius Vitringa de ſynag. vet. lib. 3. par. 2. c. 6. p. 943.

Ibid. [m] Τῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκρούς, who quickeneth the dead.] This being an inſtance of the faith of Abraham, it ſeems moſt reaſonable to refer it to the object of his faith, viz. that he ſhould have a numerous ſeed, yea, that he ſhould have the promiſed ſeed from Sarah, though her womb was dead, and it ceaſed to be with her after the manner of women. And ſo Hilary the deacon doth interpret this phraſe.

Ibid. [n] Καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα, and calleth things that be not as if they were.] "He that is far "from God," ſaith Origen, "as we Gentiles were "before we came to the knowledge of the truth, "is ſaid not to be:" And therefore God deſigning to render them the ſeed of Abraham by faith, is ſaid to call thoſe things that be not as if they were; for τὰ μὴ ὄντα, things which are not, both in the language of the Old Teſtament, and of the Jews, and of

of the primitive Chriſtians, ſignifies the Gentiles; by converting whom, faith (i) Clemens R. ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς ὄντας, καὶ ἠθέλησεν ἐκ τοῦ μὴ ὄντος εἶναι ἡμᾶς, "God call-"ed us that were not, and would that of nothing "we ſhould have a being;" as I have ſhewed, note on 1 Cor. 1. 8.

Ver. 18. ° Note, That this verſe confirms the expoſition of the former verſe, ſhewing, that the faith there mentioned hath reference to this promiſe.

Ver. 19. ᵖ Νενεκρωμένον, now dead.] It is here objected, That Abraham's body could not be thus dead, ſince, after the death of Sarah, even forty years after, he had ſix ſons by Keturah, Gen. 25. 1. But they who here tell us, that Abraham's body was not ſimply dead, but only as to Sarah's womb, and that by a young woman he was able to have ſeed then, ſpeak expreſsly againſt the text, which ſaith, his body was grown dead, and againſt the opinion of Abraham himſelf, Gen. 17. 17. and of Sarah concerning him, Gen. 18. 12. They who add, that this need not ſeem ſtrange that Abraham ſhould have children by Keturah, conſidering the age to which he then lived, ſince in our time men have had children after they have been ſeventy or eighty years old, they will not ſuffer that to be ſtrange to us, which ſeemed ſtrange to Abraham himſelf; witneſs his anſwer to the promiſe of almighty God, Shall a child be born to him that is an hundred years old? Gen. 17. 17. Oh that Iſhmael might live before thee! and to Sarah, Gen. 18. 12. they deny the miracle effected by the great power of God, which therefore the angel doth encourage Sarah to believe, becauſe nothing can be too hard for God, Gen. 18. 13.; they leſſen the faith of Abraham which is ſo highly magnified here, as being hope againſt hope, ver. 18. believing in him that quickeneth the dead, ver. 17. not ſtaggering at the promiſe, but being ſtrong in faith, ver. 20. That therefore muſt be here acknowledged, which the Jewiſh doctors, and all the Chriſtian fathers ſay, that God gave a new bleſſing to their bodies, and by that rendered them capable of getting and bearing children, when by nature they were not ſo. This of Sarah the Targum of B. Uziel hints, by paraphraſing the words thus, Gen. 17. 16. As for Sarah, I will bleſs her ובוּבַּר, in her body; and the apoſtle more plainly in theſe words, Through faith alſo Sarah herſelf received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, Heb. 11. 11.

Ver. 20. ᵠ Οὐ διεκρίθη τῇ ἀπιστίᾳ, he doubted not through unbelief.] It ſeems his faith was not without ſome doubting, from that anſwer he returns to God, Shall a child be born to Abraham that is an hundred years old? and ſhall Sarah that is ninety years old bear? In which words he ſeems to conſider both his own dead body, and Sarah's dead womb, which the apoſtle here denies, ver. 18.; and ver. 19. he ſays to God, Oh that Iſhmael might live before thee! as if he expected no other offspring. To the firſt objection it is anſwered, That thoſe words, Shall a child be born to Abraham! are to be conſidered as words of admiration, not of doubting; for he rejoiced at it, ſaith the Chaldee, and the Hebrew word which we render laughed, hath this import, chap. 21. 6. Nor is Abraham reprehended for it as Sarah is, chap. 18. 13. John 8. 56. To the ſecond it is anſwered, That he only deſires God to bleſs him alſo, as well as the ſeed promiſed, which appears probable from God's anſwer, ver. 20. As for Iſhmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have bleſſed him, and will make him fruitful.

Ver. 23. 24. 25. ʳ Note, That from theſe three laſt verſes many things may be obſerved, which tend to the illuſtration of the doctrine of faith, and of juſtification by faith. And,

1 From ver. 3. 22 23. 24. it is extremely evident, that it is the very act of faith, and not the object of it, viz. Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which was imputed to Abraham, and is imputed to us for righteouſneſs. As then the faith of Abraham, which is here ſaid to be imputed to him for righteouſneſs, was not the obeying God in his commands of walking before him and being perfect, but, as is here expreſsly ſaid, his believing God's power, and his reliance on it without any doubting, was the thing that was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, as well as that other act of faith, that in his ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed; ſo the faith that ſhall be imputed to us for juſtification, is not, ſaith the apoſtle, that which includeth the performance of ſincere obedience; not only faith in the blood of Chriſt ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins, but faith in him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, that he will raiſe us alſo from the dead, and glorify us with him. See the note on Rom. 10. 9. So alſo is the faith of Abraham and Sarah repreſented, Heb. 11. 11.

2. Hence alſo we learn, that our juſtification depends not only on the death of Chriſt, but on his reſurrection: ſo the apoſtle doth again teach us, us, ſaying, Who is he that condemneth us? it is Chriſt that died as a piacular victim for our ſins, yea, rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, preſenting the blood of this victim in his preſence for us, who by it alſo maketh intercceſſion for us. For the clearing up of this matter, let it be noted,

1ſt, That as the victim offered under the Old Teſtament was brought to the altar, and there ſlain;

(i) Ep. 2. ſect. 1.

ſo Chriſt offering himſelf for us, was alſo brought to the altar of the croſs, on which he ſuffered as a piacular victim for us, bearing our ſins in his own body on the tree.

2*dly*, As the blood of the beaſt thus ſlain was to be brought before the mercy-ſeat, or into the holy of holies, and there preſented before God to make atonement with; ſo was the blood of Chriſt, thus ſlain alſo, to be carried into the heavenly ſanctuary, and there preſented before God, to make atonement for our ſins.

3*dly*, As the beaſt, when dead, could not offer up its own blood; ſo Chriſt, being dead, could not, before his reſurrection, make an offering of his own blood in the heavens for this end; whence the apoſtle tells us, that ſuch an high prieſt became us, who is higher than the heavens, Heb. 7. 26. And were the opinion of ſome true, that Chriſt appeared not with his blood in the heavens, he muſt be only a metaphorical high prieſt, the offering or preſenting of the blood before God being only the proper office of the prieſthood, and the parallel the apoſtle makes betwixt him and the Aaronical prieſts muſt be wholly overthrown; for with what congruity could the apoſtle inſiſt ſo much on the compariſon betwixt the blood of Chriſt brought into the heavenly tabernacle and the blood of the legal ſacrifices brought into the earthly tabernacle, if indeed the blood of Chriſt was not carried into the true tabernacle, and there preſented to God? When the apoſtle ſaith ſo oft, the Jewiſh high prieſt entered into the holy place with the blood of bulls and goats, doth he not mean, that he carried their blood in thither? When then the ſame apoſtle ſaith, Chriſt, not by the blood of bulls and goats, but διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, by his own proper blood, entered into the holy place, muſt he not alſo mean, that Chriſt carried his own blood into the heavenly ſanctuary?

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. THerefore being juſtified by faith, (and ſo abſolved from thoſe ſins which rendered us obnoxious to the diſpleaſure of God), we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

2. By whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this (ſtate of) grace (or favour with God) wherein we ſtand, and rejoice in hope of (the fruition of) the glory of God.

3. And not only ſo, but we glory in tribulations alſo, knowing, that tribulation worketh patience;

4. And patience (gives) experience (of God's power with us, enabling us to bear theſe tribulations, and of our ſincere affection to him, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer them); and experience (of theſe things worketh in us) hope (of a reward);

5. And hope maketh (us) not aſhamed (of our faith in Chriſt, Rom. 1. 16.), becauſe (a ſenſe of) [a] the love of God is [b] ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoſt which is given to us (believers, as the earneſt of our future inheritance, Eph. 1. 14. and 4. 30. and the fruit of our faith, Eph. 1. 13. Gal. 3. 14.)

6. (Of which love to us, even before we believed, the goſpel gives us the higheſt demonſtrations); for when we [c] were yet without ſtrength, in due time (Gr. we being fallen, at the appointed time) Chriſt died for the ungodly, (for us, who ſince our fall had no righteouſneſs of our own);

7. (Which ſurely is an high degree of love, beyond all human example): For ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die, (I ſay, for a righteous man only), yet peradventure for a [d] good (i. e. an highly kind and charitable) man ſome would even dare to die.

8. But [a] God commendeth his love towards us, in that whilſt we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us.

9. (And if God through Chriſt Jeſus ſhewed ſuch kindneſs to us, being ſinners), much more then being juſtified by his blood, (and ſo made righteous in his ſight, and having peace with God, ver. 1.), we ſhall be ſaved from (the) wrath (of God) through him.

10. For if when we were enemies (to him), we were [e] reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved [e] by his life.

11. And not only ſo, (i. e. we are not only reconciled to), but we alſo joy (Gr. we are rejoicing) in God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom [b] we have received the atonement, (or reconciliation.)

12. Wherefore (διὰ τοῦτο, by reaſon of this reconciliation, life is procured to us by the ſecond Adam, as death came by the firſt, for) as by one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin, (or for ſin), and ſo death paſſed upon all men (through him), [i] in whom all had (ſo far) ſinned, (as to become equally obnoxious to death with him): (ſo the ſecond Adam came to deliver all men from the death procured by ſin)

13. (Through him, I ſay), For (it muſt be indeed confeſſed that) until the law ſin was in the world: but (it muſt alſo be acknowledged, that) ſin is not ([k] generally then) [l] imputed (to death), when there is no law condemning men to death for it.)

14. Nevertheleſs death reigned from Adam to Moſes, (the giver of a new law threatening death to the tranſgreſſors of it), even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion; (i. e. men were all the while ſubject to death, though they ſinned not as Adam did againſt an expreſs law, threatening death to them for it; and therefore death muſt reign over them for the ſin of Adam) who (in this) is the figure (or reſemblance) of him that was to (i. e. of the ſecond Adam, Chriſt) come.

to

15. But (in this reſemblance there are two advantageous diſſimilitudes; for) not as the offence, ſo alſo is the free gift. For if through the offence of one man, [a] many be dead, (Gr. died); much more the grace of God, and the gift (of juſtification procured) by (or through) the grace of one man, Jeſus Chriſt, hath abounded to many.

16. And (again) not as it was by one that ſinned, ſo is the gift: for the judgment (Gr. the ſentence) was by one (ſin) to condemnation, (we being all ſentenced to death on the account of Adam's ſin); but the free gift is of [a] many offences unto (that) juſtification (of which cometh life).

17. For if by one man's offence, death reigned by (that) one (man over all his poſterity); much more they which receive (or are made partakers of) abundance of grace, and (by it) of the [a] gift of righteouſneſs (or juſtification), ſhall reign in life by (the reconciliation purchaſed for them, by the death of) one Jeſus Chriſt.

18. Therefore as by the offence of one (Gr. by one offence) the judgment (Gr. ſentence) came upon all men to (the) condemnation (of death); even ſo by the righteouſneſs of one, (by one righteous act, the obedience of Chriſt to the death for us), the free gift came upon all men (believing in him) to juſtification of life.

19. For as by one man's diſobedience many were [b] made ſinners, (being made ſubject to the death, which was inflicted upon Adam for ſin, as much as if they themſelves had violated the law which rendered him obnoxious to it); ſo by the obedience of one (ſuffering death, the puniſhment of ſin for them), ſhall many be made righteous; (i. e. be as truly juſtified, and exempted from that death, which is the puniſhment of ſin, as if they had perſonally ſuffered; and alſo accepted and treated by God, as if indeed they had been righteous perſons.)

20. (I ſay, before the law we became obnoxious to death by one man's diſobedience); [c] but the law entered, that the offence might abound (unto death, and men might be found obnoxious to it alſo, on the account of their tranſgreſſions againſt the law): But where ſin (thus) abounded (unto death), grace did much more abound (unto life):

21. That as ſin hath reigned unto death, (ſeizing on all men for it), even ſo grace might reign through righteouſneſs (Gr. juſtification) to eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Ver. 5. [a] Ἡ Ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, the love of God,] to us thus believing. So chap. 8. 35. 39. 2 Cor. 5. 14. and 13. 13. 1 John 3. 9. 10.

Ibid. [b] Ἐκκέχυται, is ſhed abroad.] This is the word ſtill uſed in the New Teſtament, when ſpeaking of the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 2. 17. 10. 45. Titus 3. 6. and it is taken from Joel 2. 28. 29. and ſo this may refer to the χαρίσματα of the Holy Ghoſt, ſo liberally imparted to them.

Ver. 6. [c] Ὄντων ἡμῶν ἀσθενῶν, when we were weak.] It may here be noted, that the words ἀσθενὴς, ἀσθενία, ἀσθένεια, in the Seventy, anſwer to the Hebrew כשל, and ſignify to fall, and ſtumble to our ruin. So Pſal. 9. 3. They ſhall fall and periſh, ἀσθενήσουσι, καὶ ἀπολοῦνται, at thy preſence, Pſal. 26. 4. They ſtumbled and fell, ἀσθένησαν καὶ ἔπεσον, Pſal. 106. 12. ἀσθένησαν, They fell down, and there was none to help them, Prov. 24. 16. The wicked ſhall fall into miſchief, ἀσθενήσουσιν ἐν κακοῖς, Jer. 6. 21. I will lay ſtumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and ſons ſhall fall together, ἀσθενήσουσιν ἐν αὐτῇ, chap. 18. 15. and 46. 6. 12. and ver. 16. he made many to fall, τὸ πλῆθος τοῦ ἀσθενοῦντος, chap. 50. 32. Lam. 5. 15. Dan. 11. 14. Many ſhall ſtand up againſt the king of the ſouth, but they ſhall fall, ἀσθενήσουσι. So ver. 19. 33. 34. 35. So Hoſ. 4. 5. and 5. 5. and 14. 2. 10. And this import of the word ſuits well with the text, and ſo is proper to repreſent our fall by ſin; and the words following, ver. 8. ἁμαρτωλῶν ὄντων ἡμῶν, even whilſt we were ſinners, Chriſt died for us, do render it ſo probable, that I thought fit to mention it in the paraphraſe.

Ver. 7. [a] Ἀγαθὸν is not only a virtuous, but an obliging, charitable man, Matth. 20. 15. Is thy eye evil, becauſe I am good? overcome evil ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ, with kindneſs, Rom 12. 21. Τὸ ἀγαθόν σου, is thy kindneſs, Philem. ver. 14. So ἀγαθὸς ὀφθαλμὸς is the liberal eye, Ecclus 35. 8. See Buxtorf. in voce טוב, p. 1601.

Ver. 8. [a] Συνίστησι δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, but God commends his love to us.] The death of Chriſt is uſually in ſcripture repreſented as an inſtance of the great love of God the Father to us; becauſe his wiſdom did contrive this way of redemption for us, Eph. 1. 4. 5. He ſent his Son into the world to be the propitiation for our ſins, that we might live through him, 1 John 4. 9. 10. He graciouſly accepted of his ſuffering in our ſtead, and juſtifies us freely by his grace, through the re- demption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, Rom. 3. 24. He ſpared not his own Son, but gave him up freely for us all, Rom. 8. 32. Though it be alſo true, that Chriſt loved us, and gave himſelf for us, Gal. 2. 20. Eph. 5. 2. and that this love of Chriſt ought to conſtrain us to obedience, 2 Cor. 5. 14.

Ver. 10. ᾽Εν τῇ ζωῇ αὐτοῦ, by his life:] He being able to ſave us to the uttermoſt, becauſe he ever lives to make interceſſion for us, Heb. 7. 25.; and having all power committed to him, that he might give eternal life to them whom God hath given him, John 17. 2.

Ibid. Κατηλλάγημεν τῷ Θεῷ, we were reconciled to God.] Here are many arguments to eſtabliſh the doctrine of our Lord's ſatisfaction by ſuffering in our ſtead, to reconcile an offended God to us. For,

1. When it is here ſaid, that Chriſt died for the ungodly, 1 Pet. 3. 18.; that when we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us, 1 Cor. 5. 15.; and elſewhere, that he ſuffered for our ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, Heb. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 1.; in theſe, and ſuch like places, one of theſe two things is intimated, That our Lord ſuffered in our ſtead, or that he bore the puniſhment of our ſin: this being the plain import of the like expreſſions when they are uſed in the Old or New Teſtament. For when we read in the Old Teſtament, the fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers; every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin, Deut. 24. 17.; of Amaziah, that he ſlew thoſe ſervants that had murdered the king his father; but the children of thoſe murderers he ſlew not, according to thoſe words of Moſes, The fathers ſhall not be put to death, ὑπὲρ ἐκόλασιν, they ſhall not die, for the children, &c. 2 Kings 14. 6. 2 Chron. 25. 4.; and in the prophet Ezekiel, The ſoul that ſinneth, it ſhall die: the ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father, nor ſhall the father bear the iniquity of the ſon, Ezek. 18.: in all theſe places it is plain no ſubſtitution is intended, becauſe no exemption of the father, becauſe the ſon; or of the ſon, becauſe the father ſuffers: but then it is plainly intimated, that the one in this caſe would bear the puniſhment of the other's ſin. But when David ſaith concerning Abſalom, Would God I had died for thee, O Abſalom, τίς δῴη τὸν θάνατόν μου ἀντί σου; 2 Sam. 18. 33. O that my death might have gone in ſtead of thine! when here the apoſtle ſaith, that ſcarcely for a righteous perſon one would die, but for a good man ſome would even dare to die; there evidently a ſubſtitution is intended of the one to free the other from death by the death he ſuffers. When therefore the apoſtle, before and after theſe words, ſaith, Chriſt died for the ungodly, and the ſinner, muſt he not alſo ſignify, that our Lord died in their ſtead, to deliver them from death? It is evident, beyond exception, that in all piacular ſacrifices, both Jew and Gentile always took this for granted, that the victim ſuffered in their ſtead, and for their ſins. Since then the Socinians own, that our Lord ſuffered as victima piacularis, or an expiatory ſacrifice; ſurely both Jew and Gentile muſt conceive that all theſe phraſes did import, that our Lord ſuffered in our ſtead, and for our ſins.

2. A ſecond argument is taken from the reconciliation, mentioned as the effect of our Lord's ſuffering for us; for ſeeing it is alone the guilt of ſin, or ſin unpardoned, that maketh God diſpleaſed with us, the death which is here ſaid to procure our peace and reconciliation to God, muſt make atonement for the guilt of our iniquities.

Crellius replies, That by reconciliation here the apoſtle intends not God's reconciliation to us, but ours to God, by that converſion to him which maketh us at friendſhip with him. But this may be refuted,

1*ſt*, From the import of the words καταλλάττειν and καταλλαγὴ, for they do naturally import the reconciliation of one that is angry or diſpleaſed with us, both in profane and Jewiſh writers. Thus ἐν τίνι διαλλαγήσεται; in what ſhall David reconcile himſelf to his lord? 1 Sam. 29. 4. When Apame, the famous concubine, was angry with King Darius, he flattered her ὅπως διαλλαγῇ αὐτῇ, that ſhe might be reconciled to him, 1 Eſd. 4. 21. After the reviling or falling out of friends, ἔστι διαλλαγὴ, there is, or may be reconciliation, ſaith the ſon of Syrach, Eccluſ 22. 22. The Jews in Egypt pray for thoſe in Judea, that the Lord would hear their prayer, καὶ καταλλαγείη, and be reconciled to them, 2 Maccab. 1. 5.; adding, that as Jeruſalem was forſaken through the wrath of the Almighty, ſo ἐν τῇ τοῦ μεγάλου Δεσπότου καταλλαγῇ, when the great God was reconciled, it was ſet up with glory, chap. 5. 20. And again, though the Lord, ſay they, be angry with us a little while for our chaſtiſement and correction, πάλιν καταλλαγήσεται, he will again be reconciled to his ſervants, chap. 7. 33. And they beſeech the Lord ὡς τέλος καταλλαγῆναι, to be reconciled to his ſervants for ever, chap. 8. 29. Whence we learn, that reconciliation always reſpecteth ſome preceding anger or diſpleaſure; and that the reconciling of God was the appeaſing of his anger. When therefore we here read in the ſame words, of enemies reconciled to God, and ſo ſaved from his wrath, what can we imagine, but that a God once angry and offended with them, is now appeaſed? And when we farther read, that this reconciliation was effected by the death and blood of Chriſt, is it not obvious to conceive his wrath and anger was averted by the ſhedding this blood for us?

2*dly*, It is evident, that when we were ſinners Chriſt died for us, ver. 8. and when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, ver. 10.

are words of the ſame import: for ſeeing theſe words, Chriſt died for us, and Chriſt ſhed his blood for us, ſignify the ſame thing, and by his blood-ſhed we are reconciled; it is evident, that Chriſt dying for us, and Chriſt reconciling us by his death, or blood ſhed for us, muſt be the ſame; now we are juſtified by his blood, as it procures our peace with God, ver. 1. as it ſaves us from his wrath, ver. 9. Therefore we are reconciled to God by it on the ſame account.

3*dly*, We being here conſidered as ſinners, ungodly, enemies to God, as perſons who have, upon that account, fallen ſhort of the glory, that is, ſaith Crellius, of the approbation of God, Rom. 3. 23. is there no need of reconciling God unto ſuch perſons? And when under theſe circumſtances we are ſaid to be juſtified through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, Rom. 3. 25. 26. and being juſtified, to have peace with God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, can we conceive that nothing was done by this Jeſus to procure God's reconciliation to the ſinner, or to purchaſe his peace with an offended God? Eſpecially, if we conſider that the death of Chriſt here mentioned, as that by which we are reconciled to God, is the death of him who ſuffered as a ſin-offering for us; the blood by which we are juſtified, is the blood of atonement, or propitiation, or the blood ſhed to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people, Heb. 2. 17.

Ver. 11. [a] Τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἐλάβομεν, we have received the atonement.] Crellius excepts againſt this interpretation, alledging, that to receive or obtain reconciliation, is a phraſe unknown to Jew and Gentile; and would have the words rendered thus, By whom ye have obtained this converſion to God. But to obtain reconciliation, when it is the effect of blood ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, is very proper; for it was the conſtant practice under the law to procure reconciliation by ſhedding the blood of the ſin-offering; and all nations by this means endeavoured to reconcile God to them, and what reconcilation the prieſt, by offering this blood, procured, the ſinner received, and obtained; and therefore to receive atonement, or obtain reconciliation, by an expiatory ſacrifice, muſt be a thing very well known to Jew and Gentile: but to receive converſion by it, is indeed a phraſe unknown to them, and the whole church of Chriſt. Moreover, this note of Crellius ſhews his little ſkill in the Greek; for as θάρσος λαμβάνειν is to be courageous, Acts 28. 15. ἀρχὴν λαμβάνειν is to begin, λήθην λαμβάνειν is to forget, Heb. 2. 3. ὑπόμνησιν λαμβάνειν to remember, 2 Tim. 1. 5. πεῖραν λαμβάνειν to experiment, Heb. 11. 36. οἰκοδομὴν λαμβάνειν to be edified, 1 Cor. 14. 15.; ſo καταλλαγὴν λαμβάνειν is to be reconciled, as noxam capere is to be hurt.

Ver. 12. [i] Ἐφ' ᾧ, in whom.] The critics have been very induſtrious to find ſome other ſenſe of theſe words, than that which our tranſlation gives, ſome rendering this laſt clauſe, for that, ſome, becauſe all have ſinned. But our expoſition is confirmed beyond all contradiction from the following words, which declare, That by the ſin of one man many die; and that by the ſin of one, death reigned by one; and that by one offence the ſentence of death came upon all, ver. 15. 16. 17. 18. All which are parallel to the expreſſion here, that death came upon all men through Adam, in whom, ſaith the ſame apoſtle, all men die, 1 Cor. 15. 22. And the words following, that by the diſobedience of one many were made ſinners, are plainly parallel to theſe, in whom all have ſinned.

2. None of the other ſenſes are true, or ſuitable to the ſcope and argument of the apoſtle: v. g. It is not true that death came upon all men, for that, or becauſe all have ſinned. For the apoſtle directly here aſſerts the contrary, viz. That the death, and condemnation to it, which befel all men, was for the ſin of Adam only; for here it is expreſsly ſaid, that by the ſin of one man many died; that the ſentence was from one, and by one man ſinning to condemnation; and that by the ſin of one, death reigned by one: therefore the apoſtle doth expreſsly teach us, that this death, this condemnation to it came not upon us for the ſin of all, but only for the ſin of one, i. e. of that one Adam, in whom all men die, 1 Cor. 15. 22.

He alſo farther teacheth, that this death and condemnation came upon all for one ſin of that one man, for it came δι' ἑνὸς παραπτώματος, by one offence, upon all men; it came not therefore upon all men for the ſin of all: and this the compariſon plainly requires, which ſaith, the oppoſite juſtification, and free gift came upon all men by one man, Jeſus Chriſt; by the obedience of one, and δι' ἑνὸς δικαιώματος, by one righteouſneſs, ver. 16. 17. 18. 19. i. e. by the obedience to the death of that one man. Yea, the apoſtle doth,

3. Not only thus plainly and frequently aſſert, that death came upon all men for the ſin of Adam, but he proves it by this argument, that death reigned from Adam to Moſes, over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, i. e. againſt a law threatening death to them for ſin; they therefore, ſaith he, could not die for their own ſins; for though indeed they were then ſinners, yet being under no ſuch law as Adam was, their ſin was not imputed to death, and ſo they could not die on that account; death therefore came upon them, as I aſſerted, through the ſin of Adam.

Ver. 13. [k] I add, generally.] Becauſe though all men died after Adam, all were not puniſhed with death for their own perſonal ſin, but only the Antediluvians, and the Sodomites.

Ibid. Here alſo note, that the apoſtle cannot be rationally conceived to aſſert, as Mr L. ſuggeſts, that no man can incur a penalty without the ſanction of a poſitive law, declaring, and eſtabliſhing that penalty. For this aſſertion entirely deſtroys the obligation of the Heathens to perform any duty, ſince no man can be obliged to do that which he may omit, without fear of puniſhment, and renders the Heathens, who had no poſitive law given them, incapable of incurring any penalty by any ſins they had committed. The meaning, therefore, of the apoſtle ſeems to be only this, that the law threatening death to Adam, being not made to all mankind, but to him alone, all men, good and bad, could not then generally die for their own ſins; but this mortality fell on them all without diſtinction in that interval, on the account of that one ſin of Adam, which rendered all his poſterity ſubject to that mortality he had incurred by his ſin; wherefore to ſay, that all men were not ſubject to mortality, by reaſon of the ſin of Adam, would be to contradict St Paul; but to ſay, that they who were ſwept away by the flood with an untimely death, did not die for their own, but for Adam's ſin, is to contradict God himſelf, ſaying, I will deſtroy man from the earth, for the iniquity of man is very great, &c. Gen. 5.

Ibid. Ἁμαρτία δὲ οὐκ ἐλλογεῖται, ſin was not imputed.] The apoſtle doth not mean that God did not account them ſinners who tranſgreſſed againſt the law of nature, or that he was not diſpleaſed with them for their offences, but only, that he did not ſo impute them, as to condemn them to death for them. To make this out, and to give you the true import of the word imputation, let it be obſerved,

1. That where-ever this phraſe occurs affirmatively, that ſuch a thing was imputed to any one, it is ſome perſonal thing or action of our own, and not any thing of another's, which is thus ſaid to be imputed. As when it is ſaid, Rom. 2. 26. that if the uncircumciſion keep the righteouſneſs of the law, his uncircumciſion on that account εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται, ſhall be accounted for circumciſion, i. e. he ſhall be accepted as well as if he were circumciſed. So Rom. 4. 3. Abraham believed God, and it (that is, his faith) was imputed to him for righteouſneſs; for ſo it is explained, ver. 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth, his faith is imputed to him for righteouſneſs: And ver. 9. We ſay, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteouſneſs. See Gal. 3. 6. James 2. 23. And of our faith in him that raiſed Chriſt from the dead, it is ſaid, Rom. 4. 24. that it ſhall be imputed to us for righteouſneſs.

2. When the phraſe is uſed with a negative, or when ſin is ſaid to be imputed, or not to be imputed, it is not only a man's own perſonal ſin that is intended; but the non-imputation of it, is the not inflicting ſome condign puniſhment upon him for it. So Rom. 4. 8. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no ſin; which being ſpoken on the account of God's heavy hand on David for his ſin, Pſal. 32. 2. 3. 4. ſhews that the import of it muſt be this: Bleſſed is the man whom God doth not puniſh for his iniquity. So 2 Tim. 4. 16. In my firſt anſwer no man ſtood by me, μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθείη, may it not be imputed to them, i. e. let them not ſuffer for it. So 2 Sam. 19. 19. Shimei ſpeaks to David thus, μὴ λογισάσθω ὁ κύριός μου ἀνομίαν, let not my lord impute to me mine iniquity; i. e. let him not remember it to puniſh it. When therefore it is ſaid, 2 Cor. 5. 19. that God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, μὴ λογιζόμενος, not imputing to them their iniquities; the meaning is, that for Chriſt's ſake he was pleaſed to exempt them from the puniſhment of their tranſgreſſions: ſo in like manner here, ſin is ſaid not to be imputed, whilſt there is no law; not that God did not look upon men then as ſinners, but that he did not puniſh them with death for it, but that they died a mere death, as being the offſpring of Adam made mortal.

Hence note, that in the ſcripture there is no mention of the imputation, either of one man's ſin, or of his righteouſneſs, unto another, but only of the imputation of his good deeds for righteouſneſs, or of his evil deeds for puniſhment. 2. That the puniſhment of Adam's ſin devolved upon his whole poſterity, is fully proved from this chapter: but it is not here ſaid, that they were truly and formally made ſinners by his ſin; ſo likewiſe, that for the obedience of one unto death many were made righteous, and were delivered from that death to which they were obnoxious, we are aſſured from this, and other ſcriptures; but that they were made formally righteous by our Saviour's righteouſneſs imputed to them, the ſcripture doth no where aſſert.

Ver. 15. = Οἱ πολλοὶ ἀπέθανον, many were dead.] When God ſaid to Adam, In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt die, he did not mean that he ſhould then give up the ghoſt, but that he ſhould be ſubject to mortality, and at the laſt return to the duſt from whence he came; as experience ſhewed, and as the fathers interpret it. Now, in this ſenſe, that of the apoſtle is moſt true, that in Adam all die, i. e. became obnoxious to mortality: but it is not true, that all men die only on the account of Adam's ſin. The old world was drowned on the account of their own ſins, and the Jews ſuffered both by the hand of God and man, for ſins committed againſt the law; and this perhaps might be the reaſon why the apoſtle ſaith, not by the offence fence of one, all, but many, died. The advantage therefore here mentioned, may consist in this, that all that die, die not purely for the sin of Adam, but many times bring death upon themselves for their own sin; but all that are justified, and so freed from death, are thus exempted from it only by virtue of the death of Christ. This is the doctrine, both of the Jews, and of the church of Christ: not that all formally sinned in Adam, but that all men became obnoxious to death for Adam's sin. God, saith the author of the book of Wisdom, created man to be immortal; but through the envy of the devil death entered into the world, Wisd. 2. 23. 24. By the woman was the beginning of sin, and by her we all die, saith the son of Syrach, Ecclus 25. 24. By the counsel which the serpent gave to Eve, all the inhabitants of the earth become obnoxious to death, saith the Targum on Ruth 4. ver. ult. And the same Chaldee paraphrase upon Eccl. 7. the last verse, saith, God made man pure and upright; but the serpent and Eve seduced him to eat of the fruit of the tree, and so they made death to rush upon him, and upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

Ver. 16. [a] Ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων, from many offences.] This is the second advantageous difference, viz. That whereas we became obnoxious to death for one sin of Adam, we by faith in Christ are justified, and thereby freed not only from the condemnation which came upon us for that sin, but also from the condemnation due unto us for all our offences against God.

Note also, that the word κρίμα, especially when it is joined with death, doth usually signify a sentence condemning any person; κρίμα θανάτου is the sentence of death, Deut. 21. 22. So Luke 24. 20. The high priests and rulers delivered up Jesus εἰς κρίμα θανάτου, to the sentence of death. See chap. 23. 40. and Ecclus 41. 2. O death, how acceptable is τὸ κρίμα σου, thy sentence to the needy? And ver. 3. Fear not κρίμα θανάτου, the sentence of death. Remember them that have been before thee, and that come after thee, τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα παρὰ κυρίῳ πάσῃ σαρκί, for this is the sentence of the Lord over all flesh.

Ver. 17. ver. 15. Ἡ δωρεὰ ἐν χάριτι, ver. 17. Ἡ δωρεὰ δικαιοσύνης, the gift of righteousness.] I have interpreted these phrases of the gift of justification as others do; but it is very probable that they may import the Holy Spirit given in baptism, and upon faith, to the believers of those times, who being made sons by faith in Christ, received the Spirit of adoption, Rom. 8. 14. 15. 16. Gal. 4. 6. and believing, were sealed with the Spirit of promise, Eph. 1. 13. for he is styled emphatically ἡ δωρεὰ ἐπουράνιος, the heavenly gift, Heb. 6. 4. ἡ δωρεὰ, the gift, Acts 11. 17. ἡ δωρεὰ Θεοῦ, the gift of God, Acts 8. 20. the gift of the grace of God, Eph. 3. 7. ἡ δωρεὰ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the gift of Christ, Eph. 4. 7.; the gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts 2. 38. and 10. 45.: so the Holy Ghost given to the prophets, and holy men of old, is, by the primitive Christians, usually styled ἡ ἄνωθεν ἐπὶ τοὺς ἁγίους ἀνδρὰς ἐπιλθοῦσα δωρεὰ, the gift coming from above upon holy men. Just. Mart. Adm Gr. p. 9. B. p. 11. D. p. 30. D. p. 31. C.

Ver. 19. [b] Ἁμαρτωλοὶ κατεστάθησαν οἱ πολλοὶ, many were made sinners.] In the exposition of this, and of the phrase in the 12th verse, in whom all have sinned, I follow the Greek expositors, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, upon the place: and to make good the interpretation, I shall shew, first, the inconsistency of any other sense ascribed to them, with the text, with scripture, and with reason. And,

First, It cannot be truly affirmed, that we all actually and formally sinned in Adam, and upon that account were made sinners: for, 1. then, it was not by the disobedience of one, but of many, that many were made sinners. 2. Then death, the punishment of sin, came upon all, not for the sin of one, or for one sin of that one man, but for the sin of all; both which things I have plainly proved to be contrary to the express words of the apostle. Then, 3. all men must have sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression; for if we all sinned in or with him, we must sin by the same act, the same will, and in the same person, against the same law; and surely they that thus sin, must sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression; for what dissimilitude can there be in sins committed by the same act, and the same will, of one and the same person, against the same law? But of the posterity of Adam the apostle here expressly saith, they sinned not after the similitude of Adam's transgression, therefore they were not sinners by the same act and will, of the same person, against the same law. Moreover, if all the posterity of Adam sinned in Adam, they sinned against some law given to them; for sin is the transgression of a law; and where there is no law, there is no transgression. Now, they could sin in Adam, so as to deserve death for their sin, only by sinning against the law requiring Adam not to eat of the forbidden fruit; for Adam himself became guilty of death only by transgressing that law; but all the posterity of Adam cannot be said to have sinned against that law, for when did they sin against it? If when Adam did so, then all his posterity must be actually sinners from the beginning of the world, i. e. some thousands of years before the greatest part of them had a being. Now, seeing action must be the action of some being, does it not seem absurd at first sight to say, that so many myriads were actually sinners, when they were not in being? if when they came into the world, they could could not sin in Adam, or in his action, for he did not then eat of the forbidden fruit in the midst of paradise. Again, we cannot sin against a law which is not in being; since therefore there is now no paradise, and no forbidden fruit in being, we cannot be obliged by any law of God now, not to eat of the fruit in the midst of paradise, and so cannot be sinners by transgressing against such a law.

Secondly, It cannot truly be affirmed that we all sinned in Adam, and by his disobedience were made sinners, because his sin and disobedience was imputed to us. For, 1. I have shewed already, that the scripture no where maketh the least mention of any thing of another's imputed to a man for reward or guilt, but only of some personal thing or action of our own. See note on ver. 14. Moreover, 2. This imputation either makes the sin of Adam truly ours, or it doth not: if it doth not, how can we be made sinners by it? if it doth, then death came upon us for our sin; and so not for the sin of one, but for the sin of all, which is the thing disproved already, note on ver. 12. 3. I ask, Whether this imputation made the posterity of Adam sinners, or whether it found them so before? if it found them so before, it was plainly needless, for they might have been condemned to death without it: if it made them so, then since this imputation is the act of God, and not of man, it plainly follows, that God must be the author of that sin, because the imputation flows immediately from him, without the intervention of any action on the part of any of those men to whom it is imputed. Moreover, then the imputation must be false, as charging them with sin whom he did not find sinners, but only by his arbitrary imputation made them so. Now, far be it from any Christian to affirm, that God should falsely impute sin to any man. In a word, λογίζεσθαι, and imputare, is to reckon, to account a thing to any man, to charge him with it, to lay the charge of it to him: this action therefore on God's part must suppose, in the very nature of it, some action done by the posterity of Adam which is blameworthy, and may be justly charged upon them, before there can be any ground for imputation of it; and this shews, that it is impossible that the imputation should be the very thing that renders them blame-worthy, or persons worthy to be charged with guilt: and yet if the sin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it must be ours only, because it is by God imputed to us, and not imputed, because it is ours; that is, God by this imputation must make us sinners, and not find us such; for this imputation is the action of the judge, not of the supposed criminal; remove or take away this action, and no crime can be charged upon him. In fine, if the sin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it deserves condemnation only by the same imputation, i. e. by the action of God; that therefore we deserve condemnation for it, is to be ascribed directly to the action of God, and only by accident to that of Adam: whence therefore is our destruction, according to this opinion, but of God, who makes us worthy of condemnation, by imputing to us that sin, which by his imputation only we stand guilty of?

These interpretations being so inconsistent with the apostle's words, and with the plainest evidence of reason, I am forced to prefer before them that of the Greek fathers, viz. That we all sinned in Adam, i. e. by becoming obnoxious to that death which was the punishment of his sin, and that by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, by being subject to the death, and temporal calamities and miseries which came upon all mankind for Adam's sin; so that we become sinners in him, or by his disobedience, by a metonymy of the effect, by suffering the punishment which God had threatened to him for it, as the experience of all men and women shew we do in all the parts of the threat; and this is a common sense of the word Chattah, which signifies both sin and the punishment of it. So Gen. 4. 7. If thou dost evil, chattaath, sin lieth at the door, that is, the punishment of sin, ver 13.; so Gen. 19. 15. Make haste, saith the angel to Lot, and escape, lest thou be consumed בעוני in the sin of the city, i. e. in the punishment of the city, in plaga descendente propter culpam incolarum urbis, Arab.; and Gen. 31. 39. Jacob speaks to Laban thus, That which was torn of beasts, אנבי אחטנה ἐγὼ ἀπέτισον, pœnas dabam, I suffered for it; the sin was upon me, saith Aben Ezra, Gen. 43. 9.; Judah speaks thus to Jacob concerning Benjamin, If I bring him not again, יחטאתי לך, ἁμαρτὼς ὑπὲρ σοῦ τὸν, i. e. I will suffer punishment; see chap. 42. 37. i. e. let me bear the blame; so also chap. 44. 32.; so Bathsheba said to David, I and thy son Solomon shall be חטאים, ἁμαρτωλοὶ, sinners, 1 Kings 1. 21. i. e. we shall be punished as sinners, and be in danger of our life; so לא ירשיענו, impium non faciet, he will not condemn him, Psal. 37. 33.; ודם נקי ירשיעו, et sanguinem innocentem condemnabunt, Psal. 94. 21.; so also Job 9. 20.; so the lepers say one to another, We do not well if we tarry till the morning-light, then we shall be found sinners, 2 Kings 7. 9. i. e. we shall be punished by the king; and Zech. 14. 19. This shall be חטאת מצרים, ἁμαρτία Αἰγύπτου, the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This phrase of bearing bearing ſin is conſtantly uſed in this ſenſe; as when it is ſaid, נשא עון, they ſhall bear their iniquity, they ſhall die, Lev. 20. 20.; and ἁμαρτίαν κομιοῦνται, ἀποθανοῦνται, Lev. 20. 17. 19. Numb. 14. 34. λήψεσθε ἁμαρτίας ὑμῶν, Lam. 5. 7. ὑπέχομεν τὰ ἀνομήματα αὐτῶν, we have borne their iniquity. If therefore ἁμαρτία in the Old Teſtament ſo often ſignifies the puniſhment of ſin, which in this caſe was death, what exception can be made againſt theſe words of (k) Chryſoſtom? "What is the meaning of theſe words, In "whom all have ſinned? it is this, He falling, even "they who did not eat of the tree, were by him "made mortal, even as if they themſelves had "fallen," ſaith (l) Theophylact, "when he did:" "For," ſaith Theodoret, "he being obnoxious to "the decree of death, in that ſtate he begat Cain "and Abel, and others; ἅπαντες ὑπ' ὀφλὴν ἐν τοιούτῳ φυτῷ θνητὸν ἴσχον τὸν φύσιν, all therefore became mortal, "as being begotten of one that was mortal." And ſeeing it is ſaid ἁμαρτωλοί, or ἁμαρτάνειν ὀφείλει, they ſhall be ſinners, who are to ſuffer puniſhment, why may not theſe words, by the diſobedience of one many were made ſinners, admit the ſenſe which Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact give them? Τυτέστιν ὑπόδικοι κολάσεως, καὶ καθάπαξ θανάτου, they ſhall for his diſobedience be ſubject unto death and puniſhment, the effects of ſin: "For," ſaith St Chryſoſtom, "it is "no abſurdity to ſay, that he ſinning, and ſo being "mortal, they who proceed from him ſhould be "mortal alſo; but how can it juſtly follow, that "by his diſobedience another ſhould be made a "ſinner, for ſuch an one will be found to deſerve "no puniſhment, as not being perſonally a ſinner?" Τὸ δὲ ἐκ τῆς παρακοῆς ἐκείνου ἕτερον ἁμαρτωλὸν γενέσθαι πόθεν ἀκολουθίαν ἔχει; ἐγκλήματος γὰρ ὄντα μηδὲ δίκην ὀφείλειν ὁ τοιοῦτος, οὐχὶ μὲ οἰκεῖον γέγονεν ἁμαρτωλός. It is true, we meet not with the words ἁμαρτὼν and ἁμαρτωλοὶ καθεστάθησαν, in this ſenſe elſewhere in the New Teſtament; but then this may be, becauſe the compariſon is not elſewhere made betwixt the firſt Adam and the effects of his diſobedience, and the ſecond Adam and the effects of his obedience to the death; and becauſe the oppoſite phraſe, δίκαιοι καθεστάθησαν, required, that the words oppoſed ſhould be uſed in the metonymical ſenſe; for when the apoſtle ſaith, By the obedience of one man many were made righteous, it is evident he ſpoke not of Chriſt's active obedience, but of his paſſive obedience, or ſuffering death for us. For, 1. The whole chapter is employed in ſetting forth the benefits accruing to us by his death, ver. 6. 8. 9. 10. 11. 2. The effect of this obedience is our juſtification; now, that, through the whole ſcripture, and in this very chapter, is conſtantly aſcribed to the death of Chriſt, and his blood ſhed for us, ver. 9. 10. 16. 17. 18. 3. The diſobedience by which many were made ſinners, is plainly declared by the apoſtle, to be one ſingle act of diſobedience in Adam, and therefore the obedience oppoſed to it cannot in reaſon be the active obedience of Chriſt's whole life, but that obedience to the death which the apoſtle mentions, Philip. 2. 6. 8. Now, by this paſſive obedience we cannot be made formally righteous, but only metonymically, by being made partakers of that freedom from the condemnation and guilt of ſin, and that reconciliation which Chriſt purchaſed by his meritorious death and paſſion. Diſſolvens enim eam quæ ab initio in ligno facta fuerat inobedientiam, obediens factus eſt uſque ad mortem, mortem autem crucis, eam quæ in ligno fuerat inobedientiam, per eam quæ in ligno fuerat obedientiam ſanans. Iren. l. 5. c. 56.

Moreover, we in the New Teſtament find frequently expreſſions equivalent to theſe: As, 1. When Chriſt is ſaid to bear our ſins, only becauſe he bore the puniſhment due to them. 2. When he is ſaid to be made ſin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. he being made ſo, not by contracting the guilt of our ſins, but only by ſuffering puniſhment for our iniquities: and when he is ſaid to appear a ſecond time χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without ſin, Heb. 9. 28. i. e. without another ſacrifice in which he was to ſuffer for our ſin: and when it is ſaid, that by ſin, Rom. 8. 2. i. e. by his ſacrifice for it, he condemned ſin in the fleſh. And, 3. When he is ſaid to be made a curſe for us, Gal. 3. 13. he being only ſo by ſuffering the death which the law ſtyled accurſed, and not as being ſo in the ſight of God.

Ver. 20. ἵνα πλεονάσῃ τὸ παράπτωμα, the law entered that ſin might abound unto death.] Hence it is ſtyled the letter that killeth, the miniſtry of death, and of condemnation, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 7. 9. and ſaid to ſubject all that are under it to a curſe, Gal. 3. 10.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. WHat ſhall we ſay then? [a] Shall we continue in ſin, (Gr. what do we ſay then?) (do we ſay this?) let us (who have received this grace, continue ſtill in ſin), that grace may abound (towards us? that is, do we by declaring that we are juſtified freely by grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, chap. 3. 24. and that as ſin abounded, grace did more abound, chap. 5. 20. give occaſion to this inference?)

2. God forbid (we ſhould make any ſuch inference from, or any uſe of this doctrine, ſo contrary to that very baptiſm by which we enter into the Chriſtian covenant, and put on Chriſt; for) how ſhall we who are dead (Gr. have died) to ſin (by our baptiſm, or entrance into the Chriſtian covenant), live any longer therein?

3. (For) know ye not that as many (of us) as were baptized into (and by that baptiſm profeſſed ourſelves diſciples of) Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into (the likeneſs of) his death, (and ſo engaged to die unto ſin, as he did for ſin, 1 Pet. 4. 1. 2. and to live to him that died for us, and roſe again? 2 Cor. 5. 15.)

4. (For) therefore we are [b] buried with him by baptiſm (plunging us under the water) into (a conformity to his) death, (which put his body under the earth): that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory- (ous power) of the Father, even ſo we alſo (thus dead in baptiſm) ſhould (riſe with him, and) walk in newneſs of life.

5. For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death, (by dying unto ſin), we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection, (by being ſo riſen from our death unto ſin, as never to let ſin have any more dominion over us, but dying unto ſin once for all, and henceforth living unto God, ver. 9. 10. Or we ſhall riſe to a life immortal, ver. 8. as he hath done.)

6. (And thus we ſtand engaged to die to ſin), knowing this, that our old man is (was) crucified with him, that the body of ſin (i. e. the appetites of the body which ſubject us to ſin) might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we might not ſerve ſin, (for he bore our ſins in his own body on the croſs, that we being dead to ſin, might live unto righteouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 24.)

7. (Which we ſhall not do if we be truly dead unto it); for he that is dead is freed from ſin, (1 Pet. 4. 4. He ſins no more.)

8. Now, if we be (thus) dead with Chriſt, we believe that [c] we ſhall alſo live with him (not a ſpiritual only, but an happy, and immortal life);

9. (And thus conformed to his death we ſhould be, and therefore) knowing that Chriſt being raiſed from the dead (now) dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him.

10. For in that he died, he died [d] once to ſin, (or for ſin, i. e. in that he died to the putting away of ſin, Heb. 9. 26. 28. he died thus once for all): but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God; (i. e. the life he liveth, is an eternal life, wholly dedicated to the glory of God, Philip. 2. 9. 10. 11.)

11. [e] Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be indeed dead unto ſin, but living to God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

12. Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body, [f] that you ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof.

13. Neither yield ye your members (any longer) as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs to ſin; but yield (up) yourſelves (entirely) to (the ſervice of) God, as thoſe that are (with Chriſt) alive from the dead, and (yield) your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſs to God.

14. (And ſay not this is beyond your ſtrength, ſeeing the law in your members leads you captive to ſin); [g] for ſin ſhall not have dominion over you; for you are not under the (pædagogy of) the law, (which gives the knowledge of ſin, but not ſufficient ſtrength to mortify it), but under (that œconomy of) grace, (which affords that ſpirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus, which frees us from the law of ſin and death.)

15. What then? ſhall we (go on in) ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, (which condemns us for every tranſgreſſion), but under (that covenant of) grace, (which allows the pardon, and promiſes the forgiveneſs of it? Heb. 8. 12.)? God forbid, (that we ſhould continue in the ſins forbidden by the law, becauſe we are not under the law.)

16. Know ye not (this), that to whom ye yield yourſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey, (and from him you muſt expect your wages); whether (you be the ſervants) of ſin to (receive the wages of ſin, which is) death, or (the ſervants of God) by obedience to (the obtaining the fruits of) righteouſneſs.

17. But [h] God be thanked, that (and God be thanked that though formerly, ver. 19.) ye were the ſervants of ſin; but (yet ſince your converſion) you have obeyed from the heart that form of (Chriſtian) doctrine which was delivered to you.

18. Being then (for being) made free from (the law of) ſin, (by the grace and aſſiſtance of that Spirit of life the goſpel miniſters, Rom. 8. 2.), ye became ſervants unto righteouſneſs.

19. I ſpeak [i] after the manner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh: for as you have yielded your members ſervants to uncleanneſs and to iniquity, iniquity, to (commit) iniquity; even ſo now yield your members ſervants to righteouſneſs unto holineſs.

20. (Now, I ſay, for before you could not do it), for when you were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs, (doing then no ſervice at all to it).

21. (And that you may not be ſtill enamoured with your former ſervice unto ſin, I aſk), What fruit had you then in (from) thoſe things of which you are now aſhamed? (ſurely none worthy to be compared with the fruits of righteouſneſs); for the end of thoſe things is death.

22. But now being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, you have (at preſent) your fruit unto holineſs, and the end thereof (will be) everlaſting life.

23. For [k] the wages of ſin (to its ſervants) is death; but the gift of God (to his) is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Ver. 1. [a] NOte here, that if the faith to which St Paul in this epiſtle doth aſcribe juſtification, did not only oblige us to, but even comprehend evangelical and conſtant obedience, there could be no colour for this objection; that therefore muſt be a miſtake.

Ver. 4. [b] Συνετάφημεν οὖν αὐτῷ διὰ τοῦ βαπτίσματος, we are buried with him in baptiſm.] It being ſo expreſsly declared here, and Col. 2. 12. that we are buried with Chriſt in baptiſm, by being buried under water; and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to ſin, being taken hence, and this immerſion being religiouſly obſerved by all Chriſtians, for thirteen centuries, and approved by our church, and the change of it into ſprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of this inſtitution, or any licence from any council of the church, being that which the Romaniſt ſtill urgeth to juſtify his refuſal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wiſhed that this cuſtom might be again of general uſe, and aſperſion only permitted, as of old, in caſe of the clinici, or in preſent danger of death. (See Examen Millii.)

Ver. 8. [c] Συζήσομεν αὐτῷ, we ſhall live with him;] As being delivered, by his death, from that death which is the puniſhment of ſin, and having that ſpirit which is the giver of life, and the pledge and earneſt of it, imparted to us: it is this life which is the object of our faith; and of this the apoſtle ſpeaks, 2 Tim. 2. 11. ſaying, If we have been dead with him, we ſhall alſo live with him; if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign together with him.

Ver. 10. [d] Ἀπέθανεν ἐφάπαξ, he died once for all.] That is, Chriſt ſo died for our ſins once, as never to undergo death again; and therefore his living to God, ſeems to import his reſurrection to eternal life; and ſo the phraſe is uſed by St Luke, where, of the children of the reſurrection, which can die no more, he ſaith, they live unto God, Luke 20. 26. 28. And in (m) Joſephus, who ſaith, that they who die for God, ζῶσι τῷ Θεῷ, live to God, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs do; (n) they love that piety which brings them to eternal life.

Ver. 11. [e] Οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς, ſo alſo reckon ye yourſelves dead unto ſin.] Once for all, ſo as never to have any need of dying to it again, but as ſtill engaged to live to God's glory: for, ſay the ancients, we can have but one baptiſm; and this ſuppoſes we ſhould ſo die to ſin once, as never to have occaſion to perform that work again. Hence, therefore it appears, how far they are from conformity to the death of Chriſt, who ſtill ſuffer ſin to revive in them, after that, by pious reſolutions and repentance, they have begun to mortify it, and ſo are ſtill beginning again to die to it. And oh! that Chriſtians would more carefully attend to this conformity to the death of Chriſt.

Ver. 12. Εἰς τὸ ὑπακούειν, to obey it.] For this obedience to it in the luſtings of it, is a certain ſign of the dominion of ſin in us, and of our being none of Chriſt's ſervants; for they that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts, Gal. 5. 24. (See Examen Millii.)

Ver. 14. [f] Ἁμαρτία γὰρ ὑμῶν οὐ κυριεύσει, for ſin ſhall not have dominion.] This is a pious ſenſe, but ſeems to ſome to give no place for the following objection. Others therefore paraphraſe the words thus. For then ſin ſhall not have dominion over you, ſo as to condemn you for each tranſgreſſion; for you are not under the law, (which pronounceth a curſe on them that do not perfectly obey it), but under (that covenant of) grace, which affords pardon and forgiveneſs of it, 1 John 1. 7. (See Examen Millii.)

Ver. 17. [g] Χάρις δὲ τῷ Θεῷ, but God be thanked.] He doth not here thank God that they had been the ſervants of ſin, but that they who had been ſervants to it, were become obedient to the precepts of Chriſtianity; as our Lord thanks his heavenly Father, that he had hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed them to babes, Matth. 11.

25. i. e. That having hid them from the one, he notwithſtanding had revealed them to the other.

The particle δὲ is ſometimes rendered and, as Luke 9. 6. and 11. 18. Acts 3. 5. and 4. 36. and 8. 30. and 9. 17. and 11. 12. and 13. 15. and 15. 6. and 21. 14. and 23. 9. 13.

Sometimes, then, Acts 6. 2. 7. and 9. 13. 16. and 12. 3. Matth. 1. 19. Luke 8. 29. 35.

Sometimes, ſo, Acts 7. 15. Rom. 8. 8.

Sometimes, yea, 1 Cor. 9. 16. and 13. 21. Rom. 11. 30. and 16. 19. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

Sometimes, but, in the ſenſe of yet, Acts 28. 22. 1 Cor. 14. 1.

And yet, Matth. 6. 9.

Sometimes for, Luke 12. 2. 48. and 23. 14. Acts 7. 25. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16.

Alſo, Luke 12. 8. and 13. 6.

Moreover, 2 Pet. 1. 15.

Howbeit, 1 Cor. 2. 9.

And ſo accordingly, the words may be here rendered, And God be thanked, or God be thanked then, that though ye were the ſervants of ſin, yet, and in the verſe following, ἐλευθερωθέντες δὲ, for being delivered.

Ver. 19. [i] Ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, I ſpeak after the manner of men.] The apoſtle doth not here ſpeak, as ſome unhappily imagine, by way of excuſe, for not uſing the beſt argument he could uſe in this affair, but ſuch as was beſt fitted to the capacities and notions of thoſe he writes to; for what inducements to yield their members inſtruments of righteouſneſs to that holineſs which will conclude in life eternal, could he uſe more rational and proper than this, that they had formerly yielded them ſervants to commit that ſin, whoſe wages is death? But he ſpeaks this by way of illuſtration of his argument, or exhortation. The ſenſe which the ancients put upon theſe words is this, τῇ φύσει μετρῶ τὴν παράινεσιν, I frame my exhortation with a due conſideration of the infirmity of our fleſh, requiring that only which, even to human reaſon, ſeems highly equitable, viz. that you ſhould do that ſervice now to God, which you have formerly done to ſin. I rather think the apoſtle diſcourſeth to this effect: In this diſcourſe of your being ſervants formerly to ſin, and your obligation now to be ſervants of righteouſneſs, I ſpeak that which all natural men muſt have had experience of, by reaſon of the infirmity of the fleſh, and of which they may thence take a juſt idea; requiring only, that as they have yielded their members inſtruments of ſin, ſo they would yield them inſtruments of righteouſneſs.

And that this is the genuine import of the words ἀνθρώπινον λέγω, I ſpeak after the manner of men, may appear from the like uſe of it, 1 Cor. 10. 10. No temptation hath happened to you, but that which is ἀνθρώπινος, common to human nature, and ſupportable by men of reaſon; and from the conſtant uſe of the phraſe κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I ſpeak after the manner of men; of which ſee note on 1 Cor. 9. 8.

Ver. 23. [k] Τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια τῆς ἁμαρτίας θάνατος, for the wages of ſin is death.] Hence divines uſually conclude, that even infants muſt have ſinned, becauſe they are ſubject to death: now, though this be ſo far true, that death came upon all men, and ſo upon infants, by that ſin of Adam, which rendered him, and by him all his offſpring, ſubject to mortality; yet this will no more follow from theſe words, than it will follow, that becauſe the wages of rebellion is death, all that die muſt be guilty of rebellion. Moreover, the intention of the apoſtle is not here to teach us that death is the puniſhment due to every ſin, but that that death which is in ſcripture ſtyled the ſecond death, and ſtands oppoſed to eternal life, will be the certain iſſue of a life ſpent in the ſervice of ſin. For the apoſtle throughout this chapter ſpeaks of that ſin in which we continue, ver. 1. and which we ſerve, ver. 6. 20. and which ſo reigneth in our mortal bodies, that we obey it in the luſts thereof, ver. 12.; by which we yield our members inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs to ſin, ver. 13. 19.; in which we ſo ſerve ſin as to obey its commands, ver. 16. 17. and live free from righteouſneſs, or in neglect of it, ver. 20. The wages, ſaith he, of ſin thus reigning in, and ſerved by us, is eternal death: it is therefore manifeſt the apoſtle ſpeaks not here of ſin imputed, but only of perſonal ſin, nor of each ſingle act, but of an habitual practice, or a courſe of ſin. (See Examen Millii.)

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. (AND of the truth of what I told you, chap. 6. 14. that ſin ὐ κυριεύσει, ſhall not have dominion over you, becauſe you are not under the law, but under grace, ye cannot well be ignorant; for) know ye not, brethren, for I ſpeak to them that know the law (i. e. to the Jews or proſelytes), that the law (to which you were eſpouſed by Moſes) hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth (only.)

2. (The caſe of a man thus under the law, i. e. in his legal ſtate, being like that of a woman married to an huſband); for the woman that hath an huſband is bound by the law to (be ſubject to) her huſband ſo long as he liveth: but if the huſband be dead, ſhe is (then)

(then) free from the law of (ſubjection to) her huſband.

3. So then (Gr. therefore) if while her huſband liveth ſhe be married to another, [a] ſhe ſhall be (truly) called an adultereſs: but if her huſband be dead, ſhe is free from that law (which bound her to be in ſubjection to, and yield conjugal affection to her huſband only); ſo that ſhe is no adultereſs, though ſhe be married to another man.

4. Wherefore, my brethren, (as the woman is become free from the law of her huſband by his death, even ſo) [b] ye alſo are become dead (Gr. ἐθανατώθητε, ye have been made dead) to the law (and ſo free from it) by (the crucifixion of) the body of Chriſt, (which hath diſſolved your obligation to the law, as the death of the huſband doth the obligation of the wife to him); that ye ſhould (or may) be married to another (huſband), even to him who is raiſed from the dead; that being made free from ſin, ver. 21. 22. (by virtue of your union to him), ye may bring forth fruit unto God.

5. (We are, I ſay, become thus dead to the law, this being neceſſary, that we might bring forth fruit unto God.) [c] For when we were in the fleſh, (i. e. when we lived under the carnal ordinances of the law, without the aſſiſtance of the Spirit), [d] the luſtings of ſin which were forbidden and (reſtrained) by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death; (rendering us obnoxious to death, the puniſhment threatened by the law to the tranſgreſſors of it.)

6. But now we are delivered from the law, (and from the motions of ſin cauſed by it), [e] that being dead wherein we were held (in ſubjection, as the wife was to her living huſband), [f] that we ſhould ſerve God in newneſs of (that) Spirit (of life in Chriſt Jeſus, which makes us free from the law of ſin and death), and not (as before) in the oldneſs of the letter, (which killeth, or ſubjecteth us to death, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 9.)

7. What ſhall we ſay then? Is the law (from which we muſt be delivered, that we may not obey the luſts of the fleſh) ſin? (Is it the cauſe of that ſin which worketh in our members whilſt we are under the law)? God forbid (that we ſhould ſay ſo); nay, (ſo far otherwiſe is it, that) I had not known ſin to be ſo but by the law, (inſtructing me what is to be avoided as ſin, and under what penalty); for I had not known luſt, (i. e. the luſtings, or covetous deſires of the heart, to be things worthy of death), except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet, (and ſo made him that coveteth obnoxious to death, as being a tranſgreſſo f the law.)

8. But (nevertheleſs) ſin taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence, or vehement deſires after that which was forbidden by the law, (which became mortal to me by virtue of the prohibition of the law). For (whilſt I was) without the law ſin was dead, (i. e. unable to have this effect upon me; for where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion imputed to death, chap. 5. 13.)

9. For [g] I (the ſeed of Abraham) was alive (or indeed lived) without the law once, (before the law was given, I being not obnoxious to death for that to which the law had not threatened death): but when the commandment came (forbidding it under that penalty), ſin revived, and I died, (i. e. it got ſtrength to draw me to ſin, and ſo condemn me to death.)

10. And the commandment which was [h] ordained to (or given for) life, (as teaching thoſe things which if a man do he ſhall live in them, Lev. 18. 5.), was found to me (tranſgreſſing it, to be) unto death.

11. For [i] ſin taking occaſion by the commandment deceived me, (or enticed me to the commiſſion of it), and by it (condemning me to death for that tranſgreſſion) ſlew me.

12. Wherefore the law (forbidding ſin), is holy, and the commandment (to abſtain from it) holy, juſt, and good, (as requiring only what is equitable in itſelf, and good for me to do.)

13. Was then that which is good, made death to me? (Gr. Hath that therefore which is good become death to me? i. e. is that the ſole and proper cauſe of bringing death to me?) God forbid (we ſhould ſo ſay): But (this charge is to be laid upon) ſin, (which) that it might appear ſin, (i. e. pernicious and deſtructive), working death in (or to) me, by that which is good, (i. e. the law made me obnoxious to death); that ſin by the commandment (forbidding it) [k] might become exceeding ſinful, (i. e. abounding to death, by making me abound in new tranſgreſſions of the law, chap. 5. 21.)

14. (And that ſin ſhould thus prevail over us in this ſtate of lapſed nature to tranſgreſs the law, and to become obnoxious to death by it, will not ſeem ſtrange, if every natural man conſiders the contrariety there is betwixt him and the law); for we know that the law is ſpiritual, (and requires ſpiritual things), but (every natural man hath cauſe to ſay of himſelf); I am carnal, [l] ſold under ſin, (i. e. inſlaved by my corrupt affections;)

15. (As may be eaſily diſcerned, from the workings of our conſcience againſt the evil that we do); for that which I do [m] I allow not (in my own mind), for what I would do, (in compliance with the law), that (through the prevalence of my corrupt nature) do I not; but what (through the conviction of my conſcience) [n] I hate (to do), that do I.

16. If then (it be ſo with me, that) I do that which I would not, (by this unwillingneſs to act in contradiction to it), I conſent unto the law, that it is good, (and commands what is good for me to do.)

17. Now then, (this being done by thoſe corrupt affections, which overpower me againſt the approbation of my mind), it is no more I (according to the better part from which I am denominated) that do it, but ◦ ſin that dwelleth in me, (i. e. in my fleſh, ver. 23. and captivates me to the obedience of it.)

18. (And upon this I have juſt ground to charge it); for I know that in me, that is, in my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will (that which is good) is preſent with me, (or to me); but to perform that which is good, I find not (ſtrength) by nature.

19. For (in event, I find, that) the good that I would (do) I do not; but the evil which (the law prohibits, and) I would not (do), that (being overpowered by the fleſh) I do.

20. Now if I (thus) do that I would not, it is no more I (chuſing and approving the action in my mind) that do this, but ſin that dwelleth in me, (i. e. in my fleſh, that hurries me to the commiſſion of it againſt the law and conviction of my mind.)

21. (For ſo it is that) I find then (Gr. ἄρα, indeed) a law (in my members ſo thwarting the convictions of my mind), that when I would do (the) good (to which the law directs me), evil is preſent with me (to oppoſe and hinder me from doing it.)

22. (I ſay, when I would do good), for I delight in the law of God ▸ after the inward man, (my mind approving for ſome time, and being pleaſed with its good and holy precepts.)

23. But I ſee (or perceive) another law (of the fleſh) in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members; (for of what a man is overcome, of that he is brought into bondage, 2 Pet. 2. 19. John 8. 34. Rom. 6. 16.)

24. (And being thus inſlaved to that ſin which renders me obnoxious to death, the wages of it, I am even forced to cry out), O wretched man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from the body of (ſin which worketh) this death?

25. (And ſo) I (have great reaſon to) ◦ thank God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, (whom he hath ſent to redeem me from this death, to which I am obnoxious by ſin.) So then (to ſhut up this diſcourſe, thus is it with me, whilſt under the law only and carnally minded) with the mind ▸ I myſelf (or I the ſame man) ſerve the law of God, but with the fleſh the law of ſin.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VII.

Verſe 3. ◦ Μοιχαλὶς χρηματίσει, ſhe ſhall be called an adultereſs.] The apoſtle, ſaith Theodoret, conſiders not here the permiſſion given to the woman divorced by the law of Moſes to be married to another, as being taught by Chriſt not to approve of ſuch divorces: but the apoſtle ſeems only to intimate, that ſhe hath no power to diſſolve this bond, by putting away her huſband, or that this divorce rendered her huſband dead in law to her, ſhe being not to return to him again, Deut. 24. 4. Now this, ſaith the apoſtle, is the caſe of thoſe who are under the law; their entering into that legal covenant was the day of their eſpouſals, Jer. 2. 2. and they were married to it, or to him that put them in ſubjection under it, and were his ſpouſe, Jer. 3. 14. and ſo obliged to ſerve God in the oldneſs of the letter; but now this law being dead, and you being eſpouſed to another huſband, even Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 2. are henceforth bound to ſerve God according to that new ſpiritual law which he hath given you, and not according to the letter of the old law.

Ver. 4. ▸ Ἐθανατώθητε τῷ νόμῳ.] This phraſe, Ye are dead to the law, or ye have been made dead to the law, is, ſay interpreters, the law is put to death to you; for to that, ſay they, the drift of the diſcourſe directs. But, 1. This interpretation puts a plain force upon the words, without any inſtance that they are elſewhere uſed in this ſenſe. 2. The parallel words, Gal. 2. 19. 20. run thus: I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live to God: I am crucified together with Chriſt. Now, thoſe words ſeem to fix the proper ſenſe of theſe, ſhewing it to be alſo this: Ye are dead to the law, that is, you are free from ſubjection to the precepts of the law, which as an huſband had dominion over you, and from the motions of ſin which are by the law as if you were dead. To ſtrengthen this interpretation, let the Hebrew phraſe be noted, (o) When a man dies, he is made free from the commands, the law ὁ κυριεύει, hath no dominion over him, no power to ſubject him to the motions of ſin which are by the law; for he that is dead, is free from ſin, chap. 6. 6. 7.; ſo that he doth no longer δουλεύειν, ſerve the motions of it. And hence the apoſtle makes this inference, that if we be dead with Chriſt, and buried with him, or crucified together with him, ſin ὁ κυριεύσει, ſhall not have dominion over us, as it had whilſt we were under the Jewiſh diſpenſation; for we are not under the law, but under grace; and again, Walk in the Spirit, and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh, Gal. 5. 16.; and ver. 18. For if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law. Wherefore, the ſenſe of theſe four laſt verſes ſeems to be this: The law hath dominion over a man as long as he lives under it: for the caſe of a man's ſubjection to the law in this, like to the woman's ſubjection to her huſband, it continues whilſt he lives; but when he is once dead, ſhe is free from any further ſubjection to him, ſeeing he being dead, can have no further power over her, and ſo ſhe muſt be free to be married to another. In like manner, you being made dead to the law, to which you were eſpouſed, by the death of Chriſt, as being buried and crucified together with him, the law can have no farther power over you, to retain you in ſubjection to it, and ſo you muſt be free to be married, or put into ſubjection to another huſband, even Chriſt, to whom I have eſpouſed you, 2 Cor. 11. 2.; and the law itſelf being alſo dead to you through the death of Chriſt aboliſhing it, and freeing Chriſtians from the power and obligation of it, you are free to marry another huſband, even Chriſt, ver. 5.

Ver. 5. ᵉ Ὅτε γὰρ ἦμεν ἐν σαρκὶ, for when we were in the fleſh.] When I conſider that οἱ ὄντες ἐν σαρκὶ, and οἱ κατὰ σάρκα ὄντες, chap. 8. 5. 8. ſignifies thoſe that are acted and governed by the fleſhly principle, in oppoſition to the guidance and motions of the Holy Spirit; and that ὄντας ἐν σαρκὶ, ver. 9. ζῶν, περιπατοῦν κατὰ σάρκα, ver. 12. 13. bear the ſame ſenſe; I judge, that when we were in the fleſh, here, doth not only ſignify to be under the carnal ordinances of the law; for ſo were all the pious Jews, who lived from Moſes to the goſpel-times; but more eſpecially relates to them, who, living under theſe ordinances, were themſelves carnal, and without any aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, and ſo had the law of the fleſh ſtill warring againſt the law of their minds, and bringing them into captivity to the law of ſin; which could not be the ſtate of Zacharias and Eliſabeth, or any other of thoſe perſons who were righteous before God, and walked in all the commandments of the Lord blameleſs. And if of ſuch only we underſtand the apoſtle's following diſcourſe in this chapter, the ſenſe will be clear.

Ibid. ᵉ Τὰ διὰ τοῦ νόμου, the motions of ſin which were by the law.] Here Mr L. ſaith, interpreters caſt a ſtrange imputation on the law of God, by ſaying, it excited men to ſin by forbidding it; whereas they only ſay, that the carnal minds of men excited them to tranſgreſs the law when they were under it, as the apoſtle ſaith, ver. 8: and Mr L. in his gloſs on the 8th verſe, ſays, "Sin took the opportunity of "my being under the law to ſtir up concupiſcence "in me; for without the law, which annexes death "to the tranſgreſſion of it, ſin is not able to have "its will upon me." Now, is this any more an imputation upon the law of God, than it is an imputation on his providence, that it provides that corn and wine which carnal men abuſe to drunkenneſs and exceſs?

Ver. 6. ᵉ Ἀποθανόντες.] The Syriac and Arabic verſions, Origen, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, read ἀποθανόντες, we being dead to that in which we were held, which, ſaith Origen, is undoubtedly the beſt reading. And this reading confirms the ſenſe of the fourth verſe, as to theſe words, Ye are dead to the law, which I have offered in the paraphraſe; i. e. we being freed from the obligation and commands of it, and ſo from the luſtings and motions it wrought in us.

Ibid. ᵉ Ὥστε δουλεύειν ἡμᾶς ἐν καινότητι πνεύματος, that we might ſerve God in the newneſs of the ſpirit.] The law and the goſpel are by the apoſtle in this diſtinguiſhed; that the firſt is only the miniſtration of the letter, the other of the ſpirit, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 7. 8. 9.: the miniſtration of the ſpirit is alſo declared to be the fruit, not of the law, but of the hearing of faith, Gal. 3. 3. Hence the apoſtle here infers, that we muſt be dead unto, or free from ſubjection to the law, that we may be enabled to ſerve God in newneſs of ſpirit. Whence it is evident, that to ſerve God in the ſpirit, is not to enjoy the ſpiritual ſenſe of the law, as Mr Le Clerc thinks; but, 1. as the oppoſition ſhews, to ſerve him with a freedom from the prevalency of the fleſh, by virtue of the Spirit, which enables us to mortify the deeds of the fleſh, chap. 8. 13. 2. To ſerve God, not chiefly with bodily ſervice and carnal ordinances, but in the ſpirit of our minds, chap. 12. 2. Philip. 3. 2. having our minds renewed and transformed after the image of God in holineſs, and righteouſneſs, and truth, which are the fruits of the Spirit, Eph. 4. 23. 24. 3. To ſerve him by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit, ſo as to live and walk in the Spirit, Rom. 8. 5. Gal. 5. 25. ſo that we are ſtrengthened with might by the Spirit in the inward man, Eph. 3. 16.

Ver. 9. ᵉ Ἐγὼ δὲ ἔζων χωρὶς νόμου, I was alive without the law.] Πρὸ τοῦ Μωϋσέως, before the law of Moſes came. So Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact.

Ver. 10. ᵇ Ordained.] This word is not in the original; you may therefore paraphraſe the words thus, The commandment which was given for life, i. e. with this promiſe, Do this and live, was found to me unto death.

Ver. 8. 9. 10. 11. ⁱ For the explication of theſe four laſt verſes let it be noted, Firſt, That it is the opinion of judicious commentators, that when the apoſtle ſaith, Sin taking occaſion by the commandment wrought in him all manner of concupiſcence, ver. 8. and deceived him, ver.

ver. 11. He means that it did this by ſaying only, Thou ſhalt not covet, but aſſigning no puniſhment to him that coveted. But this interpretation cannot ſtand, for theſe two reaſons. For, 1. It plainly contradicts the words of the law, which pronounceth a curſe upon every one who continues not in all things written in the law to do them; and much more doth it contradict the driſt of the apoſtle's diſcourſe in this, and the epiſtle to the Galatians, viz. that the law required perfect obedience to its precepts, condemning him to death, or rendering him obnoxious to condemnation who in any thing tranſgreſſed it, and ſo could be no means of juſtification; as many as were under the law being under the curſe, becauſe tranſgreſſors of it.

2. This agrees not with the following reaſon, or the nature of the thing: for if the law given encouraged them to covet, becauſe it had no preſent penalty annexed to it, they muſt be more free to covet, or follow their natural or carnal inclinations, when there was no law at all forbidding them to covet; and therefore ſin could take no more occaſion by a law without penalty than by none at all, to work in us all manner of concupiſcence; nor could concupiſcence be dead without the law more than with it.

The old and common interpretation is this, That the prohibition of what we deſire makes us to think the enjoyment of it more ſweet and valuable, or at leaſt provokes the carnal mind, which is not ſubject to the law of God, to a more fervent luſting after it, Dum prohibita, non tam refugit quam ardentius expetit; and this agrees very well with this expreſſion. Or,

3. Sin is in ſcripture repreſented as an enemy that ſeeks our ruin and deſtruction, and takes all occaſions to effect it: it is here ſaid to war againſt the mind, ver. 23. elſewhere to war againſt the ſoul, 1 Pet. 2. 11.; to ſurround and beſet us, Heb. 12. 1.; to bring us into bondage and ſubjection, and get the dominion over us, Rom. 6. 12.; to entice us, and ſo to work our death, James 1. 15. 16. and to do all that Satan, the grand enemy of mankind, doth, by tempting and ſoliciting us to the commiſſion of it: whence Chryſoſtom upon thoſe words, Heb. 12. 4. You have not yet reſiſted unto blood, πρὸς τὴν ἁμαρτίαν ἀντα-γωνιζόμενοι, ſtriving againſt ſin, repreſents ſin as an armed and flagrant adverſary; when therefore it finds a law which threateneth death to the violation of it, it takes occaſion thence more earneſtly to tempt and allure us to the violation of it, that ſo it may more effectually ſubject us to death and condemnation upon that account; for the ſting of death is ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin is the law, condemning us to death upon the violation of it. Thus when God had forbidden, under the pain of death, the eating of the forbidden fruit, Satan thence took occaſion to tempt our firſt parents to the breach of it, and ſo ſlew them, or made them ſubject to death; ἀπάτησε, he deceived them, Gen. 3. 13. 1 Tim. 2. 14. which is the word here uſed, ver. 11.

Secondly, Obſerve the import of the phraſe, Without the law ſin was (or is) dead, which ſeems not to be this, that the inclinations of men to ſin were in their nature leſs, when they were unreſtrained by a law, but rather this, that ſin was then comparatively dead, as to its power of condemning us to death: and this, firſt, the antitheſis doth plainly hint; for thus it runs, Without the law, ἁμαρτία νεκρὰ, ἐγὼ δὲ ζων, ſin was dead, but I was living; but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. How were men living before the law, but becauſe then no law condemned them? ſin therefore muſt be then dead as to its power of condemning. How did they die when the law came, but by the law condemning them to death? Sin therefore then revived as to its condemning power, which it received firſt from the ſin of Adam, which brought death into the world, and next from the law of Moſes, which entered that the offence might abound, and reign more unto death, Rom. 5. 20. 21. For though ſin was in the world from Adam unto Moſes, or until the law given, yet was it not imputed unto death, when there was no law given that did threaten death unto it; ſo that death reigned in that interval, by virtue of Adam's ſin alone, even over them who had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adam's tranſgreſſion, i. e. againſt a poſitive law forbidding it under the penalty of death; which law being delivered by Moſes, ſin revived, i. e. it had again its force to condemn men as before to death, by virtue of a law which threatened death to them. And in this ſenſe doth the apoſtle ſeem to ſay, that the law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, Gal. 3. 19. to convince us of the wrath and puniſhment due to them; and that the law therefore worketh wrath, becauſe where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion, Rom. 4. 15. ſubjecting us to wrath, or no ſuch ſenſe of the divine wrath as where a plain divine law threatening death and condemnation is violated. Upon the ſenſe thus given of theſe two phraſes doth our expoſition ſtand.

Ver. 13. [k] Καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἁμαρτωλὸς, exceeding ſinful.] That it might appear ὡς θάνατον ὑπερβάλλουσα, chap. 5. 20. 21. abounding unto death, and ſo exceeding vile, and hateful to us, the end and wages of it being death and condemnation, chap. 6. 21. 23.

Ver. 14. [l] Πεπραμένος ὑπὸ τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, ſold under ſin.] i. e. in peccati poteſtatem, libidinis et concupiſcentiæ pretio redactus, Origen. So inſlaved to it, ſaith Theophylact, ὥστε μὴ ἀναβλέψαι δυνάσθαι, that he could not look up; a willing ſlave, who had ſold himſelf to it, ſaith Theodoret. And this is continually the import import of the phraſe in the Old Teſtament; as when it is ſaid of Ahab, 1 Kings 21. 20. πέπρασαι ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, thou haſt ſold thyſelf to do wickedly; and ver. 25. ἐπράθη ποιῆσαι τὸ πονηρὸν, he ſold himſelf to do wickedly; of the Jews, Iſ. 50. 1. ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ὑμῶν ἐπράθητε, you have ſold yourſelves to your iniquities; and of the Jews, who under Antiochus Epiphanes revolted from their religion to Heatheniſm, it is ſaid, that ἐπράθησαν τὸ πονηρὸν, they ſold themſelves to do evil, 1 Maccab. 1. 15.

Ver. 15. [m] Οὐ γινώσκω, I allow not.] This interpretation, ſaith Mr L. makes the following words a tautology; whereas I judge it very reaſonable to ſay, I allow not, becauſe I would not; yea, I hate to do what I do.

Ibid. [n] Ὃ μισῶ, that which I hate.] Ὑπὸ τῆς ἡδονῆς καταθελγόμενοι ποιοῦμεν ἃπερ ὡς παράνομα βδελυττόμεθα, "being allured with pleaſure, we," ſay Theodoret and Oecumenius, "oft do thoſe things which are abo-"minable, as being oppoſite to the law;" for whilſt the law repreſents ſin as pernicious and deſtructive both to ſoul and body, it is as natural for all men to hate it, as to love themſelves: but then, as Photius ſaith, when τὸ ἡδὺ τῦ πράγματος προβάλληται, the ſweetneſs, or pleaſure of the action is propoſed to the mind, the hatred goes off, and the ſoul is wrought up to an affection to it; and thus it is with every enlightened man, that ſins againſt his conſcience, and doth the evil which he would not do. "Theſe words," ſaith Origen, "ſhew that the carnal man, of whom he "ſpeaks, reſiſtere aliquantulum vitiis conatur, en-"deavours a little to reſiſt his vices; legis ſc. na-"turalis inſtinctu, by the inſtinct of the law of na-"ture; but that at laſt he is overcome by them, and "oppreſſed with them."

Ver. 17. [o] Ἡ οἰκοῦσα ἐν ἐμοὶ ἁμαρτία, ſin that dwelleth in me.] This he ſpeaks, ſaith Theodoret, calling τῦ νῦ τὴν δουλείαν, καὶ τῶν παθῶν τὴν δεσποτείαν, the ſlavery of the mind, and the dominion, or, as Theophylact, the tyranny of the paſſions, ſin. "It is," ſaith Origen, "lex et voluntas carnis, quæ captivos nos ducit in "lege peccati, the law and will of the fleſh, which "leads us captive to the law of ſin." Hence this ſin dwelling in us, is ſo often ſtyled the law of ſin in our members, ver. 20. 21. 22. 25. chap. 8. 2.: here the apoſtle ſeems to ſpeak according to the philoſophy of the Heathens, with which the Jews began to be acquainted, that man was not to be denominated from his body, or his ſenſual and carnal part, but from his mind, his νῦς or λογικὴ διάνοια, which, in (p) Philo's phraſe, is, ὁ ἐν ἑκάστῳ ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, the man within us; (q) ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἄνθρωπος, the true man, the man properly ſo called; who ſaith moreover, λέγει δὲ ταῦτα ὁ ἀληθινὸς ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἐπὶ ψυχῆς ἔλεγχος, this ſaith the true man, the reprover in the ſoul. And of himſelf he ſpeaks thus: Men may have power over my body, but that is nothing to me; ἐγὼ γὰρ ἀπὸ τῦ κρείττονος τῆς ἐμαυτῦ διάνοιας χρηματίζω, for I am denominated from my mind, the better part, according to which I deſign to live.

Ver. 22. [p] Κατὰ τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, according to the inward man.] It is plain the inward man here cannot ſignify the new man (which is created after God in righteouſneſs and holineſs, Eph. 4. 24. and which is not put on, till all old things are paſt away, 2 Cor. 5. 17. and all things are become new, and till we have put off the old man with his deeds, Col. 3. 9. 10.); for ſure this cannot be ſaid of him, who is ſtill carnal, ſold under ſin, and captivated to the law of ſin which is in his members; but only the mind of man, the νῦς, as the apoſtle doth interpret himſelf, ver. 25. So Origen informs us, that the ſoul uſing the body as its inſtrument, is called ὁ ἔσω ἄνθρωπος, the inward man, contra Celſ. I. 7. p. 357. Ἔσω ἄνθρωπον τὸν νῦν λέγει. So Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact. So the very next verſe ſhews, the words running thus; I delight in the law of God in the inward man; but I ſee another law in my members warring againſt the law of my mind, i. e. of my inward man: And ſo the apoſtle uſeth the phraſe, when he ſaith, 2 Cor. 4. 16. that though ὁ ἔξω ἄνθρωπος, the outward man (i. e. the body) was corrupted, yet ὁ ἔσωθεν, the inward man was renewed day by day. And that this delight is no evidence of a regenerate man, is evident from the example of the ſtony ground, which heard the word μετὰ χαρᾶς, with joy, Matth. 13. 20.; of Herod, who heard John Baptiſt ἡδέως, with delight, Mark 6. 20.; of the Jews, who rejoiced in his light, John 5. 35. and heard our Saviour gladly, Mark 12. 37.

Ver. 25. [q] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ, I thank God.] The Latin verſion, and one Greek copy, read χάρις τῷ Θεῷ, the grace of God; but the Syriac, Arabic, and all the Greek commentators agree with our tranſlation, which therefore is to be preferred before that lection. See Examen Miklii in locum.

Ibid. [r] Αὐτὸς ἐγὼ, the ſame man;] of whom he had before ſpoken, not I Paul now writing this epiſtle. It hath been a controverſy ſince St Auſtin's time, whether St Paul here ſpeaketh in his own perſon, or in the perſon of a regenerate man, or only in the perſon of a Jew conflicting with the motions of his luſts, only by the aſſiſtance of the letter of the law, without the aids and powerful aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit; which is as great an inſtance of the force of prejudice, and the hear of oppoſition, to pervert the plaineſt truths as can be happily produced; for I think nothing can be more evident and unqueſtionably true than this, that the apoſtle doth not here

ſpeak of himſelf in his own perſon, or in the ſtate he was then in; but, as the ancient commentators do interpret him, δι ἑαυτοῦ ὁ ἀπόστολος τὸν κοινὸν ἄνθρωπον δηλοῖ, by himſelf he repreſents man in common; and ſaith not, as he might have done, you that are under the law are carnal, but τὰ ἐκείνων ἐφ' ἑαυτοῦ σχηματίζων, καὶ τὸ τραχὺ σφοδρὸν ἐκλύων, καὶ λοιπὸν τῇ περὶ ἑαυτὸν σχηματολογίᾳ, repreſenting what belonged to them in his own perſon, and ſo taking off the harſhneſs, and mollifying the invidiouſneſs of the ſentence, by ſpeaking of it in his own perſon, he ſaith, I am carnal, ſold under ſin. So Photius and Oecumenius. Theodoret alſo doth inform us, that the apoſtle here introduceth, ver. 14. τὸν πρὸ τῆς χάριτος ἄνθρωπον πολιορκούμενον ὑπὸ τῶν παθῶν, a man before grace overcome by his paſſions; for he calls him carnal, who had not yet obtained the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit. And again, ver. 23. he adds, That the apoſtle having diſcourſed all theſe things, ὅτι δείξας τίνες μὲν πρὸ τῆς χάριτος ἦμεν, "To ſhew what we "were before grace, and what we were made after "grace; and as it were taking upon himſelf the per"ſon of thoſe who before grace were vanquiſhed by "ſin, he groans and laments, as a man ſet in the "midſt of his enemies, inſlaved and conſtrained to "ſerve, and ſeeing no help; and thus he ſhews the "law unable to help us." And ſo Origen alſo frequently in his commentary on the place; and St Auſtin ſaith expreſsly and frequently, Deſcribitur homo ſub lege poſitus ante gratiam, Liber expoſ. quat. propoſ. ex epiſt. ad Rom. Quo loco videtur mihi apoſtolus, transfiguraſſe in ſe hominem ſub lege poſitum, ad Simplic. Mediol. l. 1. Et in hæc verba, Non ego operor illud, &c. loquitur adhuc ex perſona hominis ſub lege conſtituti, nondum ſub gratia. Though he was pleaſed afterwards to change his opinion; and ſo gave occaſion to the perverting the plain ſenſe of the apoſtle. For confutation of this dangerous opinion, I need not ſay much after the labours of Arminius, the Reverend Dr Hammond, Mr Bull, and Mr Kettlewell, who have made it manifeſt, Firſt, That it is uſual with the apoſtle to make this metaſchematiſm, or to ſpeak eſpecially of things that might be otherwiſe offenſive or ungrateful, in his own name, when indeed they belong not to him, but to other men; as in theſe words, Rom. 3. 7. If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie, why am I alſo judged as a ſinner? i. e. not I Paul, but I who make this objection. So Gal. 2. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 4. 6. Theſe things μετασχημάτισα, I have in a figure tranſferred to myſelf and Apollos for your ſakes. 1 Cor. 6. 12. 13. 2. 10. 22. 30. Eph. 2. 3. 1 Theſſ. 4. 17.

Secondly, That ſuch things are in this chapter ſaid of the perſon ſpoken of, as can by no means agree to St Paul, or to any regenerate perſon: to which may be added,

1. That had St Paul ſpoken here of himſelf, conſidered in the ſtate in which he was at the enditing of this epiſtle, he muſt have contradicted what he had ſaid of himſelf in the epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and to the Corinthians, which were wrote before this epiſtle. For (1.) in his epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, he ſaith, You are witneſſes, and God alſo, how holily, and righteouſly, and unblameably we have behaved ourſelves among you that believed, 1 Theſſ. 2. 10. In his ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, he ſpeaks thus: This is our rejoicing, even the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity, and godly ſincerity, not in fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God, we have converſed in this world, 2 Cor. 1. 12. That he knew nothing by himſelf, for which to condemn himſelf, 1 Cor. 4. 4. That he kept under his body, and brought it into ſubjection, 2 Cor. 9. 27. Now, can the man who is carnal, and ſold under ſin, who hath no power in him to do any good, who finds a law in his members warring againſt the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in his members, call God and the church to witneſs to his holy and unblameable life? Can he boaſt of keeping under his fleſhly body, and bringing that into ſubjection, which, by his own confeſſion, bringeth him into captivity? Can he who does not what he would in his mind and conſcience do, but what he hates; not the good which he would, but the evil which he would not do; can he, I ſay, rejoice in the teſtimony of his conſcience? Can he honeſtly declare he knows nothing by himſelf, for which his conſcience can condemn him?

2. How oft doth the apoſtle propoſe himſelf for a pattern to the churches unto whom he writes, requiring them to be followers of him as he was alſo of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 11. 1.? And again, What things you have learned, and received, and heard, and ſeen in me, theſe do, and the God of love and peace ſhall be with you, Philip. 4. 8. i. e. Be you carnal, ſold under ſin, living in the commiſſion of the things you hate, and your mind condemns, and doing what you judge to be evil, and yielding yourſelves captive to the law of ſin, which is in your members, and then the God of love and peace ſhall be with you. This ſure is an abſurd, if not blaſphemous exhortation; and yet, according to this expoſition, it muſt be ſuitable to the mind of the apoſtle.

3. With what indignation doth he reject the accuſations of them who looked upon him as walking after the fleſh, and how ſeverely doth he threaten them, how peremptorily doth he reject their ſcandalous imputation? declaring, that though he walked ed in the fleſh, yet did he not walk according to the fleſh, 2 Cor. 10. 2. 3. and yet if he were carnal, ſold under ſin; if with the fleſh he ſerved the law of ſin; if the law of the fleſhly members warred againſt the law of his mind, and brought him into captivity to the law of ſin; he doth here in effect confeſs what there he peremptorily denies, and with ſuch indignation doth reject.

4. This expoſition of the ſeventh chapter makes it entirely to confute the chapter which immediately goes before, and follows after, and it gives an invincible ſtrength to the objections he endeavours to anſwer in the ſixth chapter. The firſt objection there begins by way of inquiry, What do we ſay then? ſhall we ſtill continue in ſin, that grace may abound? His ſecond by way of like inquiry, Shall we ſin becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace? ver. 15. God forbid, ſaith he, that it ſhould be thus with any Chriſtian: and yet, according to this expoſition, it was thus with himſelf, one of the beſt of Chriſtians; for ſure he muſt continue in ſin, who was ſtill ſold under ſin, ſtill ſerving the law of ſin with his fleſh; ſtill doing that evil he allowed not, the evil which he hated, and he would not do; and who was ſtill brought into captivity to the law of ſin which was in his members.

Again, in his anſwer to theſe inquiries, he ſhews the Chriſtian could not continue in, or live any longer in it, becauſe he was dead to ſin, his old man was crucified with Chriſt, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth he might not ſerve ſin, ver. 2. 6.; and becauſe being dead to, he was freed from ſin, ver. 7. he was made free from ſin, and become the ſervant of righteouſneſs. But can he that is ſold under ſin, and is brought into captivity to the law of ſin which is in his members, be at the ſame time dead to ſin, and free from ſin? Can he who with his fleſh ſerves the law of ſin, be ſaid to ceaſe from ſin, and not henceforth to ſerve ſin; not to obey it in the luſts thereof, ver. 12.; not to yield his members inſtruments of ſin unto unrighteouſneſs, ver. 13.? Surely there is as clear an oppoſition betwixt the Chriſtian repreſented in the 6th chapter, as free from ſin, and in the 7th, as miſerably inſlaved to the law of ſin and death which was in his members, as betwixt light and darkneſs.

Again, he ſaith expreſsly, chap. 8. 2. The law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus hath made me free from the law of ſin and death. Whereas the perſon mentioned in the 7th, is ſold under ſin, is brought into captivity to the law of ſin, and crieth out under his bondage, O miſerable man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? He therefore cannot be the perſon freed by the Spirit from the law of ſin and death.

In fine, This expoſition of the cloſe of this chapter contradicts the beginning of it; for there the apoſtle ſaith of himſelf, and all his Chriſtian brethren, that this was only their ſtate under the law, from which they are delivered, that they might bring forth fruit unto God, and ſerve him in newneſs of ſpirit. For what elſe can be the meaning of theſe words, ver. 5. 6. For when we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſin which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death; but now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we ſhould ſerve God in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter? So that they who make the apoſtle ſay of himſelf, that he was brought into captivity to the law of ſin, which was in his members, and to cry out, O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? i. e. this body of ſin which worketh death; make him alſo to confeſs, that the motions of ſin did ſtill work in his members, to bring forth fruit unto death, and therefore that he was ſtill in the fleſh. I therefore conclude this diſcourſe in the words of Grotius on ver. 19. Deo laus ſit, quod optimi, i. e. trium priorum ſeculorum Chriſtiani, hunc locum, ſicut oportet, intellexerint, dictante illo Spiritu per quem vita illorum regebatur.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. (BEing then married to this other huſband, Chriſt, and ſo freed from the motions of ſin, which are by the law, that we may ſerve God in newneſs of ſpirit, chap. 7. 4. 5. 6. there is therefore (ἄρα, verily) now no condemnation to them which are in [a] Chriſt Jeſus (by faith, they being ſuch) who walk not after the fleſh, (as whilſt they were under the law they did), but after the Spirit, (conferred upon them by faith in Chriſt.)

2. For [b] the law of the Spirit of life (given to them who are) in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me (believing in him) free from the law of ſin, and (ſo from that) death) which is the wages of it.)

3. [c] For what the law could not do, (i. e. that life, and that deliverance from death it could not give), in that it was (made) weak through the fleſh, (rendering us ſubject to the tranſgreſſion of it, and ſo to death), God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh (did, and [d] for ſin (Gr. καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and) [d] by a ſacrifice for ſin) condemned ſin in the fleſh, (i. e. took away its power to condemn us, the condemnation due unto us for it, being inflicted on him.)

4. That the [e] righteouſneſs of the law (i. e. the inward purity and righteouſneſs the law required) might be (performed, and) fulfilled in (and by) us, who walk not after (the luſts of) the fleſh, but after the (motions of the) Spirit. Or,

" That the juſtification which the law promiſed, " by ſaying, Do this, and thou ſhalt live, Luke 10. " 28. Deut. 4. 1. and 30. 15. 19. Ezek. 20. 11. and " that this ſhall be thy righteouſneſs, Deut. 6. 25. " might be completed in us, who walk according " to the Spirit, and ſo are abſolved not only from " condemnation for our paſt ſins, by faith; but " from condemnation by the new covenant, by " walking according to the Spirit; for to be ſpiri- " tually-minded is life, ver. 6."

5. (Not after the fleſh, I ſay), for they that are of the fleſh, do mind the things of the fleſh, (i. e. affect, and deſire, and purſue carnal things); but they that are after the Spirit, (affect, deſire, and purſue) the things of the Spirit; (and ſo the one purſues the things which tend to death, and the other thoſe things which tend to life.)

6. For [a] to be carnally-minded is (the way which tends to) death; but to be ſpiritually-minded is (the way that leads to) life and peace, (ver. 7. which life and peace cannot be obtained by them that are carnally-minded):

7. Becauſe the carnal mind is (that which ſets us at) enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be (ſubject to it, whilſt it continues ſuch.)

8. So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God.

9. But (it is not ſo with you Chriſtians, for) ye are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, [b] if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt (dwelling in him), he is none of his.

10. But if Chriſt be in you (by his Spirit), [c] the body is dead, (it is indeed mortal), becauſe of ſin, (which will never ceaſe to be in us till we die); but the Spirit is life, (i. e. will give life to it again), becauſe of righteouſneſs, (or of that juſtification which is unto life, Rom. 5. 17. 18.)

11. But (for) if the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, (by the Spirit dwelling in him), [d] ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his (ſame) [e] Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the fleſh, to live after the fleſh (any longer, but rather to live after the Spirit.)

13. For if ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die, (i. e. be ſubject to death, as the puniſhment of ſin, or to the ſecond death): but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the fleſh, ye ſhall live, (and your bodies ſhall be raiſed to eternal life.)

14. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the [f] ſons of God.

15. For ye have not received [g] the ſpirit of bondage again to (the) fear (of death, as they who were under the law did, that threatened death to every one that continued not in all things written in the law to do them, Deut. 27. 26.); but ye have received the Spirit of adoption (given to us becauſe we are ſons, Gal. 4. 6.), whereby we cry, Abba, Father; (i. e. we are aſſured that God is our Father, and ſo that we are heirs of God, and ſons of the reſurrection.)

16. (For) the Spirit itſelf (Gr. the ſame Spirit) beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God, (and this gives us a full aſſurance of that bleſſed life, enabling us to conclude thus.)

17. And if (therefore we be) children, then (are we alſo) heirs, [h] heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt, (the Son of God, now reigning gloriouſly in heaven): if ſo be we ſuffer with him, (and ſo be conformed to his image, ver. 29.), that we may be alſo glorified together.

18. (Which ſufferings we have reaſon to endure for the ſecuring this glorious eſtate); for I reckon that the ſufferings of this preſent time (we live in this world) are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be revealed [i] in us, (or to the glory afterwards to be revealed to us.)

19. For (ſo deſirable is it, that) [k] the earneſt expectation of the creature (ſubject now to vanity) waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God; (i. e. the whole race of mankind earneſtly expects it.)

20. For the creature was made ſubject to vanity, not willingly, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubjected the ſame; (i. e. the ἡ κτίσις, whole race of men, ἡ κτίσις ἀνθρωπίνη, 1 Pet. 2. 13. were made ſubject to corruption, not of their own accord, but by reaſon of Adam, who by his ſin ſubjected his poſterity to death and corruption, and the earth to a curſe, Gen. 3. 17. and this creature waiteth)

21. [l] In hope, becauſe (Gr. ὅτι, that) the creature itſelf alſo ſhall be (then) delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God.

22. For we know that the [m] whole creation (all mankind) groaneth, and travaileth in pain together (under this bondage to corruption) until now.

23. And not only they, but ourſelves alſo, who have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourſelves groan within ourſelves, waiting for the [n] adoption, (viz. the glorious reſurrection, and thereby) the redemption of our body.

24. (Waiting, I ſay, for it, though we do not ſee it), for (as yet) [o] we are ſaved (only) by hope; but hope (of a thing) that is ſeen, is not hope (truly ſo called): for what a man ſeeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25. But if we hope for that we ſee not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26. (And

26. (And as patience, ſo) likewiſe the [x] Spirit alſo helpeth (to relieve us in) our infirmities: for (when we are burthened with them) we know not what to pray for as we ought, (whether for increaſe of patience under, or deliverance from them: or if ſo, whether by abſence from the body, or being clothed upon); but the Spirit itſelf (or the ſame Spirit which teſtifies that we are the ſons of God, ver. 16.) intercedeth for us with groanings that cannot be utterred, (Gr. with ſilent groanings after this redemption, ver. 23. 2 Cor. 5. 2. 4. 5.)

27. And he that ſearcheth the hearts (of the ſaints), knoweth what is the mind (or the deſire) of the Spirit; for he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints, according to the will (or purpoſe) of God, (to give them this redemption of the body.)

28. And (though we know not in our diſtreſſes what to pray for in particular, or when we ſhall obtain this redemption of the body, ὑπερ αὐτ. yet) we know, that [y] all things ſhall work together for good (for ſecuring this happineſs) to them that love God, to them that are [z] called (to the adoption of ſons), according to his purpoſe (of bringing many ſons to glory by him, Heb. 2. 10. he having predeſtinated us to the adoption of ſons through Jeſus Chriſt, according to the good pleaſure of his will, Eph. 1. 5. according to his purpoſe in Chriſt Jeſus, 2 Tim. 1. 9.)

29. For whom he did (thus) [a] foreknow, he alſo did [b] predeſtinate (or appoint) to be conformed to the image of his Son, (by having their vile bodies changed into the likeneſs of his glorious body, Phil. 3. 21.), that he might be the firſt-born (or chief) among many brethren; (who are to be co-heirs and glorified together with him, ver. 17.)

30. And (the method he uſed to bring thoſe whom he had deſigned to be thus conformed to the image of his Son, was this, viz.) whom he thus predeſtinated, them he alſo called, (firſt to the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith); and whom he called, (upon their cordial embracing of that faith), them he alſo juſtified, (and ſo freed from condemnation to death); and whom he juſtified, them he alſo [c] glorified.

31. What ſhall we ſay then, (Gr. what ſay we then) to theſe things? i. e. what further ground of aſſurance, and ſo of patient waiting for theſe things can we want?): for if God be for us, who can (ſucceſsfully) be againſt us? (ſo as to fruſtrate, or deprive us of this glorious ſtate.)

32. He that (in purſuance of this deſign) ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for (the redemption of) us all, how ſhall he not alſo with him freely give us all things (belonging to that glory and happineſs he hath purchaſed for us?)

33. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? (i. e. to them who are called by him to Chriſtianity, to hinder their redemption, by charging them with that guilt which rendereth them obnoxious to death)? it is God that juſtifieth, (and who will therefore glorify them):

34. Who is he that condemneth (them to abide ſtill under the power of death?) It is Chriſt that died, (to redeem them from it); yea rather that is riſen again, (for their juſtification, Rom. 4. 24. And if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life, Rom. 5. 10.), who is even at the right hand of God, (inveſted with all manner of power, that he ſhould give eternal life unto them, John 17. 2.); who alſo maketh interceſſion for us, (and ſo is able to ſave us to the uttermoſt, εἰς τὸ παντελὲς, Heb. 7. 25.)

35. [d] Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? (that love which he hath ſhewed in procuring this redemption for us, ver. 37.?): ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword?

36. (Befalling us), as it is written, (Pſal. 44. 22.), For thy ſake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as ſheep (appointed) for the ſlaughter.

37. Nay, (as there it is ſaid, All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falſely in thy covenant, ver. 17. 18. ſo may all this happen to us, ἀλλ', but) nay in all theſe things we are (already) [e] more than conquerors through (the grace and ſpirit of) him that loved us.

38. (And I truſt, after this happy experience, it will be ſo ſtill); for I am perſuaded that neither (fear of) death, nor (hope of) life, nor (evil) angels, nor principalities, nor powers (perſecuting us for Chriſt's ſake), nor (the) things (we endure at) preſent, nor things to come, (or which we may hereafter ſuffer),

39. Nor height (of honour), nor depth (of ignominy), nor any other creature (or thing), ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God, which is (vouchſafed to us) in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VIII.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἐν Χριστῷ. in Chriſt.] The phraſe εἶναι ἐν Χριστῷ. to be in Chriſt, ſaith Mr Le Clerc, is often uſed by St Paul for being a Chriſtian; which note he borrowed from Caſtalio, who renders it Chriſtiani facti: but if either of them mean only Chriſtians by profeſſion, or by being only members of the Chriſtian church, this will by no means agree with this place, or any other of like nature; ſince freedom from condemnation, and other benefits conferred upon us through Jeſus Chriſt, will not follow our being Chriſtians in this ſenſe, but upon a lively faith in Chriſt, our union to him by the Spirit, and our being ſo in him as to become new creatures, according to thoſe words, ver. 9. If any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt dwelling in him, he is none of his; 2 Cor. 5. 17. They that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh, with its affections and luſts. See 1 Cor. 1. 30. 2 Cor. 10. 7. and 13. 5. Gal. 3. 28. 29. and 5. 6. 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. 1 John 5. 20.

Ibid. Τοῖς μὴ κατὰ σάρκα περιπατοῦσι, ἀλλὰ κατὰ πνεῦμα.] Theſe words, ſaith Dr Mills, are an addition to the text; ſee the proof of the contrary, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 2. [b] Ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος, for the law of the Spirit of life;] i. e. the Spirit of Chriſt giving me a new life, is now another law, or rule of my actions, freeing me from the motions and power of ſin, to which I was ſubject whilſt under the law, and from the death to which that ſubjected me; or the goſpel, attended with the Spirit, hath wrought this freedom in me, as Methodius interprets the words, ὁ γὰρ νόμος τοῦ πνεύματος, ὁ δὴ ἐστι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, Method. apud Phot. p. 918. v. 3.

Ver. 3. [c] Τὸ γὰρ ἀδύνατον τοῦ νόμου, for what could not be done by the law,] i. e. that freedom from the guilt of ſin and death it could not miniſter, ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ υἱὸν πέμψας ἐν ὁμοιώματι σαρκὸς ἁμαρτίας, God ſending his Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, ſub. δυνατὸν ἐποίησεν, hath made feaſible. Examples of the like ellipſis are numerous: ſo Luke 11. 17. Every kingdom διαμερισθεῖσα, divided againſt itſelf is brought to deſolation, καὶ οἶκος ἐπὶ οἶκον, ſub. διαμερισθεὶς, and an houſe (divided) againſt a houſe falleth. That this is the ſenſe, is evident from Matth. 12. 25. and Mark 3. 25. where it is οἰκία μερισθεῖσα καθ' ἑαυτὴν; ſo κωλύοντων, commanding, is to be underſtood after χωλύοντων, forbidding, 1 Tim. 4. 3.; and καυχάσθω, let him rejoice, is to be ſupplied from the 9th verſe, James 1. 10.

Ibid. [d] Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and for ſin.] This phraſe in the Old Teſtament is the uſual phraſe for a ſin-offering; ſo a bullock for a ſin-offering is μοσχος περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 4. 3. 18. and 8. 2. 14. and 9. 2. 8. and 16. 3. 6. 27. and ver. 9. 11.; the lamb for a ſin-offering is πρόβατον περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 4. 32. or ἀμνὸς περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 5. 6. 7. Numb. 6. 16.; and in like manner, the goat for a ſin-offering is χίμαιρα περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 5. 6. or χίμαιρος, Lev. 9. 3. 15. and 10. 6. and 16. 5. 15. 27. and 23. 19. &c.; the dove for a ſin-offering is ὁ τρύγων περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 5. 7. and 12. 6. 8. and 14. 22. 31. and 15. 15. &c.; the ſin-offering is τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 5. 8. 9. 11. and 6. 30. and 7. 7. 37. &c.; and ſo in many other places. This therefore is ſufficient to eſtabliſh the ſenſe of theſe words given in the paraphraſe. Now, the conſtant effect of this ſin-offering was this, to make an atonement for the ſin committed, that it might be forgiven, and the guilt of it might be done away. It therefore ſeems moſt reaſonable to interpret the effect of this ſacrifice delivered in theſe words, And for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh, agreeably to the conſtant deſign of all ſacrifices for ſin; and then theſe words muſt ſignify, not that he gave us power to kill ſin, or by this example of his wrath againſt it engaged us to forſake our ſinful courſes, but that he took away its condemning power; he condemned that which before condemned us, enabling us to ſay, τίς ὁ κατακρινῶν; who is he that condemns us? It is Chriſt that died, chap. 8. 34. He killed ſin, or made it dead by that death which cauſed it not to be imputed to us to death, 2 Cor. 15. 19.: and this is the thing which the law could not do; it could not give life to a perſon condemned to death, Gal. 3. 21.; it could not juſtify or free us from condemnation.

Ibid. [e] Καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and by a ſacrifice for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh.] The plain meaning of theſe words, ſaith Mr L. is this, "that ſin itſelf was "condemned or put to death in Chriſt's fleſh, i. e. "was ſuffered to have no life or being in the fleſh "of our Saviour, he being in all things tempted as "we are, yet without ſin, Heb. 4. 15." But this certainly is a falſe interpretation; for as ſin could not be put to death in him in whom it never lived, or could have any being, ſo much leſs could this be done by his offering a ſacrifice for ſin, that being only done at the cloſe of his life; whereas Chriſt was free from ſin from his conception, and being done then by a ſin-offering to make atonement for the guilt of ſin. The true meaning of the words is therefore this, That juſtification, or freedom from the guilt of ſin, which the law could not procure, becauſe of the weakneſs of the fleſh, rendering us obnoxious to ſin, and ſo to death for it; God, by ſending his Son in our human nature, did procure, and by giving up his Son to be a ſacrifice to make atonement for the ſin committed by the fleſh, ἔκρινε κατ' ἁμαρτίαν, he judged againſt ſin in the fleſh; that is, either he ſhewed that it deſerved condemnation, as requiring an atonement to free us from the guilt of it, or elſe he, by this ſacrifice, condemned that which before condemned us, and took away its power of condemning believers, enabling them to ſay, Who is he that condemns us? It is Chriſt that died, ver. 34.

Ver. 4. [f] Τὸ δικαίωμα τοῦ νόμου, the righteouſneſs of the law,] is a phraſe which occurs only here, and chap. 2. 26. where it plainly ſignifies the righteouſneſs contained in the moral law, or thoſe internal principles of holineſs, juſtice, and goodneſs, which are compriſed in it, theſe being the weightier matters of the law, Matth. 23. 23. and the only things in which which the uncircumciſion, or the Gentiles, could keep τὰ δικαιώματα τοῦ νόμου, the righteouſneſs of the law. Here therefore I conceive the phraſe bears the ſame ſenſe, and confutes the vain imaginations of the Antinomians.

That which hath made moſt commentators interpret the 3d verſe otherwiſe than I have done, ſeems to be this, that they ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered the double effect of our Lord's death and paſſion, and the order in which they are placed in ſcripture, viz. 1. Freedom from condemnation, juſtification, and reconciliation to God. And, 2. The vouchſafement of his Spirit, as the conſequent of that faith which rendereth us the ſons of God; God being firſt reconciled to us by faith in his Son's blood, and then giving us this token of his love, viz. his Spirit to dwell in our hearts; by the firſt of which we are juſtified, and by the ſecond we are ſanctified; by the firſt freed from the law of death, by the ſecond from the law of ſin, 1 Cor. 6. 11. The firſt is the grace of God; we being juſtified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 3. 24. The ſecond is the gift through grace; the firſt juſtification, the ſecond ἡ δωρεὰ δικαιοσύνης, the gift following upon our juſtification, being juſtified freely by his grace, we have peace with God, chap. 5. 1.: and then the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Spirit that he hath given us, ver. 5.; Ye are all ſons of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, Gal. 4. 6.; whence he is here ſtyled the Spirit of adoption, Rom. 8. 15.; Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, that the bleſſing of Abraham (i. e. juſtification by faith) might come upon the Gentiles, that they might receive the promiſe of the Spirit, Gal. 3. 14.; for believing in him, we are ſealed with the Holy Spirit of promiſe, Eph. 1. 14. Now, theſe two being always connected, the apoſtle goes frequently from the one to the other; firſt mentioning our freedom from condemnation, then our walking in the Spirit, ver. 1. 2.; our freedom from the guilt of ſin by the death of Chriſt, ver. 3. and then our fulfilling the righteouſneſs of the law by the Spirit of Chriſt, ver. 4.; and becauſe the law could not juſtify, or free us from the condemning power of ſin, therefore concluding that it could not give the Spirit of Chriſt to ſanctify us, and that we therefore muſt be freed from the law, that we might ſerve God in the newneſs of the Spirit, chap. 7. 6. Gal. 3. 3. ver. 6. 7. 9.

Ver. 6. 7. [a] To be carnally-minded, (Gr. φρόνημα σαρκὸς, the wiſdom of the fleſh), is death; becauſe the carnal mind (Gr. the wiſdom of the fleſh) is enmity to God; for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither can be: ſo they who are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God.] Hence it is by ſome inferred, that the unregenerate can do nothing that is truly good, nothing but what is evil and diſpleaſing to God.

To this I anſwer, that this is one of the texts abuſed by ancient heretics, to prove that the fleſh was by nature evil. We learn from Epiphanius (r), and from St Chryſoſtom upon the place, who therefore well obſerves, that by fleſh here we are not to underſtand the body, or the ſubſtance of the body, ἀλλὰ τὸν σαρκικὸν βίον καὶ κοσμικὸν, καὶ τρυφῆς, καὶ ἀσωτίας γέμοντα, τὸν ὅλον σάρκα ποιοῦντα τὸν ἄνθρωπον, but a worldly carnal life, full of luxury and riotous living, and turning the whole man into fleſh; as is evident from the phraſe, the wiſdom of the fleſh, engaging us only to mind the things of the fleſh, and to be of the fleſh, as the true Chriſtian is of the Spirit, being led by, and walking in the Spirit. And ſaith Methodius (ſſ), were this ſaid of them who are in this body of fleſh, that they cannot pleaſe God, they who commit theft, whoredom, or any other like ſin, could not, on this account, be ſubject to reprehenſion by a juſt judge, it being then impoſſible for the fleſh to be ſubject to the law of God; nor could then the intemperate perſon be reduced to chaſtity and virtue, the body lying under a natural neceſſity not to be ſubject to the law of God.

2. The apoſtle doth indeed ſay, that they who thus mind carnal things, while they continue ſo to do, cannot pleaſe God; this being only in effect to ſay, in the words of Chryſoſtom, ἀδύνατον πονηρὰν μένοντα, that whilſt men go on in their ſinful courſes, they cannot pleaſe God, or live in ſubjection to his laws: but then, ſaith he, as Chriſt only ſays, An evil tree, whilſt it continues ſuch, cannot bring forth good fruit, but doth not ſay an evil tree cannot be made good, but on the contrary ſaith, Make the tree good, that the fruit may be good, Matth. 12. 33. ſo is it here: for the apoſtle, by his frequent exhortations to theſe carnal men, to crucify the fleſh, and mortify the fleſh, with its luſts, or the deeds of it, and to put off the old man with his deeds; by his threats, that if they live after the fleſh, they ſhall die; and by his promiſes, that if through the Spirit they do mortify the deeds of the fleſh, they ſhall live; doth ſhew, that men may ceaſe to live according to the fleſh, and may ſo mortify the deeds of the fleſh, that they may live. God, ſaith Chryſoſtom, hath put this ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ προαιρέσεως, in our free choice; ſo that, ἐὰν σὺ λοιπὸν ἐθέλῃς καὶ τοῦτο γένεσθαι, κἀκεῖνο, ſince the vouchſafement of the goſpel, it is in thine own power to be carnally minded, or ſpiritually, there being now greater ſtrength and inducement ſo to be than ever.

Ver. 9. [b] If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature; creature; and he that hath not the Spirit of Christ dwelling in him, is none of his.] Hence it is plain, that none are truly said to be in Christ, by a profession of faith, provided they live not answerable to that profession, or be not renewed in mind, will, affections, and conversation; and from the following words, If the Spirit of Christ dwell in you, he that raised the Lord Jesus from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit dwelling in you; it is evident, 1. That it is not the soul, but the mortal body, which the Spirit is said here, ζωοποιῆσι, to give life to. 2. That the promise of being raised by the Spirit of Christ belongs only to them whose bodies shall be raised to the resurrection of life eternal; as for others, they being only χριστιανοὶ ὀνομαζόμενοι, Christians in name, and not in truth and sincerity, 1 Cor. 5. 11. and persons to whom Christ will then say, I never knew you, they shall be raised by the power of Christ, but not by virtue of any union with the Spirit of Christ.

Ver. 10. [1] Τὸ μὲν σῶμα νεκρὸν δι' ἁμαρτίαν, the body is dead because of sin.] That the apostle speaks not here of a moral, but of a natural death of the body, appears from this consideration, that in the verse following he speaks of this mortal body, and of the raising it from the dead; and that by the Spirit, he doth not understand the spirit of a man, but the Holy Ghost, is also evident, because this Spirit, in the foregoing verse, is the Spirit of Christ; in the following verse, the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead, and will raise us, in whom he doth inhabit, from it.

Now, the reason why, after our freedom from condemnation by the death of Christ, our bodies are still subject to death, is thus assigned by the fathers (t); "Because should we have lived for ever in "this imperfect state, we should have sinned for "ever; and therefore God permits good men still "to die, that sin might not live for ever in them; "doing this not out of his displeasure to punish them "for sin, but out of mercy to free them from it."

Ver. 11. [2] Ζωοποιήσει τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν, shall quicken your mortal bodies.] The late commentator and paraphrast, here exposed by Mr Locke, is D. W. and yet he is so unhappy, as neither to approve of Mr L.'s interpretation, nor dislike his own. He cannot approve of Mr L.'s interpretation, that σῶμα νεκρὸν, and θνητὸν, signify a body morally dead, because sin reigns not in it: 1. Because σῶμα νεκρὸν, absolutely put, bears no such sense in scripture, but only signifies a body without life, or breath, James 2. 26. 2. Because this interpretation makes the apostle say, ver. 10. the body is dead already, i. e. as to all activity of sin, which reigns no longer in it, its sinful carnal lusts being mortified; and yet makes him promise, ver. 11. that if the Spirit of God dwell in us, God shall quicken our mortal bodies, i. e. saith Mr L. he shall deliver them from the dominion of their carnal lusts; that is, it makes him promise God shall do hereafter what he told us, ver. 10. was already done. 3. In those words, he that raiseth Christ from the dead, the apostle must be supposed to speak of a real death of the body; and therefore, in the latter clause of the same sentence, he shall quicken their mortal bodies; it is reasonable to conceive, he speaks of quickening those bodies in the same sense, viz. by raising them from the dead. Nor hath Mr L. said any thing of weight against this sense. For,

First, Whereas he saith, It cannot be proved that θνητὰ, mortal bodies, here signifies the same as νεκρὰ. 1*st*, He hath not proved the contrary. 2*dly*, His own interpretation plainly makes them both to signify the same. And, 3*dly*, What is more likely than that σῶμα νεκρὸν, ver. 10. and σώματα θνητὰ, ver. 11. should be of the same import?

Secondly, When he addeth, that θνητὸν, mortal, always signifies the thing joined with it to be living; he considered not that the same apostle saith, That at the resurrection from the dead, τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, this mortal body shall put on immortality; and that, when τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, this mortal body shall have put on immortality, death shall be swallowed up in victory. 2*dly*, I add, that θνητὸν, when it relates, as here, to a body to be quickened, never bears any other sense, but that of a dead body.

Thirdly, If by quickening here, saith he, be meant the raising them to life from the dead, how can this be mentioned as a peculiar favour to those who have the Spirit of God? For God will also raise the bodies of the wicked. Answ. True; but he will raise them by his power, not by his Spirit dwelling in them. Not as the sons of God, to be made joint-heirs with Christ, ver. 16. 17.; but as the children of Satan,

ſo be caſt into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Not, laſtly, to live an happy life, ver. 13. but to die the ſecond death.

Laſtly, Whereas he objects the want of connection, in this interpretation, with the ſubject the apoſtle is here diſcourſing of, that is very plain; for the apoſtle is here diſcourſing of the benefits and advantages which Chriſtians ſhall receive by living, not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit; that this will cauſe them to mind ſpiritual things, ver. 5.; that it will give them life and peace, ver. 6.: ſo that though their bodies die becauſe of ſin, they ſhall obtain an happy reſurrection, through the Spirit dwelling in them, διὰ ὃν, therefore, ſaith he, ver. 12. 13. we are debtors not to live after the fleſh; for they that do ſo, ἀποθνήσκειτε, ſhall die, (not in the moral, but the penal ſenſe); but they who through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the fleſh, ſhall live; for ver. 14. As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God; and ſo ſhall obtain the adoption, i. e. the redemption of the body from corruption, ver. 23.

Ibid. [1] Διὰ τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος πνεύματος ἐν ὑμῖν, by the Spirit that dwelleth in you.] This is ſpoken, according to the opinion of the Jews, that the reſurrection ſhall be effected by virtue of the Holy Spirit; which they conclude from thoſe words of the prophet Ezekiel, chap. 37. 9. 10. Come, O Spirit, from the four winds, and blow upon theſe dead, that they may live. Thus was our Lord raiſed from the dead, 1 Pet. 3. 18. Thus ſhall we be raiſed, who are the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, ſaith this verſe. And with this agrees the doctrine of the ancient fathers: "Our bodies "riſing by the Spirit," ſaith Irenæus (u), "ſhall be "made ſpiritual; and by the Spirit ſhall have life." (x) They who are dead and buried with Chriſt, "may know, that by the Spirit, which raiſed him "up, they ſhall be raiſed." So Origen.

Ver. 14. [m] Υἱοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ſons of God.] The ſtrength of this argument will be exceeding clear from theſe conſiderations: That the adopted ſons of God are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, and ſo muſt reign with him, ver. 17.; which, till they live again, and be raiſed from the dead, they cannot do: and that their adoption is the redemption of their bodies from corruption, ver. 23. 2*dly*, That we are then completely the ſons of God, when we are ſons of the reſurrection, Luke 20. 37. when we have overcome, according to thoſe words, Rev. 21. 7. He that overcometh, ſhall inherit all things; and I will be to him a God, and he ſhall be to me a ſon. And ſomething like this is that of the Jews on theſe words, Pſal. 72. 17. יִנּוֹן שְׁמוֹ, filiabitur nomen ejus; for, ſay they, (y) his name is called Jinnon, quia ipſe filiaturus eſt omnes dormientes in pulvere; becauſe he will raiſe, and ſo make ſons, all that ſleep in the duſt.

Ver. 15. [n] Πνεῦμα δουλείας, the ſpirit of bondage.] That the law was to the Jews a yoke of bondage, the apoſtle doth inform us, Gal. 5. 1.; and that they who were under it, were in bondage to the elements of the world, Gal. 4. 3. 8.; that it gendered to bondage, and ſubjected its children to bondage, ver. 24. 25. 31.; that they were all their lifetime ſubject to bondage, through the fear of death, he informs us, Heb. 2. 15.: and they had reaſon ſo to be, ſince, as the apoſtle teacheth, the law given by Moſes did not exempt them from the death which Adam's ſin had brought upon them, but rather made that death abound, and them obnoxious to it on many freſh accounts; for the law entered that the offence might abound (unto death), Rom. 5. 1.; and the law coming, ſin revived, and I died; and the commandment was found to be unto death, the motions of ſin, which were by the law, working in their members to bring forth fruit unto death, chap. 7. 4. 10. This therefore gives a clear account of the paraphraſe of the firſt part of the verſe: but we, ſaith he, ſhall live a life immortal, and enjoy an happy reſurrection, as being the ſons of God; and, in token of this, we have received the ſpirit of adoption, enabling us to call God, Father; and aſſuring us we are his children, and ſo he being our God, muſt have prepared for us a city, Heb. 11. 16.

Ver. 17. [o] Κληρονόμοι μὲν Θεοῦ, the heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt.] All having our ſhare in this glorious inheritance, though he, as the eldeſt brother, hath a double portion.

Ver. 18. [p] Εἰς ὑμᾶς, often ſignifies, to, or towards us;] and is ſo rendered in this epiſtle, chap. 5. 8.; or, for us, as chap. 16. 6. See for the firſt ſenſe, 1 Cor. 14. 36. 2 Cor. 1. 11. and 9. 5. 8. and 10. 1. and 13. 3. Eph. 1. 8. 9. Col. 1. 6. 1 Theſſ. 4. 8. Heb. 2. 3.; and for the ſecond, 1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Cor. 2. 4. Eph. 3. 2. Ver. 19. [q] Ἀποκαραδοκία τῆς κτίσεως, the earneſt expectation of the creature.] Here it is to be noted, that, in the ſacred dialect, deſire and expectation is aſcribed to creatures in reference to things they want, and which tend to their advantage, though they explicitly know nothing of them. Thus the Meſſiah is called προσδοκία τῶν ἐθνῶν, the expectation of the Gentiles, Gen. 49. 10. מַשְׁתֹּ, the deſire of all nations, Hag. 2. 4.

Ver. 21. Ἐπ' ἐλπίδι, in hope.] So the Syriac and many Greek commentators do begin this verſe.

Ἀπὸ τῆς δουλείας τῆς φθορᾶς, from the bondage of corruption;] that is, from the mortality which all their lives-long made them ſubject to bondage, Heb. 2. 15.

Ver. 22. Πᾶσα ἡ κτίσις, the whole creation.] All the world under that ſenſe of mortality, which ſtill ſubjects them to bondage; for, as Cicero confeſſes, (z) "death muſt be terrible to thoſe who with "their life loſe the enjoyment of all good things; "and if it be an evil, muſt be an eternal evil, be- "cauſe it doth for ever deprive them of all good." That (a) mortis metu omnis quietæ vitæ ſtatus perturbatur, the fear of it diſturbs all the tranquillity of life. And that this renders our whole life miſerable, (b) Quæ enim poteſt in vita eſſe jucunditas, cum dies et noctes cogitandum ſit jam jamque eſſe moriendum? For what pleaſure can there be in that life which is perpetually perplexed with the thoughts of death?

Ver. 23. Υἱοθεσίαν, the adoption.] I know there is another expoſition of theſe words, to this effect: that by the creature, we are to underſtand the Gentile world, in oppoſition to the Chriſtian; the word בְּרִיאָה among the Rabbins ſignifying the Gentiles, in oppoſition to the Jews, the people of God; that their waiting for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God, is their waiting to ſee what the Jews will do, who of them will be true ſons of God, who not; who of them will embrace the faith of Chriſt, who not; their happineſs depending punctually upon the iſſue of this. Their being made ſubject to vanity, is their being ſubject to the vanity of their minds, ignorance, and idolatry, Rom. 1. 21. Eph. 3. 20. Eph. 1. 17.; that to this idolatry they were made ſubject, not willingly, but by the devil's impoſing it upon them, as an act of religion, ſaith the Reverend Dr Hammond: In pœnam incepti Babylonici, in puniſhment of their attempt to build the tower of Babel, ſaith Dr Lightfoot: That their hopes of being delivered from this bondage of corruption, is their hopes of being reſcued from this idolatry, thoſe filthy courſes they were engaged in, and the bondage they were in to Satan; and to be made Chriſt's freemen, to have a right to God's favour, and the future bleſſings conſequent upon it, the word φθορὰ having that ſenſe, Deut. 4. 16. Wiſd. 14. 12. 2 Pet. 1. 4. 2 Pet. 2. 12. 1 Cor. 15. 33. 2 Cor. 11. 3. But againſt every part of this interpretation there lies this objection, That it is not only wholly new, but wholly contrary to all antiquity, and alſo to the text; and it is liable to many juſt exceptions, as v. g. firſt, κτίσις, ſaith this interpretation, is the Gentile world, whereas πᾶσα κτίσις hath no ſuch ſenſe in ſcripture. The phraſe πᾶσα κλίσις is uſed but three or four times more in the New Teſtament; twice in the epiſtle to the Coloſſians, where Chriſt is ſtyled the firſt-born πάσης κτίσεως, of the whole creation, not only of the Gentile world: and the goſpel is ſaid to be preached ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, Col. 1. 23. (i. e.) to Jew and Gentile, to the whole world, or to all mankind, ver. 6. Once in St Peter, where ſubjection is required πάσῃ ἀνθρωπίνῃ κτίσει, to all magiſtrates among men, 1 Pet. 2. 13. not only Heathen ſure, but alſo Chriſtian, when the government ſhould be put into their hands. And once in St Mark, where the apoſtles are commanded to preach the goſpel πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, to every creature, Mark 16. 15. Now, becauſe the ſame diſciples are commanded to preach εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, to all nations, Matth. 28. 19. hence it is argued, that πᾶσα κτίσις ſignifies the Heathen world, in oppoſition to the Jews; whereas it plainly ſignifies all nations, both Jew and Gentile, as is evident from theſe words of Chriſt to them, that they ſhould preach in his name, repentance and remiſſion of ſins, εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem, Luke 24. 47. And ſo the whole foundation of this interpretation is deſtroyed; for in theſe places πᾶσα κτίσις is equivalent to all mankind.

To wait for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God, is not to wait to ſee what the Jews would do, who had not received the adoption, and were not the ſons of God, as wanting that faith by which men become ſons, Gal. 3. 26. but to expect τὴν ἡμετέραν τελείωσιν, our perfection, τὴν ἀφθαρσίαν, our advancement to a ſtate of incorruption; τὴν μέλλουσαν ἡμῶν δόξαν, our future glory; ſo Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact. For it muſt (by reaſon of the connective particle γὰρ) be the ſame with the glory that is to be revealed, ver. 18. and with the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, ver. 21. They expect, ſaith Origen, that time when thoſe things ſhall be revealed, which are prepared for them that are the ſons of God.

To be made ſubject to vanity, is not to be made ſubject to idolatry, but to be made ſubject to corruption, τῇ φθορᾷ; ſo Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact; for τὴν ματαιότητα καλεῖ τὴν φθοράν, he calls that mutability and vanity, to which all things in the world are ſubject, corruption, ſaith Theodoret. When the apoſtle ſaith, the creature was made ſub- ject to vanity, and in bondage to corruption, (c) Mihi videtur quod de hac materiali, et corruptibilis corporis ſubſtantia iſta dicuntur, neque enim corruptio alicui cuiquam dominatur niſi corpori: This, ſaith Origen, ſeems to be ſpoken of the body, for that only is ſubject to corruption: As is apparent alſo from the thing they groan for, viz. the redemption of the body from corruption, that this mortal might put on immortality, or be clothed with its houſe from heaven, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life, 2 Cor. 5. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 2. It cannot truly be ſaid that the Heathen were not willingly ſubject to idolatry; for the apoſtle ſaith, they ſubjected themſelves to it againſt the light of nature, and ſo became without excuſe, and that when they knew God, they did not glorify him as God, Rom. 1. 20. 21. 22. 23. And this ſenſe of the word vanity is very frequent in the pſalms, and in Eccleſiaſtes. Thus David contemplating the frailty of man, and how ſoon he vaniſheth away, cries out, Every man therefore is but vanity, τὰ σύμπαντα ματαιότης πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ζῶν, Pſal. 39. 5. 11. And again, ἄνθρωπος ματαιότητι ὡμοιώθη, Man is like to vanity, his days paſs away like a ſhadow, Pſal. 144. 4. And becauſe all things here below are ſo frail, ſo ſubject to change, and to vaniſh, and man hath ſo ſhort a time to poſſeſs them; therefore, ſaith the preacher, Vanity of vanities are they, all is vanity, Eccl. 1. 2. and when Adam became mortal, he called his ſon Abel, Vanity, Gen. 4. 2.

The vanity to which the whole creation is ſubject, doth not therefore ſignify the vain employments and diſtractions of this preſent life, but that ſtate of mortality, from which the Pſalmiſt infers, every man therefore is but vanity; for it is thus ſubject to vanity in hope of deliverance from that bondage of corruption, which Mr Cl. owns to be the corruption to which our body is naturally liable, and from which we Chriſtians wait to be delivered by the redemption of the body from corruption: See note on ver. 23. And therefore he who ſubjected us to this ſtate, is not God, who brought not death into the world, but Adam, by whom ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin. To be delivered from this bondage of corruption, is not to be delivered from idolatry, nor doth ματαιότης τῆς φθορᾶς ever bear this ſenſe; but the ſenſe is ὅτι οὐκ ἔτι ἔσται φθαρτὴ, the creature ſhall not then be corruptible, ἔσται γὰρ ἡ κτίσις ἄφθαρτος, ὥσπερ καὶ δι' ἡμᾶς γέγονε φθαρτὴ, for as the creature was made corruptible by us, ſo ſhall it be made incorruptible with us. So Oecumenius, Theodoret, Theophylact. For that which it groans for is its redemption from corruption, ver. 23. Having thus offered my reaſons againſt this interpretation, it will be very eaſy to confirm the ancient and true explication of the words from the ſcope and argument of the apoſtle here. For I have ſhewed from ver. 11. that the apoſtle is here treating of the reſurrection of the body to eternal life; that, ver. 13. he declares this life belongs to them alone who through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the fleſh; that, ver. 14. he proves they ſhall enjoy this life and reſurrection, becauſe they are the ſons of God; and, ver. 17. that being ſons, they muſt be heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt; firſt ſuffering, and then reigning in glory with him; that, ver. 18. to encourage Chriſtians thus to ſuffer, he ſhews the greatneſs of that glory they ſhall then enjoy, ſtyling it δόξαν μέλλουσαν ἀποκαλυφθῆναι, the glory to be revealed hereafter, i. e. after the ſufferings of this preſent life, to which it is oppoſed, are ended; for as Chryſoſtom and Theophylact well note, he ſaith not πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν ἄνεσιν, theſe ſufferings are not worthy to be compared to our future eaſe from them in this life; but πρὸς τὴν μέλλουσαν δόξαν, to our future glory in the next; when they that have communicated with Chriſt in his ſufferings, ſhall rejoice in τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, the revelation of his glory, ſaith St Peter, 1 Pet. 4. 13. συνδοξάσθητε, ſhall be glorified with him; here, ver. 17. this glory he ſtyles, ἀποκάλυψις τῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the revelation of the ſons of God, i. e. ſay the fathers, the time when they ſhall τὸν ἀφθαρσίαν ἀπολαμβάνεσθαι, become incorruptible, this corruptible putting on incorruption; when they ſhall appear to be the ſons of God, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, being ſons of the reſurrection, ver. 14. comforting them in the expectation of it, and their groaning after it, with this conſideration, that it is the expectation of all the world, and they groan together with them for it, deſiring with them to be delivered from this bondage to corruption, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God; and adding, that not only they, but even Chriſtians alſo, who had the firſt-fruits of that Spirit, who is the earneſt of our inheritance, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν περιποιήσεως, till the redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, Eph. 1. 14. and by whom we are ſealed up, εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως, to the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30. did groan, waiting for the adoption, viz. τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν, the redemption of our bodies from corruption, ver. 23. For that this was the thing for which they groaned, the ſame apoſtle informs us in theſe words: We that are in this tabernacle groan, being burthened, that we might be clothed upon with our houſe from heaven, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life, 2 Cor. 5. 2. 4. And as here, they who have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, do thus groan, ſo there it is ſaid, ver. 5. He who hath wrought this expectation in us is God, who hath alſo given to us the earneſt of his Spirit. That this was the ancient and almoſt primitive expoſition of theſe words, we learn from Irenæus (d), in theſe words, Oportet ergo et ipſam conditionem redintegratam ad priſtinum, ſine prohibitione ſervire juſtis ; & hoc apoſtolus fecit manifeſtum in ea quæ eſt ad Romanos, ſic dicens, Nam expectatio creaturæ revelationem filiorum Dei expectat : And from theſe of (e) Tertullian, Tunc erit mali finis, cum præſes ejus diabolus abierit in ignem, cum revelatio filiorum Dei redemerit conditionem a malo, utique vanitati ſubjectam. I differ only from the fathers in this interpretation, as to this ſingle circumſtance, that I do not extend this deſire of the redemption of the body from corruption to brute beaſts, and inſenſate creatures, but only to mankind in general, ſubject by Adam's fall to mortality.

Ver. 24. ᵃ Τῇ γὰρ ἐλπίδι ἐσώθημεν, we are ſaved by hope,] Of this reſurrection and redemption of the body, being begotten to a lively hope, through the reſurrection of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in the heavens for us, 1 Pet. 1. 5. ; and rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2. ; and through the Spirit waiting for the hope of righteouſneſs through faith, Gal. 5. 5.

Ver. 26. ᵃ Τὸ πνεῦμα, the Spirit,] Here cannot ſignify the ſpirit of a man, for that cannot be ſaid to help with us, being a conſtituent part of us ; or to intercede for us, when we know not ourſelves what to pray for as we ought ; for, ſaith Theophylact, Moſes thus prayed to ſee the land of Canaan, and Jeremy for the Jews, and St Paul to be delivered from the thorn in the fleſh : but that Spirit of God, who is ſaid to intercede for us, not as an advocate, or mediator betwixt God and us, that being the office of our great High Prieſt, but as an exciter or director of us in our addreſſes to God, to render them, for matter, according to the will of God, and for manner, fervent and effectual ; προσευχὴ ἐνεργουμένη, inwrought prayer, and to make our very ſighs and groanings prevalent ; for he is here ſaid only to intercede for us with ſighs and groanings, excited by him, after that redemption to which he ſealeth us, and of which he being the earneſt and pledge, we are hence moved with greater faith and fervency to long for the enjoyment of it. And this is the reaſon why I think not fit to interpret this paſſage with ſome of the fathers, of a public chariſma, or gift of prayer, ſince that muſt ſpend itſelf in words for the edification of the church, and not in ſilent groanings. See Exod. 2. 24. and 6. 5. Judg. 2. 18. Pſal. 38. 9. and 102. 20. Acts 7. 34. Thus when our Lord had twice groaned in the Spirit, John 11. 33. 38. he ſaith, I thank thee, O Father, that thou haſt heard me, ver. 41.

Ver. 28. ᵃ Πάντα, all things.] That under all things ſhould be comprehended the ſins of good men, is the unreaſonable ſuggeſtion of St Auſtin, and ſome of the ſchoolmen after him ; confuted by the declaration of God by Ezekiel, That if the righteous man forſake his righteouſneſs, and commit iniquity, in the ſin that he hath done, ſhall he die, Ezek. 18. ; and by this apoſtle declaring to the Hebrews, The juſt ſhall live by his faith ; but if he draws back, my ſoul, ſaith God, ſhall have no pleaſure in him, Heb. 10. 37. 38. 2*dly*, The teſt of love to God being keeping his commandments, this interpretation makes the ſenſe of theſe words run thus : To them that keep his commandments, even all their diſobedience to them ſhall work together for good. 3*dly*, If the word all things comprehend all the ſins that are, or can be committed by them that love God, they may as well rejoice in all their wickedneſs, as in all their ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt, ſeeing they may rejoice in that which by God's deſignation tendeth to their good ; and ſo all the motives urged, chap. 6. to engage them to die to ſin, and live no longer in it, muſt not only be enervated, but even eſteemed motives deſigned to hinder them from that which is for their good, or, according to the deſcants of St Auſtin and St Bernard, to hinder their proficience in caution and humility.

Ver. 28. ᵃ Called according to his promiſe.] From theſe words, ſome argue thus : If all that love God are called according to his promiſe, then had he no purpoſe of calling them that do not love him. If they who are foreknown are predeſtinated to be conformed to the image of his Son, they who are not conformed to it, were not foreknown. Now, in anſwer to theſe arguments, let it be obſerved, that this text expreſſly ſpeaks of thoſe who actually love God, not of thoſe whom God hath loved, with this ſuppoſed diſcriminating affection ; and that to love God, and to be called according to his purpoſe, are words put by way of appoſition, to ſhew that they are both of the ſame import ; that which God purpoſed, in calling us by Chriſt, being this, that we might be holy and unblameable before him in love, Eph. 1. 4. 9. ; ſo that the whole of this argument may be granted : they who are called by God according to his purpoſe, or are effectually called ; ſo that God's calling hath its deſigned effect upon them, being only ſuch as love God, and are conformed according to the image of his Son. And let it farther be obſerved, that when the apoſtle ſaith, in the following verſe, ὅτι οὓς προέγνω, for whom he foreknew, &c. the particle ὅτι is connective, and this verſe giving the reaſon, or confirmation of what was ſpoken in the former, it ſeems neceſſary to interpret theſe words thus, Whom he foreknew to be perſons called according to his purpoſe, and therefore qualified for the adoption mentioned, ver. 23. them he predeſtinated to be conformed according to the image of his Son: and it deſerves to be conſidered, that all antiquity to the time of St Auſtin, do, with one conſent, concur in the interpretation of Pſeud-Ambroſius on this place, viz. Quos præſcivit ſibi devotos, ipſos elegit ad promiſſa præmia capeſſenda; thoſe whom he foreknew would be devoted to his ſervice, he elected to the reward promiſed; ſuch perſons, thoſe whom he foreknew to be τοὺς ἀξίους τῆς κλήσεως, worthy to be called; ſo Theodoret and Theophylact. Some of them in their deſcants upon theſe words, called according to his purpoſe, expound them of the purpoſe, or free-will of man; declaring, that a man is called κατὰ προαίρεσιν, according to his choice; and that (f) ὁ κλήσις μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν καλουμένων σωτηρίαν ἠργάσατο, it is not the calling only, but the purpoſe of thoſe that are called, which works ſalvation. For who, ſaith Origen (g), ſhould be called to juſtification, but thoſe God loves. The apoſtle, ſaith he, τὴν τοῦ ἐφ' ἡμῖν αἰτίαν περίστησι τῇ προθέσει, καὶ τῇ προγνώσει, makes the will of man the cauſe of God's purpoſe and foreknowledge, by ſaying, We know, that all things work together for good to them that love God. Ὅτι ἄξιοι ὑπὲρ συνεργίας, they being worthy of his co-operation. And in his Latin commentary on theſe words, he ſaith, he uſes the word foreknew, to ſhew, that they were foreknown by God; in quibus ſciens quales eſſent, amorem ſuum Deus, affectumque poſuiſſet, " on whom God placed his " affection, as knowing what they would be."

2*dly*, If, ſaith he, you will refer this purpoſe to God, men are then called according to the purpoſe of him, qui ſciens in eis religioſam mentem, et ſalutis ineſſe deſiderium, " who knowing they had a " religious mind, and a deſire of ſalvation, called " them; and, in this ſenſe, neither the cauſe of " our perdition, or ſalvation, will be placed in " God's foreknowledge, nor our juſtification, only " in our calling;" neque gloriari de noſtra penitus poteſtate ſublatum eſt; " nor will our glorification " be wholly exempted from our own power." Moreover, he adds, that by embracing this abſurd opinion, which ſaith, man therefore is not juſtified, and ſo not glorified, becauſe he is not predeſtinated —, and that he is not predeſtinated, becauſe not foreknown; ingentem feneſtram aperiemus eis, qui negant in hominis poteſtate eſſe ut ſalvus fiat; " we " ſhall give great advantage to them who deny that " it is in the power of man to be ſaved;" whence they infer, that they are guilty of " no fault, who " are not juſtified, becauſe they are not called; are " not predeſtinated, are not foreknown." And Oecumenius ſaith, the apoſtle mentions being called according to the purpoſe, that he might not fall into an abſurdity, which would follow, εἰ ὁ Θεὸς τισὶν εὖ ἐποίησε, τισὶ δὲ οὔ, καὶ προσωπολημψίας ἀπαλλάττει τὸν Θεὸν, if God ſhould do good to ſome perſons, and not to others; and that he might free him from being an accepter of perſons. Wherefore, according to the received interpretation of the ancient fathers, the import of theſe words is this: Thoſe whom God foreſaw would be true lovers of him, fit for the kingdom of God, and ἄξιοι, worthy of the peace and bleſſings of the goſpel, he fore-appointed to be conformable to the image of his Son; that is, to be like him in glory, ver. 17.; them alſo he called in due time to the ſalvation promiſed, and offered in the goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 8. 9. Tit. 1. 2. 3.; and they believing in Chriſt, upon his call, he juſtified them from, and remitted all their paſt ſins, Acts 13. 38. 39. Eph. 1. 7.; and them he alſo glorified, by giving them that Spirit, who is the earneſt of that glory, Eph. 1. 13.; and, by participation of which Spirit, Chriſtians are ſaid not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but alſo to be changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory. So Origen on this place. And this expoſition agrees well with the context: For the apoſtle had ſaid before, that Chriſtians having the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, groaned after this redemption of the body, ver. 23. and 26.; that the Spirit helpeth their infirmities, interceding for them, with ſilent groanings after it; and that he intercedeth for the ſaints, according to the mind of God, to give them this redemption: and then it follows, οἴδαμεν δὲ, therefore we know, that all things ſhall work together for good to them that love God.

Ver. 29. Ὅτι οὓς προέγνω, for whom he did foreknow.] This particle ὅτι is connective; and this verſe giving the reaſon, or confirmation of what was ſpoken in the former, it ſeems neceſſary to interpret it thus, Whom he foreknew to be perſons called according to his purpoſe, and therefore qualified for this adoption. It therefore is to be obſerved, that the words know and foreknow, in the ſcripture-language, import an affectionate knowledge, joined with approbation and affection. So Matth. 7. 23. John 10. 14. 1 Cor. 8. 3. If any man love God, οὗτος ἔγνωσται, he is known of God, Gal. 4. 8.; but now that ye know God, or rather are known of God, 2 Tim. 2. 19. ἔγνω κύριος, the Lord knoweth who are his. So is the word προέγνω uſed in this epiſtle, chap. 11. 2. when the apoſtle ſaith, The Lord hath not caſt off his people οὓς προέγνω, whom he foreknew to be faithful (h), as were thoſe ſeven thouſand perſons who had not bowed the knee to Baal; whom he thus foreknew.

Ibid. Προώρισεν, he before appointed,] to be conformed to the image of his Son, that, as they had borne the image of the earthly Adam, they might alſo bear the image of the heavenly, 1 Cor. 15. 49. Having glorious bodies like to his, ſaith Theodoret; and this agrees well with the ſcope and ſubject-matter of this chapter, and with the following words, that he might be the firſt-born, or chief, among many brethren; for as here theſe brethren are ſaid to be co-heirs with him, the elder brother, ver. 17.; ſo elſewhere he is ſtyled, the firſt-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence, or that they might be changed into his image, by the participation of the ſame Spirit. See note on 2 Cor. 3. 18.

Ver. 30. Τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε, them he alſo glorified.] At preſent in their head Chriſt Jeſus, (they being bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. 1. 3.; they being quickened together with Chriſt, and raiſed up together, and made to ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. 2. 5. 6.); and them he will hereafter glorify by making their vile bodies like unto his glorious body. Or,

Τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε, them he hath alſo glorified;] by giving them that Spirit who is the earneſt of their glory. Ἐδόξασε διὰ τῶν χαρισμάτων, διὰ τῆς υἱοθεσίας· Διὰ τῶν χαρισμάτων τῆς υἱοθεσίας. So Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius. Ἐδόξασεν υἱοὺς ὀνομαζόμενος, καὶ πνεύματος ἁγίου ἐνεργάμενος χάριν, Theodoret and Theophylact. Magnificavit illos, ut ſimiles fiant filio Dei, Pſeud-Ambroſius. And by reaſon of which Spirit given, with the preaching of the goſpel, the miniſtration of juſtification is ſaid to be ἐν δόξῃ, in glory, as being the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 3. 8. 9. 10. 11.; and we, by participation of this Spirit of the Lord, are ſaid, not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but alſo to be changed into the ſame image with him from glory to glory, ver. 18. See the note there, and John 17. 22. So Origen on the place: De glorificatione poſſumus in præſenti ſeculo illud intelligere quod dicit apoſtolus, nos autem omnes revelata facie gloriam Domini ſpeculantes, eadem imagine transformamur a gloria in gloriam, tanquam a Domini Spiritu. In favour of this interpretation, let it be noted, that when the apoſtle ſpeaks of our final glorification in this chapter, he ſtill ſpeaks of it as of a thing future, ſaying, We ſhall be glorified with him, ver. 17. 18. 21.; whereas he here ſpeaks of it as a thing paſt, ſaying, Whom he hath juſtified, them he hath alſo glorified. So when a miracle was wrought in Chriſt's name, ἐδόξασε, God glorified him, Acts 3. 13. See Luke 4. 15. John 8. 54. and 11. 4. and 13. 31. 32. and 16. 14. 1 Cor. 12. 26. And when God wrought ſigns by Moſes, ἐδόξασεν αὐτὸν, he glorified him, Eccluſ 45. 3. See the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians.

Ver. 33. 34.] Here it is well obſerved by Mr L. that theſe words being read by way of interrogation, as is ver. 35. carry a full and clear ſenſe thus: Who ſhall plead againſt God's elect? Shall the God who juſtifies them do it? Who is he that condemns them? Can it be that Chriſt who died for them?

Ver. 35. Nothing ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus.] To anſwer the argument hence urged, to ſhew that men cannot fall from grace, becauſe if once they truly loved God, they cannot ceaſe to do ſo, let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That this inquiry is not, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love with which we love God and Chriſt? but, Who ſhall ſeparate us who truly love God, and teſtify that love by our obedience to his commands, John 15. 10. and our patient ſufferings for his ſake, ver. 36. 37. from his affections towards us?

The apoſtle therefore only intimates, that ſuch perſons continuing in the love of God, ſhall be preſerved by him from, or enabled to overcome the temptations here mentioned, and ſo ſupported by his grace and Holy Spirit, as to be able to triumph over them; but he doth not ſay that the love of no Chriſtian ſhall wax cold, Matth. 24. 12.; that none of them ſhall loſe his firſt love, Rev. 2. 6. Were there no fear of this, why doth Chriſt exhort his diſciples to continue in his love? John 15. 9. and his apoſtles exhort others to keep themſelves in the love of God, Jude ver. 21.; to continue in the grace of God, Acts 13. 43. to look diligently to it, that they fall not from the grace and favour of God? Heb. 12. 15. Note,

2*dly*, That the apoſtle doth not ſay that nothing ſhall ſeparate true believers from the love of God, or Chriſt; but only ſaith, πέπεισμαι, I am perſuaded nothing will do it; nor have I any cauſe to fear that any of theſe temporal ſufferings or enjoyments ſhould ſhake their ſtedfaſtneſs, in expectation of thoſe eternal and ineſtimable bleſſings which God hath promiſed, and Chriſt hath purchaſed for his church; theſe light afflictions being not worthy to be compared with the glory that ſhall be revealed, ver. 18. and all co-operating for the good of them that love God, ver. 28. That as for the weakneſs of the fleſh, which rendered theſe temptations ſo dreadful, and gave ſtrength unto them, they lived in hopes of a glorious redemption of the body from them, ver. 23.; and whilſt they groan under them, they have the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God to ſtrengthen them, and help them to bear their infirmities; a powerful and loving Father to be with them, a Saviour exalted to the right hand of God to intercede for them, ver. 33. 34.: upon all which accounts he might well ſay, I am perſuaded that none of theſe things ſhall ſeparate you from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

Jeſus. The apoſtle doth not by theſe words intend to teach believers, that they could not be ſhaken by theſe things; for this would have contradicted the drift of his epiſtles, in which he doth ſo often expreſs his fears, leſt they ſhould be ſhaken with them, and ſo far tempted by them, as to be moved away from the hope of the goſpel, Col. 1. 23. and render all his labours vain, 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. 4. and offers ſo many arguments and motives to prevent the effect of thoſe temptations; but only doth intend to ſay, that upon theſe conſiderations they had ſo great inducements to perſevere, and continue in the love of God, as made him ſtrongly perſuaded that they would do ſo.

Ver. 37. • Ὑπερνικῶμεν, we are more than conquerors;] for we not only bear, but glory in tribulations, Rom. 5. 3. We are in deaths often, but ſtill delivered from death, 2 Cor. 1. 10.; and as the ſufferings of Chriſt abound towards us, ſo alſo doth our conſolation under them abound through Chriſt.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. (AS for the unbelieving Jews, my brethren in the fleſh, that what I am to ſpeak concerning them may not ſeem to proceed from any diſaffection to them), I ſay the truth in Chriſt, I lie not, • my conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt, (i. e. I call Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt to bear witneſs with my own conſcience, that I only ſpeak the truth, when I ſay),

2. That I have great heavineſs and continual ſorrow in my heart, (on the account of their infidelity, that obduration, and ſpirit of ſlumber, and that rejection of them, which are the diſmal conſequences of their unbelief.)

3. For (ſo great is my concern for them, that were it proper, and could it avail to the procuring their ſalvation), • I could wiſh that myſelf were accurſed from Chriſt, for (theſe) my brethren, my kinſmen according to the fleſh.

4. (And ſurely, I have very great reaſon to be highly concerned for them) who are Iſraelites, (i. e. perſons deſcended from one whoſe faith and virtue were ſo eminent, that as a prince he prevailed with God, and ſo had his name changed from Jacob to Iſrael, as a mark of God's affection to him, Gen. 32. 28.), to whom pertaineth the adoption, (God having owned them as his ſons, and his firſt-born, Exod. 4. 22. 23. Hoſea 11. 1.), and the glory, (the Schechinah, or glorious preſence dwelling among them between the two cherubims, and from thence ſhining forth upon them, Pſal. 50. 2. and 80. 2.), and the covenants (made with Abraham, Gal. 3. 17. and with Moſes, Exod. 24. 8. the two covenants, Gal. 4. 24. the old and new covenant, Jer. 31. 31. and 32. 40.), and the giving of the law, (that writ with his own finger in tables of ſtone, Deut. 10. 1. 4. and many other excellent judicial laws), and the (acceptable) ſervice of God, and the promiſes, (not only of ſignal bleſſings in the land of Canaan to thoſe who ſhould obſerve his laws, but the promiſe of a Meſſiah, and of a new covenant eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes.)

5. Whoſe are the fathers, (they being the offſpring of thoſe patriarchs to whom the promiſes were firſt made, Heb. 11. 9. 13. 17.), and of whom, as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt (the promiſed Meſſiah) came, (he being born of one of their nation, and ſo, according to the fleſh, their offſpring, even he), who (according to his divine nature) is • over all, God bleſſed for ever. Amen.

6. (But we muſt) not (exaggerate this blindneſs and rejection of the Jews, whoſe were the covenants, and the promiſes, in prejudice of the veracity of God), as though the word of God had taken none effect, (i. e. the promiſes of God concerning the ſeed of Iſrael, and the bleſſings to be conferred upon them ουκ εἰληφασιν, had failed, this doth by no means follow); for they • are not all Iſrael who are of Iſrael, (i. e. all that are deſcended from the loins of Iſrael by carnal generation are not the children of the promiſe made to Jacob, Gen. 28. 14. which yet are only to be accounted for the ſeed, ver. 8.)

7. Neither becauſe they are the ſeed of Abraham (according to the fleſh), are they all children (of the promiſe made to Abraham), but (only they who are the ſeed of Iſaac, for thus the promiſe runs), In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called.

8. That is, they which are the children of the fleſh (of Abraham, and have the ſign of the covenant in their fleſh), theſe are not (on that account alone) the children of God, (of whom it is ſaid, I will be a God unto thee, and thy ſeed after thee, Gen. 17. 7.), but (they only who are) the children of the promiſe, (as Iſaac was), are (to be) • counted for the ſeed.

9. For this is the word of promiſe, (Gen. 18. 10.) At this time will I come, and Sarah ſhall have a ſon; (which words confine the children of the promiſe to the ſeed of Sarah, excluding that of Hagar from it.)

10. And not only this (inſtance is proper to demonſtrate the diſtinction of the ſeed of Abraham according to the promiſe), but (that) alſo (of) Rebecca, who conceived by one, even by our father Iſaac, (two children, born of the ſame father and of the ſame mother, and lying in the ſame womb.)

11. For the • children (of her womb) being not yet born, neither having done any good nor evil, (which might move God to diſlike the one more than the other, as may be alledged in the caſe of Iſhmael), that • the purpoſe purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of (Gr. from) works, but of him that calleth; (i. e. that the purpoſe of God in preferring one of theſe ſeeds and nations before the other, to be the promiſed ſeed, and ſo his church and people might appear to be, not on conſideration of their works, but his free choice.)

12. It was (then) ſaid unto her, The elder (in his poſterity) ſhall ſerve the younger, (i. e. ſhall be inferior to him, who had the right of primogeniture according to the fleſh.)

13. According to which preference it happened to their poſterity), as it is written, (Mal. 1. 2. 3.), Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated.

14. What ſhall we ſay then (after theſe inſtances?) Is there (any cauſe to ſay there is) unrighteouſneſs with God, (in taking them for the ſeed of Abraham, or for his ſons and people, the poſterity of Iſaac rather than of Iſhmael; the poſterity of Jacob rather than the Edomites; or in calling now the Gentiles, and, upon their faith, owning them for his people, the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, and rejecting the Jews from theſe advantages and privileges, becauſe of their unbelief?) God forbid (that we ſhould accuſe God of unrighteous dealing upon this account.)

15. For (to begin with the freedom which God reſerveth to himſelf, in ſhewing acts of grace and favour to an offending people, in this he only doth what) he ſaith to Moſes (he would do, making this declaration to him, Exod. 33. 19.), [a] I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion.

16. So then (theſe inſtances ſhew, that) [b] it is not of him that willeth, (for Abraham willed that Iſhmael might live to be partaker of the bleſſings promiſed to his ſeed, when he ſaid, O that Iſhmael might live before thee! Gen. 17. 18. and when he was grieved at the ſaying of Sarah, The Son of the bondwoman ſhall not be heir with my ſon Iſaac, Gen. 21. 11.), nor of him that runneth, (for when Eſau ran to fetch veniſon for his father, that he might receive the bleſſing, Gen. 27. 5. God's wiſdom ſaw it fit to have it otherwiſe); but of God that ſheweth mercy, (that any one is choſen to be the ſeed to which the promiſe made to Abraham belongs, and ſo to be his church and people.

" To proceed now to the other part of the ob" jection, the ſeeming injuſtice or ſeverity of reject" ing and reſerving them to wrath, and of giving " them up to an obdurate heart, who will not ac" cept of the way God hath appointed for their ju" ſtification, viz. that of faith in Chriſt, but rather
" will continue in their infidelity; this will be clear" ed by another inſtance, that of Pharaoh, who " had ſo often hardened his heart, refuſing to let
" Iſrael go."

17. For the ſcripture ſaith (upon that account) to Pharaoh, Even for this cauſe [c] have I raiſed thee up, (i. e. have made thee ſtand in the plague of boils, and prolonged thy life for ſome further time), that I might (the more illuſtriouſly) ſhew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth, (by that conſpicuous judgment I will execute upon thee, in the ſight of all nations of the earth, Joſh. 2. 10. 1 Sam. 4. 8.)

18. Therefore (from theſe inſtances and ſcriptures we may learn that) [d] he (God) hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and (that) whom he will he hardeneth, (or reſerves for puniſhment.)

19. Thou wilt ſay then to me, (againſt this account of the divine diſpenſations towards the unbelieving Jews, If God hardeneth us becauſe he will) why doth he yet find fault (with us for our impenitence), for who hath (at any time) reſiſted his will? (How therefore is it in our power to avoid being hardened, if it be his will we ſhould be ſo?)

20. Nay, but O man, who art thou that replieſt (thus) againſt God? Shall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made me thus?

21. Hath not the [e] potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour?

22. What (therefore) if God (being) [f] willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power (more illuſtriouſly) known, endured with much long-ſuffering (you refractory Jews, which were ſo long ago) the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, (or for breaking? Pſal. 31. 12.), what reaſon have you to complain againſt him on this account?

23. And (what if God), that he might make known the riches of his glory, (ſhewed mercy) on the veſſels of his mercy, [g] whom he had before (by working faith in them) prepared unto glory? (or to be a glorious church?)

24. Even us whom he hath called, (us, I ſay), not of the Jews only, (the natural ſeed of Abraham), but alſo of the Gentiles: (what is there in this that ſhould offend you?)

25. For firſt, as for the called Gentiles, is not this the very thing foretold by their own prophet Hoſea, when he introduceth God thus ſpeaking), As he ſaith alſo in Oſee, I will call them my people which were not my people; and her beloved which (then) was not beloved.

26. And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place (and nation) where (formerly) it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people, [h] there ſhall they be called (i. e. there ſhall ariſe a people which ſhall be called) the children of the living God.

27. (And whereas but a ſmall remnant of Iſrael have believed, and ſo but a few of them are fitted to be veſſels of his mercy, is not this alſo the very thing thing foretold by their own prophet) Eſaias alſo, (when he) crieth concerning Iſrael, (chap. 10. 22. 23.), Though the number of the children of Iſrael be as the ſand of the ſea, (yet) a remnant (only of them) ſhall be ſaved, (i. e. ſhall be converted to good, ſay the Jews, and ſo continue to enjoy the name and title of his people.

28. For (ſaith he) he will finiſh the work, and cut it ſhort in righteouſneſs, becauſe [a] a ſhort work will the Lord make upon the earth, (i. e. the land of Judea.)

29. And (this hath happened according) as Eſaias ſaid before, (chap. 1. 9. that there was a time when the ſins of that people were ſo highly provoking, that) except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a ſeed, (except his exceeding goodneſs had redeemed us in mercy, there were ſins in us, ſaith the Chaldee paraphraſt, for which) we had been as Sodom, and been made like unto Gomorrah.

30. [a] What ſhall we ſay then? (τι οὖν ἐροῦμεν; what do we ſay then? i. e. what is therefore the ſubſtance of what I have intended in this diſcourſe? it is even this), That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs, (i. e. who before the coming of Chriſt were not ſolicitous touching juſtification before God, as having no idea, and no notice of it, or call to it, and ſo as little thought of being preferred before Iſrael as Iſaac, being not born, of being preferred before Iſhmael, and Jacob in the womb, of being choſen to be the promiſed ſeed before Eſau), have (yet through God's grace and favour through faith) attained to righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of faith, (and ſo are made God's, and his peculiar people.)

31. But Iſrael (to whom the promiſes were firſt made, and) which followed after the law of righteouſneſs, (i. e. earneſtly purſued after righteouſneſs and acceptance by the works of the law), hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs, (or to the righteouſneſs which God accepteth.)

32. (And) wherefore (is it ſo?) Becauſe (they ſought not this juſtification) by (that) faith (which alone God preſcribeth for that end); but [c] as (if) it were (to be obtained) by the works of the law, (by which no fleſh can be juſtified, chap. 3. 20.; and the reaſon why they ſought it not by faith in Chriſt is this), for they [d] ſtumbled at that ſtumbling-ſtone; (and ſo it happened to them),

33. As it is written, Behold, I lay in Zion a [e] ſtumbling-ſtone, and a rock of offence; and whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed; (but they that believe not ſhall ſtumble, and fall, and be broken by the ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence, Iſ. 8. 14. 15.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IX.

Verſe 1. [a] Συμμαρτυρούσης μοι τῆς συνειδήσεως ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, my conſcience bearing witneſs in (or with) the Holy Ghoſt.] This verſe not only ſhews that in caſes of great moment, which cannot otherwiſe be ſufficiently confirmed, a Chriſtian may eſtabliſh his ſaying by an oath; but alſo that he may ſwear by Chriſt, and by the Holy Ghoſt, and call them to be witneſſes of the ſincerity of his own conſcience in what he doth aſſert. So Philo (i), Θεὸν μάρτυρα καλῶ τῆν συνειδότα, I call God to witneſs with my conſcience. Now, an oath being an act of religious worſhip, in which God is called upon as a witneſs to the truth, or an avenger of the falſehood of what we teſtify or promiſe, by ſwearing by our Lord Chriſt, and the Holy Ghoſt, the apoſtle muſt perform an act of religious worſhip to them, and by that agniſe their divinity, according to thoſe words of Moſes, Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his name, Deut. 6. 13. And by calling upon them to bear witneſs to the ſecrets of his heart and conſcience, he muſt aſcribe to them the knowledge of the ſecrets of the hearts of men, which is the property of God alone, 1 Sam. 16. 7. 1 Kings 1. 39. 1 Chron. 28. 9. Pſal. 7. 9. Jer. 11. 20. and 17. 10. and 20. 12.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἠυχόμην γὰρ ἀνάθεμα εἶναι, for I could wiſh myſelf accurſed.] The word Anathema being ſtill uſed in St Paul's epiſtles in the ſevereſt ſenſe, 1 Cor. 16. 22. Gal. 1. 8. 9; and the words ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, to be anathema from Chriſt, importing, in their literal ſenſe, a ſeparation from Chriſt himſelf, and not only from the external communion of his church, and being, in the deſcants of the Greek fathers (k), the ſame as χωρισθῆναι τῆς ἀγάπης, ἀπιστεῖν τῆς ἕξεως, ἀλλότριον εἶναι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, a ſalute ſeparari, to be ſeparated from the love of Chriſt, to be alienated from him, to fall from the glory and the ſalvation purchaſed by him; I think it reaſonable to interpret the apoſtle's words in this ſenſe. Nor is it a ſufficient objection againſt this interpretation, that this can be no truly Chriſtian wiſh; for the apoſtle doth not ſay, I wiſh, but as the ancients do well interpret him, εἰ ἠυχόμην, εἰ ἐβουλόμην, if it were proper to make ſuch a wiſh; if it would avail to make ſo great a multitude happy, ἠυχόμην, optarim equidem, I could even wiſh ſo great a bleſſing to my brethren, though with the loſs of my own happineſs.

Ver. 5. ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς εἰς αἰῶνας, who is God over all bleſſed for ever.] This place galls the Arians. The note of Le Cl. upon it is this, That "Dr Hammond ſhould rather have examined the "animadverſions of Grotius upon it, than copied "out Jewiſh fables, which make little to the purpoſe; Eraſmus having written enough to overthrow all that can be inferred from them: For if "what Grotius and Eraſmus have obſerved, ſtand "good, Dr Hammond's reaſoning cannot be thought "of any force." Now, here I might refer him to the ſolid confutation of what Eraſmus had ſaid, by Joſue Placæus, part 3. diſp 25.; or to himſelf, Art. Critic. part. 3. p. 102. 106. But to give him all poſſible ſatisfaction in this matter,

Firſt, I aſſert, that the reading we follow, is certainly the true reading;

1. Becauſe it is the reading with which all the verſions agree, the Latin, the Arabic, the Æthiopic, and the Syriac; for it is a miſtake in Grotius, when he inſinuates the contrary of the Syriac verſion, which in Tremellius runs thus; Qui eſt Deus, qui eſt ſuper omnia.

2. Becauſe it hath the general conſent, omnium ferme patrum, of almoſt all the fathers, who have thus cited it from the ſecond to the ſixth century, viz. the teſtimony of Irenæus, l. 3. 18. of Origen in locum, of Tertullian contra Praxeam, cap. 13. 15. Novatian. de Trin. cap. 13. 20. Cyprian. l. 2. de teſtim. contra Jud. ſect. 6. "Unus Deus ex "quo omnia.—Et, rurſum, ex quibus Chriſtus qui "eſt ſuper omnia Deus. Notat hic Eraſmus; Neſcio ex quibus MSS. adduxiſſe Hilarium hunc locum, omiſſa Dei mentione, quod tamen, inquit, "incuria librariorum omiſſum videri poteſt; de quo "ne quiſpiam ulterius dubitet, Eraſmi aut Grotii "verſutiis deceptus, en locum parallelum de Trin. "Sed non ignorat Paulus Chriſtum Deum, dicens, "quorum patres, et ex quibus Chriſtus, qui eſt ſuper omnia Deus, non hic creatura in Deum deputatur, ſed creaturarum Deus eſt qui ſuper omnia "Deus eſt. Verba hæc etiam in Chryſoſtomi textu "occurrunt, qui inſuper verba ſequentia ὃς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ab apoſtolo dicta pronunciat, pro "omnibus gratiarum actionem unigenito Dei referente; agnoſcente autem Eraſmo, non poteſt hæc "particula ad Chriſtum pertinere, niſi ad eundem et "illa referantur, qui eſt ſuper omnia Deus." His adde teſtimonia Athanaſii, orat. 2. et quint. contra Arian. Greg. Nyſſeni, l. 10. *contra Eunom. Secondly, I aſſert, That the words will not admit of that interpunction and interpretation of Eraſmus, which will do any ſervice to the Arians, or Socinians, viz. that a colon muſt be put after the words κατὰ σάρκα, after the fleſh; and the words following muſt be an ecphonema, and grateful exclamation for the bleſſings conferred upon the Jews, thus, God who is over all be bleſſed for ever. For this expoſition is ſo harſh, and without any like example in the whole New Teſtament, that as none of the orthodox ever thought upon it, ſo I find not that it ever came into the head of any Arian: Socinus himſelf rejects it for this very good reaſon, that Θεὸς εὐλογητὸς, God be bleſſed, is an unuſual and unnatural conſtruction; for where-ever elſe theſe words ſignify bleſſed be God, εὐλογητὸς is put before God, as Luke 1. 68. 2 Cor. 1. 3. Eph. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3. and Θεὸς hath an article prefixed to it; nor are they ever immediately joined together otherwiſe. The phraſe occurs twenty times in the Old Teſtament, but in every place εὐλογητὸς goes before, and the article is annexed to the word God; which is a demonſtration, that this is a perverſion of the ſenſe of the apoſtle's words. 2. The apoſtle having ſaid, in the immediate preceding words, that Chriſt came from the fathers κατὰ σάρκα, according to the fleſh, or as to his human nature, is it not reaſonable to conceive he would proceed to ſay what he was according to his divine nature, eſpecially when he was diſcourſing of, and to thoſe Jews, who, as (l) Trypho ſaith, and Origen (m), and (n) Jerom teſtify, held their Meſſiah was only to be a man, and denied his divinity? Is it not unrea-

ſonable to think he ſhould then ſay nothing of the τὸ κατὰ πνεῦμα, or the ſuperior nature of Chriſt? Eſpecially if we conſider, that the limitation τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, according to the fleſh, plainly inſinuated there was another nature in him, according to which he came not from the fathers. In a word, all the ancient verſions render the words as we do, taking no notice of this interpunction; all the Greek ſcholiaſts, and the ancient commentators among the Latins, excepting St Chryſoſtom, here triumph over Arius, one of them indeed hinting, (o) that there might be men who would be inclined to ſay, theſe things were not ſpoken of Chriſt; but none ever ſaying, that any did then actually aſcribe them to any other perſon. Hence, from the beginning, theſe words have been uſed by the fathers, as an argument of Chriſt's divinity: for, ſaith Irenæus (p), "becauſe he is Emanuel, leſt we ſhould think him a man only, the apoſtle ſaith, of whom, as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt came; qui eſt Deus ſuper omnes benedictus in ſecula." And, in a like expreſſion to this of the apoſtle, he ſaith, "Secundum id quod Verbum Dei homo erat, ex radice Jeſſæ, filius Abrahæ; (q) according to that nature in which the Word of God was man, of the root of Jeſſe, and the ſon of Abraham, the Spirit of God reſted upon him; ſecundum autem quod Deus erat, but as to that nature by which he was God, he judged not after the ſight of his eyes, for he knew what was in man." And if theſe words are ſpoken by the Spirit of God concerning Chriſt, the arguments hence to prove him truly and properly God, are invincible: for firſt, ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ πάντων, God over all, is the periphraſis by which all the Heathen philoſophers did uſually repreſent the ſupreme God: and ſo is God the Father deſcribed both in the Old and New Teſtament, as ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων, he that is over all, Eph. 4. 6. 2dly, This is the conſtant epithet and periphraſis of the great God in the Old Teſtament, that he is εὐλογητὸς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, God bleſſed for evermore, 1 Chron. 16. 36. Pſal. 41. 13. and 89. 52.; and alſo in the New, where he is ſtyled the God ὃς ἐστιν εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, who is bleſſed for evermore. This was ſo evident to Enjedinus the Socinian, that he ſaith, this epithet is ſo peculiar to God the Father, that it is never attributed in the New Teſtament to any other; but whereſoever we find this phraſe, GOD bleſſed for ever, it is always aſcribed to the Father. Of the cuſtom of adding to the name of God, bleſſed for evermore, uſed by the Jews, the Reverend Doctor hath ſaid ſufficient; and why all that he here ſaith, ſhould paſs with Mr Cl. for Jewiſh fables, what reaſon can be given, if not his averſeneſs to the doctrine the Doctor here endeavours to eſtabliſh? eſpecially, when we find this very phraſe, εὐλογητὸς Κύριος, ὁ Θεὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ αἰῶνος, καὶ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, or εὐλογητὸς Κύριος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, bleſſed be the Lord God from everlaſting, Pſal. 40. 13. and 88. 51. and 105. 48. and find St Paul following his example, and Clemens Romanus in his epiſtle ſo often uſing the ſame epithet, when he makes mention of the God of heaven, edit. Jun. p. 29. 42. 50. 57. 59. 66. ver. 6.

Ver. 6. ᵃ Are not all Iſrael?] The apoſtle having declared, that both Jew and Gentile had ſinned, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God, and ſo were to be juſtified only by faith in Chriſt, Rom. 3. 23. 24. the Jews objected againſt this, 1. That they being the ſeed of Abraham, to whom the promiſes were made, it was not conſiſtent with the divine veracity, to exclude them from the bleſſings promiſed, and to confer them on the believing Gentiles. To the firſt part of this objection the apoſtle anſwers, by diſtinguiſhing betwixt the ſeed of Abraham, according to the fleſh, and according to promiſe; or the ſpiritual ſeed, from ver. 6. to 14. at thoſe words, What ſhall we ſay then? is there injuſtice in God? He begins to anſwer the ſecond part of the objection, that the adoption, and the promiſes, belonging to the Jews, ver. 4. and the Gentiles being ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe, it ſeemed unreaſonable to confer thoſe bleſſings on them, and not upon the Jews. To this the apoſtle anſwers, that this juſtly befel them, becauſe they continued in their infidelity, after all the miracles wrought to convince them, that Chriſt was the true Meſſiah; and ſo, as by this obſtinacy, like to that of Pharaoh, they had made themſelves obnoxious to the ſevereſt of his judgments; ſo had they rendered themſelves incapable of the bleſſings promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, they who are of faith being only the children of Abraham, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 7. 9. 29. whereas the Gentiles believing in Chriſt, are through this faith intitled to the bleſſings promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, ver. 14. for they being Chriſt's by faith, are Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe, ver. 29.

Ver. 8. ᵇ Λογίζεται εἰς σπέρμα, are accounted for the ſeed:] That is, of this diſtinction of ſeeds, to which the promiſe belongs, you have a manifeſt inſtance in the ſeed of Abraham; for before Abraham had any ſeed at all, the promiſe of inheriting the land of Canaan was made unto him thus, Unto thy ſeed will I give this land, Gen. 12. 7.; All the land which thou ſeeſt, to thee will I give it, and to thy ſeed after thee for ever, Gen. 13. 13.; Unto thy ſeed have I given this land, Gen. 15. 18. But though Iſhmael was his firſt-born, and had that circumciſion, which was the ſeal of the covenant made with Abraham; yet he, and his poſterity, thoſe twelve princes, and great nations which iſſued from him, were all excluded from the covenant; and Iſaac, not yet circumciſed, or born, and his poſterity, are declared to be the ſeed of Abraham, to whom the promiſe ſhould be made good, and with whom the covenant ſhould be eſtabliſhed. For when Abraham ſaid to God, O that Iſhmael might live before thee! God returns him this anſwer, As for Iſhmael, I have heard thee; behold, I have bleſſed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes ſhall he beget, and I will make him a great nation; but my covenant will I eſtabliſh with Iſaac, whom Sarah ſhall bear unto thee, Gen. 17. 18. 20. 21. Again, when Sarah had ſaid of Iſhmael, Caſt out this bond-woman and her ſon; for the ſon of this bond-woman ſhall not inherit with my ſon, even with Iſaac, Gen. 21. 10.; and Abraham thereupon was grieved becauſe of his ſon, ver. 11.; God ſpeaks thus to him, Let it not be grievous in thine eyes, becauſe of the lad; in all that Sarah hath ſaid, hearken to her; for in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called, ver. 12. Which inſtance ſhews, it was not being of the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh, or having the ſign of the covenant in the fleſh, that rendered men the ſons of God, or children of the promiſe then: for Iſhmael was Abraham's firſt-born, and circumciſed, and yet by God excluded from the promiſe; Iſaac not circumciſed, not yet born, not having the right of primogeniture, and yet to him, and his ſeed alone, belong the adoption, and the promiſes. Two things may here be added for illuſtration of this inſtance.

1. That the Jews can make no juſt exceptions againſt this argument of the apoſtle, it being ſuitable to their own theology; for it is a rule among them, That (r) "whoſo vows concerning Abra-"ham's ſeed, is free from Iſhmael and Eſau's ſons, "and is not bound but touching Iſraelites, for in "Iſaac ſhall ſeed be called to thee; and ſo Iſaac "ſaid of Jacob, And God give thee the bleſſing of "Abraham."

2. That there is a great emphaſis in theſe words, the children of the promiſe; for upon this account it was ſaid of Iſaac, that he was not born according to the fleſh, but according to the promiſe, Gal. 4. 23. Thus Iſhmael was Abraham's ſon according to the fleſh, but Iſaac according to the ſpirit: to be therefore children of the promiſe, ſeems to be Abraham's ſpiritual ſeed; whence the apoſtle ſaith of thoſe who believe in this ſeed, that they are the ſons of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and ſo are Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 29. That they, according to Iſaac, are children of the promiſe, Gal. 4. 28. That they are children, not of the bond-woman, but of the free, ver. 31. Accordingly the (ſ) Jews ſay, "a proſelyte is the ſon of Abra-"ham, who is the father of the whole world, "as it is ſaid, A father of many nations have I made "thee." And becauſe the Jews might quarrel againſt the pertinence of this inſtance, alledging this might be becauſe Iſhmael was the only ſon of Abraham's bond-maid, whereas Iſaac was the ſeed of his own wife; or that Iſhmael had forfeited his right by idolatry, or denying the world to come, of which they accuſe him: here follows the inſtance of chuſing Jacob and his ſeed, excluding Eſau and his ſeed, againſt which no ſuch cavil could take place.

Ver. 11. ' Μήπω γὰρ γεννηθέντων, for the children being yet unborn.] The argument of the apoſtle is to this effect, That though both Jacob and Eſau had the ſame father and the ſame mother, yet of theſe two, when they were yet unborn, and ſo were neither circumciſed, nor had done any thing at all to oblige or diſoblige God, or to give any ground for any difference to be made betwixt them, and their offspring, God ſpeaks thus of them to Rebecca: Two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels, and the one people ſhall be ſtronger than the other people, and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger, Gen. 25. 23. i. e. Not he to whom by birth-right it belonged, but he whom God was freely pleaſed to chuſe, ſhould inherit the land of Canaan, promiſed to the ſeed of Abraham, and the other privileges of his ſeed. Which inſtance ſeems plainly to inform us, that the choice which God makes of men to the enjoyment of the favour of being his people, and beloved by him above others, as to ſuch things, is not according to their external privileges or works, but according to his free choice. And this prediction was fully verified in after ages; for Jacob and his poſterity were planted in the land of Canaan, which flowed with milk and honey, and was the glory of all lands, whereas the Edomites were planted in a barren deſert land; and this gave ground for thoſe words of the prophet Malachi, I have loved you, ſaith the Lord to Iſrael; yet ye ſay, wherein haſt thou loved us? Was not Eſau Jacob's brother, ſaith the Lord? Yet I loved Jacob and hated Eſau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waſte, for the dragons of the wilderneſs. Now, for further explication of theſe words, let it be obſerved,

1. That this inſtance of Eſau's being rejected, and not owned by God as belonging to the promiſed ſeed, is ſuitable to the ſentiments of the Jews, not only becauſe he being an idolater, and a denier of the resurrection, and of the blessings of the world to come, was not, according to their forementioned canon, to be accounted for seed; and their received rule, (t) "That he who swears concerning the "seed of Abraham, is free from Ishmael, and E-"sau's sons, and is not bound but touching Israelites;" but also from their observation on these words of Jacob, (u) The God of my father Abraham, of my father Isaac, viz. "that he saith not so of Esau, "that Abraham and Isaac were his father, because "he chose not to walk in their ways, and do their "works."

2. Hence it is evident, that the apostle speaks not here of the persons, but of the nations and posterity of Jacob and Esau, or, not of them personally, but nationally considered, according to the note of Irenæus, Partum Rebeccæ prophetiam fuisse duorum populorum, l. 4. c. 38. This is plain,

1st, From the words of God to Rebecca, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels, and the one people shall be stronger than the other. 2dly, From this observation, that as to the persons of Esau and Jacob, it was never true that the elder did serve the younger, but only as to their posterity, when the Edomites became tributaries to David, 2 Sam. 8. 14. And, 3dly, because what is here offered as a proof or confirmation of this, is cited from the prophet Malachi, who prophesied long after Jacob and Esau were personally dead, and so could only speak of their posterity, the Israelites and Edomites, as he expressly doth. And,

3. Hence it clearly follows, that the apostle cannot here discourse of any personal election of them to eternal life, or any absolute love or hatred of them, with respect to their eternal interest; for if so, seeing he manifestly speaks of the whole nation of Israel, they must, according to that opinion, be all elected to salvation; whereas the apostle informs us, that God had no pleasure in many of them, 1 Cor. 10. 5. and the whole Jewish history shews the contrary. Again, then must the whole posterity of Esau be the objects of God's hatred and his reprobation, which is so far from being true, that Job and all his friends appear to have been of the posterity of Esau. And, 2dly, then it must follow, as Estius contends, that not only election, but even reprobation also, must be without any respect to works, and so God must adjudge men to eternal perdition, without respect to any evil done or to be done by them; for the children having done neither good nor evil, saith the apostle, it happened to them as it is written, Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated. It is certain then, that the apostle speaks here only of the election of one seed and nation before another, to be accounted and treated by him as the seed of Abraham: this only doth his argument require, and his instances prove; and this is sufficient to justify God's dealing with the unbelieving Jews, so as to reject them from being accounted for, and treated as the seed of Abraham; and his raising up children to Abraham out of those believing Gentiles, who imitating the faith of Abraham, became his spiritual seed, and heirs according to the promise, that he would be a God to his seed, and that he should be the father of many nations, and in him should all the families of the earth be blessed, and his calling them to the faith, though sinners of the Gentiles; that depending not on works, but his free pleasure.

Ibid. Ἡ κατ' ἐκλογὴν πρόθεσις Θεοῦ, the purpose of God according to election.] Here I shall briefly consider the import of the words πρόθεσις, the purpose; πρόγνωσις, the foreknowledge; προώρισμος, the fore-appointment of God. Of all which, let it be noted,

1. That none of them relate to particular and individual persons, (save only when they are used of our blessed Lord, and his sufferings for us), but only to whole churches and nations; and in general, to the whole body of believing Jews, and Gentiles, whom God had chosen, προορίσας, fore-appointing them to the adoption, by Jesus Christ, Eph. 1. 5. In whom also, saith he, ἐκληρώθημεν, we are made his portion, or peculiar people, περιοισθέντες κατὰ πρόθεσιν, being fore-appointed so to be according to his purpose, ver. 11.; God having purposed and fore-appointed, that this should be the portion of believers, and the consequence of faith in Christ, by which we become the sons of God. To all the converted Jews throughout their dispersions, they being chosen κατὰ πρόγνωσιν, according to the purpose of God the Father, 1 Pet. 1. 2. And, lastly, to the posterity of Jacob, of whom that ἡ κατὰ Θεὸν πρόθεσις, the purpose of God, according to the election, might stand: It was said, when Rebecca bore twins, The elder shall serve the younger.

2dly, That this foreknowledge, purpose, or appointment, is only that of calling men to the knowledge of salvation, by Christ Jesus. Thus the apostle teacheth, that he was appointed to preach to the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, according to the ancient purpose which God had made in Christ Jesus our Lord, Eph. 3. 11. and that according to his purpose before ages, he called us with an holy calling, 2 Tim. 1. 9.

3dly, This calling is designed by God ἐπὶ τοῦτο, for this end, that they who are called might obtain salvation through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth, 2 Thess. 2. 13. through sanctification of the Spirit to obedience, and through the ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus, 1 Pet. 1. 2.; all Chriſtians being choſen to this end, that they might be holy, and unblameable before God in love, Eph. 1. 4. But hence it cannot reaſonably be concluded, that this election is no larger than the holineſs deſigned to be produced by it: For the riches of God's goodneſs, patience, and long-ſuffering, are deſigned to lead all thoſe to whom it was vouchſafed, to repentance. But hence it cannot be concluded, that this riches, goodneſs, patience, and long-ſuffering is exerciſed to none but thoſe who truly do repent, ſeeing the apoſtle mentions many who deſpiſed theſe means, and after the vouchſafement of them, ſtill continued to treaſure up wrath againſt the day of wrath, Rom. 2. 4. The Baptiſt was ſent to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and of the diſobedient unto the wiſdom of the juſt; but his preaching was far from having its effect on all that heard him. The end of the Meſſiah's advent to the Jews was, that he might ſave his people from their ſins, and might engage them to ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs all the days of their life, Luke 1. 74. But yet it ſadly failed of this effect upon that ſtubborn people: The ſaving grace of God appeared to all men, to teach them, denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; but yet it is too ſadly evident, it hath not had this good effect on all.

4*thly*, As men were appointed from the beginning to be called, ſo the goſpel, which is the wiſdom of God through faith unto ſalvation, was that, ὃν προώρισεν, which God had fore-appointed to be preached to men for that end, 1 Cor. 2. 7. this word of God giving the hope of that ſalvation, which he had promiſed before all ages. And hence, by virtue of this promiſe and fore-appointment, men were in time called by the goſpel, to the faith in Chriſt; whence they who were thus called, are ſaid to be called according to the purpoſe of God, Rom. 8. 28. and according to his purpoſe, and grace given us through Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 10. The knowledge, and purpoſe, from the foundation of the world, of ſending Chriſt to die for the remiſſion of ſins, being the ground of this calling; on which account he is ſaid, to be given up to the death according to the foreknowledge of God, and his fore-appointed counſel, Acts 2. 23. And they who ſlew him, are ſaid to have done only what his counſel had fore-appointed to be done, Acts 4. 28. Theſe obſervations will direct us to anſwer what is argued from theſe, and ſuch like places of ſcripture in favour of an abſolute election.

Ibid. Note alſo, That thoſe words, the children being not yet born, nor having done good or evil, being uſed as an argument to prove the election, or prefereneе of the one above the other, could not be of works, is a ſtrong argument againſt the pre-exiſtence of the ſouls, and their being ſent into bodies by way of puniſhment for their former ſins; for upon that ſuppoſition it could not be true, that the children had done neither good nor evil, before they were born; nor could the argument be firm, That one could not be preferred before the other on the account of any works done by them, ſeeing the one might have ſinned more than the other in their ſtate of pre-exiſtence.

Ver. 15. [h] Ἐλεήσω ὃν ἂν ἐλεῶ, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy.] It is here to be noted, that God made this declaration after Iſrael had committed idolatry, in making the golden calf, and ſo had made themſelves naked, i. e. diveſted of the divine preſence and protection, or of a covenant-relation to him, inſomuch that God ſent this dreadful meſſage to them, I will come up into the midſt of thee in a moment, and conſume thee, Exod. 33. 5. and ſaid to Moſes, Let me alone, that I may deſtroy them in a moment. And though God ſuffered himſelf to be prevailed upon by Moſes, to adopt them again for his people; yet he lets him know this was part of his glory, to be gracious to whom he will be gracious, and alſo to ſhew mercy to whom he will ſhew mercy, Exod. 33. 19. If therefore upon the infidelity of the Jews, he will call the idolatrous Gentiles, and receive them to be his people, as he did the Jews again after their idolatry, who can accuſe him of injuſtice upon that account?

Ver. 16. [i] Οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος, οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth.] i. e. You ſee this is not to be obtained by the moſt paſſionate wiſhes of a faithful Abraham, nor by the fervent deſires of an Eſau, Heb. 12. 17. nor by the greateſt zeal we can employ in ſuch courſes as ſeem beſt to our own wiſdom; but we muſt own it to be a bleſſing which depends merely upon the divine goodneſs; and therefore muſt ſeek it according to his pleaſure, in ſuch ways as he appoints, and not in thoſe which ſeem to us moſt proper to obtain it: Though then you have a zeal for God, and follow after the law, that you may obtain righteouſneſs, it is not to be wondered, you obtain not the bleſſing of juſtification promiſed to the ſeed of Abraham, becauſe you ſeek it not by faith in the Meſſiah, which is the only way in which God hath declared he will confer it.

Some of the fathers (x) interpret theſe words thus, "It is not of him that wills, or runs only, (x) Οὐ τῷ θέλοντι μόνον, οὐδὲ τῷ τρέχοντι μόνον, ἀλλὰ δεῖ καὶ τῇ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐλέᾳ, καὶ τῆς ἐκεῖθεν συμμαχίας. Oecum. Chryſ. hom. 12. in Hebr. p. 489. G. Nazianz. orat. 31.

" but of God that ſheweth mercy, and crowns the " work by his aſſiſtance; for otherwiſe," ſay they, " it cannot be our duty, either to will, or run, " provided we can, neither by willing nor running, " do any thing to incline God to ſhew mercy; and " why then doth God blame us for not willing, " Matth. 23. 17. John 5. 40. and require us ſo to " run that we may obtain, 1 Cor. 9. 24. Heb. 12. 1.?" And whereas St Auſtin objects, that according to this interpretation it might be ſaid, it is not of God that ſheweth mercy only, but of man that wills and runs; Origen (y), Chryſoſtom (z), and Theophylact (a) anſwer, That this follows, not becauſe man's willing and running would not avail without the divine aid to enable him to run, and his grace and mercy to accept his running, and therefore, according to the cuſtom of the ſcripture, the effect is to be aſcribed to the chief agent only; as, Except the Lord build the houſe, their labour is but vain that build it, &c. Pſal. 127. 1.; ſo Paul that plants, and Apollos that waters, is nothing, but God that giveth the increaſe, 1 Cor. 3. 6. 7.; I laboured, yet not I, but the grace of God, 1 Cor. 15. 10.

Ver. 17. [k] Ἐξήγειρά σε, I have raiſed thee up.] Heb. הֶעֱמַר חִיכ, I have made thee to ſtand, Exod. 9. 16. or have preſerved thee, ὕνεκεν τούτου διετηρήθης, for this cauſe haſt thou been kept, ſo the Seventy, i. e. from falling by the plague of boils, ſo Junius and Tremellius; feci ut ſuperſtes maneres, I have kept thee alive, ſaith the Targum of B. Uziel. See the Chaldee, the Syriac, and the Arabic verſions to the ſame ſenſe. And the connection of this with the former verſe rightly rendered, makes this ſenſe neceſſary; for the 15th verſe cannot be rendered in the future ſenſe, as our tranſlation doth, Now I will ſtretch out my hand, that I may ſmite thee and thy people with the peſtilence, and thou ſhalt be cut off from the earth; for Pharaoh and his people did not die by the peſtilence. It is therefore to be rendered as the Jews, Fagius, Amama, Cartwright, and Ainſworth tranſlate it: " For now I had ſent out my hand, " and I had ſmitten thee and thy people with the " peſtilence, and thou hadſt been cut off from the " earth; but in very deed, for this cauſe I have " made thee ſtand up (b)." So the Targum of B. Uziel, " Quum jam miſerim plagam fortitudinis " meæ, æquum erat ut percuterem te, et populum " tuum morte, ut perderem te a terra; verum " profecto, non ut beneficium tibi, in vita conſervavi " te, ſed ut videre faciam te robur meum," &c. Whence we may learn how alien from the truth, and from the import of the words, is that expoſition which ſaith, For this cauſe have I created thee, or raiſed thee to be the king of Egypt.

Obſerve further, That God hardened Pharaoh's heart, not by any poſitive influx upon it, which made it neceſſary for him to continue obſtinate. This Origen obſerves from thoſe words, If thou refuſe to let my people go, I will do ſo and ſo; that Pharaoh's heart was not ſo hardened as to take away τὸ αὐτεξούσιον, all power from him to let the people go; for this he doth at laſt when God's hand was ſtrong upon him, according to theſe words, chap. 3. 19. I am ſure that the king of Egypt will not let you go, לֹא בְיָד חֲזָקָה, niſi per manum fortem; Vulg. ἐὰν μὴ μετὰ χειρὸς κραταιᾶς, if not by a ſtrong hand, Septuagint.; niſi cum manu valida, Samarit.; but by a ſtrong hand, ſo the Biſhop of Bath and Wells. This ſenſe the words will bear, ſaith Ainſworth, vau being rendered ſi, Exod. 4. 23. Numb. 12. 14.; and this ſenſe is plain and certain from the words following, And I will ſtretch out my hand, and ſmite Egypt with all my wonders, which I will do in the midſt thereof, and after that he will let you go, Exod. 3. 20.; and again, chap. 6. 1. Then ſaid the Lord to Moſes, Now ſhalt thou ſee what I will do to Pharaoh, for with a ſtrong hand ſhall he let them go. Hence God is always ſaid to have brought them out of Egypt בְיָד חֲזָקָה, with a ſtrong hand, Exod. 32. 11. Deut. 5. 15. and 6. 21. and 7. 8. and 9. 26. Dan. 9. 15. Nor can they who think otherwiſe, ſhew any way how, or in what ſenſe Pharaoh can be ſo often ſaid to have hardened his own heart, if God himſelf had hardened his heart before; or why God doth ſo often command him to let his people go, chap. 7. 16. and 8. 1. 20. and 9. 1. 13. i. e. to do what he had rendered him unable to do; or why Moſes ſhould ſay, Let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, in not letting the people go, chap. 8. 29.; or why God did reprove him becauſe he had hitherto refuſed to let the people go, chap. 7. 16. and 8. 29. and 9. 17. and 10. 3.; or why he threatens judgments to him, if he refuſe to let them go, chap. 8. 2. 21. and 9. 2. 3. 14. 15. and executes them upon him on that refuſal, ſince nemo tenetur ad impoſſibilia, no man is obliged to do what he cannot, much leſs what he cannot do by virtue of a diſability that God hath laid upon him; and no man juſtly can be blamed, and much leſs puniſhed, for not doing what he is not obliged to do; nor can God command any man to do what he himſelf, by his own influx, reſtrains him from doing, even when he doth command it; for what he thus reſtrains him from, he is not willing he ſhould do; whereas what he commands, he is willing ſhould be done; and when he puniſheth any one for not obeying his command, he puniſheth them for not doing his will. Now, it is impoſſible that God at the ſame time, and in reference to the ſame action, ſhould be both willing ing and not willing it ſhould be done. This will be farther evident from a conſideration of all the places where the heart of Pharaoh is ſaid to be hardened. As,

Chap. 7. 13. And he hardened Pharaoh's heart; Heb. חזק and the heart of Pharaoh was hardened. So the ſame words are rendered by us, ver. 22. and ſo here by Ainſworth, the Biſhop of Bath and Wells, the Biſhop of Ely, and all the verſions on this verſe; nor is there any perſon mentioned in the verſe beſides Pharaoh, to whom this action can be aſcribed: his heart was therefore hardened at this time, not by God, but by the arts of his ſorcerers; for the magicians did ſo with their inchantments, and Pharaoh's heart was hardened, ver. 22.

Chap. 8. 15. we read thus, When Pharaoh ſaw there was reſpite, he hardened his heart. Whence the fathers truly obſerve, that Θεῦ μακροθυμία σκληροκαρδίας αἰτία, i. e. the heart of Pharaoh was hardened by God's mercy in taking off his hand from him. Thus upon removal of the flies Pharaoh hardened his heart, ver. 31. 32. And when he ſaw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunders were ceaſed, he ſinned yet more, and hardened his heart, he, and his ſervants; and then immediately follow theſe words, And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Go in unto Pharaoh, for (or although) I have hardened his heart, and the heart of his ſervants, chap. 10. 1. ſo ver. 20. The Lord then hardened Pharaoh's heart, only by taking away the locuſts; and ver. 27. the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart, only by taking away the darkneſs, the three days aſſigned to it being ended, as Aben Ezra obſerves on ver. 24. None roſe from his place during thoſe three days, but poſt triduum, they being ended, Pharaoh called unto Moſes; and hence we read not, as at other times, that Pharaoh aſked for the removal of this plague: and therefore when it is ſaid, chap. 9. 12. that the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and he hearkened not unto them, i. e. not to Moſes and Aaron, we have reaſon to conclude he did that alſo by removing the plague of the boils: for had the boils continued upon the Egyptians, there was no reaſon for calling for the ſucceeding plague of hail, nor could the ſervants of Pharaoh, with their boils upon them, have gone into the field to houſe their cattle, ver. 11.—20. We read alſo, chap. 14. 8. 17. that the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart to follow the Iſraelites; and of this we may give the ſame account, that he did this by cauſing the Iſraelites to incamp ſo, as to give occaſion to Pharaoh to ſay, They are intangled in the land, the wilderneſs hath ſhut them in, ver. 3. and by cauſing him to ſee the Iſraelites walk ſafely through the midſt of the ſea. But I am not concerned for theſe places, the hardening of Pharaoh then being not for ſin, (God having not commanded Pharaoh not to purſue after them, or follow them into the Red ſea), but for puniſhment. When therefore God ſaith, chap. 4. 21. I will harden the heart of Pharaoh, that he ſhall not let the people go, his meaning may be only this, I will ſo order matters, by removing the plagues inflicted on him and his people, to mollify him, and engage him to permit them to go, that he ſhall be hardened, till I come with my ſtrong hand, and ſlay his ſon, even his firſt-born, ver. 23. after which he did let them go, chap. 12. 31. 33. From theſe two obſervations, it is eaſy to diſcern how appoſite this example is to the caſe of the Jewiſh nation. For,

1. Did God harden Pharaoh by his lenity, in removing his plagues and judgments from him? the ſame God ſaith of the Jews in this epiſtle, when he ſpeaks thus unto them, chap 2. 4. 5. Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance; but after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up unto thyſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of God's righteous judgment?

2. If they object, That if God would have caſt them off from being his people, and have cut them off from any ſhare in the promiſes made to the ſeed of Abraham, why did he not this before, when they had ſo oft deſerved it for their idolatries, from which they were now free? The anſwer is, from the example of Pharaoh preſerved alive, when he had long deſerved to be cut off, that he might fall at laſt, more to the illuſtration of God's power, juſtice, and glory; and this is the thing hinted, ver. 22. as you will ſee in the expoſition of it.

Ver. 18. [Ὃν θέλει ἐλεεῖ, ὃν δὲ θέλει σκληρύνει, he hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.] That is, hence it appears that God ſhews mercy according to his own wiſe pleaſure, and not as we think fit; and he gives men up to the hardneſs of their own hearts, and ſo reſerveth them to be examples of his illuſtrious judgments, according to the ſame good pleaſure, and not according to the time and meaſures that they would preſcribe; ſhewing mercy to you Jews, when you deſerved to be cut off for your idolatry in making and worſhipping the golden calf, and re-aſſuming you to be his people, and reſerving the execution of his wrath upon Pharaoh, who had before deſerved it for the hardneſs of his heart, till his deſtruction would miniſter to the greater illuſtration of his power and juſtice upon ſtubborn ſinners.

Execrable is the note of Eſtius here, that God is here ſaid to harden whom he will; Quod induratio cujuſpiam in prima ſua origine, quæ eſt prima derelictio, ſeu peccati permiſſio, non aliam habet cauſam, quam Dei voluntatem; becauſe the firſt riſe of any man's man's induration, which is God's dereliction of him, hath no other cauſe than the will of God. For as this is contrary to the known ſaying, even of St Auſtin, Deus non deſerit, niſi deſerentem, God deſerts no man who leaves not him firſt; ſo it makes God alone the cauſe of all mens hardening, ſince cauſa cauſæ eſt cauſa cauſati: for if this dereliction be the cauſe of induration, and that hath no other cauſe but the will of God, the will of God muſt be the cauſe of all mens hardening it. It alſo makes all God's exhortations to men, not to harden their hearts, and his reproofs and puniſhments of them for ſo doing, exhortations to what his will is the true cauſe of their not doing, and reproofs and puniſhments of that which his will cauſed them to do.

Ver. 21. ᵐ Οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ πηλοῦ; hath not the potter power over the clay?] That is, there is no more cauſe from God's diſpenſation in this caſe, in taking away the means of grace from, and rejecting ſuch an hardened people, and ſhewing his favour unto others, who ſubmit to his terms of mercy, to make this objection, than for the clay of Jeremy, when it was marred and broken, Jer. 18. 4. 6. to complain againſt the potter, that he took one part of it, and made it a veſſel of diſhonour, and another part of it, and made it a veſſel of honour.

That this example of the clay in the hands of the potter, relates to God's dealing with ſinners according to his pleaſure, is evident not only from the application of it there to the impenitent, ver. 7. 8. but alſo from the like paſſage in Eccleſiaſticus, where we are taught from this very inſtance, that the ways of God are κατὰ τὴν ἐυδοκίαν αὐτοῦ, according to his good pleaſure; becauſe as the clay is in the hands of the potter, ſo is man in the hands of him that made him, to render to them as liketh him beſt κατὰ τὴν κρίσιν αὐτοῦ, according to his righteous judgment, Eccluſ 33. 13.

Ver. 22. ⁿ Τί δὲ εἰ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς, what if God, &c.] i. e. What injuſtice therefore is it in God to deal with you as he dealt with an hardened Pharaoh, you having as oft refuſed to hearken to his voice as Pharaoh did? Or what if he long hath, and ſtill at preſent bears with ſuch veſſels of his wrath fitted for deſtruction, till in a more illuſtrious manner, and with more ſignal marks of his diſpleaſure, for thus rejecting the goſpel, and the promiſed Meſſiah, he ſwallow up their nation, their people, their temple, and their holy city in one general deſtruction? Is it not for the glory of the divine power and wiſdom, to reſerve the rejectors of the Meſſiah, ſent to bleſs them, and the perſecutors of the Chriſtian faith, to be at laſt cut off with ſuch a remarkable deſtruction, as ſhall render it viſible to the world, that God's indignation is incenſed againſt them for this ſin, and ſo ſhall give to Jew and Gentile a farther motive to believe in Jeſus?

And again, What if God is pleaſed, upon their impenitence and obduration, to ſhew the riches of his glorious goodneſs and mercy upon thoſe Jews and Gentiles, whom he hath called to the faith of Chriſt, and ſo hath fitted and prepared to be the veſſels of his mercy? Hath he not a juſt right to ſhew his mercy to ſuch perſons who have ſubmitted to the terms upon which he hath promiſed favour and acceptance, and ſo to own them as the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, and ſo as his peculiar people?

Ver. 23. ᵒ Ἃ προητοίμασεν εἰς δόξαν, whom he hath prepared for his glory.] Thus the apoſtle diſcourſing of the day of the Lord, which was coming to execute his dreadful judgments on the Jews, ſaith thus, God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. 5. 9.

Ver. 26. ᵖ Ἐκεῖ κληθήσονται, there ſhall they be called the children of the living God.] It muſt be acknowledged, that in theſe words the prophet primarily ſpeaketh of the reſtoration of the Jews exiled, and caſt off from being his people; but yet that theſe words may not only be accommodated, but even extended to the Gentiles, who were emphatically not his people, and yet by faith became the ſeed of Abraham; and the true Iſraelites being the ſons of God by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 6. 8. may be argued from the phraſe בִּמְקוֹם in the place or nation, where it was ſaid, ye are not my people; and ſo the Jews themſelves interpret theſe words, in the gloſs upon the Talmud, ſaying, They who were not of my people ſhall adhere to the Lord, and be to me for a people, Gloſ. Talmud in tract. de Paſchate, ad cap. 8.; according to that of the prophet Zechariah, And many nations ſhall adhere to the Lord in that day, and ſhall be my people, Zech. 2. 11.

Ver. 28. ᵠ Λόγον συντετμημένον, a ſhort work.] i. e. Such a conſumption and deciſion is by God deſigned upon that multitude of evil-doers in the land of Iſrael, as ſhall cut them very ſhort, and lop them off, ſo that they ſhall be left as a tree, of which only the ſtump remaineth: "They ſhall be reduced," ſaith R. Solomon, "to a ſmall remnant, and a remnant of that remnant ſhall be converted." (See Examen Milli here.)

Ver. 30. ʳ Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; what do we then ſay?] From this recapitulation of the whole diſpute of the apoſtle in this chapter, and his declaration that this was the deſign of it to juſtify God in this proceeding and dealing with them both, it is exceeding evident, that it was not at all deſigned to determine any thing touching God's abſolute decrees of dealing with mankind in general thus, or thus, as to their final and eternal ſtate, but only to juſtify his dealings, ings, as in his providence he had actually done with the unbelieving Jews, rejecting them upon their ſtubborn infidelity, and the hardneſs of their hearts; and with the believing Gentiles, admitting them to be his church and people, and the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham upon their faith, and ſubmiſſion to the terms he had propoſed for their juſtification and acceptance with him.

Ver. 32. [f] Ὡς ἐξ ἔργων νόμου,] Ὡς, ſay Heſychius and Phavorinus, is uſed ἀντὶ τοῦ ὄντως ἀληθῶς, as ב in the Hebrew is, or as an expletive; ſo Matth. 14. 5. and 21. 6. John 1. 14. 2 Cor. 1. 17. Philip. 2. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 19.; ſo Neh. 7. 2. αὐτὸς ὡς ἀνὴρ ἀληθὴς, he was a true man, and one who feared the Lord. See Naldius Concord. partic. p. 376. 377. and is, as the Greek commentators often note, οὐχ ὁμοιότητος, ἀλλὰ βεβαιότητος καὶ ἀναμφιβόλου διορισμοῦ, a particle not of ſimilitude, but of confirmation, and ſo may here be rendered; but verily, or, but indeed, by the works of the law.

Ibid. [g] Προσέκοψαν γὰρ, for they ſtumbled, &c.] They ſought not juſtification by faith in Chriſt, becauſe whereas God had pointed out to them this way of ſalvation, by ſaying, Behold, I lay in Zion a corner-ſtone, elect and precious; and whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed, If. 28. 16. This corner-ſtone became to them of Iſrael, according to the words of the ſame prophet, chap. 8. 14. a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, they being offended at him, becauſe of his poverty, humility, and outward meanneſs, and the ſpirituality of his kingdom; and ſo they ſtumbled, and fell off from being God's people, and excluded themſelves from the bleſſings procured for, and offered to them, by the Meſſias, promiſed to their forefathers. See 1 Pet. 2. 6. 7. 8.

Ver. 33. [h] Προσκόμματος λίθου, a ſtone of ſtumbling, &c.] The Jews ſay, the Son of David, i. e. the Meſſias, cometh not till the two houſes of the fathers of Iſrael ſhall be taken away, to wit, the head of the captivity of Babylon, and the Prince who is in Iſrael, as it is ſaid, he ſhall be a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of ruin, to the two houſes of Iſrael, and many of them ſhall ſtumble, and fall, and be broken. And the Chaldee paraphraſt upon the place, ſaith thus, &c. חקבלון ואם לא, and if they will not obey, or receive (him), my word ſhall be to them for ſcandal and ruin to the princes of the two houſes of Iſrael.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. BRethren, my heart's deſire [a] and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved.

2. For I bear them record, that they have [b] a zeal of God, (being very deſirous to do what they conceive well-pleaſing to him, and acceptable in his ſight); but (this zeal is) not according to knowledge, (i. e. not joined with the knowledge of thoſe things which would render them truly acceptable to him.)

3. For they being ignorant (through unbelief, 1 Tim. 1. 13.) of God's righteouſneſs, (i. e. of that way of juſtification which alone renders us righteous and acceptable in the ſight of God. See note on Rom. 1. 17. 2 Cor. 5. 21.), and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, (which is of the law, Philip. 3. 9. and ſo a righteouſneſs peculiar to them who are Jews), have not ſubmitted themſelves to (that righteouſneſs which is through faith in Chriſt, and is) the righteouſneſs of God.

4. For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, (to be imputed) to every one that believeth (in him; the law being our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith, Gal. 3. 25.)

5. (Which righteouſneſs by faith can never be obtained by the works of the law); For Moſes deſcribeth the righteouſneſs which is of the law (thus), that the man which doth thoſe things, [c] ſhall live by them; (ſo that this righteouſneſs is plainly, not of faith, but works.)

6. But the righteouſneſs which is of faith, ſpeaketh (ſo as that we may accommodate the words of Moſes to it), on this wiſe, Say not in thy heart, Who ſhall aſcend into heaven? that is, to bring Chriſt down from above, (to be a teacher of it to us?)

7. Or, who ſhall [d] deſcend into the deep? that is, to bring up Chriſt again from the dead, (to give us the ſalvation purchaſed by his death?)

8. But what ſaith it? (what therefore ſaith it?) The word is [e] nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach.

9. That if thou ſhalt [f] confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved.

10. For with the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs, (Gr. to juſtification), and [g] with the mouth confeſſion is made (of that faith) unto ſalvation.

11. For the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed (of his hope of ſalvation by him, Rom. 4. 5.)

12. (And it rightly ſaith, Whoſoever); For there is no difference (as to the way of juſtification and ſalvation) between the Jew and the Greek; for the ſame Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him (for ſalvation.)

13. For (as the prophet Joel ſaith, chap. 2. 32.) [h] whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

14. (Now, this calling upon him ſuppoſes God's intention, that the Gentiles, as well as Jews ſhould hear, in in order to their believing; for did they not believe), How then ſhall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? (Did they not hear), and how ſhall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And (this hearing ſuppoſeth ſome preacher was to be ſent to the Gentiles, for) how ſhall they hear without a preacher?

15. And (this preacher muſt have a commiſſion from God; for) how ſhall they preach unleſs they be ſent? (Now certainly we have been ſent to you Jews, preaching peace to you by Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 10. 36.), as it is written, (Iſ. 52. 7. 8.), How [i] beautiful (upon the mountains) are the feet of them that preach the goſpel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things? (that ſay unto Zion, Thy God reigneth, or, as the Chaldee, the kingdom of thy God is revealed?)

16. But (if the apoſtles were ſent to the Jews, how is it that) they have not all obeyed the goſpel? (I anſwer, This incredulity of the Jews is only that which was foretold by their own prophets); for (ſo Iſaiah ſaith of them, chap. 53. 1.), Lord, who hath believed our report? (τὴν ἀκοὴν ἡμῶν.)

17. So then, ἄρα, (theſe teſtimonies ſhew, that) faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by (the preaching of) the word of God.

18. But (Gr. moreover), I ſay (of the Gentiles), Have they not heard, yea verily, (that of the pſalmiſt being true of us the preachers of the goſpel), their [k] ſound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world, (Rom. 8. Col. 1. 16. 23.)

19. [l] But (yea, or alſo) I ſay, Did not Iſrael know (of the preaching of the goſpel to the Gentiles, and of their own infidelity in rejecting it? This ſurely they might know from their own ſcriptures; for) firſt Moſes ſaith, I will provoke you (refuſing to believe) to jealouſy by them that are (yet) [m] no people (of God), and by a fooliſh nation I will anger you.

20. But Eſaias is very bold (in his expreſſion), and ſaith (of the Gentiles), I was found of them that (formerly) ſought me not; I was made manifeſt to them that aſked not after me.

21. But to Iſrael (foretelling their infidelity) he ſaith, [n] All day long have I ſtretched forth my hands unto a diſobedient and gainſaying people.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. X.

Ver. 1. [a] Ἡ δέησις, my prayer.] That the apoſtle ſpeaks not in the preceding chapter of the abſolute and peremptory rejection and reprobation of Iſrael, is evident from this prayer and vehement deſire; for, on ſuppoſition of ſuch a decree of reprobation, this muſt not only be a vain prayer, but alſo an oppoſing of his will, and εὐδοκία, to the good pleaſure of almighty God revealed to him; for it is evident, he prays here for all Iſrael, for them whoſe zeal to God was not according to knowledge, and who were ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, ver. 2. 3.: Not for thoſe only, as Eſthius deſcants, whom God hath predeſtinated to be ſaved by the prayers of the ſaints.

Ver. 2. [b] Ζῆλον Θεοῦ, a zeal for God.] Hence were ſome of them called zealots, taking that name ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπ' ἀγαθῷ ζηλωτῶν, from thoſe who were zealous for that which was good, ſaith Joſephus, de Bello Jud. l. 7. cap. 30. p. 986.

Ver. 5. [c] Ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς, ſhall live by them.] A proſperous and happy life in the land of Canaan, as Origen (c) interprets the words, eternal life being not the promiſe of the law, but of the goſpel; and if eternal life was obſcurely hinted as the reward of their obedience to the law of Moſes, it related not to their obedience to the ceremonial, but to the moral law; of which our Saviour ſaith, If thou wilt enter into life (eternal, ver. 16.), keep the commandments, Matth. 19. 18.; and this do, and thou ſhalt live, Luke 10. 28.: obedience to which includes faith in his word and promiſes: And ſo faith in Chriſt, when once that is revealed as the condition of our juſtification, and the obedience they yielded to it, availed to their ſalvation, only through the new covenant of grace which pardoned the infirmities of that obedience. See Examen Millii here.

Ver. 7. [d] Τὶς καταβήσεται εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον, who ſhall deſcend into the deep?] The words, Deut. 30. 13. are theſe, Who ſhall go over the ſea? that is, ſay the Targum of Jeruſalem, and B. Uziel, the great ſea, or the deep ſea; and the Jeruſalem-Targum renders the words thus, Oh that there were one like Jonas the prophet, who would deſcend יוֹנָה מִקְּרִי יַמָּא, into the depth of the great ſea! Now, we know Jonas deſcending into the deep was a type of Chriſt, Matth. 12. 20. deſcending into the deep of the earth, Pſal. 71. 20.; and being brought again, ſay the Seventy, ἐκ τῶν ἀβύσσων γῆς, from the abyſſes of the earth; and this might give occaſion to the apoſtle to allude to their traditional interpretation, or paraphraſe on the words of Moſes; like to which are thoſe of Baruch, chap. 3. 16. Who hath gone up into heaven, and taken wiſdom, and brought her down from the clouds? who hath gone over the ſea, and found her? And to this effect is that of Philo, What need is there [e] μάτην ὁδοιπορίας, ἢ τοῦ θαλαττεύειν, either to take long journeys, or go to ſea in ſearch of virtue, we having the root of it within us; or, as Moſes ſaith, in our mouth, in our heart, and in our hand? Lib. quod omnis probus liber, p. 677. E. Note alſo, that the apoſtle ſays not to bring Chriſt ab inferis, as Eſthius here doth, but only to bring him ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead; this place therefore concerns not Chriſt's deſcent into hell, in the ſenſe of Eſthius.

Ver. 8. ᵉ Ἐγγύς σου, nigh thee.] It is neither far from any man's hearing, for we preach it every where; not far from his underſtanding, for in preaching it we uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech, 2 Cor. 3. 12.; it is in thy mouth to profeſs, and in thy heart to believe it, and thus we preach.

Ver. 9. ᶠ Ἐὰν ὁμολογήσῃς, if thou ſhalt confeſs, &c.] Hence obſerve, Firſt, That juſtification is here expreſsly aſcribed to faith, and that not as including works, but only as being that principle which, when it is cordial and ſincere, will certainly produce them: I ſay, not as including all thoſe works which by the goſpel are required to ſalvation; for then the righteouſneſs of faith muſt be deſcribed as is the righteouſneſs of the law, viz. That the man who doth theſe things, ſhall live in them, which is contrary to the words of the apoſtle, ver. 5. 6. See the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians.

Secondly, Obſerve, That the faith to which juſtification and ſalvation is aſcribed, is not here, as it is elſewhere, ſaid to be faith in his blood, but a belief that God had raiſed up Jeſus from the dead. So St Paul having diſcourſed of the faith of Abraham, which was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, ſaith, This was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him, but for us alſo to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe in him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead, Rom. 4. 23. 24. Thus are we ſaid to be riſen with Chriſt through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raiſed him from the dead, Col. 2. 12.; and in St Peter, the Chriſtian is ſaid to believe through Chriſt in God, who raiſed him from the dead, that our faith and hope might be in God, 1 Pet. 1. 21. Now, this belief in God, as raiſing our Lord Jeſus from the dead, is therefore repreſented as faith unto ſalvation, becauſe it miniſtereth to us a full aſſurance of ſalvation by Chriſt, and of our reſurrection alſo; for if we believe that Jeſus Chriſt died, and roſe again, even ſo them alſo that ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him, 1 Theſſ. 4. 14.; Knowing that he that raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall alſo raiſe up us by Jeſus, 2 Cor. 4. 13. 14: And this belief of an happy reſurrection to eternal life, is a ſufficient motive to be ſtedfaſt, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, 1 Cor. 15. 58. And where it hath not theſe effects upon us, we do not in the ſcripture-ſenſe duly believe, and attend to it. Note, Thirdly, That, when the apoſtle ſaith, If thou doſt thus confeſs and believe, thou ſhalt be ſaved, we need not underſtand this of actual and complete ſalvation, to be imparted at the day of judgment; but that this faith and this confeſſion will put us into the way of ſalvation, and give us a right to it, whilſt we continue to act ſuitably to this faith, which I have ſhewn to be the frequent import of the word ſalvation, and ſaved, when ſalvation is aſcribed to faith and grace. See the notes on Eph. 2. 8. Titus 3. 5.

Ver. 10. ᵍ Στόματι δὲ ὁμολογεῖται, with the mouth confeſſion is made to ſalvation.] For in thoſe times of perſecution for the ſake of Chriſt, he that continued, under thoſe fiery trials, to hold faſt his profeſſion, could do it only through that lively faith in Chriſt, and that ſincere affection to him above all worldly intereſts, which he hath promiſed to reward with life eternal.

Ver. 13. ʰ Ἐπικαλέσηται τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου, ſhall call upon the name of the Lord.] The word in the original is Jehovah; whence it is certain, that the prophet ſpeaks theſe words of the true and only God; and yet it is as certain, that the apoſtle here aſcribes them to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, both from the following words, How ſhall they call on him in whom they have not believed? (for the apoſtle in this whole chapter diſcourſeth of faith in Chriſt), and from the words foregoing, of which theſe are a proof, and to which they are connected with the particle γὰρ; for thoſe words, Whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall not be aſhamed, are ſpoken by the prophet Iſaiah, of Jeſus Chriſt the corner-ſtone, Iſ. 28. 16. and ſo are they interpreted by St Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 6. 7.; and in the prophet Joel theſe words follow, πᾶς γὰρ ὃς ἂν ἐπικαλέσηται τὸ ὄνομα Κυρίου σωθήσεται, and the evangelized whom the Lord ſhall call, ſhall be ſaved. Here then we have two arguments for the divinity of Chriſt: 1. That what is ſpoken of Jehovah is aſcribed to him. 2. That he is made the object of our religious invocation. See note on 1 Cor. 1. 2.

Ibid. Mr L. indeed attempts to invalidate the force of both theſe arguments, 1ſt, by ſaying, that this calling upon the name of the Lord, doth not import the invocation of Chriſt, but only an open profeſſion of faith in him; becauſe St Paul argues cloſely, and yet in the three preceding verſes requires an open profeſſion of the goſpel. Anſ. There is not one word of profeſſing either in the 11th or 12th verſes; in the 9th or 10th he mentions confeſſion with the mouth, and believing with the heart as neceſſary, becauſe the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth, ſhall not be aſhamed, the ſame Lord over all being rich to all that call upon him; for, Joel 2. 32. whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. If then St Paul be a cloſe reaſoner, he muſt ſpeak of invocation of the name of the Lord. Moreover, this being the character of the diſciples of Chriſt, even before they were called Chriſtians, ſee note on Acts 9. 2. and the continual practice of all Chriſtians from the beginning, ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 2. the apoſtle might well argue from believers, to thoſe that call upon Chriſt's name. The firſt argument he would invalidate by denying, that the words cited by St Paul from Joel are to be underſtood in the ſenſe in which they are uſed by the prophet, which, in effect, is to deny that the apoſtle argued either cloſely or truly; for the whole of the apoſtle's inference is loſt, if either the Lord, ver. 13. be not the ſame Lord with him in ver. 12. or if to call upon him, doth not bear the ſame ſenſe in both places.

Ver. 15. [i] Ὡς ὡραῖοι, how beautiful, &c.] The Midraſh ſhir Haſſchirim upon thoſe words of Cant. 2. 12. The voice of the turtle is heard in our land, ſaith thus, This is the voice of the King Meſſiah, crying out, and ſaying, How beautiful, &c. Moreover, from thoſe words, How ſhall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? ver. 14. and from thoſe, ver. 17. Faith comes by hearing, &c. it follows, that thoſe Gentiles who never had the goſpel preached to them, or any opportunity of hearing it, cannot be condemned for want of faith in Chriſt, or in his doctrine, that being to condemn them for the want of that which they never were in a capacity to have; if therefore they are capable of a reward, as they muſt be who are obliged to believe that God is the rewarder of all them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6. Chriſt muſt be a Saviour to them who do thus ſeek him, though they know not of him.

Ver. 18. [k] Ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, their voice.] Theſe words being ſpoken literally of the preaching of the heavens to the Gentiles, touching the power, wiſdom, and the goodneſs of God; and the Pſalmiſt ſpeaking immediately after, of God's teaching his people by the law, as a more glorious diſcovery of his will to the Jews, the apoſtle very appoſitely accommodates theſe words to the revelation of his power, wiſdom, goodneſs, and mercy in the goſpel to the Heathens.

Moreover, that Kav-ram, which we render their line, Pſal. 19. 4. does ſignify their loud cry, and ſo is well rendered by the apoſtle here ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, their ſound, i. e. the ſound of the apoſtles, is fully proved by Dr Pocock, Miſcel. c. 4. p. 48.

Ver. 19. [l] Ἀλλὰ, but.] That ἀλλὰ ſignifies yea, ſee our tranſlation rendering it ſo five times, 2 Cor. 7. 11. John 16. 2. That it ſignifies, quin etiam, quin imo, ſee Naldius, and Luke 12. 7. 1 Cor. 3. 2. and 12. 22.

Ibid. [m] ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, by them that are no people.] That this is the deſcription of the Heathens, ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 28. who are alſo ſtyled, not only by the Jews, but by the ſcriptures, whilſt idolaters, a fooliſh people, Jer. 10. 8. Rom. 1. 21. 22. Titus 3. 3.

Ver. 21. [n] Ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν, all the day long.] Theſe words are cited from Iſ. 65. 1. 2. and Aben Ezra informs us, that (d) R. Moſes Hacoben ſaid, "The "firſt verſe is to be underſtood of the nations of "the world, as if it had been ſaid, I am found of "the nations which are not called by my name, "but to my people have I ſtretched out my hand:" And ſo the apoſtle interprets and applies the words here.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. I Say then, (that the generality of the Jews are hardened and caſt off, but what then?) Hath God caſt away his people (utterly and without exception?) God forbid (we ſhould ſo think); for I alſo am an Iſraelite, of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin, (and yet choſen to be an apoſtle of Chriſt.)

2. God (therefore) hath not (thus) caſt away his people [a] whom he foreknew. (Pſal. 95. 3. And to repreſent this in a like caſe well known to you), wot you not what the ſcripture ſaith of Elias, (ἐν Ἠλίᾳ, in the hiſtory of Elias), how he (in it) maketh interceſſion to God [b] againſt (the king and people of) Iſrael? ſaying,

3. Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged [c] down thine altars, and I am left alone (of all thy prophets), and they ſeek my life.

4. But what ſaith the anſwer of God to him (in that hiſtory? It ſpeaks thus), I have reſerved to myſelf ſeven thouſand men, who have not bowed the knee [d] to the image of Baal.

5. Even ſo then (is it) at this preſent time alſo, (for even now) there is a remnant according to the [e] election of grace,

6. And if (they who are choſen in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 4. to be God's church and people, are put into this ſtate) by grace, (being juſtified freely by his grace, Rom. 3. 24.), then it is no more of (the) works (of the law that they are thus juſtified and accepted by him), otherwiſe grace is no more grace; (for what need is there of grace, where men have continued in all things written in the law to do them? Moſes having ſaid, The man that doth theſe things ſhall live by them, Rom. 10. 5.); but (on the other hand) if it be of works (that we are juſtified and accepted), then it is no more (of) grace; otherwiſe work is no more work, (for grace comes in only to ſupply the defect of works, that is, to procure pardon for the non-performance of them, according to the tenor of the law.)

7. What then (muſt be ſaid in this caſe, but this, viz. that the whole nation of) Iſrael hath not obtained that (righteouſneſs or juſtification, Rom. 9.30. 31.) which he ſeeketh for, but the election (the choſen generation of believers, 1 Pet. 2. 9.) hath obtained it, and the reſt were blinded.

8. (And this blindneſs hath happened to them) according as it is written, [r] God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber: eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear, unto this day.

9. And (as) David ſaith, Let their table be (or [s] their table ſhall be) made a ſnare, and a trap, and a ſtumbling-block, and a recompenſe unto them (of their evil deeds.)

10. Let their eyes be (or their eyes ſhall be) darkened, that they may not ſee, and (thou ſhalt) [t] bow down their back alway.

11. I ſay then (or, moreover, of thoſe of the Jewiſh nation which were thus blinded), have they (ſo) ſtumbled, that they ſhould (irrecoverably) fall? God forbid (we ſhould ſo think of them); but (ſo hath it happened through the wiſe counſel of God, that) through their fall, ſalvation is come unto the Gentiles, (whom God hath now choſen to be his people), for to provoke them to jealouſy, (or to an emulation of their faith, that they alſo may be ſaved.)

12. Now (δὲ, and) if the fall of them (from the prerogative of being God's peculiar people, happened thus to) be the riches of the (Gentile) world, and the diminiſhing of them the riches (and increaſe) of the Gentiles, how much more (ſhall) [u] their fulneſs (be the increaſe of them?)

13. Of you Gentiles, I ſay), for I ſpeak (this) to you Gentiles, in as much as I am the apoſtle of the Gentiles, (and by thus ſpeaking) I magnify my office, (as declaring it to reach to the whole body of the Gentiles, and to have been thus efficacious among them, Rom. 15.18. 19.)

14. (And I ſpeak of your being choſen thus to be God's people); [x] if by any means I may provoke to (an) emulation (of your faith) them which are my fleſh, and (ſo) might (be a means to) ſave ſome of them.

15. (And indeed their ſalvation is deſirable, not only for their own, but for your ſakes); for if the caſting away of them be (an occaſion of) the reconciling of the world, what ſhall the receiving of them again into favour) be (to the Gentiles) but (even as) life (or a reſurrection) from the dead?

16. Nor are you to imagine this is an improbable, and even deſperate ſuppoſition): For if the (patriarchs, who were the) [y] firſt-fruits (of them) be (were) holy, (called and ſeparated to the ſervice of God from all the people of the earth), the lump (of the whole nation) is alſo (in God's deſignation) holy; and if the root (of them, viz. Abraham) be (was) holy (and beloved of God), ſo are the branches (alſo beloved ſtill of God for the father's ſake, and ſo will be once more, in his good time, admitted to his favour.)

17. And if (it hath ſo happened that) ſome of the branches (through infidelity) be broken off, and thou (Gentile) being a wild olive-tree (or branch), were graffed in among them, and with them (who believe) partakeſt (of the privileges) of the root, and the fatneſs of the olive-tree (into which thou art graffed.)

18. Boaſt not againſt the branches (now cut off, as if they were utterly rejected from God's care and favour); but if thou boaſt, (conſider) thou beareſt not the root, but the root thee, (the promiſes being not made to thee, but to Abraham their root; and if thou becomeſt partaker of them only by being the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, by imitation of his faith, how much more ſhall they who are by lineal deſcent the ſeed of Abraham, and ſo the primary and direct heirs of the promiſe, Acts 3. 25. and 12. 26. in due time be graffed into their own root? ver. 24.)

Ver. 19. Thou wilt ſay then, The (natural) branches were broken off (for their infidelity), that I might be graffed in, (i. e. received as God's people in their ſtead.)

20. Well, becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, (i. e. rejected from being his church and people, ver. 15.), and thou ſtandeſt (Gr. haſt ſtood) by faith. Be not high minded, (vaunt not thyſelf over them, ver. 18. 25.), but fear, (leſt this ſhould alſo be thy caſe.)

21. For if God ſpared not the natural branches, (thou haſt cauſe to fear) [z] leſt he alſo ſpare not thee.

22. Behold therefore (in this diſpenſation) the goodneſs and ſeverity of God; on them which fell, ſeverity, (in taking the kingdom of God away from them, Matth. 21. 43.); but to thee goodneſs, (in admitting thee to be his church and people, which goodneſs will be ſtill ſhewed to thee), if thou continue in (or worthy of) his goodneſs; otherwiſe thou alſo ſhalt be cut off (for thy infidelity and diſobedience.)

23. And (as thou ſtandeſt by faith, ſo) they alſo, if they abide not ſtill in unbelief, ſhall be graffed in; [a] for God is able to (work in them that faith which will) graff them in again.

24. (And that he will thus graff them in, we have juſt cauſe to think); for if [b] thou wert cut out of (Gr. off from) the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed, contrary to nature, into a good good olive-tree, how much more ſhall theſe, which be the natural branches, (though now cut off), be graffed (again) into their own olive-tree?

25. (And this I now declare); for I would not, brethren, that you ſhould be ignorant of this [p] myſtery, (of the intended calling of the now rejected Jews), leſt you ſhould be wiſe in your own conceits, (boaſting over them, ver. 18. as being yourſelves men of greater wiſdom, and more highly favoured of God), that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael, (i. e. as to the greateſt part of them, a remnant only being now brought into the faith, ver. 5. 7. chap. 9. 27.), till the (time of the) fulneſs (or more complete converſion) of the Gentiles be come in.

26. And ſo [q] all (the nations of) Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, (i. e. called and put into a ſtate of ſalvation, 1 Tim. 1. 9.), as it is written (Iſ. 59. 20.), There ſhall come out of Zion the deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob.

27. And (again he by Iſaiah ſaith), This is my covenant to them (Iſ. 59. 21.), when I ſhall take away their ſins, (chap. 27. 9.)

28. As concerning the goſpel (preached to them firſt, and upon their rejection of it, to the Gentiles, Acts 13. 45. 47.) they are (now) enemies (to it, and by oppoſing it to God and Chriſt) for your ſakes, being prejudiced againſt it, becauſe you are received to the bleſſings of it, and that without circumciſion, or being joined to them, Acts 17. 13. and 22. 21. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16.), but [r] as touching the election (of that nation to be an holy people to himſelf), they are (thus) beloved for the fathers ſake.

29. For (though they have rendered themſelves unworthy of his favour, yet) the [s] gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

30. (Nor will their preſent infidelity and diſobedience be any obſtacle to this converſion); For as the (Gentiles) in times paſt have not believed God, (Gr. were diſobedient to God); yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief, (God having received you Gentiles to be his people, becauſe of their infidelity);

31. Even ſo have theſe alſo now not believed, (Gr. not obeyed), that, [t] through your mercy, they alſo may obtain mercy.

32. For [u] God hath concluded all (both Jew and Gentile) in belief, that (at laſt) he might have mercy upon all.

33. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! (by which he is thus able to convert all things to the honour and glory of his name, and make his ſevereſt judgments to conclude at laſt in mercy!) How unſearchable are his judgments (to any human underſtanding), and his ways paſt finding out (by any wit of man?)

34. For who hath (through his own wiſdom without revelation) known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been his counſellor (in thus ordering matters relating to Jew or Gentile?)

35. Or who hath firſt given to him, and it ſhall be [x] recompenſed to him again? (i. e. who hath laid any obligations on him to reward him? Surely no man.)

36. For of him (as the donor), and through him (as the director and providential orderer), and to him (as the end) are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XI.

Verſe 2. [a] Ὃν προέγνω, whom he foreknew.] Concerning the people of Iſrael, Moſes ſpeaks thus: Thou art an holy people to the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God προείλατο, hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial people to himſelf above (or before) all people that are upon the face of the earth, Deut. 7. 6. and 10. 15. Now, to be choſen, and to be known of God, are the ſame thing in ſcripture, and therefore the phraſe is elſewhere varied thus: You only have I known before all the families of the earth, Amos 3. 2. ὑμᾶς ἔγνων ἐκ πασῶν τῶν φυλῶν τῆς γῆς, Numb. 16. 5. To-morrow, יודיע, and the Lord will know who are his, and who is holy, even him whom he hath choſen; which by the Seventy is thus tranſlated, καὶ ἔγνω ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοὺς ἁγίους-----οὓς ἐξελέξατο ἀυτῷ, the Lord knoweth who are his, and the holy ones whom he hath choſen to himſelf; and ver. 7. The man whom the Lord doth chuſe, he ſhall be holy. And thoſe words of Hoſea, Judah yet ruleth with the Lord, and is faithful with his ſaints, chap. 11. 12. are by the Septuagint thus rendered, καὶ Ἰούδα τῶν ἔγνω αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ ὁ λαὸς ἅγιος κληθήσεται Θεοῦ, and as for Judah, now God hath known them, and he ſhall be called the holy people of God. So that the people whom he foreknew, may be here only a periphraſis of the Jewiſh nation, which God had choſen before all other nations of the world, and therefore would not utterly caſt off, becauſe his gifts and calling are without repentance, ver. 29. Or it may ſignify thoſe of them who believed in Chriſt, and ſo were ſuch as he had purpoſed to ſave, or, the election according to grace, ver. 5. 7. which ſenſe this phraſe bears, Rom. 8. 29. 1 Pet. 1. 1. 2.

Ibid. [b] Ἐντυγχάνει Θεῷ κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, He maketh interceſſion to God againſt Iſrael.] ἐντυγχάνω ὑπερ, is to intercede, or be an advocate for a perſon, and he that doth ſo is called συνήγορος; and this is the office of our bleſſed Lord, who ever lives to make interceſſion for us; but ἐντυγχάνω κατὰ τινος, is to accuſe, or charge a perſon with a crime, and ſo to intercede againſt againſt him. So 1 Maccab. 8. 32. If the Jews complain againſt thee, ἐὰν ἐντυχῶσι κατὰ σου, we will do them juſtice. And when wicked men came to King Alexander to complain againſt Jonathan, the King commanded a proclamation to be made, τῷ μηδένα ἐντυγχάνειν κατ' αὐτοῦ περὶ μηδενὸς πράγματος, that no man ſhould complain againſt him about any matter, 1 Mac. 10. 61. 63. And again, chap. 11. 25. ſome wicked men complained againſt him, ἐντύγχανον κατ' αὐτοῦ. So here, ἐντυγχάνειν κατὰ τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, is to complain againſt Iſrael.

Ver. 3. [c] Τὰ θυσιαστήρια σου, thy altars.] Not thoſe which God approved of after the building of the temple, they being then obliged to offer all their ſacrifices at the place which God had choſen to put his name there, Deut. 12. 5. 6. but thoſe which had before been uſed by the patriarchs and prophets, for the ſervice of God, as that of Samuel in Ramah, and in Miſpah, 1 Sam. 7. 9. and 9. 13. in Gilgal, chap. 11. 16. at Bethlehem, chap. 16. 2. 4. and the altar of the Lord at Carmel, 1 Kings 18. 30. on which the pious people of the ten tribes ſacrificed, when they were not permitted to go up to Jeruſalem, that law, ſaith Kimchi, then ceaſing as to them.

Ver. 4. [d] Τῇ Βάαλ, to Baal.] that is, to the image of Baal; ſo Hoſ. 2. 8. I gave her the gold and the ſilver, which ſhe prepared for Baal, Gr. αὐτὴ δὲ ἄργυρόν μου καὶ χρυσὸν ἐποίησε τῇ Βάαλ, but ſhe prepared this gold and ſilver for the image of Baal; ſhe made idols of them, ſaith the Targum; ſo Tobit 1. 5. ἔθυον τῇ Βάαλ τῇ δαμάλει, they ſacrificed to the heifer Baal; Jer. 2. 28. According to the number of their ſtreets in Jeruſalem, θυσιαστήρια τῇ Βάαλ, have they ſacrificed to the image of Baal: for ſure they had not as many Baalims as they had ſtreets; and therefore, where the Septuagint reads τῇ Βάαλ, there the Chaldee adds idols, or images. I will blot out the names of Baal, τὰ ὀνόματα τῆς Βάαλ, reliquias idolorum Baal, Targum; ſee Hoſ. 13. 1. This I prefer before that notion of the learned Selden, that Baal was ἀρρενόθηλυς, male and female.

Ver. 5. [e] The election of grace.] See note on ver. 28. That many who belonged to this election fell away, is evident from the epiſtle to the Hebrews; ſee the note on 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. And whereas Dr Mills contends, that the words following, viz. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον, &c. εἰ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶ χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔστιν ἔργον. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 8. [f] Ἔδωκεν αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς, God hath given them a ſpirit of ſlumber, &c.] The Hebrew נתן, and the Greek δίδωμι, is often uſed to ſignify a permiſſion of that which we can hinder, as Gen. 31. 7. οὐκ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ ὁ Θεὸς κακοποιῆσαί με, God, ſaith Jacob, permitted not Laban to hurt me; Deut. 18. 14. καὶ σοὶ οὐκ οὕτως ἔδωκε Κύριος ὁ Θεός σου, the Lord thy God hath not ſuffered thee to do ſo; ſee alſo Judges 15. 1. Acts 2. 27. and 13. 35. So again, 1 Kings 22. 22. 23. The Lord hath put, ἔδωκεν ὁ Θεὸς, a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all thy prophets, i. e. he hath permitted him freely to go forth, and to deceive them, ver. 22.; Eſther 9. 13. If it pleaſe the king, δοθήτω Ἰουδαίοις, let it be granted to the Jews to do ſo to-morrow alſo. Of him that ſat upon the red horſe it is ſaid, that ἐδόθη αὐτῷ, it was given him to take peace from the earth, Rev. 6. 4. and chap. 9. 3. 5. Of the beaſt it is ſaid, ἐδόθη αὐτῷ, there was given to him a mouth to ſpeak great things, and blaſphemies; and it was given him to make war with the ſaints, and overcome them. See Hoſ. 13. 11. Joel 2. 17. 19. Rev. 6. 8. and 9. 14. 15. See the note on chap. 1. 24. 26. And in this ſenſe God is here ſaid to have given the Jews a ſpirit of ſlumber, by permitting them to lie under thoſe prejudices againſt the true Meſſiah, which their traditions concerning him, and the doctrine and authority of the Scribes and Phariſees had wrought within them; as alſo by delivering the things belonging to Chriſt's kingdom obſcurely to them and in parables, becauſe they would not receive them when more plainly taught, Matth. 13. 13.; and by taking the kingdom of God from them, and giving it to a nation that would bring forth the fruits of it, becauſe they contradicted and blaſphemed the doctrine of that kingdom, and ſo cauſed the apoſtles to turn from them to the Gentiles, Matth. 23. 43. Acts 13. 45. 46.; and by refuſing to walk in the light whilſt they enjoyed it, they made it juſt that darkneſs ſhould thus come upon them, or that they ſhould have eyes and ſee not, ears and hear not; which is a mode of ſpeaking uſed frequently in the Old Teſtament, and in Philo the Jew, and others, to repreſent men who had contracted ſuch prejudices againſt God's word, and ſuch vitious habits, as made them not to diſcern, or give ear to the voice of God, or reaſon, calling them to reformation and amendment. So God ſpeaks by his prophet Iſaiah, Hear ye deaf, and look ye blind; ſeeing many things, but thou obſerveſt not, opening the ears, but he heareth not, Iſ. 42. 18. 19. 20.; and by the prophet Jeremiah, Hear now this, O fooliſh people, and without underſtanding; which have eyes and ſee not, which have ears and hear not, Jer. 5. 21.; by the prophet Ezekiel, ſaying, They have eyes to ſee and ſee not, ears to hear and hear not, for they are a rebellious houſe, Ezek. 12. 2. So Chriſt ſpeaks to his own diſciples, Having eyes, do ye not ſee? Mark 8. 18. So Philo (e) often ſaith of men addicted to their ſenſual pleaſures, and purſuing them againſt the dictates of their minds, That ὀφθαλμοὶς ὄντες οὐ ὁρῶσι, καὶ ἀκούοντες οὐκ ἀκούουσι, ſeeing they ſee not, and hearing they hear not; this he ſaith περὶ τῶν ἡδονῶν κεκορεσμένων, of perſons ſatiated with pleaſure, and drunk with the love of wine; this, ſaith he (f), happens ἐν τοῖς κόροις, καὶ ταῖς μέθαις, when we indulge to gluttony or drunkenneſs; and (g) ἐν ταῖς καθ' ὕπνον φαντασίαις, in the phantaſms of our dreams. Thus of thoſe Heathens who worſhipped the works of their own hands, Juſtin Martyr ſaith (h), That ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχοντες οὐκ ὄψονται, ὦτα καὶ καρδίαν ἔχοντες συνήσουσι, having eyes they ſaw not, and having hearts they did not underſtand.

Ver. 9. [a] Γενηθήτω, their table ſhall be, and their eyes ſhall be.] They who are ſkilled in the Hebrew tongue, know that theſe words are as capable of the future, as the imperative mood and tenſe: they are rendered in the future by Arias Montanus, and the Seventy interpreters ſometimes render them in the imperative, as Pſal. 109. 6.—15. and ſometimes in the future, as ver. 17. As he loved curſing, ſo let it come upon him, ᾧ οὐκ ἠυδόκησεν ἐν εὐλογίᾳ, as he delighted not in bleſſing, ſo let it be far from him, καὶ μακρυνθήτω ἀπ' αὐτοῦ· and ver. 8. Let them curſe, but bleſs thou, καταρασάσθωσαν αὐτοὶ, καὶ σὺ εὐλογήσεις, they ſhall curſe, but thou ſhalt bleſs.

Ver. 10. [b] Τὸν νῶτον αὐτῶν, &c. ever bow down their backs;] that is, let them be in ſlavery and bondage; the contrary, going upright, ſignifying their freedom from Egyptian thraldom, by taking that yoke of bondage from them, which made them ſtoop under it. So Lev. 26. 13. I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you to go upright. So the Midraſh Tillim upon theſe words of the pſalmiſt, Pſal. 146. 8. The Lord raiſeth them that are bowed down, ſaith, "Theſe are the Iſraelites carried captive from their "own land; for ſince they were baniſhed from Je"ruſalem, they have not been able to ſtand up"right but have bowed down their backs before "their enemies, who go over them." And therefore, in their ſecond benediction, before their reading of the morning ſchema, they pray thus, "Bring us "in peace from the four wings of the earth, et duc "nos ſtatura erecta in terram noſtram, and lead us "ſtanding upright into our own land." Having thus anſwered the firſt queſtion, he proceeds to inquire, whether they of them who thus ſtumbled, have fallen ſo as that they ſhall never be recovered.

Ver. 12. [c] Πλήρωμα αὐτῶν, their fulneſs.] As πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου ſignifies the whole tract of time appointed for ſuch an event, Gal. 4. 4. Eph. 1. 10. πλήρωμα τῆς γῆς, the whole contents of the earth, 1 Cor. 10. 26. 28. and πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος is the full perfection of the Deity, Col. 2. 9. and πλήρωμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ is the perfection or the fulneſs of grace and wiſdom with which he fills his members, Eph. 4. 13. and that ἐκ τοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ, from that fulneſs of the Spirit which is in him, John 1. 16. and πλήρωμα Θεοῦ is the ſame fulneſs derived from God, Eph. 3. 19.; ſo here πλήρωμα τῶν αὐτῶν is the time when the Gentiles ſhould more fully come in, and God would ſhew mercy to them all, ver. 25. 32. and πλήρωμα τῶν Ἰουδαίων, the fulneſs of the Jews, is the coming in of all Iſrael, ver. 26.: and ſo St. Paul himſelf all along interprets it, ſtyling it, ver. 15. πρόσληψις, the receiving of them into grace and favour by God, the ingraffing them who were broken off, as the unbelieving Jews were, into their own olive, ver. 23. 24. the turning away iniquity from Jacob, ver. 26.

Ver. 14. [d] Εἴπως παραζηλώσω, if by any means I may provoke them, &c.] This ſeems to be ſaid in alluſion to thoſe words of God, Deut. 32. 21. They have moved me to jealouſy with that which is not god, κἀγὼ παραζηλώσω, and I will move them to jealouſy with thoſe that are not a people, ver. 12. that ſeeing them who before were not the people of God, now choſen to be his people, and inveſted with all the privileges which formerly belonged to them, viz. being of his church, among whom he dwells, and to whom he gives his Spirit, his new law, his prophets, apoſtles, and evangeliſts, they might be induced to believe, and ſo might ſtill ſhare in all thoſe bleſſings. Hence alſo it appears, that the apoſtle did not think they were ſo blinded, or given up to a ſpirit of ſlumber, but that they might ſtill be ſaved.

Ver. 16. [e] Εἰ δὲ ἡ ἀπαρχὴ, the firſt-fruits of them were holy.] It is generally known that the word holy, when applied to perſons, families, churches, and nations, ſignifies their being called, conſecrated, and ſeparated from the world unto God's ſervice; in which ſenſe in the Old Teſtament it is frequently applied to the prieſts, Numb. 16. 5. Pſal. 106. 16.; to the Levites, Numb. 3. 13. and 8. 14. 15. 16. 17.; to the whole Jewiſh nation, Exod. 22. 31. and 19. 6. Deut. 7. 6. and 14. 2. 21. and 28. 9. Iſ. 62. 12. Dan. 8. 24. and 12. 7. Hence then the argument runs thus: If God ſo loved Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as to engage his word, that he would be their God, and the God of their ſeed for ever, Gen. 17. 7. and by thus entering into covenant with them, hallowed to himſelf all their poſterity; even as the firſt-fruits of their dough, made an offering, hallowed the whole lump, Numb. 15. 20. then will he, in his good time, be ſo mindful of them, as to bring them again into his covenant, ſo that they ſhall be his people, and he will be their God; for as touching the election they are ſtill beloved for the fathers ſake. If this argument runs only upon the ſuppoſition that they do believe, it ſaith that only which is as true of all Gentiles; it therefore ſeems to be an argument that they will be received into favour, and therefore will believe, ver. 21.

Ver. 21. [m] Μήπως οὐδὲ σοῦ φείσηται, leſt he alſo ſpare not thee.] Φόβε, fear, is to be repeated from the former verſe. So 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. I ſent to know your faith, μήπως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς, ſubaud. φοβούμενος, fearing leſt the tempter ſhould have tempted you.

Ver. 23. [n] Δυνατὸς γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς, for God is able, &c.] from which power we may reaſonably conclude his will to do ſo, for ſo the apoſtle argues, chap. 14. 4. He ſhall be holden up, for God is able to make him ſtand; 2 Cor. 6. 8. He that ſoweth liberally, ſhall reap liberally; for God is able to make all grace abound toward you. See note on chap. 14. 4.

Ver. 24. [o] Note, That there ſhould be a fulneſs of the fallen Jews, and a receiving them again into favour, whom God had now caſt off, the apoſtle plainly doth ſuppoſe, ver. 12. 15. and now he ſets himſelf to the proof of it, by an argument a minori ad majus, viz. If they who had no ſuch relation to Abraham, and the bleſſings promiſed to him, as the Jews had, were yet partakers of the bleſſings promiſed to Abraham, the root of that nation, how much more ſhall this favour, in God's due time, be granted to them who are children of the ſtock of Abraham?

Ver. 25. [p] Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο, this myſtery, &c.] See the confirmation of this expoſition in the appendix to the epiſtle.

Ver. 26. [q] Hence the ſecond argument for a general converſion of the Jews runs thus: If that part of the Jews to which blindneſs hath happened ſhall be delivered from that heavy judgment, if there ſhall come to them out of Zion a deliverer to turn away their iniquity, if God will accompliſh his covenant hereafter with them, by taking away their ſins, then they who are thus blinded, ſhall be converted to the Chriſtian faith. Where note,

1. That this promiſe is made to that part of the Jews to which blindneſs had happened, ver. 15. and ſo the promiſe of ſalvation to this Iſrael, cannot be interpreted of all the true children of Abraham, Jews and Gentiles both.

2. It ſaith, that God will take away their ſins, and turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob. Now, if this ſignifies that God will ſend a deliverer out of Zion, to procure the pardon of this people's ſins, ſince pardon only can be given to them through faith in Chriſt, this deliverer muſt be that Jeſus who ſaves his people from their ſins; if it imports that God would take away the puniſhment of their iniquity, that being the blindneſs and ſpiritual ſlumber which was then, and is ſtill upon them, the removal of it muſt ſignify their converſion, this blindneſs being only then to be taken away, when they ſhall turn to the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 14. 15. 16.

Ver. 28. [r] Κατὰ δὲ τὴν ἐκλογὴν, as touching the election.] Here is in this chapter mention of a double election, viz. ἐκλογὴ χάριτος, the election of grace, ver. 5. the goſpel-election of perſons and nations to be his church and people, which being purely on account of that faith which is the gift of God, without conſideration of any other worthineſs that we had, or any works that we had done, is ſtyled the election of grace; and thus a remnant only of the Jews were choſen, ver. 7.; for many of them were called by the preaching of the goſpel to the faith, it being preached to them firſt, Acts 13. 45. but few of them were choſen to be members of the church of Chriſt, becauſe few of them believed. And, ſecondly, there is an election διὰ τοὺς πατέρας, to be God's people for their fathers ſake; in which ſenſe the whole nation of the Jews are ſtyled the elect, as in theſe words, Becauſe he loved thy fathers, viz. Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, Deut. 4. 37. ᾗ ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς, therefore he choſe you their ſeed after them, and brought you out of Egypt by his mighty power; where it is evident, that all that were brought out of Egypt were the elect, or the choſen ſeed. So Deut. 7. 6. 7. 8. The Lord did not ſet his love upon you, nor chuſe you, ὅτι πρωτεύετε ὑμᾶς, he did not fore-elect you, becauſe you were more in number than any people; but becauſe the Lord loved you, and becauſe that he would keep the oath which he had ſworn to your fathers, hath he brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondage. Where again it is evident, 1. That their being choſen to be God's peculiar people before other nations, is their election. And, 2. That all who were brought out of Egypt were thus beloved, and thus choſen. And again, chap. 10. 14. 15. The Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, καὶ ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτοὺς ὑμᾶς, therefore he elected you their ſeed after them above all people; circumciſe therefore the foreſkin of your hearts, and be no more ſtiff-necked. Where again evident it is, that the whole ſeed of Abraham by Iſaac, even the ſtiff-necked of them, were the beloved and the elect of God, it being therefore not upon account of their righteouſneſs, Deut. 9. 5. but for the love he had, and the promiſes he made to their fathers, that he firſt loved and choſe them for his people; and his love to theſe forefathers being ſtill the ſame, and his promiſe to them being this, That he would be for ever a God to them, and their ſeed after them, Gen. 17. 7. he muſt have that kind affection and regard to them, which will engage him to chuſe them again for his peculiar people, notwithſtanding their preſent blindneſs; and all Iſrael being thus elected for the fathers ſake, this calling muſt belong to them all.

Ver. 29. [Τὰ χαρίσματα, for the gifts, &c.] The particle for ſhews, that theſe words relate to what was ſaid in the former verſe, viz. they are beloved for their fathers ſake, to whom God gave this διαθήκην αἰώνιον, everlaſting covenant to be the God of their ſeed after them, Gen. 17. 7.. Now, this covenant made with the fathers being abſolute, and the calling of their ſeed to be his peculiar people being the effect of it, God will not repent for ever of his kindneſs to them; hence he engageth to ſave them with an everlaſting ſalvation, Iſ. 45. 17. with everlaſting kindneſs to have mercy on them, chap. 54. 8. and 56. 5. and 60. 19. 20. and 61. 7. and ſaith, I have loved thee with an everlaſting love, Jer. 31. 3. If then God will not repent for ever of his covenant made with their forefathers, to be the God of their ſeed after them for ever, or that, he choſe Jacob for himſelf, and Iſrael for his heritage, Pſal. 135. 4. then will he certainly reſtore them to that privilege and happy ſtate; but God will not thus repent, for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

Ver. 31. [Τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει, to your mercy,] i. e. Which unbelief hath happened not to your rejection, as it did to them, but to your mercy, that they alſo may obtain mercy together with you, and you with them, the fulneſs of the Gentiles coming in with their converſion.

This argument for calling the Jews runs thus: If God hath called the Gentiles to his grace after a long idolatry and infidelity, though they were not before ever admitted to thoſe privileges the Jews enjoyed, nor had God promiſed to be their God for ever, much more will he recall his choſen people from their infidelity.

Ver. 32. ᵃ Eſthius's note upon theſe three verſes, is this, That the apoſtle doth without controverſy in theſe words ſpeak of Iſrael according to the fleſh, and therefore in the preceding words muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak of the ſame Iſrael; ſo that hence the tradition of the church concerning the calling of the Jews, towards the end of the world, is eſtabliſhed.

See the appendix to this chapter, at the end of this epiſtle.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. I Beſeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of (that) God, (of whom, and through whom are all things, and to whoſe glory they are all deſigned, chap. 11. 36. or by the mercies of God mentioned, chap. 11. 30. 31. 32.), that ye ᵇ preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reaſonable ſervice.

2. And ᵇ be not conformed to (the evil cuſtoms of) this (Heathen) world, but be ye transformed (into other men) ᶜ by the renewing of your mind, (and judgment of things), that ye may prove (Gr. diſcern and approve, ſee note on 1 Cor. 11. 28. Gal. 6. 4.) what is ᵈ that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God; (i. e. that will which under the goſpel requires only what is ſubſtantially good, and therefore always acceptable to him, and perfectly inſtructs us in our whole Chriſtian duty.)

3. (Which will of God you will the better diſcern by your humility, and diligence in the exerciſe of your ſpiritual gifts); for I ſay, through the grace (of apoſtleſhip, ſee note on chap. 1. 5.) given to me, to every man that is among you (thus gifted), not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think, (on the account of thoſe miniſterial gifts conferred upon him, not for his own ſake, but for the benefit of others, 1 Cor. 4. 6. 7. and 12. 7. as did the ſcribes and Phariſees, and doctors of the law, on the account of their wiſdom and knowledge of it, Rom. 8. 18.—23.), but to think ſoberly (of himſelf), according as God hath dealt to every man the ᵉ meaſure of faith.

4. For as we have many members in one body (natural), and (Gr. but) all (the) members (of it) have not the ſame office, (but ſome are more feeble, ſome more vigorous, ſome employed in more, ſome in leſs honourable ſervices, 1 Cor. 12. from ver. 12. to 27.)

5. So we (Chriſtians) being many, are one body in Chriſt (our head), and every one (of us are different) members one of another.

6. Having then gifts, differing according to the grace (or favour of God) that is given to us, whether (it be) prophecy, let us propheſy according to ᶠ the proportion of faith;

7. Or (if it be) ᵍ miniſtry, (that of an evangeliſt), let us wait on our miniſtry; or he that teacheth, on teaching;

8. Or he that exhorteth, (by a ſpiritual afflatus, 1 Cor. 14. 3. 31.), on exhortation; he that ʰ giveth (or diſtributes to the church's flock), let him do it with ſimplicity, (or liberality, ſee note on 2 Cor. 8. 2.); he that ruleth, (or preſides over that flock), with diligence; he that ſheweth mercy (to the ſick, impotent, ſtrangers, orphans,) with chearfulneſs.

9. Let

9. Let love be without diſſimulation, (not in word only, but in deed, and in truth, 1 John 3. 18.): abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good.

10. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love, (not bearing only ſuch a kindneſs to one another as common humanity calls for, but ſuch as the relation of Chriſtian brethren, and the bonds of conſanguinity require), in honour preferring one another, (through humility acting as if you conceived others more worthy of honour than yourſelves; ſee note on Philip. 2. 3. and being well contented that they ſhould be placed in a more honourable poſt.)

11. Not ſlothful in buſineſs, (in the concerns of God, and of one another), fervent in ſpirit, (ardently and zealouſly engaging in the ſervice of God, and of one another, as knowing you are then) [i] ſerving the Lord.

12. Rejoicing in hope (of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2. or of eternal life, Tit. 1. 3.), patient in tribulation (for the cauſe of Chriſt), continuing inſtant in prayer, (that you may ſtand firm in the faith, and have a ſeaſonable deliverance from your troubles.

13. [k] Diſtributing to the neceſſities of the (perſecuted) ſaints, given to (or purſuing) hoſpitality (towards them when they come to you.)

14. Bleſs (i. e. wiſh well to, and pray for) them which perſecute you; bleſs, and curſe not, (whatever provocations you may have to do ſo.)

15. Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep, (as the relation of members of the ſame body doth require, 1 Cor. 12. 26.)

16. Be of the ſame mind one towards another, (being concerned for the ſame good to them which you deſire for yourſelves): mind not high things, but condeſcend to men of low eſtate, (to the meaneſt concerns of the meaneſt Chriſtians). Be not wiſe in your own conceits, (ſo as to think you need not the aſſiſtance of divine wiſdom, or the advice and counſel of your Chriſtian brethren, Prov. 3. 5. 7. Luke 12. 53. or ſo as to neglect the concerns of your Chriſtian brethren, Prov. 3. 5. 7. Luke 12. 53.)

17. Recompenſe to no man evil for evil; provide things [l] honeſt (Gr. honourable) in the ſight of all men.

18. If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

19. Dearly beloved, [m] avenge not yourſelves (upon your enemies, ver. 20.), but rather [n] give place unto (the) wrath (of God againſt them); for it is written, (Deut. 32. 35.), Vengeance is mine, I will repay it, ſaith the Lord.

20. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, (rather) feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink; for in ſo doing thou ſhalt [o] heap coals of fire (the divine vengeance) on his head.

21. Be not [p] overcome of evil, (let it not prevail upon thee to be impatient under, or avenge it), but overcome evil with good.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XII.

Verſe 1. [a] Παραστῆσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν, to preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice.] By ſin reigning in our mortal bodies, and by obeying the motions of it in our inward actions, we being ſaid to preſent τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν, the members of our bodies inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs to ſin, chap. 6. 12. 13. the apoſtle here doth properly exhort us παραστῆσαι, to preſent the ſame bodies now a living ſacrifice, in oppoſition to the legal ſacrifices, which were firſt ſlain, and then offered up to God upon the altar, viz. by being now dead unto ſin, but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; an holy ſacrifice, as being conſecrated to the ſervice of God, and having our fruit unto holineſs, as the ſervants of God ſtill have, Rom. 6. 22. And as the ſacrifices offered to God were to be free from any ſpot and blemiſh, and ſo holy; ſo are our bodies made an holy ſacrifice, when they are kept in ſanctification and honour, and free from all filthineſs of the fleſh, and ſo a ſacrifice acceptable, and well-pleaſing to that God, who deſired not the legal ſacrifices, nor delighted in burnt-offerings, Pſal. 51. 16. Heb. 10. 8.; and this, ſaith he, is not as the ſacrifices of the law, ἐκ τῶν ἀλόγων, of dead and unreaſonable beaſts, which was bodily ſervice, or that in which the body chiefly was employed, but it is λογικὴ λατρεία, a ſacrifice of our reaſon, devoting ourſelves, who are rational creatures, to his ſervice, and alſo is highly ſuitable to our reaſon.

Ver. 2. [b] Καὶ μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, and be not conformed to this world.] It is the obſervation of Grotius on the former verſe, that the apoſtle having ſhewed before that juſtification could not be obtained by the law, comes now to ſhew how the goſpel perfected and ſpiritualized the law, as to the ritual and the judicial parts of it, and engaged us more exactly to fulfil the moral parts of it; beginning firſt with the ſacrifices, which by the Jews were eſteemed one great and chief part of the ritual worſhip; and then he may here proceed to their ſeparations from men of other nations, or, as the Phariſees had improved it, even from the vulgar ſort, thinking it unlawful to eat, or converſe with, or even touch the people of the earth, as they ſtyled them, and making their holineſs to conſiſt chiefly in ſuch niceties and ſeparations; ſhewing that we do moſt effectually comply with all that God deſigned by any precepts of this nature, when we keep ourſelves ſelves unſpotted from the world, or free from any conformity unto the ſinful cuſtoms of it, as Chriſtianity eſpecially requires, Chriſt giving up himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, Gal. 1. 4.; or he inſtructs them how to change their former Heathen, into a Chriſtian converſation, declaring, that whereas formerly they walked κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, according to the courſe of this world, Eph. 2. 2. and according to the will of the Gentiles, 1 Pet. 4. 3. they ſhould no longer live the reſt of their time to the luſts of men, but to the will of God, ver. 2.

Ibid. ᶜ Τῇ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, by the renewal of your mind.] The whole new creature doth conſiſt in the renewal of the mind, the will, the affections, and actions of men, 1 Theſſ. 5. 23.; but becauſe this renewal doth begin with the change of mind, diſcerning and approving what is acceptable to the Lord, and upon that follows the choice of what is good by the will, and the inclination of the affections to what the mind doth thus approve of, and the regulation of our outward actions is according to what we thus approve, chuſe, and affect. This renewal of the mind is put for the renovation of the whole man, and we are ſaid to be renewed in the ſpirit of our mind, and to put on the new man, Eph. 4. 23. 24. which is renewed εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, in knowledge, according to the image of him that created him, Col. 3. 10.

Ibid. ᵈ Τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν, καὶ εὐάρεστον, καὶ τέλειον, the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.] The ritual precepts of the law had no internal goodneſs in them antecedent to the command; and ſo God himſelf ſays of them, I gave them ſtatutes which were not good, Ezek. 20. 25. and in oppoſition to their coſtly ſacrifices and burnt-offerings, ſaith, He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee, even to do juſtice, and love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God, Micah 6. 8. They were not pleaſing to him in themſelves, Pſal. 51. 14. Heb. 10. 8. but he declareth his delight in juſtice and mercy, Jer. 22. 16. And the deſign of the apoſtle in the whole epiſtle to the Hebrews is to prove the imperfection of theſe ſacrifices, and of the old covenant, and therefore the neceſſity of a better ſacrifice, and a new and better covenant; and ſo in oppoſition to theſe ritual injunctions, he may here ſtyle the goſpel-inſtitution the good, and acceptable, and the perfect will of God.

Ver. 3. ᵉ Μέτρον πίστεως, the meaſure of faith.] Here the Greek ſcholiaſts agree in the expoſition of theſe words, that by the meaſure of faith we are to underſtand the meaſure of gifts proceeding from that miraculous faith which was required to the exerciſe of them; τῇ γὰρ χαρίσματι αἴτιον ἡ πίστις, for faith is the cauſe of theſe gifts, ſaith Chryſoſtom; and when they found this faith raiſed in them, they exerciſed them; they being given, ſaith Theodoret, according to the meaſure of their faith. This faith enabled them to remove mountains, 1 Cor. 13. 2.; to heal the ſick, James 5. 15.; to caſt out devils, Matth. 17. 20. And hence St Peter exhorts them who had received theſe gifts, to miniſter them ὡς ἐξ ἰσχύος ἧς χορηγεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, as from the ability and ſtrength of faith which God giveth, 1 Pet. 4. 11.; and this is elſewhere ſtyled the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt, Eph. 4. 7. This they did, ſaith Origen (i), διὰ τὴν πίστιν ταύτην, by this faith, καθὸς ἕκαστος αὐτῶν τὴν δωρεὰν ἔλαβε παρ' αὐτοῦ, as every one received the gift from Chriſt, ſaith Ireneus (k). The phraſe occurs twice in Maimonides (l), where he ſaith, "God declared that he would try the "Jews with falſe prophets, to know menſuram fidei "veſtræ in veritate legis, the meaſure of their faith "in the law, et ad menſuram fidei veſtræ in ſuccum "producendam, num firmiter et conſtanter perſi- "ſtatis in ea?" whence we learn that the ſtrength and firmneſs of faith is the meaſure of it.

Ver. 6. ᶠ Κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως, according to the proportion of faith;] that is, ſay ſome, according to thoſe principles of faith and good life, which are known among you: but ſurely they who propheſied by a ſpiritual gift could not do otherwiſe; for no man can by the Holy Spirit be excited to contradict the doctrine or precepts of Chriſtianity. Others, let him do it according to the meaſure of the miraculous faith imparted to him, enabling him now to reveal myſteries, now to foretel things, now to diſcloſe the ſecrets of men, according as God, upon his faith, ſhall grant ability to him to do it. And therefore Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact ſay (m), "That though this was a gift, yet it flowed "in upon a man according as by his faith he made "himſelf a veſſel fit to receive the gift of pro-"phecy." And this ſeemeth to be the better expoſition, not only becauſe it hath the ſuffrage of the ancient expoſitors, but becauſe it anſwers to the meaſure of faith, mentioned ver. 3.; for ἀναλογία, ſaith Origen here, is not ratio, as the Latins render it, but menſura competens, a competent meaſure, and κατ' ἀναλογίαν in Heſychius, is κατὰ τὸ μέτρον, according to the meaſure; and it agrees beſt with the phraſe of St Peter, to exerciſe theſe gifts according to the ability that God hath given them, and to be content with that, though others may enjoy it in higher meaſures.

reckoned here before that of teaching, or exhortation, I think it beſt to interpret it of the office of the evangeliſt, ranked before that of the paſtor and teacher, Eph. 4. 11. and immediately after that of the prophets, as here, rather than to interpret it of the office of a deacon; all theſe four offices of apoſtle, prophet, evangeliſt, and teacher, being deſigned, ſaith the apoſtle there, ver. 12. εἰς ἔργον διακονίας, for the work of the miniſtry. Hence St Paul writes thus to Timothy, Do the work of an evangeliſt, fulfil τὴν διακονίαν σου, thy miniſtry, 2 Tim. 4. 5.; and of Mark the evangeliſt, he ſaith, Bring Mark with thee, for he is profitable to me εἰς διακονίαν, to the miniſtry, i. e. to be ſent to preach the goſpel, or viſit the churches where I cannot come, ver. 11. And in this ſenſe, ſaith St Peter, εἴ τις διακονεῖ, if any man miniſters, let him do it as of the ability that God giveth, not as of the charity of others, which was the proper office of the deacon. Of the teachers, ſee note on 1 Cor. 12. 28. Eph. 4. 4. Acts 6. 4. and 13. 1. and 20. 24. 2 Cor. 6. 3. Col. 4. 17.

Ver. 8. [b] ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, he that giveth, and he that ſheweth mercy.] Theſe two expreſſions ſeem to denote the ſame perſons who are called helps, 1 Cor. 12. 28. See the note there. He that ruleth may be the ſame with thoſe who are there ſtyled governments, and elſewhere προϊστῶτες or προϊστάμενοι, 1 Theſſ. 5. 12. 1 Tim. 3. 4. and 5. 17.; or, ὁ μεταδιδοὺς here may ſignify him that is moved by an afflatus to give to the church's ſtock; for ſo the word is uſed in Job, ſaying, ἐφαγον μετὰ ἐμοῦ, I have given of my meat to the orphan, chap. 31. 17. and Prov. 11. 26. A bleſſing ſhall be on the head τοῦ μεταδιδόντος, of him that giveth; ſo Luke 3. 11. He that hath two coats, μεταδότω, let him give to him that hath none, Eph. 4. 28.; Let him work with his hands, that he may have μεταδιδόναι, to give to him that needs; and then the προϊστὰς will be the perſon ſet over this ſtock to manage it aright; for as the Jews had in every city viros notos et fideles, men of note for their fidelity, who were conſtituted to be collectors and diſtributors of their alms to the poor; ſo ſay the apoſtles, Look you out ἄνδρας μαρτυρουμένους, ſeven men of honeſt report, οὓς καταστήσωμεν, whom we will appoint over this buſineſs, Acts 6. 3. and theſe are ſtyled προϊστάμενοι and προϊστῶτες, and by Euſtathius are ſaid προϊστασθαι τῶν ξένων, to preſide over ſtrangers. See Beza in Rom. 16. 2. So Origen on the place, qui tribuit, et præeſt indigentibus; and Theophylact, προϊστασθαι δὲ λέγει τὸ βοηθεῖν, ἢ διὰ ῥημάτων, ἢ διὰ τῶν σώματος, to preſide is to help both with words and deeds. See the note on 1 Cor. 12. 28. This in after-ages was made the work of the biſhop, but in the firſt ages of the church was the work of the deacon.

Ver. 11. [i] Τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες, ſerving the Lord.] So the Syriac, Arabic, Æthiopic verſions, and all the Greek ſcholiaſts read. The other reading, τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες, ſerving the time, mentioned by Ambroſe, St Jerom, and Ruffinus, ſeems to have had its riſe from the abbreviation of the word in MSS. they reading κῷ; though it hath a good ſenſe thus, Tempori ſervite, rebus præſentibus vos accommodantes, et ſi quid inciderit incommodorum, vel declinantes ſi liceat commode, vel tolerantes. See Eph. 5. 26. Col. 4. 5. See Examen Millii here.

Ver. 13. [k] Ταῖς χρείαις τῶν ἁγίων κοινωνοῦντες.] So read all the Greek ſcholia, St Baſil, tom. 2. p. 474. the vulgar, and all the other ancient verſions. And whereas Dr Mills contends the true reading is ταῖς μνείαις τῶν ἁγίων, ſee this abundantly confuted in the examination of him upon this place.

Ver. 17. [l] Τὰ καλὰ, honourable.] That there be actions, which, according to the voice of nature, and antecedently to any poſitive commands, are good and evil, honourable and praiſe-worthy, or matter of diſhonour, or diſpraiſe, in the general opinion of the world; and that theſe actions are τὰ καλὰ, honourable before men, as well as in the ſight of God, 2 Cor. 8. 21. this epiſtle doth abundantly demonſtrate; for the apoſtle in the firſt chapter having mentioned all the unrighteouſneſs and impure actions of the Heathen world, he adds, That the Heathens knew, from the conſideration of the righteouſneſs of God, that they who did ſuch things, were worthy of death, ver. 32. In the ſecond chapter he informs us, that the Gentiles having not a written law, and notwithſtanding doing by nature the things contained in the moral law, ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience bearing witneſs to it, and their thoughts accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another, ver. 14. 15. That the exerciſe of righteouſneſs and peace renders us not only acceptable to God, but alſo approved of men, chap. 14. 17. Accordingly the wiſe man ſaith, That by obſerving mercy and truth, we ſhall προϊδῇ καλὰ, provide things honourable in the ſight of God and men, Prov. 3. 3. 4.

Ver. 19. [m] Avenge not yourſelves.] When Phocion was condemned to die by the Athenians, ſome of his friends deſired him to leave ſome precept to his ſon, how he ſhould demean himſelf. His command therefore to him was μηδὲ Ἀθηναίοις μνησικακεῖν, not to remember the injuries the Athenians had done him; and for this, ſaith Ælian, every wiſe man muſt ὑπερθαυμάζειν τὸν ἄνδρα, very much admire the man, Var. Hiſt. l. 12. cap. 49.

Ibid. [n] Δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, give place unto wrath.] i. e. Refer it to the puniſhment of God; συγχώρησον αὐτῷ ἐπιξηλῶσαι, τοῦτο γὰρ ἐστι δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, ſuffer him to come in with his wrath upon thoſe who are your enemies, and perſecute you for his ſake; for this is the import of theſe words, give place unto wrath: ſo Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact. And this expoſition is confirmed by the enſuing reaſon, for vengeance vengeance is mine, I will repay it; and from the occaſion of thoſe words, Deut. 32. 35. they being ſpoken for the comfort of God's people, whoſe cauſe he will plead, and for whoſe ſakes he will repent of the evil he brought upon them, ver. 36.

Ver. 20. ᵒ Ἀνθρακας πυρὸς σωρεύσεις ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ, thou ſhalt heap coals of fire upon his head.] I know that many good interpreters conceive here is an alluſion to artificers that melt lead, or other metals, by heaping coals of fire upon them; and ſo imagine, that the import of theſe words is this, Thou ſhalt melt him down, or work him, by this obliging kindneſs into good affection to thee: but I believe the ſenſe is rather this, That if he perſevere in his enmity, to his perſecution of thee, and perverſeneſs towards thee after theſe kind offices, the event, though not ſought by thee, will be this, Thou by thy patience ſhalt engage the wrath of God to fall upon him, and to maintain thy cauſe againſt him; and ſo ſhalt be more certainly and happily delivered from his malice, than by avenging thyſelf thou wouldſt be. So Prov. 20. 22. Say not thou, I will recompenſe evil; but wait on the Lord, and he ſhall ſave thee. For,

1. This ſuits beſt with the connection of this with the foregoing verſe by the particle, Therefore, avenge not yourſelves, but rather give place to the wrath of God to fall upon your enemies, or perſecutors, ſeeing he will repay vengeance to them. Therefore let not their enmity hinder you from being kind to them; for that kindneſs, if it do not mollify them, will cauſe the wrath of God to wax hot againſt them.

2. Becauſe the words are plainly taken from Prov. 25. 21. where they are exactly to be found; where, ſaith Grotius, apparet de pœna divina agi, "it is evi-"dent the wiſe man ſpeaks of the divine ven-"geance." And this is the continual import of the phraſe in the Old Teſtament, where only it occurs, and where it ſtill ſignifies the wrath and indignation of the Lord. So Pſal. 140. 9. 10. As for the head of them that compaſs me about, let the miſchief of their own lips cover them, let ἄνθρακες πυρὸς, coals of fire fall upon them. So Iſ. 47. 14. They ſhall not deliver themſelves from the power of the flame, ὅτι οὐκ ἔσται ἄνθρακας πυρὸς καθίσαι ἐπ' αὐτῆς, for thou haſt coals of fire to cauſe to ſit upon them. So Ezek. 10. 2. God commands the angel to fill his hand ἀνθράκων πυρὸς, with coals of fire, and to ſcatter them over the city, to burn the city with them. And 4 Eſdr. 16. 52. 53. Let not the ſinner ſay he hath not ſinned; for God ſhall heap coals of fire upon his head, who ſaith before the Lord God, and his glory, he hath not ſinned. See the like ſaying in Stob. ſerm. 82. p. 477.

Ver. 21. ᵖ Μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, be not overcome of evil.] Vincitur a malo qui vult peccare in alium, quia ille peccavit in ipſum. Aquinas.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. LEt every ſoul be ſubject to the higher powers, (or ſupreme authority placed over them); for there is no ᵃ power but of God, (the fountain of it); the powers that be, are ordained of God.

2. Whoſoever therefore ᵇ reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God; and they that reſiſt (the ordinance of God), ᶜ ſhall receive to themſelves damnation (Gr. judgment.)

3. For rulers (if they act by the authority of God, and according to law) are not a terror to good works, (i. e. ſuch as the light of nature pronounceth good), but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power, (that it will do thee any harm?) do (then) that which is good, and thou ſhalt (rather) have praiſe of the ſame.

4. For he is (by his inſtitution) the miniſter of God to thee for good, (if thou art a doer of what is good); but if thou doſt that which is evil, (thou haſt cauſe to) be afraid; for he beareth not the ſword (of juſtice) in vain; for he is the miniſter of God (a revenger, to execute wrath (Gr. for wrath) on him that doth evil.

5. Wherefore ye muſt needs (Gr. ye ought to) be ſubject (to this miniſter of God), not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience-ſake.

6. For, ᵈ for this cauſe pay ye tribute alſo (to them), for (that) they are God's miniſters, attending continually on this very thing; (the executing judgment between man and man, to preſerve every man in his right, and to puniſh the wrong doer.)

7. ᵉ Render therefore to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, (i. e. all legal impoſitions), fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour (is due.)

8. Owe no man any thing (which juſtice obligeth you to render him), but (be eſpecially concerned) to love one ᶠ another, (which love, if ye obſerve its precepts, will preſerve you from doing any evil, or injuſtice to your brother); for he that (truly) loveth another, hath fulfilled the law (relating to him.)

9. For this (that which the law forbiddeth in theſe words), thou ſhalt not commit adultery, thou ſhalt not kill, thou ſhalt not ſteal, thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs, thou ſhalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment (of the law relating to thy neighbour), it is briefly comprehended in this ſaying, namely, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf, (i. e. with the like love thou beareſt to thyſelf, though not with love equal to it. See note on Matth. 22. 39. 40.)

10. (He

10. (He that is acted by) love, [z] worketh no ill to his neighbour, (which is the thing required in theſe negative precepts); therefore [a] love is the fulfilling of the law.

11. And that (Gr. this exhortation to obey authority, and walk in fervent charity towards all men, I recommend to you now, is very ſeaſonable); knowing the time, that now it is high time (for all) to [b] awake out of ſleep; for now is our [c] ſalvation (or, the ſalvation of the Gentiles) nearer than when we (firſt) believed.

12. [d] The night (of Heathen ignorance, Acts 17. 31.) is far ſpent, [e] the day (of grace, and ſalvation to them) is at hand; let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and let us put on the armour of light.

13. Let us walk [f] honeſtly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in [g] chambering and wantonneſs, (1 Pet. 4. 3.), not in ſtrife and envying; (things inconſiſtent with that Chriſtian charity which is the glory of our profeſſion.)

14. But [h] put you on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make not proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIII.

Ver. 1. [a] Οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν ἐξουσία εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, there is no power but of God.] That this may be rightly underſtood, let it be noted, 1*ſt*, That God doth not now, as in the caſe of Saul and David, by himſelf appoint and nominate the perſon who ſhall ſway the ſceptre in any nation of the world. The Roman emperors, the powers then in being when St Paul writ this epiſtle, had no ſuch appointment, but were elected by the Roman armies, or choſen and confirmed by the ſenate; whence it appears that an immediate appointment or deſignation of the perſon by God, cannot be neceſſary to render any prince God's ordinance.

2*dly*, By virtue of God's general appointment or ordinance, whether in the fifth commandment, or by a law of nature, requiring that all nations ſhould have ſome government placed over them, no individual perſon can claim a right to be the higher power in any nation, more than others; nor are the people by it tied to yield obedience to this man rather than to that. This therefore cannot be ſufficient to make a man the individual perſon who is God's ordinance, in reference to ſuch a nation. It remains therefore,

3*dly*, That this authority be conveyed to this, or that individual perſon, or family, by compact, conſent, or choice of the perſons governed, that ſuch a perſon or family ſhall have the ſupreme authority in ſuch a nation. It therefore muſt be ſuch a choice, conſent, or contract that renders any perſon the ordinance of God to ſuch a nation: and this is what men call a legal right, or title to the crown; that is, a title by the laws and conſtitutions of the land.

But then as mutual conſent and contract make two perſons man and wife, and yet matrimony is God's ordinance, and the power of man over the wife, and of the wife over the body of the huſband, is from God; and as among us, one becomes a maſter, another a ſervant, by conſent and covenant, and yet the maſter hath from God authority over his ſervant; ſo here, the individual perſon becomes the higher power, by the conſent, the choice, or contract original, or actual of the community; but yet the power he exerciſes in that ſtation is of God, the fountain of all power; and he acts in that ſtation, not as the miniſter of man, but of God.

Ver. 2. [b] Ὁ ἀντιτασσόμενος τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ, whoſoever reſiſteth the power.] (n) Origen having cited this and the preceding vereſe in his diſſertation againſt Celſus, confeſſes it is a place "capable of much diſ-"quiſition, by reaſon of ſuch princes as govern cru-"elly and tyrannically, or who, by reaſon of their "power, fall into effeminacy and carnal plea-"ſures;" referring us to his comment on that place for the farther explication of the words. Now there he ſaith, (o) "This is not to be underſtood "of perſecuting powers, for in ſuch caſes that of "the apoſtle takes place, We muſt obey God ra-"ther than man; but of thoſe powers which are "not a terror to good works, but to the evil." And it is a contradiction to the holineſs, juſtice, and goodneſs of God, to ſay that he hath given princes any power to oppreſs, rob, ſpoil, murther, or to do any injury to their ſubjects. They cannot purely upon this account, that they are the ordinance of God, have any power or authority to do evil to them; and ſo reſiſting, i.e. not being ſubject, or obedient to them in any ſuch thing, cannot be that reſiſting of God's ordinance to which the penalty is here annexed. Now, this is the non-reſiſtance of which the Greek commentators ſpeak, even the non-performance of ſubjection, and obedience to their commands; and ſo the coherence ſeems to require, which ſaith, " Let every ſoul be ſubject to " the higher powers; for whoſoever doth reſiſt them " (by not being ſubject) reſiſteth the ordinance of " God." Moreover, they only are the ordinances of God, as they are the miniſters of God, ver. 3. 4. Now, they are only the miniſters of God for good, for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well, ver. 4. And, 3*dly*, the ſubjection here required, to which the reſiſtance is oppoſed, is a ſubjection due to them, not only for wrath, but for conſcience-ſake; but we cannot be obliged from conſcience towards God, to be ſubject to them in thoſe things which they have no authority from God to require, and for refuſal of obedience to which, we have God's authority.

They who interpret this of violent reſiſtance by force of arms, ſpeak the truth, but not the whole truth, that being not the only reſiſtance here forbidden. For as Dr Falkner obſerves, ἀντιτάσσεσθαι, which we tranſlate, to reſiſt, includes all practiſing out of a ſpirit of averſeneſs, oppoſition, and contradiction, and whatſoever is contrary to ὑποτάσσεσθαι, the being ſubject, ver. 1. and 5. See Acts 13. 8. and 18. 6. Ibid. ' Ἑαυτοῖς κρίμα λήψονται, ſhall receive judgment to themſelves.] i. e. They ſhall be ſentenced, puniſhed, and condemned for it by the magiſtrate, who is a terror to all evil works. So the word κρίμα ſignifies in theſe words, Feareſt not thou God, ſeeing thou art ἐν αὐτῷ κρίματι, under the ſame ſentence of condemnation by the magiſtrates? Luke 23. 40. See note on chap. 5. 16. And to this ſenſe the connection inclines, He ſhall receive ſentence or puniſhment (from the rulers), for rulers are a terror to evil works; if therefore thou doſt evil, be afraid, for he beareth not the ſword in vain, but is an avenger of wrath. Or, if he eſcape the hand of the magiſtrate, he ſhall be puniſhed by that God whoſe miniſter and ordinance the power he reſiſteth is. This follows from the obligation to be ſubject, not only out of wrath, but alſo from conſcience towards God; but hence it does not follow that he muſt be damned, as that imports his being ſentenced by God to eternal torments: it follows not from the word κρίμα, ſeeing that in its literal import ſignifies judgment, and no more, and ſometimes is applied to human judgments; not from the obligation to be ſubject out of conſcience, for then all men muſt be damned who neglect what they in conſcience toward God, ſtand bound to do what they in conſcience are obliged not to do, and then woe to be to them who, through weakneſs or prejudice, miſtake their duty, or are ignorant of it, and therefore do neglect it, or tranſgreſs againſt it. Seeing then the reſiſter of God's ordinance here, is not only the wilful rebel, but he who alſo is not ſubject and obedient to the commands of lawful authority, if the puniſhment of this ſin, without exception, be eternal torments, all muſt be ſentenced to them, who, out of ignorance and weakneſs, miſunderſtanding or prejudice, refuſe in any lawful matter to yield obedience to the commands of their ſuperiors; and ſo not only ſins of wilfulneſs, but ſins of ignorance and weakneſs, muſt be damnable.

Now, according to this double notion of reſiſtance, let it be noted, Firſt, That the reſiſtance which conſiſts in non-ſubjection, or a refuſal to yield actual obedience to the law of the ſuperior, can only be allowed when the matter of the law is ſinful, and ſo forbidden by the higher power, not when it is judged inexpedient, or unprofitable only; for of this ſubjects are not to judge, but the lawgiver only, in that they lawfully may, and therefore, to avoid ſcandal and puniſhment, and from reſpect to him who is God's vicegerent, ought to obey, even as ſervants ought to obey their froward maſters, 1 Pet. 2. 18. and children their parents in all lawful things, Col. 3. 20. not diſputing their authority in ſuch matters, and this from conſcience towards God.

Secondly, That no reſiſtance of the higher powers by force of arms, or violence, can be allowed purely on the account of religion; for if ſo, we could not be obliged to ſuffer wrong in ſuch caſes from conſcience towards God, as the apoſtle ſaith, we are, 1 Pet. 2. 19. or from the example of our Lord, ver. 21.—24. becauſe the ſufferings which God hath not obliged us to undergo, we cannot undergo, from conſcience towards God.

Thirdly, That no violent reſiſtance, or no reſiſtance of the higher powers by force, can be allowed to any who have not the power of the ſword, and who are no avengers of wrath; for he that thus uſeth it, plainly takes the ſword without authority from him to whom belongeth vengeance, and the power of life and death originally, and ſo without authority from him to whom this power of the ſword originally belongs; and therefore, by our Saviour's aphoriſm, deſerves to periſh by it, Matth. 26. 52. Hence therefore it muſt follow,

1. That in abſolute governments, there is no power of lifting up the ſword againſt the higher powers, becauſe there is none can claim a ſhare in the government, and ſo none can have any power of the ſword, or right to be an avenger of evil, but the abſolute power.

2. That in mixed governments, if any perſons or ſtates can claim the power, it muſt be either, (1.) Upon compact, that ſuch perſons ſhall have power to defend their laws: Or, (2.) by virtue of that rule of

Grotius,

Grotius, (p) That where a people hath conferred, not an abſolute power, but a government according to the law, they muſt be ſuppoſed to have reſerved to themſelves a power neceſſary to preſerve their laws. Or elſe by ſome act done by the ſuperior which is a virtual abdication, or a renunciation of his government; in all which caſes we can have no direction from the words of the apoſtle, who in general commands ſubjection to the higher powers, but declares not how far any man is ſo, or when he ceaſeth to be ſo.

Ver. 6. [d] Διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε, for this cauſe pay ye tribute alſo.] Hence it appears that paying tribute to, is an acknowledgment of the right of government in him to whom we pay it, it being payable only on this account, becauſe he is the miniſter of God, &c. and rendered to Cæſar becauſe it is Cæſar's; i. e. becauſe it doth belong to him as being Cæſar, or the power God hath ſet over us.

Ver. 7 [e] Ἀπόδοτε οὖν πᾶσι τὰς ὀφειλάς, Render to all their dues.] It is obſervable, that all that is ſaid here, and Tit. 3. 1. and 1 Pet. 2. 11. 12. ſeems plainly to relate to thoſe falſe doctrines and opinions which had obtained among the Jews, and were deſtructive to all government, and which all Chriſtians therefore were concerned to ſhew their freedom from, and oppoſition to, that ſo they might ſtop the mouths of thoſe Heathens, who looking upon Chriſtians as the offspring of the Jews, were apt to charge them with the ſame principles of oppoſition to all Heathen governments. Now, their principles are theſe:

Firſt, That being the people of God, God alone was to be owned as their Lord and governor, in oppoſition to all earthly governors, at leaſt in oppoſition to all governors which were not of their own nation, and by him immediately choſen, and ruling by his laws. See this fully proved, note on 1 Pet. 2. 16.

Secondly, As a conſequent of this, they refuſed to pay tribute to Cæſar, crying out to Agrippa, (q) τὰ τέλη ἀναιρεῖν, to take away their tributes, looking upon them as a ſign of ſubjection, which they ought not to ſubmit to.

Ver. 8. [f] Τὸν ἕτερον, another.] This being ver. 10. τὸν πλησίον, his neighbour, ſhews that every man is the Chriſtian's neighbour.

Ver. 10. [g] Κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται, worketh no evil.] Not that the law is exactly fulfilled by doing no evil to our neighbour, but becauſe, in Chriſt's interpretation, the neglect of doing any good we are able, and have opportunity to do for him, is doing evil, Mark 3. 4. Here therefore is a Meioſis; for charity is alſo kind, 1 Cor. 13. 4. and engageth us by love to ſerve one another, Gal. 5. 13. 14.

Ibid. [h] Πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη, Love therefore is the fulfilling of the law.] The apoſtle plainly here diſcourſeth of the fulfilling of the law, as it relateth to our neighbour; but, as Eſthius here notes, love is alſo the fulfilling of it, as it reſpects our duty to God; for he that loves his neighbour aright, loves him for God, and in obedience to him, and ſo muſt principally love God: He alſo loves his neighbour as himſelf. Now, no man truly loves himſelf, who loves not him above all things who is his chief good, and in loving whom thus, his happineſs conſiſts. See Matth. 22. 37.

Ver. 11. [i] Ἐξ ὕπνου ἐγερθῆναι, to awake out of ſleep,] is a phraſe importing two things: (1) The converſion of the Heathens to Chriſtianity, as in that call to them, mentioned Eph. 4. 14. Wherefore he ſaith, Awake thou that ſleepeſt, ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light, or ſhine upon thee. (2.) Our care to walk as becometh converts with true Chriſtian vigilance; as when the apoſtle ſaith to the Corinthians, Awake unto righteouſneſs, and ſin not, 1 Cor. 15. 34.; and to the Theſſalonians thus, Let us not ſleep as do others, 1 Theſſ. 5. 6. 7.

Ibid. [k] Νῦν γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, for now is our ſalvation nearer.] i. e. Say ſome, the deliverance of you Chriſtians from the perſecution of the Jews, ſtirring up the Heathens againſt you. And I believe this paſſage hath a relation to the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, and the diſſolution of that church, and of the worſhip confined to the temple; but chiefly upon this account, that then was the time when the ſalvation of the Gentiles was to be more fully and gloriouſly accompliſhed, that being the time when God would ſhew forth all his wrath upon the unbelieving Jews, the crucifiers of our Lord, and their Meſſiah, and upon that account the veſſels of his wrath, Rom. 9. 22. Hence the apoſtle exhorteth the believing Jews to conſtancy in the faith, forasmuch as they ſaw this day approaching, Heb. 10. 25. and they being then, ſaving a little remnant, entirely rejected, and cut off from being any more the church of God; the Gentiles were to be more fully called and owned as his church. The apoſtle had before diſcourſed of this matter, telling the Romans, that by their rejection and fall, came σωτηρία, ſalvation to the Gentiles, chap. 11. 11. that their fall would be the riches of the world, and the diminiſhing of them, the riches of the Gentiles, ver. 12. and ver. 13. 15. I ſpeak, ſaith he, to you Gentiles, that their rejection will be the reconciling of the world. And of this ſalvation of the Gentiles, he ſaith, it is now nearer than when they firſt believed, the time of the utter rejection of the Jews drawing nigh; and therefore he adviſed them, eſpecially now at this ſeaſon, to give no obſtruction to their converſion, and lay no obſtacle in their way by any diſobedience againſt their ſuperiors; but by their ſubmiſſion to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake, to put to ſilence all the objections of ignorant men againſt them, as diſturbers of government; and that they would diligently avoid all works of darkneſs, that they who ſpoke of them as evil-doers, might, by their good works which they beheld, be induced to glorify God in the day of their viſitation, 1 Pet. 2. 12. 14. and to avoid all ſtrife and envy, and to walk in love, as being that which rendered them ſo amiable in the eyes of the very Heathen.

Ver. 12. [l] Ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, the night is far ſpent.] Νύκτα καλεῖ τὴν ἀγνοίαν τῶν ἐθνῶν, he calls the night the time of the ignorance of the Gentiles, ſaith Theodoret; and ſo the day muſt be the appearance of the gospel-light to them. And this is very ſuitable to the language of the holy ſcripture, which ſpeaketh of the Gentiles thus, Ye were ſometimes darkneſs, but now ye are light in the Lord, Eph. 5. 8. and as men darkened, and blinded in their minds, Eph. 4. 18. and whoſe fooliſh hearts were darkened, Rom. 1. 20. In the Old Teſtament they are ſtill repreſented as men who ſat in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, Iſ. 9. 1.; and when Chriſt was ſent to be a light to the Gentiles, he is ſaid to be ſent to give light to them that ſat in darkneſs, Luke 1. 78. 79. And when St Paul was ſent to convert them, he is ſaid to be ſent to turn them from darkneſs to light, Acts 26. 18. And when St Peter mentions their converſion, he tells them, God had called them from darkneſs, into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9.

Ibid. [m] Ἡ δὲ ἡμέρα ἤγγικεν, and the day is at hand.] i. e. the day of ſalvation, 2 Cor. 6. 8.; whence they to whom this ſalvation was come, by receiving this goſpel-light, are ſaid to be τῆς ἡμέρας, men of the day, and υἱοὶ τῆς ἡμέρας, children of the day, 1 Theſſ. 5. 5. 8. and bid here to walk honeſtly as in the day.

Ver. 13. [n] Εὐσχημόνως, honeſtly,] decently, honourably, as becometh Chriſtians, both towards our governors, having our converſation καλὴν, honourable, and decorous among the Gentiles, that they beholding our good works may glorify God, that is, may own him whom the Chriſtians worſhip as a good and holy God, and ſo be gained to the faith.

Ibid. [o] Κοίταις καὶ ἀσελγείαις, in chambering and wantonneſs.] Κοῖται γὰρ γυναικῶν ἐπιθυμίαι, ἀσελγὴς δὲ ἀρσένων καὶ ἐπὶ θηλυκῶν ἐκίνει. Heſych. Phavor.

Ver. 14. [p] Ἐνδύσασθε τὸν Κύριον, put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] i. e. Be conformable to his doctrine and holy life. So Chryſoſtom ſaith it was a common phraſe, ὁ δεῖνα τὸν δεῖνα ἐνεδύσατο, ſuch a one hath put on ſuch a one; that is, he is an imitator of him: So to put on the new man, is to walk as new men in newneſs of life and converſation, Eph. 4. 24. In holineſs and righteouſneſs after the image of him that hath created us anew, Col. 3. 10.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſe 1. (NOW to prevent theſe ſtrifes and envyings), him that is weak in the faith, and (but not rightly grounded in it), receive ye (into Chriſtian communion) but not to [a] doubtful diſputations, (not reſpecting the difference in their thoughts and reaſonings from yours.)

2. For (ſuch difference of conceptions there is among the Jewiſh and the Gentile Chriſtians, that) one (i. e. the Gentile Chriſtian) believeth that he may eat all things; another who is [b] weak (Gr. but the weak, i. e. the Jewiſh convert, who is miſtaken in, and doth not rightly underſtand his Chriſtian liberty, abſtaineth from all meats, as fearing they may pollute him, and ſo) eateth (only) [c] herbs.

3. Let not him that (ſuitably to this belief) eateth all kinds of meat), deſpiſe him that (through weakneſs) eateth not (of any); and let not him that eateth not, judge (and condemn) him that eateth (as unclean, for not obſerving theſe diſtinctions between meats clean and unclean by the law, or according to their traditions, by being offered to idols, or polluted by the unclean); for [d] God hath received him.

4. (Since therefore God hath received and owned him as his ſervant), who art thou that [e] judgeſt another man's ſervant? to (God) his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth, (and by him only he is to be judged; he is at preſent weak indeed), yet he [f] ſhall be holden up, (καταρθωθήσεται δὲ, but he ſhall be eſtabliſhed), for God [g] is able to make him ſtand, (στῆσαι αὐτὸν, to eſtabliſh him.)

5. One man eſteemeth one (Jewiſh) day above another, (i. e. more fit to do God ſervice in, as being ſet apart by him for that end), another eſteemeth every (ſuch) day (alike fit for that purpoſe). Let every man be [h] fully perſuaded in his own mind, (or act with fulneſs of perſuaſion that he doth what is lawful.)

6. (And to engage you to maintain friendſhip and communion, without cenſuring and condemning one another for theſe matters, conſider that) he that regardeth

a day, regardeth it [t] to the Lord, (or out of conſcience towards him); and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it, (i. e. becauſe his Lord hath freed him from any obligation ſo to do.) He that eateth (freely of all kinds of meats), eateth to the Lord (or to his glory), for he giveth God thanks (for his liberty thus to eat); and he that eateth not (ſo) to the Lord, he eateth not, and giveth God thanks (even for thoſe herbs he eateth, or that he hath provided for him other food.)

7. For none of us (who are Chriſtians) [u] liveth to himſelf, (but to him that died for him and roſe again, 2 Cor. 5. 16.); and no man (dying) dieth to himſelf, (ſo as to be exempted from the power and juriſdiction of the Lord, whoſe ſervants we are.)

8. For whether we live, we (Chriſtians, if we act ſuitably to our duty and our obligations) live unto the Lord, (under his dominion, and under the government of his laws); and whether we die, we die (and dying, we are ſtill ſubject) unto the Lord; whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lord's.

9. For to this end Chriſt both died, and roſe, and revived, that he [x] might be Lord both of the dead and living, (Philip. 2. 10.)

10. But why (why then) doſt thou judge thy brother? or why doſt thou ſet at naught thy brother? (as if he were thy ſervant, and thou his maſter, and his judge, ſeeing) we ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, (and from him who is our Lord and maſter, ſhall receive the ſentence according to our works.)

11. For it is written, (Iſ. 54. 23.), As I live, ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God.

12. So then every one of us ſhall [y] give account of himſelf (and of his behaviour in theſe matters) to God, (and it becomes not us to antedate his judgment.)

13. Let us not therefore (take upon us to) judge one another any more; but (let us) judge this rather, that no man (ought to) [z] put a ſtumbling-block or an occaſion to fall (from the faith), in his brother's way.

14. I know and am perſuaded by (the faith of) the Lord Jeſus, that there is nothing unclean of itſelf; but (notwithſtanding this) to him that [a] eſteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him (as to the uſe of it) it is unclean.

15. But (though nothing be unclean of itſelf, yet) if thy brother be [b] grieved (i. e. ſcandalized) with thy meat, now walkeſt thou not charitably (in eating it to his offence and ruin, wherefore) deſtroy not him with thy meat, for whom Chriſt died.

16. Let not then (any thing be done by you, whereby) [c] your good (i. e. your Chriſtian calling may) be evil-ſpoken of, (Gr. blaſphemed by them who are thus offended at this uſe of your Chriſtian liberty.)

17. For the kingdom of God is not (a thing which conſiſts in) meat and drink, but (in) righteouſneſs and peace, and [d] joy in the Holy Ghoſt.

18. For he that in theſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19. Let us therefore follow after the things which make for (the) peace (of the church), and wherewith one may edify (and build up) another (in Chriſtian love and union into one ſpiritual temple in the Lord.)

20. For meat deſtroy not the work of God, (i. e. the Chriſtian convert, 1 Cor. 3. 9. for though) all things indeed are pure; but (yet) it is evil for that man who eateth with offence, (to do ſo.)

21. It is good neither to eat fleſh, nor to drink wine, nor (to do) any (other) thing (from which thou mayſt abſtain), whereby thy [e] brother ſtumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22. Haſt thou (then) faith? (or a perſuaſion that all meats are clean, and lawfully may be eaten), have it to thyſelf before God, (and ſatisfy thyſelf with that.) [f] Happy is he that condemneth not himſelf (by acting uncharitably) in that thing which he alloweth.

23. And he that [g] doubteth, (Gr. that puts a difference between meats), is damned if he eat (againſt his conſcience, making that difference); becauſe he eateth not of faith, (but againſt his own perſuaſion); for [h] whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIV.

Verſe 1. [a] Μὴ εἰς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν, not to doubtful diſputations;] not diſcriminating them by their inward thoughts, or reaſonings, or rejecting any from communion upon that account, becauſe they are weak in judgment. This ſenſe the antitheſis ſeems to require, and this ſenſe will be confirmed from our note on ver. 23. and from a like paſſage of St James, If you ſay to the man in gay cloathing, Sit thou here honourably, and to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit down at my footſtool, οὐ διακρίθητε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς; do you not put a difference or a diſcrimination among yourſelves, and are become judges διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, of evil reaſonings?

Ver. 2. [b] Ὁ δὲ ἀσθενῶν, but the weak.] I have obſerved, note on chap. 5. 6. and on 1 Cor. 8. 13. that the weak perſon is not the man of a doubting conſcience about a thing indifferent, but of an erroneous conſcience about a thing unlawful. This is plain from theſe words, 1 Cor. 8. 7. Some, with conſcience of the idol, to this hour eat it as a thing offered fered to an idol, and their conſcience being weak, is defiled. Now, to eat with the conſcience of the idol, muſt be to eat with an erroneous conſcience; and the thing is as plain here from ver. 14. which ſhews, that the weak perſon eſteemeth that unclean which in itſelf was not ſo, and therefore acted from an erroneous conſcience. I have obſerved there alſo that ὁ ἀσθενὴς, the weak, and ἀσθενῶν, to be weak, is to fall and ſtumble; and here it alſo ſignifieth one that ſtumbleth at ſome doctrine of Chriſtianity, viz. at that of Chriſtian liberty from Jewiſh obſervances, and who is ſcandalized at it, or made to fall by the uſe of that liberty by others, as is evident alſo from theſe words, ver. 21. It is good not to eat fleſh, nor to drink wine, nor to do any other thing whereby thy brother ſtumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak. And, ver. 13. Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion to fall (Gr. a ſcandal) in his brother's way.

Ibid. ὁ λάχανα ἐσθίει, eateth herbs.] Why herbs only? St Chryſoſtom thinks it was διὰ τὸ μὴ γίνεσθαι δῆλον, that it might not appear whether they did it out of obſervance of the Jewiſh law, or only out of temperance; but this the apoſtle contradicts, by ſaying, not that he did this being cautious, but he did it being weak; and ver. 14. that he did it eſteeming that which he abſtained from as unclean: and this is ſuppoſed as a thing evident throughout this chapter, that he abſtained out of conſcience from eating that which he eſteemed unlawful. Others ſay, the word λάχανα, herbs, is taken ſynecdochically, for all ſorts of meat allowed by the law; but then they ought in reaſon to ſhew us ſome example or inſtance where the word λάχανα is uſed in this ſenſe. Let it be therefore noted, 1. That the Eſſens (r) among the Jews abſtained from all fleſh, uſing as victuals, with great delight, green herbs, and the fruits of trees; and this they did, as judging fleſh μὴ κατὰ φύσιν, not to be natural food, as there it follows. Philo ſaith (ſ), they had τράπεζαν καθαρὰν τῶν ἐναίμων, a table pure from any thing that had blood in it, as being an incentive to concupiſcence, and did eat only bread, and ſalt, and hyſſop. See note on Col. 2. 1. Here then is one inſtance of them, who being weak, did eat herbs. Moreover, Joſephus ſaith of ſome prieſts of his acquaintance, ſent bound to Rome from Judea for ſome little crime, "That (t) they "were good men, who in their afflictions forgat "not their piety to God, nouriſhing themſelves "there with figs and nuts;" yea, their ſuperſtition would not permit them to uſe the oil of Heathens (u), as being not clean, and ſo ſuch as they could not uſe the meats of Gentiles, much leſs things offered to idols, (as ſometimes all the meat ſold in the ſhambles was), without tranſgreſſing their own inſtitutions and traditions. They therefore might eat herbs, either that they might avoid eating things ſold in the ſhambles which had been offered to idols, and which were therefore deemed κοινὰ, common, or unclean, by the whole Jewiſh nation (x), or to avoid the eating things which they eſteemed polluted by the Gentiles, as the Jewiſh prieſts mentioned by Joſephus did. Moreover, the perſon who believeth all things, here, is ſo like the perſon who ſaith, All things are lawful for me, 1 Cor. 10. 23. where the apoſtle is ſpeaking of things offered to idols, and the arguments, many of them, are ſo apparently in ſenſe the ſame here, and 1 Cor. 8. and chap. 10. that I can ſee no reaſon wholly to exclude this ſenſe.

Ver. 8. ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν προσελάβετο, for God hath received him. This is St Peter's argument, Acts 15. 9. God put no difference betwixt us Jews and them, purifying their hearts by faith, and ſo making them clean in his ſight, though they were not circumciſed, nor abſtained from thoſe meats we count unclean; he therefore received them without requiring this of them, and therefore ſo ſhould we. Note here, that though God teſtified his reception of them by a viſible and miraculous diſpenſation of the gift of tongues and prophecy, yet doth not the apoſtle ſay, God hath thus teſtified his reception of them, but only he hath received them, i. e. into communion with him, viz. by giving them that Spirit which is the medium of our union to, and communion with him. Note alſo, that theſe words prove againſt Eſthius, that the apoſtle here ſpeaks not of the Jews, but of the Gentiles, whom the Jews always deemed unclean, till they became proſelytes to their law, and ſo obliged to obſerve theſe differences between meats; ſee note on 1 Cor. 7. 14.; and therefore thought God would not receive them, whilſt they did not obſerve this law. Moreover, when the apoſtle ſaith, ver. 2. Another believeth he may eat all things; is this other the Jew? then the ſtrong Jew believed, not only that he might eat ſwine's fleſh, but even things offered to idols, which yet Eſthius denies, ver. 1.; the reaſon is, becauſe both theſe muſt be included in quibuſlibet cibis, all kinds of meat. But if it be the Gentile, as is far more probable, then the apoſtle ſpeaks here of the Gentiles. Again, when the ſame apoſtle ſaith, Another eſteemeth every day alike, does he mean the Jew? Did the Jew think the obligation to obſerve the Sabbath was aboliſhed? and if he meant the Gentile, the apoſtle muſt here ſpeak of them. But, ſaith Eſthius, this doctrine could not extend to the Gentile, to whom it was not lawful to comply with the legal obſervances, no not for the ſake of the infirm Jews. To this I anſwer, 1. That the apoſtle ſays nothing in this whole chapter which doth oblige him ſo to do, but only not to judge, not to exclude from communion thoſe Jews that did ſo, and not to eat of thoſe meats, when that would miniſter ſcandal to the Jew; and doth he not preſcribe the ſame rule to the Gentile, in the caſe of this ſcandal, in theſe words? But if any man ſay unto thee, This is offered to idols, eat not for his ſake that ſheweth it, and for conſcience' ſake, 1 Cor. 10. 28. 2. St Paul, who had the ſame perſuaſion that the law was not binding to him, as any Gentile could have, yet to the Jew became as a Jew, that he might gain the Jew; why therefore might he not permit the ſtrong Gentile ſo to do, eſpecially, when this was not done out of reſpect to the law of Moſes, but purely to the higher law of charity?

Ver. 4. ᵉ Σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην, who art thou that judgeſt another man's ſervant?] Some interpret theſe words thus: We are not to judge another man's ſervant for doing what his own maſter alloweth or permitteth. But this is adding to the text: for the apoſtle doth not ſay, Who art thou that judgeſt another man's ſervant wrongfully, or condemneſt in him what God allows? nay, he plainly ſuppoſeth him weak and erroneous, and yet allows not any condemning and rejecting him, and excluding him, ſaith Dr Hammond, out of the church, becauſe God hath received him to be his ſervant.

Ibid. ᶠ Σταθήσεται δέ, he ſhall be eſtabliſhed.] The apoſtle ſeems plainly here to ſpeak of the weak Jew, who, through the error of his judgment, might be apt to ſtumble at the liberty which the ſtrong Chriſtian uſed, and which the Chriſtian doctrine taught, that Chriſt had purchaſed for him alſo, as thinking both himſelf and others obliged to obſerve the law of Moſes; and of him he ſaith, he is now indeed weak, but he ſhall be eſtabliſhed, i. e. the time will come, when, by the deſtruction of the Jewiſh temple, to which their ſervice was annexed, and in which alone a great part of their ceremonial worſhip was to be performed, they ſhould be better ſatisfied of the ceſſation of their obligation to obey thoſe precepts. Thus alſo he ſaith, Philip. 3. 15. As many as are τέλειοι, fully inſtructed in the Chriſtian liberty, let them mind this thing, viz. that it is only the circumciſion of the Spirit that God now regardeth, ver. 3. and if any be otherwiſe minded, God ſhall reveal even this unto you, i. e. he will in his due time convince them of this truth. See the note there. Note alſo, That the effuſion of the Spirit on the Jews, though circumciſed and zealous for the obſervation of the law, was an argument that God alſo had received the unbelieving Jew to his favour, notwithſtanding his weakneſs of judgment in theſe matters.

Ibid. ᵍ Δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστι ὁ Θεὸς στῆσαι αὐτόν, for God is able to make him ſtand.] The apoſtle elſewhere argues from God's power to his will; ſo chap. 11. 23. If they abide not in unbelief, they ſhall be graffed in, for God is able to graff them in again; chap. 16. 25. To him that is able to confirm you; 2 Cor. 9. 6. 8. He that ſoweth liberally, ſhall reap liberally; for God is able to make all grace abound toward you; Heb. 2. 18. He is able to ſuccour them that are tempted. And this argument is always good, where we put no obſtruction to his will, by rendering ourſelves unworthy of his illuminations, and his favours; he being otherwiſe always as ready as he is able to do what he ſees needful, and truly conducing to our ſpiritual good.

Ver. 5. ʰ Ἕκαστος ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ νοὶ πληροφορείσθω, let every one be fully perſuaded in his own mind.] The Greek and Latin fathers give this ſenſe of theſe words: In matters of this nature touching the obſervation of a day, required by Moſes, to the Lord, or not, the abſtaining from meats, or not, let every man abound in his own ſenſe; i. e. let there be no condemning, no excluding any man on the account of ſuch different ſentiments. And this ſenſe is very agreeable to the context, if the word πληροφορία will bear it, of which ſure the Greek interpreters muſt be ſufficient judges; eſpecially when Phavorinus ſaith, that πληροφορεῖν is the ſame with πλήρωσιν, fulfil, as in that of the apoſtle, τὴν διακονίαν σου πληροφόρησον, fulfil thy miniſtry, 2 Tim. 4. 5.; and when this ſenſe accords ſo well with the Hebrew proverb, מלא את לבי איש, i. e. Let a man fulfil his heart, or do his pleaſure.

They who render the words thus, as we do, Let every man be fully perſuaded in his own mind, as the word πληροφορία doth import, Col. 2. 2. Heb. 6. 9. and 10. 22. 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. either refer it to the preceding words thus, Let every man content himſelf with this, that he is fully perſuaded he doth as he ought, and not ſearch into the actions or judgments of other men about theſe matters, to condemn them for them; and this alſo is a ſenſe againſt which I know no exception, and is made more probable from ver. 14. 21. 22. or elſe give the ſenſe thus, Let a man man have that perſuaſion of the lawfulneſs of what he doth, or abſtains from, as will preſerve him from ſinning againſt conſcience in it.

Ver. 6. [1] Κυρίῳ, to the Lord.] If the Lord here ſignifies the Lord Chriſt, as we may gather from ver. 7. 8. 9. it is evident from the reaſon following, for he giveth God thanks, that Chriſt is God; if it ſignify God the Father, yet the following verſes, which apply it to Chriſt, make it plain, that the argument is good from God the Father to our Lord Chriſt, and again from Chriſt, ver. 10. to God the Father, ver. 11. and conſequently that they muſt equally be God. See Examen Millii.

Here we are told, "That no man can be ſaid to do any thing to the Lord, or out of conſcience towards God, in ſuch caſes wherein God has not interpoſed his authority; nor is any man in ſcripture ſaid to do any thing to the Lord, who cannot produce a plain law for what he does; but when both contending parties can produce a divine authority for doing, or not doing the ſame thing, (i. e. a law forbidding, and yet commanding the ſame thing), there is great reaſon for them to receive one another, becauſe they both act out of reverence to the divine authority."

But this aſſertion may be evidently diſproved,

Firſt, From the example of St Paul, who ſerved God from his forefathers with a pure conſcience, 2 Tim. 1. 3. and converſed before God in all good conſcience, Acts 13. 1. and was zealous for God, even when he perſecuted Chriſtians to the death, Acts 22. 4. and thought himſelf bound in conſcience to do many things againſt the name of Jeſus, Acts 26. 9. Were theſe, if he may be believed, did theſe things out of conſcience towards God, wherein God had not interpoſed his authority.

Secondly, This alſo is evident from the inſtances related in this verſe; for a law cancelled, and diſannulled by God himſelf, hath no divine authority; and he who only produceth ſuch a law, is ſo far from producing a plain law for what he doth, that he produceth none at all; nor doth he act out of reverence to the divine authority, but only with reſpect to his own erroneous conceptions of a divine authority, when there is no ſuch thing; nor can he produce any divine authority for what he doth. Obj. If God had once interpoſed his authority in this caſe, and the Jews could not be ſatisfied that this authority was repealed. I anſwer, and ſo it is with all the unbelieving Jews unto this very day, who ſtill obſerve the law of Moſes, as far as under their preſent circumſtances they can; as believing it was given to them for an everlaſting covenant, and ſo being unſatisfied that the authority of it is repealed; ſo far is it from being true, that this caſe hath no parallel. It is therefore evident, that in this ſenſe it cannot be ſaid, He that regardeth a day, injoined by the law of Moſes, regardeth it to the Lord; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not; for the apoſtle, in this very chapter, declareth himſelf perſuaded by the faith of the Lord Jeſus, that there was nothing now unclean of itſelf, but only through the miſtaken eſtimation of the Jew, ver. 14. and elſewhere, that the Jewiſh feaſts, new moons, and ſabbaths, were only ſhadows of good things to come, and that Chriſt was the body, or the ſubſtance of them, Col. 2. 17. and that there was made ἀθέτησις, a diſannulling of the former command, by reaſon of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it, Heb. 7. 18. It could be therefore nothing but prejudice and error, which made the Jew conceive he obſerved thoſe days, and abſtained from thoſe meats by a divine authority, or that he could produce ſuch an authority for ſo doing; he therefore muſt be ſaid to do this to the Lord, and out of conſcience towards God, becauſe he, through the weakneſs and error of his judgment, thought the law of Moſes obliged him ſtill in conſcience to the obſervance of theſe things. Now, this is ſo far from being an unparalleled caſe, that it is the very caſe of the Romaniſts, uſing ſtill the anointing of the ſick; of the Anabaptiſts, dipping them who are baptized; of the Greek church, refuſing to eat things ſtrangled, and blood, out of reverence to the apoſtolical injunction; of the Diſſenters, uſing prayer by the Spirit, or conceived prayer, out of reverence to the command, to pray in the Holy Ghoſt, and abſtaining from communion with that church which obſerves no church-diſcipline, out of reſpect to the command, to purge the evil from among us; for all this is done by them out of a miſtaken reverence to a divine authority, which they conceive obliging to them. But then the Greek expoſitors here note, That this indulgence to men of an erroneous conſcience, is not to be extended (y) to doctrines of faith, and matters of great moment, but only to caſes of meat and faſting, and the like; and that it is eſpecially to be granted to thoſe who are infirm, and want indulgence.

Ver. 7. [2] Οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῇ. for none of us liveth to himſelf.] This I conceive to be a reaſon, not of that which is contained in the 6th verſe, but of what was delivered, ver. 4. viz. that Chriſt was our maſter, and we his ſervants; and therefore by judging one another for theſe things, they took upon them to judge another man's ſervant. For, 1. in the next verſe the apoſtle reaſſumes this matter, inquiring, Who art thou that judgeſt thy brother? And,

2. those words are a plain proof of this; for we are his servants to whom we live, and to whom we must give an account of our actions, and who is Lord both of the dead and the living: but they seem not so applicable to what is delivered, ver. 6. or to give a clear reason why he that abstains from swine's flesh, or that religiously observes a Jewish festival, doth this unto the Lord Christ, who came to take away, not to inforce, the obligation of those things.

Ver. 9. ι Ἵνα κυριεύσῃ, that he might be Lord.] He, by his resurrection, being constituted Lord of all things, and having all power both in heaven and earth conferred upon him, must have power over all; we being all his servants, and so obliged not to live unto ourselves, but unto him that died for us, and rose again, 2 Cor. 5. 16. He being also the rewarder of all those that serve him faithfully, he must be the Lord over the dead, so as to be able to bring them to life again, that they may receive the promised reward.

Ver. 12. κ Περὶ ἑαυτῆ λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ, shall give an account of himself to God.] Here Oecumenius notes, That it is said of God the Father, That he judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to his Son, John 5. 22. and therefore what the apostle here saith, viz. Every man shall confess to God, and bow the knee to him, ver. 11. and give an account of himself to God, ver. 12. is manifestly spoken of Christ as judge, ἄρα Θεὸς ὁ Χριστος, and therefore Christ is God. And this argument was used before the Nicene council by (z) Novatian and others. It is a wonder that Socinus should deny that the apostle says, that every knee shall bow to Christ, when, citing the same place, Philip. 2. 10. 11. the apostle so expressly declares, that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess, that Jesus is the Lord; and here from this place proves, that Christ is Lord both of the dead, and of the living, before whose tribunal they must all stand; and so must own his power and authority over them, which is the thing expressed metaphorically by bending of the knee, and the confession of the tongue. And if these words, which the prophet certainly spake of Jehovah, the God of the Jews, be well applied by the apostle to Christ, Christ must be also the person intended by them; for how could the apostle prove, that every knee must bow to Christ, from the words of God, saying, To me every knee shall bow, if Christ were, in his whole nature and essence, as different from that God who spake those words of himself, as is a creature from his great Creator? Crellius (a) here, saith St Paul, accommodates this passage to Christ, not that he is God, but because what is contained in it, shall by Christ, as subordinate to God, be exhibited and performed to God himself. But this subterfuge is confuted by the words of the apostle, who saith expressly, Philip. 2. 10. 11. That to the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess, that Jesus is the Lord; and so declares, these words are fulfilled by the honour exhibited, not to God the Father, but to our Lord Jesus Christ. And seeing he is Lord over the dead, by the power by which he is able to subdue all things to himself, Philip. 3. 21. which doubtless is the power of God: and seeing, having raised all men, he will bring to light the hidden things which they have done, and manifest the counsels of their hearts, 1 Cor. 4. 5. and so must be omniscient, and have the knowledge of the secrets of the heart; and it is the property of God alone to raise the dead by his power, and be the searcher of all hearts: these properties ascribed to Christ here, and elsewhere, must shew that he is truly God. See the note on Philip. 2. 10.

Ver. 13. λ Μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα, not to put a stumbling-block;] i. e. not to cause our brother to stumble at the Christian faith, and fall off from it, or to perish; for what is here, do not put a stumbling-block (by thy meat) in thy brother's way, is, ver. 15. destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died; and to eat διὰ προσκόμματος, so as to put this stumbling-block before him, is for meat to destroy the work of God. And that in this sense the phrase is still used in the epistles, see note on 1 Cor. 8. 9. Only let it be noted, that where there is the same danger of destroying my brother, or dissolving the work of God, be it not by infidelity, but schism, or idolatry, or loose living, there is the same reason and obligation, not to put a stumbling-block, or an occasion to fall in our brother's way: for the reason why the apostle would not have us put this stumbling-block, which makes our brother fall from the faith, in his way, is this, because he would not have us be instrumental to his perishing, or to destroy him for whom Christ died. He therefore must equally forbid the doing any other thing which may be left undone without sin; and being done, hath a like tendency to cause my weak brother to perish.

Ver. 14. ο Τῷ λογιζομένῳ τι κοινὸν, to him that esteemeth any thing unclean, &c.] Here is a plain demonstration, that the person here mentioned as weak in faith, was also weak in understanding, i. e. one who understood not that meat to be free from uncleanness, which indeed was so; and that he was therefore weak in the faith, because he was so in his understanding; and so also is it plainly, 1 Cor. 8. 7. 10.

(z) Neque enim si non et Deus esset, omne se nomine ejus genu flecteret. Novat. cap. 17. Vide Epist. Polycarp. sect. 6.

(a) Non quod Christus sit ipse Deus, sed quia id quod in hoc testimonio continetur, per Christum tanquam Deo subordinatum, ipsi Deo præstari et exhiberi debeat.

t is therefore without ground affirmed, That theſe wo ſorts of weak perſons muſt be uſed very different-; you muſt have a care of offending thoſe who are eak in faith; but you muſt inſtruct and govern thoſe ho are weak in underſtanding.

Secondly, Here alſo is a plain evidence, that the eak Jew had no juſt matter of offence given him the Gentiles eating, or that they did not take of-nce at the open violation of an expreſs law of God the Gentiles eating; nor were they thus weak t of reverence to any expreſs poſitive law, which l men agreed was given by God to them, at whoſe ting they were ſcandalized. To make this very ear, conſider that the weakneſs of the Jews conſiſt-in two things:

1. That they were not convinced that the law of oſes was out of date, and therefore durſt not do y thing which was forbidden by that law, nor omit ing what the law commanded: and as to this, it is ue, they were weak, out of reverence to an expreſs ſitive law, which, through the weakneſs of their derſtanding, they thought to be ſtill binding; but e apoſtle here declares to be by Chriſt taken away.

2 That they could not endure to ſee others do at they themſelves durſt not do; i. e. they could t endure to ſee the Gentile converts eat thoſe eats which the law of Moſes forbade the Jews to t: Now, here, I ſay, they were not weak out of verence to any expreſs poſitive law; nor could y take offence at the open violation of any ex-eſs law of God: For there was no ſuch law given the Gentiles, to abſtain from ſuch meats as un-an, nor to the Gentile converts to Chriſtianity obſerve any ſuch law; they therefore by eat-of theſe meats did violate no law given by God them, and ſo the Jews could take no offence at ir violation of any ſuch law. And ſo much ſtrong-is the caſe of eating things offered to idols, in ich yet the apoſtle doth require this abſtinence, h regard to the conſcience of the weak Jew, 1 r. 8. 7. 10. and chap. 10. 28. 29. For the eating things offered to idols (unleſs it were done in the ol-temple, the place appointed for his worſhip) s againſt no law of God, but only againſt the nons of the Jews; and ſo here the Jews could t be thus offended with that action, out of reve-nce to any law which God had made againſt it, only from the Jewiſh canons, and inter-tations of the law, touching abſtaining from ido-ry: the imagination of the Jew, that ſuch meats ught in the ſhambles, or ſet before Chriſtians at riendly entertainment, were unlawful, was a vain agination, and ſo they had only an imaginary which occaſioned their offence. Nor doth the oſtolical canon concern any other meats offered to idols, than thoſe which were eaten in the idol-temple; for ſure the apoſtle, who was a part of that council, would not here freely allow what the whole college of apoſtles thought neceſſary even for the Gentile converts to abſtain from. This ſcandal therefore of the weak Jews, was plainly ſcandalum acceptum, non datum, received, but not given; for they had no reaſon at all to believe that the law of Moſes was ever given to, or was in force among the Gentiles, and much leſs that their Jewiſh canons could be ſo.

Ver. 15. ρ Ἐὰν λυπῆται, if thy brother be grieved.] The Greek imports ſuch ſorrow as puts a man in danger of his life, and therefore in the metaphorical ſenſe ſuch ſorrow as endangered his Chriſtian life. So Job 31. 39. If I have cauſed the owners thereof to loſe their life: ὡ ψυχὴν ἐλύπησα, if I have grieved his ſoul, ſay the Seventy, הִפַּחְתִּי if I have cauſed his life to expire, or break out. See Dr Hammond on the place.

Note alſo here, that the apoſtle plainly doth ſuppoſe that he for whom Chriſt died might periſh. See the note on 1 Cor. 8. 11.

Ver. 16. τ Ἀγαθὸν, your good.] Τὴν πίστιν καλῶ, he calleth our faith, our good, ſay all the Greek commentators, and that very appoſitely; for the Jews blaſphemed, and fell off from Chriſtianity upon this account.

Ver. 17. υ Καὶ χαρὰ ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt.] This cannot here ſignify delight to do good, or rejoicing in unanimity; for the phraſe hath no ſuch ſenſe in ſcripture, but always ſignifies an inward joy ariſing from the conſolations of the Holy Ghoſt; as when the apoſtle ſaith, the Theſſalonians received the word with much affection, and with joy in the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6. And when St Luke informs us, the churches had peace, and walking in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt, were multiplied, Acts 9. 31.

Ver. 21. ϕ Προσκόπτει, ἢ σκανδαλίζεται, ἢ ἀσθενεῖ, ſtumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.] I have ſhewed what it is to be made weak, note on ver. 1. what it is to ſtumble, note on ver. 13. To offend, or ſcandalize a weak brother, is alſo to be an occaſion of his ruin, by cauſing him to fall off from the faith, or to be prejudiced againſt it, as will appear from a brief view of the places where the phraſe is uſed. So Matth. 5. 29. 30. If thy right eye or hand σκανδαλίζει σε, offend thee, i. e. if it leads thee to hell, and to perdition, cut it off. So chap. 11. 6. Bleſſed is he who is not offended with me; i. e. who is not by the meanneſs of my preſent circumſtances, or by the doctrine I am ſent to preach, diverted from believing in me. So chap. 13. 21. When perſecution comes, the ſtony ground εὐθὺς σκανδαλίζεται.

σκανδαλίζεται, is preſently offended. So ver. 57. and chap. 15. 11. Mark 6. 3. Luke 7. 23. the Jews were ſcandalized at Chriſt, i. e. they were diverted from owning him as their Meſſiah, either by reaſon of his words, or the meanneſs of his original, and his appearance in the world. So were the multitude, and ſome of his diſciples, ſcandalized at his diſcourſe about eating his fleſh, John 6. 60. 61. So doth our Lord admoniſh his diſciples not to be ſcandalized at the perſecutions they ſhould ſuffer, John 16. 1. So he foretells that many who had once believed in him, would be ſcandalized, when tribulations ſhould abound, Matth. 24. 10. So he tells his own diſciples, that they would be ſcandalzed at his ſufferings, Matth. 26. 31. And ſo both Peter and the reſt of them were offended, or ſcandalized, their faith in him failing for a ſeaſon, Luke 24. 21. So are we to underſtand thoſe words, Woe to him that offends, or ſcandalizeth one of theſe little ones, as appears from the reaſon following, ver. 14. It is not the will of your heavenly Father, that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh. So I have ſhewed the word is uſed, 1 Cor. 8. 13. And ſo it may be well interpreted, when the apoſtle ſaith, 2 Cor. 11. 29. Who is offended, i. e. in danger to fall off from the Chriſtian faith, and I burn not with a fervent zeal for his recovery? See Examen Millii.

Ver. 22. [x] Μακάριος ὁ μὴ κρίνων ἑαυτὸν, Happy is he that condemneth not himſelf, &c.] i. e. He is comparatively a happy man, that hath this firm perſuaſion of the lawfulneſs of eating any thing that is ſet before him, without aſking any queſtion about it for conſcience ſake; for he createth no trouble or condemnation to himſelf about theſe matters, nor is he troubleſome to others by his niceneſs or ſcrupuloſity; whereas he that puts a difference betwixt meats, is not only troubleſome to others with whom he doth converſe, but condemns himſelf, as oft as he is tempted to eat of that which his conſcience doth not allow of. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 23. [y] Ὁ διακρινόμενος, he that doubteth.] He that diſcerneth, and puts a difference between meats lawful and unlawful; this is the import of this word elſewhere. So Matth. 16. 3. You know how διακρίνειν, to diſcern the face of the heavens, Acts 10. 28. and 11. 12. Go with them, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος, making no difference betwixt the Gentiles and the Jews, the circumciſed and the uncircumciſed, not counting them unclean any longer, as St Peter doth himſelf interpret it, ver. 28. And again, Acts 15. 9. οὐδὲν διέκρινεν, he put no difference betwixt them and us, purifying their hearts by faith, 1 Cor. 4. 7. Τίς σε διακρίνει; who put the difference betwixt thee and others? chap. 11. 29. μὴ διακρίνων, not diſcerning the Lord's body, or not diſcriminating it from other meats. So Jude 22. Of ſome have compaſſion, διακρινομένους, making a difference.

Ibid. [z] Πᾶν δὲ ὃ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, whatever is not of faith.] i. e. with a due perſuaſion of the lawfulneſs of the action; for that is the faith ſpoken of in the foregoing verſe, when the apoſtle ſaith, Haſt thou faith? have it to thyſelf; and that is the faith which ſtands oppoſed to doubting in this verſe; and to this faith alone agree the preceding words, He that makes a diſcrimination between meats lawful and unlawful, and yet eats of them without diſcrimination, is condemned by his own conſcience, if he eats; becauſe he eateth not of faith, or with perſuaſion of the lawfulneſs of eating what he doth partake of.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. WE then that are ſtrong (and rightly underſtand our Chriſtian liberty and duty) ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, (being careful to forbear the doing that which doth ſcandalize and hurt the ſouls of them who have not this knowledge), and not to (do things becauſe they) pleaſe ourſelves, (when our weak brother is thus injured by them.)

2. Let (therefore) every one (of us rather chuſe to) pleaſe his neighbour for his good, to (the) [a] edification (of him in his Chriſtian faith.)

3. For even Chriſt (whoſe example we are called to imitate) pleaſed not himſelf, (i. e. and indulged not ſo to his own pleaſure, eaſe, and quiet, as to neglect the glory of God, or the good of others), but (willingly bore with the infirmities, and ſuſtained the reproaches of men), [b] as it is written (of him, Pſalm 69. 9.), The reproaches of them that reproached thee, fell on me; (i. e. he was afflicted for them, his zeal for the glory of God, and the good of ſouls, cauſed him patiently to endure the contradiction of ſinners, Heb. 12. 2. 3. to bear the croſs they laid, and deſpiſe the ſhame they caſt upon him; which, ſure, is much more than to abſtain from a little meat, on the account of others.)

4. (Nor ought we to think ourſelves unconcerned in what was ſaid ſo long ago by David of others); for (this, and) whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience (in bearing the like cenſures, reproaches, and infirmities of others), and (through the) comfort of the ſcriptures (promiſing a reward to that patience), might have hope (of being rewarded for it.)

5. Now the God of patience and conſolation (who works this patience in us, and gives this conſolation to us) grant you to be like-minded one towards another, (i. e. to have a like concern for others, as for yourſelves), according to (the example of) Chriſt Jeſus.

6. That

6. That ye (thus bearing with the infirmities of the weak, and thus receiving one another into communion) may [c] with one mind and one mouth (in your aſſemblies) glorify (and worſhip) God, even the [d] Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (or the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.)

7. Wherefore receive ye one another (Jew and Gentile, into mutual love and fellowſhip, without contention, about the things in which your judgments differ), as Chriſt alſo received us (both, reconciling both to God in one body on the croſs, and to one another, Col. 1. 20. Eph. 2. 14.), to the glory of God, (which will be much promoted by this union.)

8. (As he hath received us, λέγω δὲ), now I ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was a miniſter of the circumciſion (or the Jews) for (the eſtabliſhment of) the truth of God, to confirm the promiſes made to the fathers (of that nation, and ſo he ſhewed his love and mercy towards them.)

9. And (he was alſo the Saviour of the Gentiles), that the Gentiles (alſo) might glorify God for his mercy (to them), as it is written, (Pſal. 18. 49.), For this cauſe I [e] will confeſs to thee (i. e. praiſe and celebrate thee) among the Gentiles, (or ἐν ἔθνεσι, with the Gentiles), and (will) ſing to thy name.

10. And again, he (the ſame David) ſaith, (Pſal. 67. 4.), Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11. And again, (Pſal. 117. 1.), Praiſe the Lord, all ye Gentiles, and laud him, all ye people.

12. And again [f] Eſaias ſaith, (chap. 11. 1. 10.), There ſhall be a root of Jeſſe; and he that ſhall riſe to reign over the Gentiles, in him ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

13. Now (may) the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace (the fruits of hope) in believing (thoſe things), that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghoſt, (witneſſing to your ſpirits that ye are the ſons of God, chap. 8. 16. 17. and ſhedding abroad the ſenſe of his love in your hearts, chap. 5. 5. and ſo ſealing you up to the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30.)

14. And (this I pray, not doubting the aſſiſtance of this good Spirit with you, for) I myſelf alſo am perſuaded of you, my brethren, that ye are alſo full of goodneſs, filled (by the Spirit) with all knowledge, able alſo to admoniſh one another.

15. Nevertheleſs, I have written the more boldly to you in ſome ſort, (Gr. ἀπὸ μέρους, as to the Gentile part of you: ſee note on 2 Cor. 2. 5.), as putting you in mind (of the favour of God to you Gentiles, and your duty to him), becauſe of the grace that is given to me of God, (i. e. becauſe of the apoſtolical office by him committed to me. See note on Rom. 1. 5.)

16. That I ſhould be the miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the Gentiles, [g] miniſtering the goſpel of God, (i. e. exerciſing myſelf in the offices of the goſpel, as the prieſt in the legal ſervices), that the offering up of the Gentiles (by me) might be acceptable, being ſanctified (not with ſalt, or any other libamen, but) by (the effuſion of) the Holy Ghoſt (upon them.)

17. (And this I have ſo effectually performed by his grace, that) I have therefore whereof I may glory through (the aſſiſtance of) Jeſus Chriſt, in thoſe things which pertain to (my ſervice of) God (in this goſpel.)

18. (And here I ſhall only mention what I myſelf, by the aſſiſtance of this grace, have done): [h] For I will not dare to ſpeak of any of thoſe things which Chriſt hath not, (but only of thoſe which he hath) wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient by word and deed.

19. (Viz. that he hath aſſiſted me in preaching the goſpel) [i] through mighty (Gr ἐν δυνάμει, with the power of) ſigns and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; ſo that from Jeruſalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the goſpel of Chriſt.

20. Yea, ſo have I ſtrived to preach the goſpel, (as to do it) not where Chriſt was named, (i. e. preached by others before me), leſt I ſhould build upon another man's foundation.

21. But (my preaching hath been) as it is written, (Iſ. 52. 15.), To whom he was not ſpoken of, they ſhall ſee; and they that have not heard, ſhall underſtand.

22. For which cauſe alſo, (wherefore by going from one region to another to preach the goſpel), I have been much hindered from coming to you.

23. But now having no more place (s) in theſe parts (unacquainted with the goſpel), and having a great deſire theſe many years to come to you;

24. Whenſoever I take my (intended) journey into Spain, [k] I will (by God's aſſiſtance) come to you; for I truſt to ſee you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if firſt I be ſomewhat filled (i. e. ſatisfied) with your company.

25. But now I go to Jeruſalem to miniſter to (the neceſſities of) the ſaints (there.)

26. For it hath pleaſed them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor ſaints which are at Jeruſalem.

27. It hath pleaſed them (I ſay), and (with good reaſon, ſeeing) their debtors they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their ſpiritual things, (receiving the goſpel from Judea), their duty is alſo (in gratitude) to miniſter to them in carnal things.

28. When therefore I have performed this (charitable office), and have ſealed (and ſecured) to them this fruit (of the Gentiles liberality), I will come by you into Spain.

29. And I am ſure, that when I come to you, I ſhall come in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the goſpel σκανδαλίζεται, is preſently offended. So ver. 57. and chap. 15. 11. Mark 6. 3. Luke 7. 23. the Jews were ſcandalized at Chriſt, i. e. they were diverted from owning him as their Meſſiah, either by reaſon of his words, or the meanneſs of his original, and his appearance in the world. So were the multitude, and ſome of his diſciples, ſcandalized at his diſcourſe about eating his fleſh, John 6. 60. 61. ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XV.

Ver. 1. [a] Πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν, to edification.] Edification in the ſcripture ſometimes ſignifies our increaſe in the knowledge of our Chriſtian duty; in which ſenſe it is ſeven times uſed, 1 Cor. 14. 3. 4. 5. 12. 16. 26. 29. Eph. 4. 29. eſpecially in that knowledge which tends to our advancement in piety, and therefore is called οἰκοδομὴ Θεοῦ, the edification of God, 1 Tim. 1. 4.; ſometimes our growth or confirmation in the faith, Jude 20.; ſometimes it refers to the whole body, which is called Θεοῦ οἰκοδομὴ, the building of God, 1 Cor. 3. 9. Eph. 2. 21. and 4. 12. And then the body is edified, 1. By the mutual love of its members; in which ſenſe, ſaith the apoſtle, charity edifieth, 1 Cor. 8. 1. and this is οἰκοδομὴ ἐν ἀγάπῃ, edification in love, Eph. 4. 16. 2. By the ſtrict union of the members to, and their peaceable converſation with one another; and this is ſtyled οἰκοδομὴ εἰς τὸν ἕνα, the edifying the church into one, 1 Theſſ. 5. 11. And thus we are bid to follow after the things which make for peace, and τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους, the edification of one of us unto another, chap. 14. 19. Now, the edification which conſiſts in knowledge of our Chriſtian duty, cannot be here underſtood; becauſe our forbearance of that which ſcandalizes our brother, tends not to the information of his underſtanding, but, as it is an act of charity, it tends to the edification of the body in love; as it is the avoiding that which may ſcandalize the weak, and ſo induce him to ſtumble at, and fall off from Chriſtianity, it tends to his edification in the faith; and as it is receiving the weak into fellowſhip and communion, notwithſtanding his different conceptions from us, it tends to the edifying the body in union and peace.

Ver. 3. [b] Καθὼς γέγραπται, as it is written.] That this pſalm was undoubtedly ſpoken of the Meſſiah, we learn from ver. 22. applied to Chriſt, John 19. 28. 29. and from the former part of the verſe cited here, viz. The zeal of thine houſe hath conſumed me, applied to Chriſt, John 2. 17.; and the Jews themſelves ſay, That the things contained in this pſalm, ſhall be accompliſhed (b) in the days of David, or in the days of the Meſſiah; and that which is ſaid in the cloſe of the pſalm, That God will ſave Zion, &c. that men may dwell therein, and have it in poſſeſſion, ſhall be accompliſhed, כימי המשיח (c) in the days of the Meſſiah, the Rabbins own.

Ver. 6. [c] Ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἐν ἑνὶ στόματι, with one mind and mouth.] i. e. Not only praiſing God with the ſame words in your doxologies; but alſo joining in thoſe praiſes with a mind full of Chriſtian love, and ſenſe of the divine goodneſs.

Ibid. [d] Τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα, the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] So 2 Cor. 1. 3. and 11. 31. Eph. 1. 3. Col. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3. Apoc. 1. 6. 12. On which words the deſcant of the (d) fathers is to this effect, "That the firſt perſon of the ſacred Trinity is the "God of Jeſus Chriſt, in reſpect of his manhood; "his Father in reſpect of his divinity, or as he is the "Word:" Or the words may be rendered thus, "God who is, or the God that is, or God, to wit, "the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt;" for the Hebrew ו, and ſo the Greek καὶ ſignifies ſometimes id eſt; Naldius, partic. Heb. p. 180. 181.; ſometimes nempe, to wit, p. 207.; and ſometimes qui eſt, who is, p. 315.

Ver. 9. [e] Ἐξομολογήσομαι, I will confeſs unto thee.] The very next words, Great deliverances giveth he unto his king, and ſheweth mercy to David למשיחו, his Meſſiah, or Anointed; are by the (e) Jews interpreted of the Meſſiah, that is, Chriſt; and ſo the preceding words are, doubtleſs, fitly applied to him.

Ver. 12. [f] Ἡσαΐας λέγει, Eſaias ſaith.] The Chaldee paraphraſt interprets the firſt verſe of the Meſſiah; and R. Chanina proves from the tenth verſe, that "(f) King Meſſiah is not to come, but to give pre- "cepts to the nations of the world."

Ver. 16. [g] Ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, miniſtering the goſpel.] Here is a plain alluſion to the Jewiſh ſacrifices, offered by the prieſt, and ſanctified, or made acceptable and ſavoury by the libamen offered with it; for he compares himſelf in the preaching of the goſpel to the prieſt ſacris operanti, converſant about his ſacrifice, to prepare, and fit it to be offered. The Gentiles dedicated by him to the ſervice of God, are his ſacrifice, or oblation; the Holy Spirit is the libamen poured on this ſacrifice, by which they are ſanctified and rendered ευπρόσδεκτα, acceptable to God. See Numb. 15. 3. 10.

Ver. 18. [h] Οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω λαλεῖν τι, for I will not dare to ſpeak any thing of what Chriſt hath not wrought by me.] The critics here tell us, that they take off the force of the apoſtle's words, who render them, I dare not, becauſe that intimates the apoſtle had a mind to do ſo, but fear with-held him; they therefore would have the words rendered here, and Jude 9. οὐκ ἐτόλμησε, Michael, contending with the devil, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation; non ſuſtineo, I ſuffer not myſelf, and he ſuffered not himſelf. But our tranſlation may be juſtified, by a like expreſſion of the ſame apoſtle in the ſame caſe, οὐ γὰρ τολμῶμεν ἐγκρῖναι ἢ συγκρῖναι ἑαυτούς τισι, we dare not make ourſelves of the number, or compare ourſelves with ſome, who commend themſelves, 2 Cor. 10. 12. And this, doubtleſs, he ſaith, not to intimate that he and Timothy had a mind to do that themſelves, which there he repreſents as folly in others; but only to intimate, that he did not think it fit and prudent ſo to do, and therefore durſt not do it; and this ſenſe the word well bears, 1 Cor. 6. 15. and Jude 9.

Ver. 19. [i] Ἐν δυνάμει σημείων, ἐν δυνάμει πνεύματος,] i. e. Confirming the goſpel by outward miracles, and by the inward diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt. See the difference between them, note on Heb. 2. 4.

Ver. 24. [k] Ἐλεύσομαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς, I will come to you, &c.] Here is an evidence that St Paul, in purpoſes of this nature, was not aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt, they being purpoſes, which, by the providence of God, he was hindered from fulfilling. It is alſo evident from chap. 1. 10. 11. and from this, and from the 28th verſe, that St Paul writ this epiſtle while he was at liberty, and before Chriſt had told him he muſt teſtify of him at Rome, Acts 23. 11. and before he was conſtrained to appeal to Cæſar, Acts 25. 11.; for in this epiſtle he ſpeaks ſtill of his journey to Rome, and from thence to Spain, as of a voluntary undertaking; hoping then that the unbelieving Jews would not have given him that diſturbance, when he went up to Jeruſalem with his alms gathered for his nation, which afterwards he found they did, ver. 27. See Examen Millii here.

Ver. 30. [l] Ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς, in your prayers for me.] "If Paul," ſaith Eſthius, "might deſire the pray-"ers of the Romans, why might not the Romans "deſire the prayers of Paul?" I anſwer, they might deſire his prayers, as he did theirs, by an epiſtle directed to him to pray for them. He adds, "If they "might deſire his prayers whilſt living, why not "when dead, and reigning with Chriſt?" I anſwer, Becauſe then they could direct no epiſtle to him, or any other way acquaint him with their mind. Hence Elijah being to be taken up into heaven, ſpeaks to Eliſha thus, Aſk what I ſhall do for thee, before I am taken away from thee, 2 Kings 2. 9. Note alſo, That we ſay not that ſuch deſires of the prayers of ſaints departed, are injurious to the interceſſion of Chriſt, but that they are idolatrous; implying, that creatures are omniſcient, omnipreſent, and have the knowledge of the heart.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſe 1. I Commend to you-(r care) [a] Phebe our ſiſter (in the faith), which is a ſervant of (or one that miniſters to) the church which is at Cenchrea, (or the aſſembly of Chriſtians at the haven of Corinth.)

2. That you receive her in the Lord, (i. e. for the Lord's ſake, or as being one that belongs to him, Matth. 10. 42.), as becometh ſaints, (i. e. Chriſtians), and that ye aſſiſt her in whatſoever buſineſs ſhe hath need of you; for ſhe hath been a ſuccourer of many, and [b] of myſelf alſo.

3. Greet [c] Priſcilla and Aquila, my helpers in (the work of) Chriſt Jeſus;

4. Who have for my life laid down their necks, (i. e. expoſed themſelves to the hazard of their own lives), to whom not only I give thanks (for my own preſervation), but alſo all the churches of the Gentiles, (for preſervation of their apoſtle.)

5. Likewiſe greet the [d] church which is in their houſe, (i. e. their Chriſtian family). Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the [e] firſt-fruits of Achaia unto Chriſt.

6. Salute Mary, who beſtowed much labour on us.

7. Salute Andronicus and Junia [f] my kinſmen, and my fellow-priſoners, who are of [g] note among the apoſtles, who alſo were in Chriſt (i. e. converted to the Chriſtian faith) before me.

8. Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord.

9. Salute Urban our helper in (the goſpel of) Chriſt, and Stachys my beloved.

10. Salute Apelles [h] approved in Chriſt, (by the ſincerity of his faith, and the integrity of his life); ſalute them that are (in Chriſt) of Ariſtobulus houſehold.

11. Salute Herodian my kinſman; greet them that be of the houſehold of Narciſſus [i] which are in the Lord.

12. Salute Tryphena and Tryphoſa, who labour in the Lord-('s ſervice): ſalute the beloved Perſis, which laboured much in the Lord.

13. Salute Ruſus [k] choſen in the Lord, and his mother and mine, (ſhe being one who ſhewed the affection of a mother to me alſo.)

14. Salute Aſyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15. Salute Philologus and Julia, Nereus and his ſiſter, and Olympas, and [l] all the ſaints that are with them.

16. Salute one another with an [m] holy kiſs: the churches of Chriſt ſalute you.

17. Now, I beſeech you, brethren, [n] mark them which cauſe diviſions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which you have learned (of the apoſtles), and avoid them, (or turn from them).

18. For [o] they that are ſuch, ſerve not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own belly, and by good words, and fair ſpeeches, deceive the hearts [p] of the ſimple, (i. e. of innocent well-meaning perſons.)

19. (This exhortation I direct to you to preſerve you in the way, in which hitherto you have walked to the credit of the goſpel); for (the fame of) your obedience (to it) is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf, (that ye are not yet infected with theſe Judaizers); but yet I would have you wiſe to (diſcern and hold faſt) that which is good, and ſimple concerning evil, (1 Cor. 14. 20. i. e. as men who have no knowledge of it, and no ſkill to practiſe it.)

20. And (to encourage you to continue ſuch, know that) the God of peace, (who is an enemy to theſe diviſions, mentioned ver. 17.) ſhall bruiſe [q] Satan under your feet ſhortly. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

21. Timotheus my work-fellow in the goſpel, and Lucius, and Jaſon, and Soſipater, my kinſmen, ſalute you.

22. I Tertius, who wrote this epiſtle, ſalute you in (the name of) the Lord.

23. Gaius mine hoſt, and (the hoſt) of the church, ſaluteth you. Eraſtus the chamberlain of the city ſaluteth you, and Quartus a brother.

24. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

25. Now unto him that is [r] of power to eſtabliſh you [s] according to my goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, according to the revelation of the myſtery which was kept ſecret [t] ſince the world began, (or from former ages),

26. But now is made manifeſt, and by the [u] ſcriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlaſting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith:

27. (That is) To God [x] only (eſſentially, and from himſelf) wiſe, be glory through Jeſus Chriſt, (the Mediator of the new covenant, the author and finiſher of our faith), for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XVI.

Verſe 1. [a] Φοίβην τὴν ἀδελφὴν ἡμῶν, Phebe our ſiſter.] This Phebe was a deaconneſs, choſen to that office according to the apoſtolical preſcription, 1 Tim. 5. 10 So Origen and Chryſoſtom.

Ver. 2. [b] Καὶ αὐτῆ ἐμοῦ, and of myſelf alſo.] Hence ſome infer that ſhe was not a deaconneſs, but one that miniſtered to the apoſtles in the preaching of her ſubſtance; but St Paul had none ſuch to miniſter to him, 1 Cor. 9. 5. 15.; and this is made one condition of a deaconneſs, 1 Tim. 5. 10.; προστασίαν τὴν φιλοξενίαν καὶ πολυδημονίαν καλεῖ, he ſaith, ſhe has been a ſuccourer of many, by reaſon of her care of, and hoſpitality towards them. Theodoret.

Ver. 3. [c] Ἀσπάσασθε Πρίσκιλλαν, greet Priſcilla.] Priſcilla ſeems to be named firſt here, and 2 Tim. 4. 19. as being firſt converted, ſay interpreters; but ſhe is named laſt, Acts 18. 2. 26. 1 Cor. 16. 19. and therefore the Gloſs ſaith, She is here placed firſt, there being in Chriſt Jeſus neither male nor female.

Ver. 5. [d] Καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν, and the church in their houſe.] They were ſo zealous in the faith, ſay Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and Theophylact, ὅτι τὸν οἶκον αὐτῶν, πάντας πιστοὺς ποιῆσαι, τούτους καὶ ἐκκλησίαν ὀνόμασεν, that they converted their whole families to the profeſſion of it, for ſuch families he calls the church. See this proved note on 1 Cor. 16. 19.

Ibid. [e] Ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας, the firſt-fruits of Achaia.] So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, the Syriac and Arabic verſions; but the Alexandrian copy, the Æthiopic, the Vulgar, and almoſt all the Latin commentators, read τῆς Ἀσίας, the firſt-fruits of Aſia Minor. So doth Origen on this place, and hom. 11. on Numbers F. 109. D. and G. and St Jerom on Ezek 43. F. 241. 1. And this reading is to be preferred before the other, becauſe the ſame apoſtle ſaith expreſsly, that Stephanas was the firſt-fruits of Achaia, 1 Cor. 16. 15. that is, he was firſt converted to the faith there, and Epenetus in Aſia Minor, for ſo the phraſe, the firſt-fruits, is uſed by St Clemens (g).

Ver. 7. [f] Τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου, my kinſmen.] So St Paul ſtyles all the Jews, Rom. 9. 3. καὶ συναιχμαλώτους, and fellow-priſoners. Before St Paul went to Rome, he was ἐν φυλακαῖς περισσοτέρως, in priſons often, 2 Cor. 11. 23. Ἑπτάκις δίσμα φορέσας, bearing his chain ſeven times, ſaith Clemens (h), and ſo might well have many fellow-priſoners.

Ibid. ε Ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, of note among the apoſtles;] that is, ſay ſome, men highly eſteemed by them; men eminent, ſay Chryſoſtom and Theodoret, not only among the teachers, but the apoſtles of the churches. For they who are co-workers with the apoſtles in planting of the churches, are ſtyled ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν, apoſtles of the churches, 2 Cor. 8. 23. Philip. 2. 25.; in which ſenſe Barnabas in ſcripture is called an apoſtle, Acts 14. 14. and Philip the deacon, by the ancients. See Coteler. not. in Conſtit. apoſt. p. 262.

Ver. 10. ϛ Δόκιμον, approved.] By ſuffering patiently great tribulations, ſaith Origen: for tribulation worketh patience, and patience δοκιμήν, experience of our ſincere affection to him, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer them, Rom. 5. 4. But becauſe all the Greek ſcholiaſts ſay it ſignifies τοὺς ἁπλοτέρους, τοὺς ἰνδοὺς, τοὺς ξηροὺς τὴν νόησιν, men ſimple, fooliſh, and ſlow of underſtanding, and becauſe the word often bears this ſenſe in the book of Proverbs, as when the wiſe man ſays, ἄκακος, the ſimple believeth every word, chap. 14. 15. when he calls upon the ſimple to hear wiſdom, chap. 8. 5. and promiſes to give ſubtilty to the ſimple, chap. 1. 4. and when he adds, chap. 21. 11. when a ſcorner is puniſhed, the ſimple is made wiſe, this expoſition being more pertinent to the words, may be preferred before the other.

Ver. 11. ζ Τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίῳ, which are in the Lord.] From theſe two verſes is confirmed our obſervation, That when the whole family was converted, the apoſtle writes to the church in ſuch a houſe; when not, the ſalutation is directed to as many as were in the Lord in that family, according to the deſcant of Origen (i) on the place.

Ver. 13. η Τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ, choſen in the Lord.] One of great excellency in Chriſtianity, as we ſay, a choice man; ſo the word ἐκλεκτὸς often ſignifies, Pſal. 78. 31. They ſmote down τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς, the choſen men that were of Iſrael; ſo ἐκλεκτὰ μνημεῖα are choice ſepulchres, Gen. 23. 6.; ἐκλεκτὰ τῶν δώρων, choice gifts, Deut. 12. 11. and ἄνδρες ἐκλεκτοὶ, choice men, Judges 20. 16. See Acts 15. 25. 26.

Ver. 15. ι Πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, all the ſaints.] Note here, That ſaints and Chriſtian brethren are all one.

Ver. 16. ᵐ Ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ, with an holy kiſs.] Of the kiſs of charity, let it be obſerved,

1. That it was uſed at the end of the prayer before the celebration of the ſacrament: ſo Juſtin Martyr (k) ſaith expreſsly, ἀλλήλους φιλήματος ἀσπαζόμεθα παυσαμένου τῶν εὐχῶν, "Prayers being ended, we ſalute "one another with an holy kiſs, and then the bread "and cup is brought to the preſident." 2. That this ſeems to have been done by the men apart, and the women apart, as their (l) ſeparate places in the church or ſynagogue ſeemed to require. So the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions ſay (m), "Theſe things being "done, let the men apart, and the women apart, "ſalute one another with a kiſs in the Lord." Though Origen (n) ſeems to make this practice proper to the men only.

Ver. 17. ν Σκοπεῖν τοὺς τὰς διχοστασίας καὶ τὰ σκάνδαλα ποιοῦντας, mark them that cauſe diviſions and ſcandals.] By ſcandals the Greek ſcholiaſts underſtand hereſies; whereas, through the whole New Teſtament, this word ſeems rather to import ſuch actions as give occaſion to others to ſtumble at, and fall off from the Chriſtian faith. See note on Matth. 18. 6. Rom. 14. 13. Eſthius here notes, 1. That unwritten traditions may be hence proved, becauſe the apoſtle ſaith, Mark them that cauſe offences contrary, not to the ſcriptures, but to the doctrine they had received. But to make this argument of any force, he muſt prove, that the doctrine they had received was not contained in the ſcriptures, either then or after written. 2. The apoſtle plainly ſpeaks here of doctrines received from the mouths of the apoſtles by thoſe very men to whom he writ: and when he hath once proved the unwritten traditions of the church of Rome to be ſuch, we ſhall be ready to receive them. 3. He adds, That this place makes for a diligent inquiſition after Heretics; as if St Paul was ſetting up an inquiſition here: whereas the word σκοπεῖν doth only ſignify to mark, or to look to them, as Luke 11. 35. 2 Cor. 4. 18. Gal. 6. 1. Philip. 2. 4. Nor doth he exhort the Romans to obſerve them, in order to the apprehending or puniſhing, but, as he himſelf notes, in order to the declining of them. 4. He obſerves truly, that the apoſtle here inſinuates that even the vulgar people may, from ſome general principles, diſcern the true doctrine, and that which was delivered by the apoſtles, from that which was falſe, and was not ſo delivered: but this was only then to be done, by comparing that which was thus delivered from the mouth of the apoſtles, who preached it by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, and confirmed their doctrine by miracles, with that which was delivered beſides, or in oppoſition to it, and was not ſo confirmed; and this can only now be done by them, by comparing all pretenders to the apoſtles doctrine with thoſe ſcriptures which they endited by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, and confirmed by miracles.

Ver. 18. ° Οἱ γὰρ τοιῦτοι, they that are ſuch;] that is, the Gnoſtics, ſaith Dr Hammond, to whom indeed theſe characters do well agree. But Theodoret ſaith thus, τῆς κακῆς τῶ νόμω συνηγόρους διὰ τύτων αἰνίτ]εται, by theſe words he ſtrikes at the evil defenders of the law, or thoſe who preached up circumciſion, and the obſervance of the law, as neceſſary to the ſalvation of the Gentiles; τῆς ἐξ Ἰυδαίων αἰνίτ]εται, he means the Jews, ſays Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophlact, for he ſtill taxes them with the love of their bellies. And certain it is, that theſe men cauſed diviſions and ſeparations from others, as unclean, and not fit to be converſed with, Acts 11. 3. Whence it appears, there is no neceſſity of referring theſe words to the Gnoſtics, or deſerting the opinion of the ancients, touching the perſons here intended. See alſo Examen Millii.

Ver. 20. ᵠ Τὸν Σατανᾶν, Satan.] By Satan we may underſtand thoſe perſecuting Jews and Judaizers, who are ſtyled the meſſengers and miniſters of Satan, 2 Cor. 11. 15. and 12. 7. their perſecutions being aſcribed to Satan, who animates and provokes them to them, 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. Rev. 2. 9. 10.; and then God's bruiſing him under their feet, muſt ſignify his taking away their power thus to deceive and perſecute, by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and theſe impoſtors with it.

Ver. 25. ʳ Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ, to him that hath power] and will to execute that power. See note on chap. 14. 4.

Ibid. ˢ Κατὰ τὸ ἐυαγγέλιόν μυ, according to my goſpel, and the peaching of Jeſus Chriſt.] Both theſe expreſſions, ſay the fathers, are of the ſame import: The goſpel which the apoſtle preached being the ſame with that which Chriſt preached whilſt he was on earth; and they, after his aſcenſion, preaching in his name, by his authority, and by the aſſiſtance of his Spirit, and ſo delivering his laws and doctrine, not their own.

Ibid. ᵗ Χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένυ, kept ſecret ſince the world began.] The Greek may ſignify from the beginning of ages, the promiſe of the Meſſiah being obſcurely made, or hinted to Adam from the beginning; though the fathers only render theſe words ἄνωθεν, before, as Theodoret, or πάλαι, of old, as Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact. See the notes on 2 Tim. 1. 9. Tit. 2. 2.

Ver. 26. ᵘ Διὰ γραφῶν προφητικῶν, by the ſcriptures of the prophets.] They of old foretold of the Meſſiah, and of the calling of the Gentiles; but yet, as to many circumſtances, this was ſtill a myſtery, till theſe prophetic ſayings were more clearly revealed by the Spirit given to the apoſtles and prophets, and by the actual accompliſhment of what they foretold. See note on Eph. 3. 6.

Ver. 27. ˣ Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, to the only wiſe God.] This, as the fathers note, cannot exclude the divine nature of Jeſus Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of the Father, from this title, any more than thoſe words, who only hath immortality, 1 Tim. 6. 16. exclude Chriſt from being immortal.

An APPENDIX to CHAP. XI.

CONTAINING

A Diſcourſe of the calling of the JEWS to the CHRISTIAN FAITH.

TO ſtrengthen the argument which I have offered from this chapter for the converſion of the Jewiſh nation to the Chriſtian faith; let it be noted,

1. That this hath been the conſtant doctrine of the church of Chriſt, owned by the Greek and Latin fathers, and by all commentators I have met with on this place. Among the Greek fathers, by (a) St Chryſoſtom, whoſe words are theſe: "When "the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in, then all "Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, at the time of Chriſt's ſecond "coming, and the conſummation of all things." "After the Gentiles have received the ſalutary faith, "they alſo ſhall receive the faith," ſaith Theodoret (b), "when the great Elias ſhall come, and "preach it to them." Gennadius (c) deſcants upon the words of the apoſtle thus: "They being "blinded and excluded from ſalvation, God tranſlated this ſalvation to you." And again, "All you "being called, and come in, grace ſhall again receive "them all; for this the prophet Iſaiah teſtifies." "Before," ſaith Phocius (d), "the Heathen being diſobedient, the Jews were ſaved." Again, "the Jews becoming diſobedient, the Gentiles are "ſaved; and the Gentiles being ſaved, the Jews "emulating them, ſhall be alſo ſaved". "Becauſe," ſaith Theophylact (e), "the Jews being "then blinded, have not obtained this ſalvation, "that which the apoſtle ſpeaks of, ſhall happen to "them afterwards They of the people of Iſrael "who believed not, and for their unbelief were "deſerted, that God's mercy might be ſhewed to "you, ſhall not be always left in unbelief," ſaith Origen (f), "but when the diſpenſation of the "fulneſs of the Gentiles is completed, they alſo "ſhall find mercy." And therefore when Celſus had, as it were, propheſied, that the Jews ſhould preſently periſh, "this," ſaith Origen, "he ſaid, "not knowing how preſent God was formerly with "them, and how that, by their ſin, ſalvation came "to the Gentiles, and their fall brought riches "to the world, (g) till the fulneſs of the Gentiles "be come in, that after this, all Iſrael, which Cel-"ſus underſtands not, may be ſaved." In his fifth homily upon Jeremiah, he exhorts the Chriſtian to live ſo as that he may not receive a bill of divorce, (h) "but may enter into the holy inheritance. "And Iſrael may then alſo enter; for if the fulneſs "of the Gentiles be come in, then all Iſrael ſhall "be ſaved, and there ſhall be one fold and one "ſhepherd." In his commentary on St Matthew, he ſaith, ibid. p. 410. C. "Thoſe that whipped Chriſt "were whipped,, and ſhall be whipped till the ful-"neſs of the Gentiles is come in." And, p. 397. D. "that they were worthy to be deſerted, "either till the fulneſs of the Gentiles was come "in, or till they had fulfilled the puniſhment of "their ſins." Nor is this denied by him in the paſſage cited from his book againſt Celſus; for he ſaith not there, "They ſhould never be convert-"ed to the Chriſtian faith," but that they ſhould never be reſtored to their own worſhip, or country; that " they had been long ſince caſt τῆς σεμνῆς ἀγι-

" στείας καὶ λατρείας, out from their venerable ſervice

" ed to their own land, and enjoyed their laws as

" to." All the Latin fathers, who have left us any commentaries, or notes on this epiſtle, are plainly of the ſame mind, as you may ſee by conſulting Hilary the deacon, Primaſius, Sedulius, and Haymo, upon the 25th verſe of this chapter. This alſo many of the fathers do conclude,

1. From thoſe words of the prophet Hoſea, The children of Iſrael ſhall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a ſacrifice, and without an altar, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward ſhall the children of Iſrael return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall fear the Lord, and his goodneſs in the latter days, Hoſea 3. 4. 5. Which words (k) St Auguſtine having produced to prove that the carnal Iſraelites, " who now will not believe, ſhall
" hereafter do ſo," he ſaith, " Nothing is more ma-
" nifeſt, than that by David their king, the pro" phet here meaneth Jeſus Chriſt, in whom they " now believe not." " This," ſaith St Jerom (l), " is the blindneſs which hath happened to Iſrael in " part, that the fulneſs of the Gentiles might come " in, and all Iſrael be ſaved, and after a long time " might return and ſeek the Lord. Some," ſaith he,
" do interpret this of the captivity of Babylon; but " others," ſaith he, " with us, refer it to a time
" yet future." St Cyril ſaith, " Here is a manifeſt " declaration of what ſhould hereafter happen to
" the adulterous ſynagogue, and that ſhe ſhould be " received again; (m) that Iſrael ſhould not always " be rejected, but being recalled, and converted to
" the faith, ſhould own Chriſt according to the fleſh
" to be the king of all, and that this glorious grace
" ſhould be afforded to her at the end of the world."

2*dly*, That in which they univerſally agree, excepting only St Jerom, is, That Elias is to come, before the end of the world, to convert the Jews to Chriſt; and this they gather from thoſe words of Malachi, Behold, I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, before the great and terrible day of the Lord, and he ſhall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, Mal. 4. 5. 6. And thoſe of Chriſt, Elias truly ſhall come firſt, and ſhall reſtore all things, Matth. 17. 11. " We know," ſaith Juſtin Martyr, Dial. cum Tryph. p. 268. and p. 269. and p. 306. " that Elias ſhall
" come before the Lord's ſecond advent, and that " then the Jews ſhall know him whom they have
" diſhonoured." Origen ſays, (n) " That by thoſe " words of Malachi, it ſeemeth to appear, that Elias
" ſhall come before Chriſt, and by his ſacred words,
" and the diſpoſitions they ſhall work in their ſouls,
" ſhall prepare them for the coming of Chriſt." Theodoret paraphraſeth the words of Malachi thus: " Leſt at my ſecond coming, finding you all in un" belief, I ſhould ſubject you to eternal puniſhment.
" (o) Elias ſhall come firſt, and teach you of my " advent, and ſhall prevail upon you, O Jews, with" out doubting, to join yourſelves to the churches " of the Gentiles, and to be made one." Yea even St Jerom, upon theſe words of St Matthew, Elias indeed ſhall come, and reſtore all things, deſcants thus, (p) " He who is to come in the body at " our Lord's ſecond advent, came now by John in " virtue and the ſpirit." And in his comment on the 3d of Habakkuk, ver. 17. having cited thoſe words of Chriſt, ſpoken of the barren fig-tree, Let no fruit grow on thee for ever, Matth. 21. 19. he bids us (q) " diligently conſider, that he ſaith not " for ever and ever, but only in ſeculum, for that " age;

" age; and when that age is paſt, and the fulneſs " of the Gentiles is come in, then ſhall this fig-tree " bring forth her fruits, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſa- " ved." So generally did this doctrine obtain among the ancients.

Moreover, as this doctrine hath the ſuffrage of all the ancient fathers, and commentators do thus generally agree in expoſition of this chapter; ſo is it eaſy to confirm it, by ſhewing the abſurdity of other expoſitions, and the plain inconſiſtence of them, both with truth, and with the words of the apoſtle. For,

1*ſt*, The words of the apoſtle cannot be expounded, as (r) Dr Lightfoot and others do interpret them, of the ſpiritual Iſrael, i. e. of all thoſe perſons, whether Jew or Gentile, which belong to God's election. For, 1. The text ſpeaks of that which was a myſtery to the believing Gentiles, i. e. a ſecret not obvious to their underſtanding. Now, that God's elect, whether Jew or Gentile, ſhould be ſaved, could be no myſtery, but the firſt article of Chriſtian faith; and ſo of this the apoſtle could not ſay, I would not have you ignorant, leſt you ſhould be wiſe in your own conceit, eſpecially ſince the apoſtle had before ſaid of the believing Jews, there is now an election of grace, ver. 5. and ver. 7. the election hath obtained.

2*dly*, The Jews and Iſraelites here mentioned, are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the elect of Iſrael, by this character, that they were the blinded Iſrael, ver. 7. who lay under a ſpiritual ſlumber, ver. 8. whoſe eyes were blinded that they ſaw not, ver. 10. who had ſtumbled at the ſtumbling-ſtone, ver. 11. they are that Iſrael whoſe caſting away was the riches of the world, whoſe diminution was their fulneſs, ver. 12. they are Iſrael according to the fleſh, ver. 14. the branches broken off for unbelief, ver. 17. 19. 20. they who believed not, ver. 23. 30. 31. 32. and who were enemies to the goſpel for the Gentiles ſake, ver. 29.; this is the Iſrael of whom the apoſtle here aſſerts, they ſhall be ſaved, of this blinded, this unbelieving, this Iſrael cut off, theſe branches broken from their own olive-tree, theſe enemies to the converted Gentiles; as there hath been, ſaith the apoſtle, a diminution, ſo ſhall there be a fulneſs; as there hath been a caſting them off, ſo ſhall there be a reception of them; as there hath been a breaking them off from their own olive-tree, ſo ſhall there be an inſerting of them into it again, ver. 24.; as there hath been a time of their unbelief, and ſo of ſeverity, ver. 22. and of wrath to them, Rom. 9. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. ſo ſhall there be a time of mercy, ver. 31. 32. Now, ſince the unbelief, the diminution, the rejecting, the breaking the branches off, muſt neceſſarily be underſtood of Iſrael according to the fleſh, of the natural branches of the ſtock of Abraham, ver. 22. 24. beloved for the fathers ſake, ver. 28. of the ſeed of Jacob, whoſe ſins were not yet taken away, ver. 26. If you underſtand the fulneſs, the reception, the ingraffing of them, the ſalvation here mentioned of the ſpiritual Iſrael, and of the elect oppoſed to Iſrael that was blinded, ver. 7. the antitheſis is wholly loſt; ſince then the diminution and the fulneſs, the rejection and reception, the breaking off and the inſertion, the ſeverity and the mercy, will not relate to the ſame perſons. Again, blindneſs in part hath happened to Iſrael, ſaith the apoſtle, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in, and then all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; now certainly the blindneſs happened to Iſrael according to the fleſh, and muſt not the antitheſis require that the ſalvation ſhould belong to the ſame Iſrael? It happened not to the elect, for the election, ſaith the apoſtle, hath obtained, and the reſt were blinded, and therefore the ſalvation cannot reſpect them only.

Moreover, to whom did this blindneſs happen? Was it not to the national church, and body of the Jews? To them to whom our Saviour had ſaid, Whilſt you have the light, believe in the light, leſt darkneſs come upon you, John 12. 35. Is it not of the children of Iſrael that the apoſtle ſaith, They could not ſee to the end of that which was to be aboliſhed, 2 Cor. 3. 13. 14. but their minds are blinded, for until this day remaineth the ſame veil untaken away? Was it not that very people who had eyes, and ſaw not, ears, and heard not; whoſe heart was waxed groſs, their ears dull, and their eyes cloſed? Iſ. 6. 9. Acts 28. 26. 27. ver. 8. 10. and from whoſe eyes were hid the things which belonged to their peace, becauſe they knew not the time of their viſitation? Luke 19. 42. 44. To whom belonged this ἀποβολὴ, rejection, or caſting off? Doth it not reſpect the generality of that church and nation? Doth not our Saviour ſay of them, The children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out into utter darkneſs, Matth. 8. 12. that their houſe ſhould be left unto them deſolate, Matth. 23. 38. that the kingdom of God ſhould be taken from them, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof? Matth. 21. 41. Who were the branches broken off, are they not all the unbelieving Jews? ver. 20. i. e. the bulk and body of that church and nation? Doth not our Saviour tell them, That their vineyard ſhould be let out to other huſbandmen, Matth. 21. 41.? are not they that barren tree which was to be hewn down, Luke 13. 7. 9.? and muſt not then the recovery of them from this blindneſs, the receiving of them again, the ingraffing them into their own olive-tree, reſpect ſome few ſtraggling converts of them only, only, but the chief bulk or body of that nation?

3*dly*, It is eaſy to obſerve two queſtions in this chapter; the firſt is this, λέγω οὖν μὴ ἀπώσατο, &c. I ſay then, hath God caſt off his people? ver. 1.: To which the anſwer is, God hath not caſt off his people whom he foreknew, or the remnant according to the election of grace, ver. 5. 7. but only the obdurate Jew, ver. 8. 9. 10. The ſecond is this, λέγω οὖν μὴ ἔπταισαν, ἵνα πέσωσι, I ſay then, have theſe unbelieving Jews, who ſtumbled at the ſtumbling-ſtone, chap. 9. 32. 33. ſtumbled, that they ſhould fall entirely, ſo as that they ſhould never riſe again? And to this the apoſtle anſwers in the negative, from ver. 11. to 25. and proves it from ver. 25. to 32. It is therefore evident, that his diſcourſe from ver. 11. to 32. reſpects not the ſpiritual Iſrael, i. e. the Gentile converts, nor the elect of Iſrael, but the obdurate blinded nation which God hath then caſt off. And,

4*thly*, Here is evidently a time prefixed for this converſion of the Jews, viz. when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in; here is a blindneſs to continue on them till that time: whilſt blindneſs doth continue on them, their ſalvation is not to be expected; and when they ſhall be ſaved, that blindneſs, of neceſſity, muſt ceaſe: but to the ſpiritual Iſrael, or the elect converted at all times, nothing of this can be applied; for their converſion is not limited to the time of the coming in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles, but they are converted in every age, and at all times.

2. The opinion of the Reverend Dr Hammond is to this effect: 1*ſt*, (ſ) "That it is not neceſſary that "this ſhould ſtill belong to any yet future return of "the Jews in a viſible and remarkable manner, the "circumſtances of the context applying it to the "firſt times wherein the epiſtle was writ.

2*dly*, (t) "That the fulneſs of the Jews mentioned, ver. 12. is their being added to the church, "their coming in, and being gathered, and laying "hold of the faith, being provoked ſo to do by ſeeing the Gentiles believe, and ſo filling up the vacuities, as it were, which were formerly in the "church by their ſtanding out impenitently; and "the fulneſs of the Gentiles, is the Gentiles coming "into the church, receiving the faith, they then "becoming one part of the viſible church, as the "Jews another.

3*dly*, "That the (u) myſtery there mentioned is "this, that a great part of the Jews are now become blind, and that that is made uſe of by God, "that by occaſion of that the goſpel may (by departing a while from them) be preached to, and "received by the generality of the Gentiles, and "they compacted into Chriſtian churches; and this "in very mercy to thoſe Jews, that they, by ſeeing "the Gentiles believe, might at length be provoked to do ſo too, by way of emulation, ver. 11. "and 31.

4*thly*, "That ſo (x) all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, i. e. "all the true children of Abraham, Jews and Heathens both; but particularly the remnant of the "Jews ſhall come in, and repent, and believe in "Chriſt.

5*thly*, "That the addition of (y) Jewiſh believers "ſhall be matter of confirmation of the faith to the "Gentiles, and a means to bring them all to receive "it, to convert the Gentiles over all the world.

6*thly*, "As for the truth of that, That as yet "many more Jews ſhould repent, and receive the "goſpel, that," ſaith he, "has been demonſtrated "by the event; 1. When the Jews ſaw Chriſt's predictions, Matth. 24. manifeſtly fulfilled in the "Roman armies ſitting down before the city; for "then many turned Chriſtians, and went out of the "city, and were delivered from the following evils. "And,

2. "After that, when the temple and city were "deſtroyed, and they brought into ſubjection by "the Romans, then many were humbled, and turned Chriſtians. And,

3. "After that alſo, in Juſtin Martyr's days, "every day there were ſome that came in to be "Chriſt's diſciples." Now to theſe things I

Anſwer, 1*ſt*, That whereas this Reverend perſon ſaith the circumſtances of the context apply this converſion of the Jews, to the time in which this epiſtle was writ, i. e. about the year of Chriſt 56; it ſeems extremely evident, both from the circumſtances of the context, and from many other ſcriptures, that nothing could more unfitly be aſſigned as the time of the converſion of the then hardened and rejected Jews than this. For,

1. In the 9th chapter of this epiſtle, the apoſtle calls our Lord Chriſt, the Holy Ghoſt, and his own conſcience to witneſs, that he had great heavineſs, and continual ſorrow in his heart, on the account of the infidelity of his Jewiſh brethren, the ſpiritual ſlumber and blindneſs which then was upon them, and their rejection by God, ver. 1. 2. 3.; and, ver. 22. he plainly repreſents them as veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, and only reſerved, as Pharaoh was of old, for a more illuſtrious ruin, in which God's vengeance on them, and the cauſes of it, ſhould be conſpicuouſly ſeen; and ver. 27. he proceeds to ſhew, from the predictions of the prophets, that only a little remnant of them ſhould be ſaved; a remnant like to thoſe ſeven thouſand men reſerved in the ten tribes of Iſrael, when the whole viſible body of them had revolted to Baal; and, ver. 31. ſpeaking of them in general, he ſaith, Iſrael hath not attained to juſtification, becauſe they ſought it not of faith, but ſtumbled at the Meſſiah, even at that Jeſus who is the end of the law for juſtification, to every one that believeth, chap. 10. 4.; he being to them a ſtone of ſtumbling, a rock of offence.

In the tenth chapter, he declares that they had not ſubmitted to the righteouſneſs which was of God through faith, ver. 2. 3.; and from ver. 16. to the end of that chapter, he proves that the preaching of the goſpel to the Gentiles, and the incredulity of the Jews, was a thing long ago foretold in the prophetic writings. In this chapter, he begins with the inquiry to which his former diſcourſe, and the general infidelity of that people had given occaſion, viz. Hath God entirely caſt off his people? and anſwers it by ſaying, That as in the time of Elias, in that general revolt of the ten tribes, God ſtill reſerved ſeven thouſand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, ὕτως καὶ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ, ſo in this ſeaſon alſo he had reſerved a like remnant according to the election of grace, ver. 5.; confeſſing notwithſtanding, touching the body of that church and people, that Iſrael had not attained to that righteouſneſs it ſought for, but was, excepting this election only, wholly blinded; that God had given them up to a ſpirit of ſlumber, and blinded their eyes; had broken them off for their infidelity, and had ſhewed his ſeverity upon them. Wherefore the times when this epiſtle was written, being the times of the apoſtle's heavineſs, and his continual ſorrow for their rejection; the times when they are repreſented by him as veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction; when the prophets had foretold their incredulity; when Iſrael had not attained to juſtification, but had ſtumbled at the Meſſiah; when they were ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, and had not ſubmitted to it; when to that very day they were blinded, and given up to a ſpiritual ſlumber; is it poſſible that theſe ſhould be the very times aſſigned by the apoſtle for the ceaſing of their blindneſs, and that ſo generally, that it might be truly ſaid, all Iſrael were then ſaved, and God had mercy on them all.

The ſame apoſtle, anno Chriſti 49, ſpeaks to them of that nation thus: It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould be firſt ſpoken to you; but ſince you thruſt it from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn (from you) to the Gentiles, Acts 13. 46. In his firſt epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, written A. D. 51, he declares of the Jews, that they killed the Lord Jeſus, and their own prophets, and they perſecuted the apoſtles; and they pleaſed not God, and were contrary to all men, 1 Theſſ. 2. 14. 15. 16. forbidding us to ſpeak to the Gentiles that they might be ſaved, to fill up their ſins always, for the wrath is come upon them to the uttermoſt. That is, ſaith Dr Hammond, "By this "they do ſo fill up the meaſure of their ſins, that "the wrath of God to the utter deſtruction of "them is now come out upon them, already de"nounced, and, within a very little while, moſt "certain to overtake them." In his ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, written before that to the Romans, though perhaps in the ſame year, he ſaith, that even then their minds were blinded, and the veil ſtill remained upon them. And when he came to Rome, about three years after the writing of this epiſtle, and preached to ſome of the chief of them reſiding in that city, he declares, that theſe words of Iſaiah were fulfilled upon them, Acts 28. 23. 28. viz. Hearing you ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand; and ſeeing you ſhall ſee, and not perceive; for the heart of this people is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing; and they have cloſed their eyes, leſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their hearts, and be converted, and I ſhould heal them. Concluding thus: Be it known therefore to you, that the ſalvation of God is ſent to the Gentiles, and they will hear it. Now, after they had thus put away the goſpel from them, and judged themſelves unworthy of eternal life, and the apoſtles had thus turned from them to the Gentiles, after the wrath of God was thus determined to come upon them, εἰς τέλος, to the end, that is, ſay all the ancient commentators, not as in the times of the judges, for twenty or forty years, or, as in the time of their captivity, for ſeventy years, but for many generations; after their minds were thus blinded, their eyes thus ſhut, their hearts thus hardened, can we expect this blindneſs ſuddenly ſhould ceaſe, and this wrath preſently give place to mercy and ſalvation?

2. That many of the Jews turned Chriſtians, when they ſaw Chriſt's prediction, Matth. 24. fulfilled, in the Roman army ſitting down before that city, and went out of the city with the Chriſtians, and ſo were delivered from the following evils, is alſo ſaid, without all ground, or teſtimony of writers of thoſe times. (z) Epiphanius who lived in Paleſtine, and (a) Euſebius who was born and educated there, give us an accurate relation of this matter, and carefully inform us, that οἱ μαθηταὶ, the diſciples of Chriſt, οἱ ἐν Χριστῷ πεπιστευκότες, they that believed in Chriſt, being admoniſhed by an angel, or by an oracle ſo to do, left Jeruſalem and went to Pella, where they were preſerved; but of one convert of the Jews then made, they ſay not a word. How unlikely then it is that the ſame Epiphanius, who ſo particularly relates the converſion of one ſingle Aquila from Judaiſm to Chriſtianity, when they returned to Jeruſalem after the ruin of it, and his revolt again to Judaiſm, ſhould never ſpeak one word of theſe ſuppoſed converts before their departure?

Moreover, this was the time when there happened a great apoſtaſy of the Jewiſh converts, according to our Lord's prediction, that becauſe iniquity ſhould then abound, the love of many ſhould wax cold, Matth. 24. 12. And therefore the epiſtle to the Hebrews written in the ninth, the epiſtle of St James writ alſo in the ninth, and the epiſtle of St Peter writ in the tenth year of Nero, all near this very time, are very full of exhortations to them, that they would not be double minded, wavering, or unſtable in the faith, James 1. 6. 7. 8. that they would not count that fiery trial which was come to try them, a ſtrange thing, 1 Pet. 4. 12. that they would patiently and with long-ſuffering endure it, as knowing they were happy who did thus endure, James 1. 12. and 5. 8. 10. 11. 1 Pet. 3. 13. and 4. 13. 14. and 5. 9. 10. The epiſtle to the Hebrews is full of exhortations to them, to ſee to it that there be not in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, Heb. 3. 12. that they hold the beginning of their confidence firm to the end, ver. 14. to fear leſt a promiſe being made of entering into reſt, they ſhould fall ſhort of it through unbelief, chap. 4. 1. 11. there being no renewing them to repentance who, after ſuch miraculous evidences of the truth, apoſtatized, chap. 6. 6. and no more ſacrifice for ſin for them, 10. 25. that they would not caſt away their confidence, God having ſaid, chap. 12. 35. 38. If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him; and that they would diligently look to it, leſt any man failed of the grace of God, chap. 12. 15. Theſe, ſaith our Saviour, are the times of vengeance, and of wrath upon that people, Luke 21. ver. 22. 23. the times when the things belonging to their peace, being hid from their eyes, their houſe was to be left unto them deſolate, Luke 19. 42. 43. 44. And could the times of the apoſtaſy, even of the converted Jews, be the times of the ſalvation of the unbelieving Jews? Was it to be expected they ſhould then, more than ever, ſee the things belonging to their peace, when they were hidden from their eyes? Or could the times of wrath and vengeance upon that people, when the avenger came out of Zion, to puniſh the iniquity of Zion with the ſoreſt judgments, be the very times when the delivere. came out of Zion to turn away iniquity from Jacob?

3*dly*, Whereas it is added, that "after that, "when the temple and city were deſtroyed, and "they brought into ſubjection by the Romans, then "many were humbled, and turned Chriſtians; and "that after that, even in Juſtin Martyr's days, e-"very day there were ſome who came in to be "Chriſt's diſciples:" I anſwer,

1. That as for their converſion when the temple and city was deſtroyed, I cannot find one word in church-hiſtory concerning it, but much to the contrary: For, 1*ſt*, Epiphanius ſpeaks particularly of the return of the Chriſtians to Jeruſalem after the ruin of it, and of the miracles they then wrought, and yet he mentions only one Aquila a Jew converted to the Chriſtian faith; adding, that he ſoon after renounced the faith, and turned to his former Judaiſm. And (b) Juſtin Martyr obſerves, in expreſs contradiction to the Doctor, That, "after "their country was deſtroyed, and their city laid "waſte, they repented not, but proceeded ſtill in "their execrations of Chriſt, and of all that be-"lieved in him." And (c) Tertullian adds, That "ſeeing from the time of Tiberius to Veſpaſian "they repented not, their land was made deſolate, "and their cities burnt with fire." And indeed this was the very time when "wrath came actually upon them to the uttermoſt, when this barren tree was hewn down and caſt into the fire, Luke 13. 7. 9. when their houſe was left deſolate, becauſe they would not be gathered; when all the righteous blood ſhed by them from Noah to that time, came upon them, and they had filled up the meaſure of their ſins, Matth. 23. 35. 37. 38. when the kingdom was wholly taken from them; when the Son of man came to take vengeance on them; and when he ſent forth his armies to deſtroy thoſe murtherers, and to burn up their city, becauſe they refuſed to come unto the marriage-feaſt, Matth. 22. 7. And could this be the time of their humiliation and converſion? Was this a fit time to expect the completion of thoſe words of St Paul, concerning the ſending the deliverer out of Zion, to turn away iniquity from Jacob, and to take away their ſins, and to ſhew mercy to them, in ſuch a ſignal manner, that all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved?

To proceed to the hiſtory of them in the following times: Juſtin Martyr, in his apology writ in the year of the Lord 140, ſaith of the Jews, in all places, That they were (d) " as great enemies to " the Chriſtians in all places, as the Heathens were, " and as ready to torment and kill them, when " they could do it; and that this was evident from " the laſt Jewiſh war, in which their captain Bar-" chochebas commanded only the Chriſtians to " be tormented, if they refuſed to deny, and to " blaſpheme the Lord Jeſus Chriſt." Now this carries down the hatred of the Jews againſt Chriſtians, and their impenitency, till after the times both of Trajan and Hadrian. Some years after this he writ his dialogue with Trypho; and there he informs us, that the (e) Jews ſtill continued " to curſe thoſe who believed in Jeſus, and to " lay violent hands upon them when they could " do it; that even then their hand was high to " do wickedneſs, they ſtill hating and killing Chri-" ſtians as oft as it was in their power."

But we are told, that this very Juſtin Martyr ſaith, " that every day there were ſome (of them) " who came in to be Chriſt's diſciples."

I anſwer, That what Juſtin Martyr there ſaith, relates not at all to any Jewiſh converts, but to the Gentiles coming in from the way of deceit to the faith of Chriſt; and as he had told the emperors in his apology, p. 45. B. that the conſummation of the world was deferred διὰ τὸ σπέρμα τῶν Χριστιανῶν, for the ſeed of Chriſtians which was then ſpringing up; ſo he tells Trypho, p. 256. D. that the day of judgment, of which he had before ſpoken, and of which the pſalm he there citeth treats, was (f) deferred by God, becauſe he knew that ſome would come daily in to be Chriſt's diſciples, and would quit the way of deceit. Now, that this cannot be ſpoken of the Jews, is evident, becauſe wrath was come upon them to the uttermoſt, as Juſtin Martyr often intimates; not ſaying that God had not brought wrath and judgment upon them, but only that he had not brought the general judgment on the world for this cauſe. He goes on, and ſays, that every one of thoſe who thus believed, received gifts from Chriſt as they were worthy: and this he proves, becauſe it was propheſied, that (g) after our Lord's aſcent to heaven, he ſhould lead us captive from our error, and ſhould give us gifts: where the word πλάνη, uſed ordinarily of the Gentiles deceived by Satan, and eſpecially the word ἡμᾶς, us, ſhew that the Martyr ſpeaks not of the Jews, but Gentile converts; and ſo it follows, " There-" fore we Gentiles, who have received theſe gifts, ſhew " you Jews to be fools," &c. So that the good Doctor was utterly miſtaken in applying this paſſage to the Jews, as others, led by his authority, have done.

From this time to the days of Conſtantine, the period aſſigned by Mr Calvert for the converſion mentioned by St Paul, the fathers generally repreſent them as a nation whoſe (h) ears were ſhut, and their hearts hardened, declaring, " that the (i) ſcripture " had clearly foretold they ſhould be diſinherited, " and fall off from the grace of God." Origen (k) teſtifies, " that God had turned his providence from " the Jews to the Gentiles; that they were wholly " deſerted, and retained nothing of what before " was venerable among them, nor any footſteps of " the divine preſence with them; that after the " crucifixion of our Lord they were perfectly de-" ſerted, and not to be converted till the end of the " world." Tertullian ſaith (l), " that from the time " that they crucified their Lord, God had taken " from them the prophet, wiſe man, and the Holy " Spirit, and had left them deſtitute of his grace; " and that only at his ſecond coming he ſhould be " received by them who had thus rejected him." And this ſeems moſt agreeable to our Lord's predictions, that the kingdom of God ſhould be taken from them, and given to another nation that would bring forth the fruit of it; that he would miſerably deſtroy thoſe huſbandmen, and would let out his vineyard to other huſbandmen, who ſhould render him the fruits in their ſeaſon, Matth. 21. 41. 43.; that none of them who were bidden and refuſed, ſhould taſte of his ſupper, Luke 14. 24.; that many ſhould come from the eaſt and weſt, and ſhould ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, but the children of the kingdom ſhould be caſt out into outer darkneſs, Matth. 8. 11. 12.; that they who were firſt, (i. e. the Jews), ſhould be the laſt, and they who were the laſt, (i. e. the Gentiles), ſhould be firſt; for that this is ſpoken of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, is evident from theſe words of St Luke, chap. 13. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. "Then "ſhall ye (Jews) begin to ſay, We have eaten and "drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in "our ſtreets. But he ſhall ſay, I tell you, I know "you not whence you are; depart from me all ye "workers of iniquity. There ſhall be weeping and "gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, "and Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of God, and "you yourſelves thruſt out. And they ſhall come "from the eaſt, and from the weſt, and from the "north, and from the ſouth, and ſhall ſit down in "the kingdom of God. And behold, there are laſt "which ſhall be firſt, and there are firſt which ſhall "be laſt." Now, if we do conſider that wrath was come upon this nation εἰς τέλος, to the end, can we imagine, either that this kingdom taken from them, this vineyard let out to other huſbandmen, theſe children of the kingdom caſt out into outer darkneſs, ſhould ſuddenly receive again this kingdom, be reſtored to this vineyard, or admitted to the light of the goſpel? or that all Iſrael ſhould be ſaved, or iniquity ſhould be taken away from Jacob, whilſt that nation lay under theſe dreadful judgments? or that when our Lord hath ſo ſolemnly foretold there ſhould be wrath upon this people, and they ſhall fall by the edge of the ſword, and ſhall be led away captive into all nations; and Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled, Luke 21. 23. 24. this wrath ſhould not continue on them whilſt they were captives in all nations, and Jeruſalem was trodden down?

Here, I confeſs, the Reverend Doctor (on Luke 21. 23.) hath a peculiar notion, "That the tread-"ing down of Jeruſalem by the Gentiles, is not "particularly their victory over it by Titus, but "their conſequent poſſeſſing of it, and even till "Adrian's rebuilding a part of it, and calling it by "his own name Ælia, and inhabiting it by Gen-"tiles."—"Upon the doing of this," ſaith he, "it "followed, that as all the (unbelieving) Jews were "utterly baniſhed the city; ſo the believing Jews "returned thither again from their diſperſions, and "inhabited it again, and joined, and made one "congregation, one church with the Gentiles, "which had then, till that time, recived the faith "alſo, and till then continued a diſtinct church "from the Jews. By which it appears how punc-"tually this prediction, in our notion, was fulfilled, "that Jeruſalem ſhould be inhabited by the Gen-"tiles, all the Jews in a manner excluded, till the "time that the goſpel had been freely preached to "the Gentiles, and by them, in ſome eminent man-"ner, been received; and then it ſhould be reinha-"bited by the Jews again, i. e. the Chriſtian Jews, "who being wrought on by emulation of the Gen-"tiles, were now, many of them, brought to receive "the faith." In his note on the two witneſſes, Rev. 11. b. he makes them to be "the two biſhops "of the church in Jeruſalem, one of the Jewiſh, "the other of the Gentile converts; which ſtate "of that church continued," ſaith he, "till the time "of Marcus, a Gentile biſhop of that church, i. e. "from after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, "till that time." But here again are many things delivered, not only without all ſuffrage of hiſtory, but in perfect oppoſition to the hiſtories of thoſe times. For,

1. Euſebius and Sulpitius Severus do inform us, that till the time of Hadrian (m) all the biſhops and prieſts of Jeruſalem were only of the circumciſion. Here therefore is no room for his two biſhops, one of the Jewiſh, the other of the Gentile converts, till the time of Marcus.

2. They alſo do inform us, that all the Chriſtians then at Jeruſalem were of the circumciſion, and ſo not of the Gentiles; for Sulpitius obſerves, that the edict of Hadrian (n), for baniſhing all the Jews from Jeruſalem, "happened for the advantage of the "Chriſtian faith, becauſe till then they almoſt all "joined the obſervation of the law to the faith of "Chriſt; the Lord ſo ordering it, that, by this "means, the ſervitude of that law might be re-"moved from the church." Euſebius alſo ſaith (o), "that the whole church of Jeruſalem conſiſted of "the faithful Hebrews, who from the times of

(o) Συνεστάναι γὰρ αὐτοῖς τότε πᾶσαν ἐκκλησίαν ἐξ Ἑβραίων πίστιν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀποστόλων, ἐν ἧς τὴν τότε διαμεινάντων πολιορκίαν. Hiſt. eccleſ. l. 4. c. 5.

" the apoſtles had continued there till the ſiege of " Bitter, in the eighteenth year of Hadrian." So that here is no room for his ſuppoſed Gentile converts to be governed by a biſhop of the Gentiles.

3. They alſo do expreſsly ſay, not only that the unbelieving Jews, but that all the Jews in general were by this edict baniſhed both from Jeruſalem, and from the region round about it. " He placed " a band of ſoldiers which ſhould baniſh all the " Jews from Jeruſalem," ſaith Sulpitius; and this he did, quia Chriſtiani ex Judæis potiſſimum putabantur, " becauſe the Chriſtians were thought to " have their riſe chiefly from the Jews." Euſebius ſaith, " that τὸ πᾶν ἔθνος, the whole nation was ba- " niſhed from Jeruſalem, and the country round " about, and not permitted to ſet one foot in it." And then adds, " that (p) the city being after this " manner emptied of the Jews, and wholly cleared " of its inhabitants, and made up of aliens flowing in " thither, it was made a Roman city and colony, and " in honour of the Emperor was named Ælia." The ſame is ſaid by him in his Evangelical Demonſtrations (q); and by Tertullian (r), " that not one " Jew was permitted to ſtay there." Euſebius alſo adds (s), that τῆς αὐτόθι ἐκκλησίας ἐξ ἐθνῶν συγκροτηθείσης, " the church there conſiſting only of the Gentiles, " Marcus was the firſt biſhop of it." So that here is no place for the Doctor's ſuppoſed church, conſiſting both of Jews and Gentiles, or for the inhabiting of it by the Chriſtian Jews, and much leſs for his aſſigned many of them brought now to receive the faith by emulation of the Gentiles. In a word, Epiphanius ſaith, that Hadrian the Emperor, travelling to Jeruſalem, found there only τὴν ἐκκλησίαν μικρὰν, a little church, and ſeven ſynagogues, ſtanding like cottages; and was this likely to be the ſeat of two great biſhops! So that I find nothing agreeable to the truth of hiſtory in any thing which this Reverend perſon ſaith upon this ſubject, and much leſs any thing confirmed either by ſcripture or antiquity.

What hath been thus diſcourſed, is abundantly ſufficient to confute the expoſition of this reverend and learned perſon, as being not agreeable to matter of fact; for when was there any ſuch converſion made of the Jews at the times aſſigned by him, which can in any probability of conſtruction anſwer to the phraſes uſed by the apoſtle, that by it all Iſrael ſhould be ſaved; ungodlineſs ſhould be turned away from Jacob; God ſhould bleſs them by taking away their ſins; that they who now were blinded ſhould have the veil taken away from before their eyes; they who now were diminiſhed, ſhould have again their fulneſs; and they who now were caſt off, ſhould be again received? This could not happen in the very times when this epiſtle was at firſt indited: for though it be true that St James mentions many thouſands or myriads of Jewiſh converts, all zealous of the law, Acts 21. 20. yet were they all converted at, or before the time of writing this epiſtle, and ſo belonged only to the remnant according to the election of grace, here mentioned, not to the reſidue that were blinded, of whoſe converſion the apoſtle here ſpeaks from ver. 12.—32. Nor could their converſion and ſalvation be a myſtery to be then revealed to the Gentiles. That no ſuch converſion after the blindneſs mentioned in this chapter happened to them, upon their ſeeing the abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place, or ſoon after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, hath been already ſhewed; and that Juſtin Martyr ſaith nothing of any ſuch remarkable converſion of them, hath been alſo proved.

That there might be ſome converſion of them in the reign of Trajan, is by ſome argued from the words of Euſebius: " That Juſtus (t), then biſhop of " Jeruſalem, was one of the many myriads or thou- " ſands of the circumciſion which then had belie- " ved." Yet is this teſtimony of no force, as to this matter: For, 1. Grammarians well know, that μύριοι and μυριάδες, when put indefinitely, do only ſignify many; now if the πόσαι μυριάδες, the many myriads, mentioned by St James, hindered not, but that the Jewiſh converts might be only a little remnant, in reſpect to the blinded Jews, this may be as true of the ὅσαι μυριάδες, the ſo many myriads of Euſebius; eſpecially if we conſider, that moſt of them might be the very perſons mentioned by St James, he carefully informing us that the whole church of Jeruſalem, under her fifteen biſhops of Jeruſalem, of which this Juſtus was the eleventh, was made up of " belie- " vers who had continued from the apoſtle's time till " the wars and ſiege under Hadrian." And ſpeaking of theſe perſons, not as men believing then, but as πεπιστευκότες, men who had before that time embraced the Chriſtian faith. And hence (u) Ruffinus makes no mention of theſe ſuppoſed myriads, but only ſaith, " That Juſtus being one of thoſe of the cir- " cumciſion who had embraced the faith of Chriſt,

" was made their biſhop." In a word, this very Euſebius concurring ſo exactly with the ſentiments of all the other fathers, that the Jews were then rejected, and lay under a curſe, and proving from this very apoſtle, and from the words contained in the beginning of this very chapter, that they ſhould generally fall and be rejected for their unbelief, σπανίων ἐξ αὐτῶν εἰς τὸν σωτῆρα καὶ κύριον ἡμῶν πιστευόντων, (x) a very few of them only believing; and that (y) after the coming in of all nations to the Chriſtian faith, they did not yet ſee, or underſtand; he cannot be ſuppoſed to mention any thing which anſwers to the converſion of the Jews intended in this chapter, but muſt, with us, refer that to that glorious time when the (z) propheſies ſhall more fully, ſaith he, be fulfilled, i. e. the time when the fulneſs mentioned by the apoſtle ſhall come in. This being therefore all that hath been pleaded for the remarkable converſion of the Jews, after the writing this epiſtle; and this all being almoſt nothing, and far from bearing any correſpondence to the comprehenſive words of the apoſtle on that ſubject; I conclude that no converſion of this nature happened to them, between the writing this epiſtle, and the times of Conſtantine.

And whereas it is ſaid, that this converſion ſhould be wrought in them by way of emulation, and that they ſhould lay hold of the faith, being provoked ſo to do by ſeeing the Gentiles believe; it is confeſſed, that the apoſtle repreſents this as a fit means to work this emulation in them; but it is as certain, that it hath not yet had the deſigned effect upon them, they being ſo far from being provoked to embrace the Chriſtian faith, by ſeeing the Gentiles admitted to it, that this was to them the great ſtumbling-block, and they were enemies to the goſpel for their ſakes, ver. 28. they being prejudiced againſt it, becauſe the Gentiles were admitted to the bleſſings of it without circumciſion, and obſervance of the law of Moſes. See note on Gal. 3. 4. and 6. 12. This is that prejudice of the Judaiſing Chriſtians which the apoſtle labours to remove in moſt of his epiſtles, but more eſpecially in that to the Galatians; and as for the unbelieving Jews, they could not endure to hear of any to be ſent for the converting of the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. 22.; but they perſecuted the apoſtles upon this account, forbidding them to preach to the Gentiles that they might be ſaved, 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. And the ſame enmity to the Chriſtians ſeems to continue to this day among them upon the ſame accounts.

Wherefore there having been as yet, ſo far as we are able to diſcern, no ſuch remarkable converſion of thy Jews, ſince the inditing this epiſtle, and no ſuch happy emulation of the converted Gentiles, as did provoke them to embrace the Chriſtian faith, this could not be, as here the Doctor doth ſuggeſt, " a confirmation of the faith to the Gentiles, " and much leſs a means to bring them all to re- " ceive it, or to convert the Gentiles over all the " world." And what records and hiſtories make the leaſt mention of any ſuch converſion of the Gentile world on the account of the remarkable converſion of the Jews after the writing this epiſtle? When came in ſuch a fulneſs of the unbelieving Jews, as was the riches of the world, ver. 12.? or ſuch a reception of them to the Chriſtian faith, as was unto them life from the dead, ver. 15.? Or how can theſe aſſertions be reconciled to the words of the apoſtle? For if the coming in of the fulneſs of the Gentiles be their receiving the faith in thoſe times, then the partial blindneſs of the Jews muſt ceaſe in thoſe times alſo; for blindneſs, ſaith the apoſtle, hath happened to the Jews in part, and that blindneſs is to continue only till the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in. If then the blindneſs of the Jews is not yet ceaſed, but they have generally continued, even from the time of writing this epiſtle to this very moment, in as much blindneſs and obduracy as they then lay under, and as much branches broken off, as now they are, it follows, that the fulneſs of the Gentiles, mentioned by the apoſtle, is not yet come in.

Laſtly, The myſtery mentioned, ver. 25. cannot be this, That, by occaſion of the infidelity of the Jews, the goſpel was preached to, and received of the Gentiles; for of this the apoſtle introduceth the believing Gentiles ſpeaking thus, ver. 19. Thou will ſay then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in, &c. This therefore could not be to them a myſtery. Nor could it be this, viz. that this was done in mercy to the Jews, viz. that they, by ſeeing the Gentiles believe, might at length be provoked to do ſo too; for of this the apoſtle had ſpoken twice, declaring it to be foretold by Moſes, ſaying, I will provoke you to jealouſy by them that are no people, chap. 10. 19. and in this chapter, ſaying, Through their fall ſalvation is come to the Gentiles to provoke them to jealouſy, ver. 11. It remains then, as the apoſtle and the primitive church from him, declare, that it be this, That when the time for the fulneſs, i. e. for the converſion of the ſtill Heathen Gentiles, is come in, then ſhall the blindneſs of the Jews be removed, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, and then all nations ſhall flow in unto them, and their reception ſhall be to the Gentiles as life from the dead.

I think I have ſaid what is ſufficient to ſhew theſe words cannot admit the ſenſe impoſed upon them by the Reverend Dr Hammond; I proceed now more largely to diſcuſs the proper import of that phraſe, The fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in. This is by ſome interpreted thus, "Blindneſs hath happened to the Jews till the full number of the Gentiles which God ſhall call, be completed." But this ſenſe is contrary to the expreſs words of the Apoſtle, who declares, there ſhall be a greater and more glorious converſion of the Gentiles, than that which happened by occaſion of their fall; that their fulneſs ſhould be much more the riches of the Gentiles, than their fall was, ver. 12.; and that their coming in ſhould be unto the Gentiles as life from the dead, and ſhould much more enrich them than their caſting off, ver. 15.

Note therefore, that there is a double fulneſs of the Gentiles mentioned in the holy ſcriptures.

1. That which is ſpoken of, ver. 12. in theſe words, If the diminution of them was the fulneſs of the Gentiles; and this conſiſted in the preaching of the goſpel to all nations, and the imparting the glad tidings of ſalvation to them, and was in a great meaſure to be accompliſhed before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the ruin of that church and nation, according to our Lord's prediction, in theſe words, The goſpel of the kingdom ſhall be preached in all the world, for a witneſs to all nations, and then ſhall the end come, Matth. 24. 14. Mark 13. 10.

2. There is to be another fulneſs of the Gentiles by a more glorious converſion of them, and a coming in of thoſe nations which have not hitherto embraced the goſpel, or have relapſed into Heatheniſm or Mahometiſm, to be effected when this rejection of the Jews ſhall ceaſe, and God ſhall ſend the Deliverer out of Zion, to turn away iniquity from Jacob; and of this only can we underſtand thoſe words of the apoſtle, ver. 12. If the fall of the Jews hath been (already) the riches of the (Gentile) world, and the diminution of them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more ſhall their fulneſs, i. e. the time of their converſion, be the increaſe and fulneſs of the ſame Gentiles? And, ver. 15. If the caſting away of them be reconciling of the world, what ſhall the receiving them again be (to the ſame world), but even as life from the dead? And, ver. 25. Blindneſs in part hath happened to the Jews, till the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in. This blindneſs therefore ſtill continuing upon them as much as ever, another fulneſs of the Gentiles is to be expected, when it entirely ſhall be removed from them, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved.

3. Jeruſalem is yet trodden down of the nations, and the Jews are yet captives in all nations; whereas the captivity, and the treading down of Jeruſalem is to ceaſe, when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, according to thoſe words of Chriſt concerning the deſtruction of the Jews, They ſhall fall by the edge of the ſword, and ſhall be carried captives into all nations, and Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, Luke 21. 24. i. e. till the times when they ſhall have a plenary converſion by the coming in of the Jews, and ſhall no more lord it over them, as now they do, but ſerve them, and flow in unto them. And to this purpoſe let it be noted, 1ſt, That if we conſult ancient prophecies concerning the vaſt extent of our Saviour's kingdom over all nations, we ſhall find reaſon to believe they have not yet had their full accompliſhment upon them; for he hath not yet had the uttermoſt parts of the earth for his poſſeſſion, Pſal. 2. 8.; God hath not yet made all people, nations, and languages to ſerve him, and all dominions to obey him, Dan. 7. 4. 27.; he hath not yet filled the whole earth, or broke in pieces, and conſumed all other kingdoms, Dan. 2. 34. 35.; that ſeems not yet fulfilled which was foretold by Micah, that the Lord ſhould be King over all the earth, Micah 5. 4.; and by Zechariah, that there ſhould be but one Lord, and his name one, Zech. 14. 9.; and by David, that all kings ſhall fall down before him, and all nations ſerve him; that all the ends of the earth ſhould remember, and turn to the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations worſhip before him, Pſal. 72. 8. Theſe, and ſundry other ſuch like prophecies there are, which yet were never accompliſhed according to the full import of them. For, as Brerewood obſerves (a), "If we divide the known "regions of the world into thirty equal parts, the "Chriſtians part is (only) as five, the Mahometans "as ſix, the Idolaters as nineteen;" whence we have reaſon to conclude, that there is yet a time to come, before the conſummation of all things, in which our Saviour will yet once more diſplay the victorious banner of his croſs, and, like a mighty man of war, march on conquering, and to conquer, till he hath confounded or converted his enemies, and finally conſummated his victories in a glorious triumph over all the powers of the earth, and made all nations, tongues, and languages to ſerve him.

2dly, That there is ſtill to be a glorious converſion of the Jewiſh nation, as it ſeems evident from the words of the apoſtle here, who ſpeaketh of a time when the partial blindneſs which then had happened to the Jews, and ſtill continues upon them, ſhould ceaſe; when God would turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob, and take away the puniſhment of their ſins, which yet he hath not done; when not a little remnant only, as at our Lord's firſt advent, but all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; when that Iſrael, whoſe minds were then, and ſtill are blinded by the veil that is upon them, ſhall have that veil taken away by their turning to the Lord. So alſo from thoſe prophecies of the Old Teſtament, which promiſe to that nation ſuch kindneſs, favour, and ſalvation, as either hath not been at all as yet, or but imperfectly fulfilled; as when he promiſeth to bleſs her with ſuch bleſſings as never ſhould be taken from her, and to ſhew mercy to her, ſo as never to forſake her more. To this effect are theſe expreſſions: "As I have ſworn that the waters of Noah ſhould no more go over the earth, ſo "I have ſworn, that I would not be wroth with thee, "nor rebuke thee (any more); for the mountains "ſhall depart, and the hills be removed, but my "kindneſs ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall "the covenant of my peace be removed, ſaith the "Lord that hath mercy on thee," Iſ. 54. 9. 10. "And "the Redeemer ſhall come to Zion, and to them "that turn from tranſgreſſion in Jacob, ſaith the "Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, "ſaith the Lord, My ſpirit that is upon thee, and "my words which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall "not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the "mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of "thy ſeed's ſeed from henceforth and for ever," Iſ. 59. 20. 21. "I will make thee an eternal ex-"cellency, a joy of many generations. Violence "ſhall no more be heard in thy land, waſting nor "deſtruction within thy borders; but thou ſhalt "call thy walls ſalvation, and thy gates praiſe. "The ſun ſhall be no more thy light by day, neither "for brightneſs ſhall the moon give light unto thee; "but the Lord ſhall be unto thee an everlaſting "light, and thy God thy glory. Thy ſun ſhall no "more go down, neither ſhall thy moon withdraw "itſelf; for the Lord ſhall be thy everlaſting light, "and the days of thy mourning ſhall be ended," Iſ. 60. 15. 18. 19. 20. "Everlaſting joy ſhall be "unto them, and I will make an everlaſting cove-"nant with them, Iſ. 61. 7. 8. Thou ſhalt no more "be termed, Forſaken; neither ſhall thy land any "more be termed, Deſolate; but thou ſhalt be called "Hephzibah, and thy land, Beulah; for the Lord "delighteth in thee, and thy land ſhall be married," Iſ. 62. 4. 12. "I will rejoice in Jeruſalem, and "joy in my people; and the voice of weeping "ſhall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of "crying," Iſ. 65. 19. "For as the new heavens, and "new earth, which I will make, ſhall remain be-"fore me, ſaith the Lord, ſo ſhall your ſeed and your "name remain," Iſ. 66. 22. "And I will give them "one heart, and one way, that they may fear me "for ever, for the good of them, and of their "children after them. And I will make an ever-"laſting covenant with them, that I will not turn "away from them to do them good, but I will put "my fear in their hearts, that they ſhall not depart "from me," Jer. 32. 39. 40. "And they ſhall be no "more a prey to the Heathen, neither ſhall the "beaſts of the land devour them; but they ſhall "dwell ſafely, and none ſhall make them afraid. "And I will raiſe up for them a plant of renown, "and they ſhall be no more conſumed with hunger "in the land, neither bear the ſhame of the Hea-"then any more," Ezek. 34. 28. 29. "And they ſhall "dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob "my ſervant, wherein your fathers have dwelt, "and they ſhall dwell therein, even they and their "children, and their childrens children for ever; "and my ſervant David ſhall be their prince for "ever. Moreover, I will make a covenant of "peace with them, it ſhall be an everlaſting cove-"nant with them; and I will place them, and mul-"tiply them, and will ſet my ſanctuary in the midſt "of them for evermore. My tabernacle ſhall be "with them; yea, I will be their God, and they "ſhall be my people," Ezek. 37. 25. 26. 27. "I have "gathered them unto their own land, and have "left none of them any more there. Neither will "I hide my face any more from them," Ezek. 39. 28. 29. "And I will plant them upon their land, "and they ſhall no more be pulled up out of their "land which I have given them, ſaith the Lord "thy God," Amos 9. 15.

Now, it ſeems very evident, that ſcarcely any of theſe things can be applied to the return of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon; for ſince that time his kindneſs hath departed from them, and his covenant of peace hath been removed for above 1600 years; violence hath been heard in their land, waſting and deſtruction within their borders, and their land hath been made deſolate; the days of wrath, of mourning, and of weeping, have been long upon them; their ſun hath been, according to our Lord's prediction, darkened, and their moon hath not given her light; their ſanctuary and tabernacle hath been conſumed, and they have been a prey to the Heathen; they have long ſince ceaſed to be his people, and he to be their God.

Nor can we reaſonably confine theſe promiſes to that little remnant which believed in the times of the apoſtles; for they were never gathered out of all lands, nor did they inherit the land for ever, but were baniſhed thence, as well as the unbelieving Jews, by Hadrian; they can, in no propriety of ſpeech, ſpeech, be ſtyled the houſe of Iſrael, the whole houſe of Iſrael. Nothing indeed ſeems more unlikely than that the time of the caſting them off, the breaking off the branches, the leaving them under a ſpiritual ſlumber, the taking the kingdom from them, and caſting them out into utter darkneſs, ſhould be the time of the completion of theſe glorious promiſes; and that this ſenſe cannot accord with the diſcourſe of our apoſtle here, hath been already ſhewed.

Nor, 3*dly*, Can we apply theſe promiſes to the believing Gentiles; for ſure they could not be a prey to the Heathens, or bear their ſhame, or be the people whom God hath led into captivity, and after gathered into their own land, and ſo planted there as never to be plucked up again; the promiſe could not be made to them, that they ſhould ſuck the breaſts, and eat the riches of the Gentiles.

4*thly*, I have already ſhewed from ſcripture-prophecies, that after this converſion the nations generally ſhall flow in to them, and walk in their light, and ſo their fulneſs (which ſignifies not their incorporation into another church, but as the oppoſite words, their fall, their diminution, their rejection require; and as the apoſtle doth himſelf interpret it, their reception to the Chriſtian faith, and ſo into the favour of God) ſhall be the riches of the Gentiles, and as life from the dead to them: then the Gentiles ſhall come to their light, and kings to the brightneſs of their riſing; and nations that have not known them, ſhall run in unto them, becauſe God hath glorified them. Then, ſaith God, I will gather all nations and tongues, and they ſhall come and ſee my glory, Iſ. 55. 5. and 56. and 66. 18. 22. Then all nations ſhall turn, and fear the Lord truly, ſaith Tobit, chap. 13. 10. 11. And this I conceive to be that fulneſs of the Gentiles of which the apoſtle here ſpeaketh.

THE PREFACE TO THE First EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

§ 1. THAT this was an epiſtle written by St Paul the apoſtle, as is aſſerted, ver. 1. was never doubted in the church of God; but whether this was the firſt epiſtle of St Paul to the Corinthians, hath been a matter of diſpute; becauſe he ſaith in it, I have written to you in an epiſtle, chap. 5. 9. which ſeemeth plainly to relate to ſome epiſtle formerly by him writ to them: for this, ſaith Pſeud-Ambroſius, was ſpoken de præterita epiſtola quam ante hanc, quæ prima dicitur, ſcripſerat. But, as I have obſerved in the note upon that verſe, no fathers ever aſcribed to St Paul more than fourteen epiſtles, including that to the Hebrews. Euſebius never mentions any third epiſtle to the Corinthians, amongſt the true, controverted, or ſpurious writings which paſs under his name. No Chriſtian writer ever cited any thing from this ſuppoſed epiſtle; all the Greek ſcholiaſts declare the apoſtle ſpeaketh in thoſe words, not of another, but of this very epiſtle, which is ſufficient to juſtify the verſion I have given of thoſe words, I had written, or was writing in this epiſtle. Moreover, his ſuppoſed epiſtle to Laodicea is cited as a book exploded by St Jerom (a), his epiſtles to Seneca are in like manner cited by St Jerom and St Auſtin (b), the acts of Paul are cited and rejected by Origen and Euſebius (c); but none of them make any mention of more than two epiſtles to the church of Corinth.

§ 2. That this epiſtle was written by St Paul whilſt he was at Epheſus, and before he went thence to Macedonia, is clear from the very words of this epiſtle: for chap. 16. 8. he ſaith, I will tarry ſtill at Epheſus till Penteco ſt; and adds, ver. 19. The churches of Aſia, of which Epheſus was the metropolis, ſalute you; Aquila and Priſcilla ſalute you, with the church which is in their houſe. Now, that they dwelt at Epheſus, we read, Acts 18. 25.; that it was writ before he went thence into Macedonia, theſe words inform us, chap. 16. 5. I will come to you when I paſs through Macedonia; for I do paſs through Macedonia. It is therefore generally agreed, that it was written in the 57th, as Dr Pearſon, or in the 55th year of Chriſt, as Dr Lightfoot hath it. As alſo may be probably concluded thus: In the 9th year of Claudius, ſaith Oroſius, in the 10th, ſay others, in the 12th, ſaith Dr Pearſon, the Jews were baniſhed from Rome; and St Paul, coming to Corinth, finds Aquila and Priſcilla, newly come from thence to Corinth, upon that occaſion, Acts 18. 2.; he ſtays there a year and a half, ver. 11. that is, till the 11th of Claudius, at Epheſus three years, Acts 20. 31. and at the cloſe of theſe three years he writes this epiſtle. If then you begin this baniſhment of the Jews from Rome, as Valeſius doth in the 10th of Claudius, theſe five years that Paul continued at Corinth and Epheſus, will end in the 1ſt of Nero, A. D. 55. If, with Dr Pearſon, you begin them only at the 12th of Claudius, they will end in the 3d of Nero, A. D. 57.

§ 3. That the perſons to whom it was written, were chiefly Gentiles, is evident from theſe words, Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away to theſe dumb idols, even as ye were led, chap. 12. 2.; that it was alſo written to the Jewiſh converts then at Corinth, Eſthius conjectures, becauſe he ſaith, chap. 10. 1. That all our fathers were under the cloud. But it is not neceſſary that ſhould relate to their fathers according to the fleſh, but only to the preceding church of God called before them out of Egypt, and partaking of like privileges with them: for the apoſtle declares, that not they who are the children of the flesh are counted for the seed, but they who are the children of the promise, Rom. 9. 8.; and that the promise belonged not only to the seed according to the law, but according to the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all, Rom. 4. 16. See Gal. 3. 14. 29. and 4. 28.

§ 4. The occasions of writing this epistle we may best learn from the ancients, and from the epistle itself.

1*st*, then, The ancients inform us of this city, That Corinth was full of rhetoricians and philosophers (d), and that they gave occasion to most of those miscarriages which the apostle reprehends in this epistle.

2*dly*, That there were (e) Judaizers crept in among them, who magnified themselves, and debased the apostle as a great boaster, but of little worth, styling him an apostate from the law, and commending the observation of it to them.

3*dly*, They add, That the city of Corinth was very rich (f), and that some of them chose themselves teachers out of the rich, as being most able to support them, as others did out of the philosophers, as being most able to teach them more than the apostle could do.

4*thly*, They say, That the Corinthians sent questions to St Paul, concerning marriage and virginity (g), by Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, by whom the apostle more fully was informed of the state of their church; and therefore sent this answer to them concerning these several heads.

And suitably to these things mentioned by the ancients, we find,

1*st*, That the apostle spends the latter part of the first chapter, from ver. 20. to the end, in shewing the vanity of the wisdom which the philosophers pretended to, in comparison to the wisdom discovered by the gospel, preached by the apostles. And chapter the second, he shews the impossibility of knowing, or assenting to the things delivered by the gospel, by those who depending on philosophy, and human reason, rejected what was taught purely by revelation, and consequently the necessity of admitting that revelation of the Spirit they challenged to themselves, that the doctrine of the gospel might be made known to the world. And against both the rhetoricians and philosophers, he shews the necessity of preaching the gospel, not in the words of human wisdom, chap. 1. 17. 18. 19. chap. 2. 1. chap. 3. 18. 19. 28. chap. 4. 20.

2*dly*, Because on the account of those philosophers and rhetoricians, as well as of the Judaizers, they broke out into parties and factions, he minds them of those factions, beseeching them carefully to avoid them, chap. 1. 10. as tending to the dividing of Christ's body, ver. 13. and as indications that they were yet carnal, 1 Cor. 3. 4. pursuing this under his own name, and that of Apollos, through the whole third chapter; shewing, that they ought not to glory in men, or be puffed up for one against another, whatever were their gifts, or eloquence; but give the glory of their labours unto God alone. See chap. 4. 8.

3*dly*, Because they who declared they were of Cephas, seem to be those Judaizers who looked on the apostle as unfaithful in his office, for rejecting circumcision and the law: he declares, that he found no occasion thus to charge himself, nor was he much concerned for their censures of him in that kind, chap. 4. 4. 5.; shewing by his sufferings, how great an evidence he had given of his fidelity in the discharge of his office, from ver. 9. to 14. and that he had begotten them to that faith in which they ought to stand, and follow his example, from ver. 14. to 17. And because, he having sent Timothy to them, they imagined he either durst not, or would not come to them himself; he declares he would both come and use his apostolical authority amongst them, and try the power of them who were thus puffed up against him by reason of their human wisdom.

4*thly*, Because one of these eloquent persons had been guilty of a very hainous crime, he commands them to punish him by removing him from their society, and delivering him up to Satan. And,

5*thly*, Because being rich and wealthy, chap. 4. 8. they were unwilling to part with their wealth, and therefore went to law, for preservation of it, before

Heathen

Heathen judges, to the scandal of Christianity; he reprehends this vice in them, chap. 6. from ver. 1. to 10. And having said all this by way of preface, he begins, chap. 7. to return his answer to the questions they had sent unto him.

§ 5. There is one further observation useful for, and worthy to be pondered by the licentious persons of our age, That because fornication and lasciviousness were vices to which the Heathens were generally addicted; and their philosophers, and perhaps some heretics, viz. the Nicolaitans, which were amongst them, maintained this was a thing indifferent, therefore the apostle, both in the epistles to the Corinthians, and to most other churches, is very copious in shewing the destructive nature of this sin. It is to be observed that Corinth was above all other cities, even to a proverb, infamous for fornication and lasciviousness; so that Κορινθία γυνὴ, a Corinthian woman, is, in the language of the ancients, a whorish woman, according to the proverb, οὐ Κορινθία ἔοικας χοιροπωλήσαι, (b) ut Corinthia videris corpore quæstum factura. And Κορινθιάζειν, Κορινθιάζεσθαι is ἑταιρεύειν, scortationibus indulgere, Hesych. Phavorin. "There was," saith Strabo (i), "in it a temple "dedicated to Venus, which πολλὰς μὲν χιλίας ἱερόδουλας "εἶχετο ἑταίρας." These vices reigned also in Galatia, the worshipper of the mother of the gods; in Ephesus, (see note on Eph. 5. 5.), Thessalonica, Crete, (Athenæus, l. 12. p. 527. A. 528. C.), and generally in all Heathen nations. Hence the apostle is so frequent, and express in his condemning this vice,

1*st*, As a sin contrary to nature, as being against our own body, 1 Cor. 6. 18.; a sin of unrighteousness, to which God gave them up for their idolatry, Rom. 1. 28.; and a sin, which they who committed, were given up to a reprobate mind, and knew they did things worthy of death, ver. 29. 32.; a sin contrary to the moral law, or to the law of nature; for he declares that law was given for the condemning fornicators, 1 Tim. 1. 10.

2*dly*, As a sin contrary to the Christian faith, and inconsistent with it. Know ye not, saith he, that your bodies are the members of Christ; shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid! 1 Cor. 6. 15. And again, But fornication, and all uncleanness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints, Eph. 5. 3. For God hath not called us to uncleanness, but unto holiness. He therefore that despiseth this his call, despiseth not man, but God, who also hath given us of his Spirit, 1 Thess. 4. 7. 8. Hence he declares it to be contrary to the sound doctrine of the gospel, 1 Tim. 1. 10. 11. and forbids Christians to eat with any brother who is a fornicator, 1 Cor. 5. 11.

3*dly*, As being a sin which will exclude the fornicator from the kingdom of God. Be not deceived, saith he, no fornicator shall inherit the kingdom of God, Gal. 6. 10. 11. To the Galatians he speaks thus, The works of the flesh are manifest, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, of which I tell you again, that they who do such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God, Gal. 5. 19. 20. 21. To the Ephesians thus, This know ye, that no fornicator, or unclean person, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ, or of God, John 5. 5. They, saith St John, shall be excluded from the New Jerusalem, Rev. 22. 15.

4*thly*, As that which will assuredly expose them to the wrath of God: for thus he speaks to the Colossians, Mortify your earthly members, fornication, uncleanness; for which things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Col. 3. 5. 6. To the Ephesians thus, Be not deceived with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience, Eph. 5. 6.

5*thly*, As that which will subject them to eternal punishment: for whoremongers and adulterers κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, God will adjudge to condemnation, Heb. 13. 4.; the portion of the whoremonger shall be assigned him in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone, Rev. 21. 8.

§ 6. And this is all that I at first intended by way of preface to this epistle. But finding, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the same body which dieth, is now either questioned, or thought unnecessary to be believed, though anciently the very Heathens looked upon it as a fundamental doctrine of Christianity, and the ground of their most raised hopes: and upon this account they burnt the very bones of Christian martyrs, and reduced them to ashes, and then threw those ashes into the river Rhodanus, or Roan, that so they might defeat the (k) hope of a resurrection, which enabled the Christians to suffer death with alacrity, and to endure all kinds of torments for their religion; which, sure, had been a vain attempt, had not the Christian doctrine promised, as the foundation of their hopes, the resurrection of the same body thus consumed, but only of some other body in its stead; and seeing the 15th chapter of this epistle is the seat of that controversy, I shall therefore endeavour briefly to evince two things.

1. That it was certainly the received doctrine of the professors of the Christian faith.

2. That

2. That it is truly grounded on the ſcriptures, and therefore ought to be owned as an article of Chriſtian faith. And,

1. That it was certainly the ancient and received doctrine of the orthodox profeſſors of the Chriſtian faith, is evident,

1*ſt*, From the ſecond epiſtle of Clemens Romanus (l), writ in the firſt century: for there he doth expreſsly caution Chriſtians againſt the denial of this article, in theſe words, "Let none of you ſay, "that this ſame fleſh ſhall not be judged; for as you "were called in the fleſh, ſo ſhall you come in the "fleſh to judgment, and in this very fleſh ſhall you "receive your reward." And in his firſt epiſtle, to prove that God will raiſe them from the dead, who have ſerved him in holineſs, he cites theſe words from Job, chap. 19. 25. 26. ἀναστήσεις τὴν σάρκα μου ταύτην, Thou wilt raiſe up this my fleſh which hath ſuffered all theſe things.

2*dly*, From Irenæus (m), who in the ſecond century makes this one article of faith of the whole church received from the apoſtles, and kept, taught, and delivered in all places with the greateſt care and uniformity, viz. "That Chriſt will come from heaven "in glory, ἀναστῆσαι πᾶσαν σάρκα παντὸς ἀνθρωπότητος, to "raiſe up all fleſh of all mankind." Tertullian (n), in the third century, producing the Chriſtians creed as the rule of faith, which came from Chriſt, and was by his companions handed down to the church, the inſtitution of Chriſt, which all nations ought to believe, makes this one article of it, "That Chriſt will "come to judge the quick and dead, facta utriuſque "partis reſuſcitatione cum carnis reſtitutione, or, "per carnis reſurrectionem, by raiſing and reſto-"ring of their fleſh." Accordingly the article of the reſurrection of the fleſh, or, as the Aquileian ſymbol hath it, hujus carnis, of this fleſh; or, as other confeſſions have it, of their bodies, hath been received in all Chriſtian churches. And they have been condemned as heretics from the beginning of the ſecond century, who denied (o) σαρκὸς ἀνάστασιν, the reſurrection of the fleſh, et carnis (p) ſalutem et regenerationem ejus, dicentes non eam capacem eſſe incorruptibilitatis, "the life and reproduction of the "fleſh, ſaying, it was incapable of incorruption:" as did the Valentinians (q), the Baſilidians, and the Marcionites, ſay the fathers.

§ 7. I proceed, ſecondly, to ſhew, That this doctrine of the primitive Chriſtians is truly grounded on the ſcriptures, and therefore ought to be received and owned as an article of Chriſtian faith. This I prove,

1*ſt*, From all thoſe places which ſpeak of the reſurrection of the body; theſe places I ſhall produce, for their ſakes who do not remember, in any place of the New Teſtament, any ſuch expreſſion as the reſurrection of the body, v. g. He that raiſed Jeſus from the dead, ζωοποιήσει καὶ, ſhall alſo make alive your mortal bodies, Rom. 8. 11. that is, he ſhall raiſe them from the dead; for that ζωοποιεῖν and ἐγείρειν, to quicken, and raiſe up, are, with relation to this matter, words of the ſame import, we learn from theſe words: As the Father ἐγείρει τοὺς νεκροὺς, καὶ ζωοποιεῖ, raiſeth up the dead and quickeneth them, ſo the Son ζωοποιεῖ, quickeneth whom he will, John 5. 21. Again, ſaith the apoſtle, How are the dead raiſed up? i. e. the bodies of the dead; for ſo it follows, καὶ ποίῳ σώματι, and with what kind of bodies do they come forth of the grave? 1 Cor. 15. 35. So ver. 44. It is ſown a natural body, it is raiſed σῶμα πνευματικὸν, a ſpiritual body. And ſtill more evidently, τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο, This corruptible body muſt put on incorruption, καὶ τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, and this mortal body muſt put on immortality, ver. 53. So when this corruptible body ſhall have put on incorruption, and this mortal body put on immortality, then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory. If any one likes not my addition of σῶμα, body, to the pronoun, and adjective, four times here mentioned, I deſire him to find out, if he can, another ſubſtantive; if he cannot, he muſt confeſs the reſurrection of the body is here mentioned four times; for the apoſtle argues thus, The dead ſhall be raiſed up, διὰ γὰρ, for this corruptible body muſt put on incorruption; and when this is done, then death, which only happeneth to this corruptible mortal body, ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory.

It is ſaid, That "he who reads with attention "this diſcourſe of St Paul, where he ſpeaks of the "reſurrection, will ſee, that he plainly diſtinguiſh-"eth between the dead that ſhall be raiſed, and the "bodies of the dead; for it is νεκροὶ, πάντες οἱ, which "are the nominative caſes to ἐγερθήσονται, ζωοποιηθήσονται, "ἐγερθήσονται, all along, and not σώματα, bodies, which "one may in reaſon think would ſome where or "other have been expreſſed, if all this had been "ſaid to propoſe it as an article of faith, that the "ſame bodies ſhall be raiſed." The ſame manner of ſpeaking the Spirit of God obſerves all through the New Teſtament, where it is ſaid, raiſe the dead, quicken, or make alive the dead, the reſurrection of the dead, John 5. 28. 29. Rom. 4. 17. Matth. 22. 27. 52. 2 Cor. 1. 9. 1 Thess. 4. 16.

Answer. I hope the instances produced already are sufficient to confute this observation. I shall therefore go on further to observe, and prove, that the resurrection of the dead, is, by the apostle, used with plain relation to the bodies of the dead; so that he even proves the resurrection of the dead, because the body is raised, and so doth not plainly distinguish betwixt the dead that shall be raised, and the bodies of the dead. This is evident enough from what I have observed already, that the apostle proves οἱ νεκροὶ ἐγερθήσονται, the dead shall be raised, because the corruptible body must put on incorruption, &c.; but it is still more evident from these words, So is also ἀνάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν, the resurrection of the dead; for it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption, ver. 42. 43. Where I desire to know what is the nominative case to ἐγείρεται, it is raised, used three times here? If it be σῶμα, body, I have sufficiently confuted this criticism: if it be not, why doth the apostle so expound it in the immediate ensuing words, It is sown a natural body, ἐγείρεται σῶμα πνευματικὸν, it is raised a spiritual body?

I add, that this appears almost from all the places cited, that the οἱ νεκροὶ, and the πάντες ἀποθνήσκοντες, the dead, and the all dying, hath relation to the body only, which being that alone which is by death bereft of life, must be that only which, in propriety of speech, is said to die. Thus, when it is said, "These very words urged for the resurrection of "the same body run thus, πάντες οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and "shall come forth; they that have done good, εἰς "ἀνάστασιν ζωῆς, to the resurrection of life, but they "that have done evil, to the resurrection of con-"demnation:" and is then added, "Would not a "well-meaning searcher be apt to think, that if "the thing here intended by our Saviour were to "teach, and propose it as an article of faith, ne-"cessary to be believed by every one, that the "very same bodies of the dead should be raised, "the words should rather have been πάντα τὰ σώματα "ἃ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, i. e. all the bodies that are in the "graves, rather than all who are in the graves; "which must denote persons, and not precisely "bodies?"

To this I answer, 1st, That the words πάντες οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, i. e. all that are in the graves, and πάντα τὰ σώματα τὰ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις, all the bodies that are in the graves, are plainly words of the same import; for what is laid down in the graves or sepulchres, is it not σώματα τῶν κεκοιμημένων, the bodies of them that sleep only? Matth. 27. 52. And must it not then be these bodies that come forth of them? May we not discern in the passage now cited, how the Holy Ghost passes immediately from the bodies of the saints that slept, to their persons, saying, the bodies of the saints that slept arose, καὶ ἐξελθόντες ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, and they coming out of their graves, after this resurrection, went into the holy city, and appeared unto many? ver. 53.

2dly, When God said to Adam, what was also true of his posterity, In sorrow shalt thou eat thy bread until thou return to the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return, Gen. 3. 19.; and the psalmist, of man in general, His breath (or spirit) goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, Psal. 146. 5.; will any one be tempted, from these personal demonstrative pronouns thou, and he, to say, that these words must denote the persons, and not precisely the bodies of men? and thence infer, that the whole person of Adam was taken out of the earth, and was but dust, and that the whole person of man returneth to his earth? If not, why is it argued that the like pronoun οἱ, they, must here denote persons, and not precisely bodies? Are we not told, that the word person stands for a thinking intelligent being, that has reason and reflection, and can consider itself as itself? And can they who are in their graves do this? If so, surely they are not dead in them, but buried alive. If they cannot, why must these words οἱ ἐν τοῖς μνημείοις denote persons?

But it is said, That, "according to this interpre-"tation of these words of our Saviour, no other "substance being raised but what hears his voice, "and no other substance hearing his voice, but "what, being called, comes out of the grave; and "no other substance coming out of the grave but "what was in the grave, any one must conclude, "that the soul, unless it be in the grave, will make "no part of the person that is raised."

Answer. To this I answer, that any one may reasonably hence conclude, that the soul makes no raised part of him that is raised, or that it is not called, or raised out of the grave, as the body is; but by what logic can we hence conclude it makes no part of the raised person? For instance, we profess in our creed to believe that Jesus Christ died, and rose again, i. e. from the grave: and saith St Peter, This Jesus hath God raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was impossible he should be holden of it, Acts 2. 24. 32. Now, because nothing can be raised from the dead but that which died, nothing can be raised from the grave but what was laid in it; shall we hence infer, that the soul of the Lord Jesus, or his spirit, which he commended into his Father's hands, and which went to Paradise, unless it died, and was in the grave, could make no part of the person which was dead, and was raised from the dead, and out of the grave?

when our Lord says, They that were in the graves shall come forth to the resurrection of life, John 5. 28. 29. and ver. 25. the dead shall live; what can live again but that which was dead? What can have a resurrection to life but that which had no life? and was not that the body only? Yea, are not these things said in pursuance of what went before, As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth (or gives life) to them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will? Now, what can be raised from the dead but that which was dead? What can be quickened, or have life given to it, but that which had no life? If then that were the body only, must not the raising of the dead, and quickening them, import only the raising and quickening of the body, although this be performed completely by the union of the soul to the raised body?

2*dly*, That in our Saviour's discourse against the Sadducees, περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῶν νεκρῶν, touching the resurrection of the dead, Matth. 22. Mark 12. Luke 20. 35. 36. he also speaks of raising that which was dead, i. e. the body, is evident from this, that he saith of them who partake of that resurrection, οὐκ ἔτι δύνανται ἀποθανεῖν, they can die no more; which can be only spoken of that body which died before.

3*dly*, We read of God τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τοὺς νεκρούς, quickening the dead, Rom. 4. 17. Now, what doth he quicken but what was dead? what doth he give life to but that which ceased to have life? that is, the body.

4*thly*, St Paul saith, We had in ourselves the sentence of death, that we might not trust in ourselves, but in God τῷ ἐγείροντι τοὺς νεκρούς, who raiseth the dead, 2 Cor. 1. 9. Now, what was this sentence of death? Did St Paul and his Christian companions believe the whole man should be killed by their persecutors? or, as their Lord had taught them, that they could kill the body, but could not kill the soul, Matth. 10. 26. Doth he not say in their names, that that which perished, or was corrupted, was only ὁ ἔξω ἡμῶν ἄνθρωπος, our outward man, 2 Cor. 4. 16. in opposition to the inward man? that whilst they lived they were at home in the body, and that at death they did ἐκδημοῦσιν ἐκ τοῦ σώματος, dwell out of the body, 2 Cor. 4. 16. or, as to the soul, were absent from it? And must not then the sentence of death they had in themselves, be only this, that their bodies might die by the hands of persecutors, that their outward man might perish by them? And must not then their trust in God that raiseth the dead, relate to his raising their dead bodies?

5*thly*, The dead in Christ that shall be raised, 1 Thess. 4. 16. are they that sleep, ver. 13. 15. that is, that sleep in the dust, Dan. 12. 2.; now is it not τὰ σώματα, the bodies of the saints that thus sleep, Matth. 27. 52. and must not then the apostle speak of them only? Is not this spoken to comfort the Thessalonians concerning them that were asleep, ver. 13. 18. and were they troubled for the souls of them that slept in Jesus? ver. 14. or doth the apostle say any thing to comfort them but that which relates to the body only? And will it not hence follow, that what he there saith touching the resurrection of the dead, concerneth their dead bodies only? Thus have I shewed that all the places here cited, as speaking of the resurrection of the dead, refer to the resurrection of the bodies.

§ 8. But further, had not the scripture so expressly spoken of raising our mortal bodies, of raising that a spiritual body which was sown a natural body, and proved the dead shall be raised, because this corruptible shall put on incorruption; and could it not be proved, that raising of the dead, and of the bodies of the dead, were in import the same, this article might be established from other passages of scripture, speaking the same thing in effect, as v. g.

1*st*, We who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, groan within ourselves, expecting υἱοθεσίαν, the sonship, even the redemption of our body, Rom. 8. 23. Now, what is is this redemption τοῦ σώματος ἡμῶν, of our body, but the delivery of it from the bondage of corruption? ver. 21. What did they groan for? It was, saith the same apostle, that mortality might be swallowed up of life, 2 Cor. 5. 4. 5. which only is to be done when this mortal body shall put on immortality, saith the same apostle: this therefore was to be done to accomplish the redemption of the body spoken of; and is not then the redemption and the resurrection of the body in effect the same?

2*dly*, We expect that Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, from heaven, who shall change τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, our vile body, into the likeness of his glorious body, Philip. 3. 20. 21. The body therefore to be changed is τὸ σῶμα ἡμῶν, our body, the body of our humiliation, so styled, as Methodius saith, because κατεπτώται ἀπὸ σφάλματος, it is humbled and made mortal by the fall, or, as Irenæus, l. 5. c. 13. quod et humiliatur cadens in terram, because it is humbled by falling into the earth. This body is to be thus changed when our Lord cometh down from heaven, that is, at the resurrection of it; for the Lord shall descend from heaven, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, 1 Thess. 4. 16. Is it not therefore manifest from these words, that our vile mortal bodies, fallen into the earth, or laid in it, shall be raised, and by, or at the resurrection, shall be changed into the likeness of Christ's glorious body?

Now, hence I argue for the resurrection of the same body thus: If the scripture teacheth that there shall be a quickening, by raising up our mortal bodies, a redemption, by the resurrection of our bodies, a changing of our bodies at, and by the resurrection, into the likeness of Christ's glorious body, it seems sufficiently to say, there shall be a resurrection of the same body which before was mortal, and a change by it, of the same body which was vile or humble, and a redemption by it from corruption, of the same body which was formerly in bondage to corruption; for all this must be said of the same body, or not of the same body; if of the same body, then the same body must be raised; if not of the same body, then of another; and how then is it said of our body? How are these other bodies τὰ θνητὰ σώματα ὑμῶν; your mortal bodies? Rom. 8. 11. the redemption of them, the redemption τῦ σώματος ἡμῶν, the change of them, the change τῦ σωματος ταπινώσεως ἡμῶν, of our mortal vile bodies?

2*dly*, When the apostle saith (r), this corruptible, this mortal body, does he mean this body of ours, or does he not? If he does mean this mortal, corruptible body of ours, then he asserts of that, that it shall be raised immortal and incorruptible; if he does not mean it of ours, he must mean it of some other body than ours, and how then is that raised a spiritual body which was sown a natural body? How doth this mortal put on immortality? How are we concerned in the resurrection of another body? or what assurance doth it give us that we shall rise from the dead, seeing, when any of us departs this life, it is our body that dies, and not another's? Yea, why then doth he say, The dead shall rise, and we that are living shall be changed? We shall all be changed, i. e. our vile bodies shall be changed, into the likeness of Christ's glorious body; our mortal bodies into immortal; our natural bodies shall be changed by being raised spiritual bodies? Let any man try his utmost skill, and see if he can find any nominative case to σπείρεται, it is sown, used here four times, but σωμα, body, or understand this of any other body than ours: seeing then the same word is the nominative case to ἐγείρεται, it is raised, which was so to σπείρεται, it is sown, the apostle must be supposed to say, this body of ours is raised in incorruption.

§ 9. Argument 2. To proceed to other scriptures of like import: All that are in their graves shall come forth, saith Christ, ἐκπορεύσονται ἐκ τῶν μνημείων, they shall come out of the graves in which they were, John 5. 28. 29. Shall they come forth with the same body which was laid in the grave, or with another? If with the same, then the same body must be raised; if with another, how come these graves to be called their graves? and how are the dead, and they that are in the graves, raised out of them, and not another?

Again, when it is said, The sea gave up the dead ἐν αὐτῇ, in it, and death and hades (the place of the dead) gave up the dead in them, Rev. 20. 13. did they give up the same bodies which were laid down in them, or some others? The first is the thing contended for; if they gave up some others, how did they give up the dead that were laid down in them?

To say that "a great part of these dead bodies "possibly may have undergone variety of changes, "and entered into other concretions, even in the "bodies of other men," is to me no objection against the raising of the same body, if God hath engaged so to do; for then, as he is able, so is his providence concerned to prevent the entering of one body so into the concretion of another, as to hinder it from being the same body when raised, as it was when laid down in the sea, or grave; and I know what he hath promised he is able to perform.

Lastly, Even the phrase, the resurrection of the dead (s), and especially the resurrection ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead, used, Col. 1. 18. Rev. 1. 5. where Christ is styled the first-born of those that arise from the dead, prove this: for the proper notion of a resurrection consists in this, that it is a substantial change, by which that which was before, and died, or was corrupted, is reproduced the same thing again. I call it a change of that which died, or was corrupted disjunctively, because in the resurrection of our Lord, and of Lazarus, and others, whom he raised from the dead, the body was not corrupted. Hence it follows,

1*st*, That the soul which is immortal and incorruptible, cannot be said to rise again, resurrection implying a reproduction; whereas that which, after it was, never ceased to be what it was, cannot be reproduced; and so the (t) resurrection of the dead can only signify the resurrection of the bodies of the dead, with the reunion of them to thoſe ſouls to which they were before united, which makes this reſurrection advance into a reſurrection of life. And ſeeing that which never fell cannot be ſaid to be raiſed up, that which did never die cannot be reſtored from death; men cannot properly be ſaid to riſe again from the dead, but in reſpect to that part, or that ſtate which had fallen, and was dead. And as for a man to be born at firſt, ſignifies the production and union of the eſſential parts of an individual man, his body and his ſoul; ſo to be born again, or born from the dead, implies the reſtitution and reunion of his body and his ſoul; a man only by that becoming the ſame entire perſon which he was before. Seeing therefore it is acknowledged, that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed, yea, that there can be nothing plainer than that in the ſcripture it is revealed, that the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed, and appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, to anſwer for what they have done in the body; and the ſame perſon cannot be raiſed without the raiſing of his body to be united to his ſoul, much leſs be raiſed from the dead, without raiſing that of him which was dead, which only was his own, and not another body, which before was not part of him, it follows, that if the ſame perſons be raiſed from the dead, that of them which was dead, or their own bodies, muſt be raiſed; and ſo the meaning of the ſcripture, when it ſaith, the ſame perſons ſhall be raiſed, muſt be this, that their bodies, ſeparated from their ſouls by death, ſhall be raiſed from the dead.

Moreover, by ſaying that the reſurrection is only of that which died, or was corrupted, it appears, that I, with the ancients, only aſſert the reſurrection of that body which died, or was corrupted, and am not in the leaſt concerned for any changes that it underwent before; and ſo the ſcripture forces me to ſpeak, when it ſtyles the reſurrection, the quickening the dead; the vivification of our mortal bodies; the raiſing of thoſe bodies which were ſown in corruption; the coming forth of them which were in their graves; the awakening them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth; and ſaith, that then the ſea, death, and hades, ſhall give up their dead, allowing a reſurrection only to them that ſhall then be dead, and ſaying only of them that ſhall be found alive, they ſhall be changed. And if this only be the true ſenſe of the ſcripture in this matter, and this only the reſurrection there intended, it cannot be concerned in the leaſt, in what the philoſophers ſay, touching the change the body undergoes whilſt living, though I am far from thinking, that to the raiſing of the ſame bodies, it can be requiſite that theſe bodies ſhould be "made up wholly of the "ſame particles, which were once vitally united "to their ſouls in their former life, without the "mixture of any other particle of matter;" for were this neceſſary to the ſame living body, we could not have the ſame bodies for a day; and if it be not neceſſary to make the body continue ſtill the ſame while we live, it cannot be neceſſary to make the raiſed body the ſame with that which died.

That which here ſeems to me of greateſt moment to be conſidered, is this, That the dead being raiſed, that they may be judged according to their works, Rev. 20. 12. and that every one may receive τὰ διὰ τοῦ σώματος, the things done by the body, as the inſtrument of the ſoul, it is only requiſite that the dying body, which is to be raiſed to the reſurrection of condemnation, ſhould be then united to a ſoul, ſentenced hereafter to condemnation for the evils done whilſt in the body, and by the body as its inſtrument, and not repented of, and reformed, before its ſeparation from the body. And that the body ſhould be raiſed to the reſurrection of life, it is only requiſite that ſome time or other before its death, it ſhould have been united to a ſoul that truly repented of all its paſt ſins, and did from thenceforward do that which was lawful and right, whilſt they were thus united. Now, ſeeing this is the ſtate of all bodies which ariſe to the reſurrection of life, or of condemnation, it is only neceſſary to this laſt reſurrection, that it ſhould be the raiſing the bodies of men dying in their ſins, as in my hypotheſis it is; and that the bodies raiſed to the reſurrection of life, ſhould be the bodies of men dying in the favour of God; it is therefore only neceſſary their dying bodies ſhould ariſe. And now the argument ariſing from theſe ſcriptures, which teach that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, and ſo of their dead bodies, that every one may receive according to what he hath done in, or by the body, will run thus:

Either the body is to be raiſed, and reunited to the ſoul, to receive rewards or puniſhments with it, or to be the inſtrument by which the ſoul ſhall be rewarded or puniſhed, or it is not; if not to any of theſe ends, why is it raiſed at all? Why do good men, by the direction of the Holy Spirit, expect the reſurrection of the body? Or why is it propounded as their great encouragement, to be ſtedfaſt, immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord? 1 Cor. 15. 58. 1 Theſſ. 4. 18.; and as a comfort to them that mourn for the dead? Why are the wicked to be puniſhed with everlaſting fire, or ſaid to go away after the reſurrection into eternal puniſhment? Matth. 25. 41. 46.; or why doth our Saviour require us, not to fear them who can kill the body, but can do no more, in compariſon of him who can deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell-fire? Matth. 10. 28.; and ſay, that it is better one of thy members perish, than that thy whole body should be cast into hell-fire? Matth. 5. 29. 30. If it be to be raised for these ends, it is necessary the same body should be raised which sinned with, or was the instrument of the soul in doing good or evil, it being absurd to think, that one body should sin, another should be punished for it; or that one body should suffer, another should be crowned for it: and, for any thing I can discern to the contrary, we might as well appear before Christ's judgment-seat without any body at all, as without that which we deposited. Let it now be remembered, that the body in which the impenitent is to suffer, is only the same body which was laid down in the grave, and then the arguments usually offered to invalidate his suffering in his own body, or in the same body in which he sinned, will be almost as strong to excuse a murderer from suffering in his body for a murder committed twenty years ago, as to the purposes they are used in this case: nay, I have met with nothing said in this affair, which does not prove as strongly that the body of our blessed Lord, born of the virgin Mary, after he had sucked and digested that milk into chyle, was not the same body which was born of the Virgin, as not having all the same individual particles, and then when he grew in stature, he grew into another body, and so into a body which came not from the loins of Abraham, and was not of the seed of David according to the flesh; and that when the Jews destroyed his body, they destroyed not that body of which he spake, when he said, Destroy this body, because the body they destroyed had by perspiration lost, and by nutrition gained many particles.

§ 10. I come now to answer the objections against this article, viz. "The appellation the apostle "bestows on him that enters into this inquiry, Whether the dead shall have the very same bodies, or no? seems not much to encourage him in that "inquiry; nor will he, by the remainder of St "Paul's answer, find the determination of the a-"postle to be much in favour of the very same bo-"dy, unless the being told, that the body sown, "is not the body that shall be; that the body raised "is as different from that which was laid down, as "the flesh of a man is from the flesh of beasts, "fishes, and birds; or as the Sun, moon, and stars, "are different from one another; or as different "as a corruptible, weak, natural, mortal body is "from an incorruptible, powerful, spiritual, im-"mortal body; and, lastly, as a body that is flesh "and blood, is from a body that is not flesh and "blood; for flesh and blood cannot, says St Paul in "this very place, inherit the kingdom of God; un-"less, I say, all this, which is contained in St Paul's "words, can be supposed to be the way to deliver "this as an article of faith, which is required to "be believed of every one." Now, to this I answer,

1*st*, That it seems to me a great mistake, to say, the apostle, in that appellation, thou fool, reflects upon him that inquires, whether the same body which was dead shall be raised or no? He had already entirely dispatched that question against those philosophers, who said (u) there is no resurrection, ver. 12. and that the resurrection of the body was a thing impossible, ver. 35. He begins the inquiry, not about the truth of the resurrection, but about the manner in which it shall be made, and the qualities which the raised bodies should have, asking the question of (x) philosophers, ποίῳ σώματι, with what kind of bodies, or with what qualified bodies do they come? For they conceiving that the body was the prison of the soul, and that it was her punishment to be tied to it, thought we could not be truly happy till by death we were delivered from it; they therefore judged it an unjust and an unworthy thing, for God to raise these bodies to be united to the souls of good men; and therefore Celsus saith, the hope of the resurrection of the flesh is "the hope of worms, "a filthy and abominable thing, and so a thing "which God neither will nor can do." See all this proved from their own words in the note upon this verse. Now, to this objection the apostle returns a full and satisfactory answer, by shewing the happy change which will then pass upon the raised body, and the (y) excellent qualities it shall then have, and which were wanting to it, whilst it was on earth.

2*dly*, When the apostle adds, ver. 37. That which thou sowest (when thou sowest it) is not that body which shall be (again produced), but bare (or naked) grain; it is evident he speaketh there not of the body of man, but of the body of wheat, or of some other

(x) Utrum sine corpore, an cum corporibus? et corporibus quibus, ipsisne? an innovatis resurgatur? Cecil. apud Min. p. 11.

other grain, and is there ſtill purſuing the ſame queſtion, With what kind of bodies do they come? Anſwering, as it was common with the Jews to do, by this very ſimilitude to a like queſtion among them, viz. (z) Whether the body ſhould ariſe naked or clothed upon? And therefore ſaith, Thou ſoweſt not the body which ſhall be, i. e. a body clothed with a ſhell, as in peaſe, beans, and lentiles; or with an hull or chaff, as in wheat, rye, barley; but γυμνὸν κόκκον, naked grain, whereas God raiſeth it up clothed: And ſo, ſaith he, will it be with our bodies at the reſurrection; they will not be raiſed γυμνὰ, naked, but ἐνδεδυμένα, clothed upon, for this corruptible body muſt put on incorruption, 2 Cor. 5. 2. 3. 4. This being then the whole intendment of this ſimilitude, it ought not to be urged any further.

3*dly*, The ſame is evidently the apoſtle's purpoſe in the following verſes, which in ſenſe run thus:

Ver. 39. (And as) all fleſh is not the ſame (manner or kind of) fleſh, but there is one kind of fleſh of men, another (kind of) fleſh of beaſts, another of fiſhes, and another of birds.

Ver. 40. (And as there is a like difference in the qualities of bodies, for) there are alſo celeſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial; but the glory of the celeſtial is one, and the glory of the terreſtrial is another.

Ver. 41. (And as in the celeſtial bodies), there is one glory of the ſun, and another of the moon, and another of the ſtars (among themſelves); for one ſtar differeth from another ſtar in glory:

Ver. 42. So alſo is (it as to) the reſurrection of the dead, (the body raiſed being in qualities much different from the body we now have; for) it is ſown in corruption, (frail, mortal, ſubject to putrefaction), it is raiſed in incorruption, &c. Now, from the words thus paraphraſed, let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That the apoſtle ſays not, That the body raiſed is as different from that which is laid down, as the fleſh of man is from the fleſh of beaſts, fiſhes, and birds, or as the ſun, moon, and ſtars are different from one another; but only as the fleſh of men differs in qualities from that of beaſts, fiſhes, and birds, and as the ſun, moon, and ſtars differ in their glorious qualities from one another; ſo do our raiſed bodies differ in quality from thoſe earthly bodies we at preſent have; as is evident from the enſuing words, in which he mentions this difference betwixt them in qualities. Note,

2*dly*, That in the inſtances of fleſh of man and beaſts, and of celeſtial and terreſtrial bodies, and of celeſtial bodies among themſelves, here uſed by the apoſtle, there is not only a difference as to qualities, but alſo as to the ſubject-matter, that being in them only ſpecifically, but not numerically the ſame; whereas it is not ſo as to our bodies ſown and raiſed, they differing only as to the qualities from the body ſown, but not as to the ſubject-matter, it being this corruptible body which muſt put on incorruption. As therefore the different qualities of divers ſouls good and bad, learned and unlearned, made glorious and miſerable, infer a difference in ſubſtance, becauſe the ſubject of thoſe qualities is not the ſame; but when the ſame ſoul becomes virtuous and learned, all this new ornament of grace and knowledge, and even its advancement to a ſtate of perfect happineſs and glory, makes it not ceaſe to be the ſame ſoul ſtill: So it is here as to the difference of glorious qualities the raiſed body hath above the body ſown. I therefore,

3*dly*, Grant that the raiſed body is as different from the earthly body we at preſent have, as a corruptible, weak, natural, mortal body, is from an incorruptible, powerful, ſpiritual, immortal body: but then the ſubject of theſe different qualities being ſtill the ſame, this difference hinders not its being the ſame body ſtill; ſince otherwiſe Chriſt's body being alſo raiſed an incorruptible, powerful, immortal body, could not be the ſame with that in which he ſuffered; and if his body is ſtill the ſame that ſuffered and was raiſed from the dead, then a like change of our vile bodies will not hinder their being ſtill the ſame.

But it is ſtill objected, That "the body raiſed is "as different from the bodies we at preſent have, "and lay down in the grave, as a body that is "fleſh and blood, is from a body that is not fleſh "and blood; for fleſh and blood, ſaith St Paul, can- "not inherit the kingdom of God."

Anſwer. To this I anſwer, (1.) ab abſurdo, That if even this hinder the body raiſed from being the ſame body, our Saviour cannot now have the ſame body with that which he ſuffered in, or which was raiſed from the dead; for doubtleſs he is entered into, and doth inherit the kingdom of God: If therefore fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, and the body which hath not fleſh and blood cannot be the ſame body with that which hath fleſh and blood; our Saviour's glorified body cannot be the ſame body which was raiſed from the dead, or in which he ſuffered.

2*dly*, I anſwer, That fleſh and blood doth in the ſcripture-language denote the weakneſs and the frailty of that which is compounded of them, as when it is ſaid, We wreſtle not with fleſh and blood, i. e. weak, frail men, Eph. 6. 12. See Matth. 16. 17.

(z) Pirk. Eliez. c. 33. p. 80.

Gal.

17. Gal. 1. 16. Heb. 2. 14. Eccl. 14. 18. And thus it is true that flesh and blood, that is, such weak, frail bodies, as they are, which here consist of flesh and blood, unchanged into incorruptible bodies, or unclothed upon with their celestial bodies, which will keep them from mortality, or a possibility of corruption, ver. 48. 49. 2 Cor. 5. 1. 2. cannot inherit the kingdom of God: And therefore the apostle adds, That this mortal must put on immortality, this corruptible put on incorruption, and so it shall be changed, as to its qualities: But then I have shewed, that this change from mortal and corruptible, to an immortal and incorruptible body, hinders not its being still the same body, that is, the same in substance as it was before.

3*dly*, I think it is evident from the apostle's words, that the bodies of good men, then living, shall have the same qualities with the bodies of them who are raised from the dead, for they also shall inherit the kingdom of God, they shall have spiritual, powerful, immortal bodies; their bodies, saith he, shall be changed, for this corruptible must put on incorruption: And yet can it be thought that this change shall amount to the destruction of that body they then had, and the production of another body, as it must do, if they cease to have the same body which they had before this change? If it do not, it is hence evident, that the body may be still the same body, notwithstanding the great change which shall then pass upon it.

In a word, what the apostle says here, evidently concerns only the bodies of good men, and so gives us no cause to think the bodies of the wicked shall be changed at all; and if the wicked shall be raised with the same bodies to the resurrection of condemnation, why not the good with the same bodies to the resurrection of life?

ANNOTATIONS

First EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. PAUL called to be an apostle (or the called apostle) of Jesus Christ, through the will of God, and Sosthenes our brother.

2. Unto [a] the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, (or the saints called), [b] with all that in every place [c] call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, [d] (yea), both theirs and ours.

3. [e] Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

4. I thank my God always on your behalf [f] for the grace of God, which is given you by (or in) Jesus Christ.

5. That in every thing ye are (or have been) enriched by him, [g] in all utterance (of tongues), and in all knowledge (of divine mysteries, or in the gift of prophecy, 1 Cor. 14.).

6. [h] Even as (by these gifts) the testimony (we gave) of (or doctrine concerning) Christ was confirmed in you, (or established among you);

7. [i] So that ye come behind (the other churches) in no gift, waiting for the coming (or revelation) of our Lord Jesus Christ.

8. [k] Who shall confirm you to the end, that you may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9. (For) God is faithful, by whom ye were called to the fellowship (or communion) of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; (i.e. That God by whom ye are called, is faithful to perform his part, in preserving you blameless to that day, or to confer upon you the promised inheritance.)

10. Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you all speak the same thing, (owning and teaching the same doctrine, which you have received, 1 Cor. 11. 2. and 15. 1. Rom. 16. 17. in love and unity), and that there be no divisions (or schisms) among you; but (that) ye be perfectly joined [l] together in the same mind, and in the same judgment, (in the same belief, and in the same kind affections, one towards another.)

11. For it hath been declared to me of you, my brethren, by them that are of the house of Cloe, that there are contentions among you.

12. Now this I say, (or mean, by charging you with these contentions), that every one of you saith, (one) [m] I am (a follower) of Paul, and (another) I of Apollos, and (a third) I of Cephas, and (a fourth) I [n] of Christ.

13. (Why do not you all say the same thing? viz. I am of Christ, chap. 3. 23.) Is Christ divided? (was it one Christ that sent, and enabled Paul; another that sent Peter, to preach the gospel to you? Is not one and the same Christ preached to you by us all? Or is his body divided? 2 Cor. 11. 4.) Was Paul

(or

(or any other but Chriſt Jeſus) crucified for you? (that you ſhould be baptized into their death, as Chriſtians are into the death of Chriſt); or were you baptized in the name of Paul? (ſo as to be called the diſciples of Paul.)

14. I thank God, (whoſe providence ſo ordered it) that I baptized none of you, but Criſpus and Gaius:

15. Leſt any ſhould ſay that I had baptized in my own name.

16. And I baptized alſo the houſehold of Stephanas: Beſides, ° I know not whether I baptized any other.

17. For ᵖ Chriſt (when he called me) ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the goſpel (to the Gentiles, and that) not with wiſdom of words, leſt the croſs of Chriſt (i. e. the doctrine of Chriſt crucified) ſhould be made of none effect (by that means.)

18. For the preaching of the croſs (or of a crucified Jeſus in this plain manner) is (only) to them that periſh, (by rejecting it, becauſe not attended with this human wiſdom), fooliſhneſs; but unto us who are ſaved (by it) it is (evidently) the power of God; (we embracing this faith, becauſe it is confirmed by demonſtrations of the Spirit and power, chap. 2. 4.)

19. (Whereas the preaching of it in the words of human wiſdom, would render it of none effect): For it is written, I will deſtroy the wiſdom of the wiſe, and will bring to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent, (Iſ. 29. 14. as he hath already done; for)

20. ᵠ Where is (now the wiſdom of) the wiſe (philoſophers among the Gentiles?) where is (the wiſdom of) the ſcribe (the interpreter of the law, or teacher of traditions among the Jews?) where is the diſputer of this world, (or the ſearcher into the ſecrets of nature, or into the ſenſe of the ſcripture?) Hath not God (by this diſpenſation) made (or declared to be) fooliſh the wiſdom of this world?

21. ʳ For (to begin with the philoſophers) ˢ after that in the wiſdom of God, (diſcernible in his works of creation and providence), the world by (all its) wiſdom knew not (the true) God, (ſo as to glorify him as God, and to be thankful to him for his bleſſings, Rom. 1. 21.), it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching, (as they think fit to ſtyle it), to ſave them that believe (in a crucified Jeſus, thus preached to them.)

22. (Which ſalvation thus tendered, the wiſe men of the world, and the Jewiſh doctors will not accept): For the Jews require ᵗ a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after (profound) wiſdom (to induce them to believe.)

23. But (or nevertheleſs) we preach Chriſt crucified, (though his crucifixion be) ᵘ unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and ˣ to the Greeks fooliſhneſs.

24. (For this he is to infidels only): But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, (he is) Chriſt the power of God, (in the ſigns and wonders which are wrought by faith in Chriſt for confirmation of this doctrine, and ſo he gives the ſign the Jews require); and the wiſdom of God, (in the manifold and divine wiſdom diſcovered in this diſpenſation for the ſaving loſt man, ver. 30. and ſo anſwers the Greeks requeſt for wiſdom.)

25. (I ſay, the power and the wiſdom of God); becauſe the fooliſhneſs of God (i. e. the way of God, which is eſteemed fooliſhneſs by the Greeks) is wiſer than (all the wiſdom of) men, (and much to be preferred before it); and the weakneſs of God (i. e. that way of propagating man's ſalvation, which is weak in their eyes) is ſtronger than (the power of) men: (For the weapons of our warfare are mighty through God to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, and confounding all the ſtrength, policy, and wiſdom of the world oppoſed againſt it, 2 Cor. 10. 3. 4.)

26. For you ſee (Gr. look upon) your calling, brethren, (and you will diſcern), how (agreeably to theſe things the divine wiſdom hath ſo ordered it) that ʸ not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are (either) called (by, or made uſe of to propagate the goſpel.)

27. But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, (that ſimple way of inſtructing mankind, which they call fooliſhneſs, and thoſe unlearned apoſtles whom they repreſent as fools), to confound the wiſe (philoſophers, ſo that they ſhall not be able to gainſay, or reſiſt the wiſdom with which they ſpeak, Acts 6. 10. Luke 21. 15.) And God hath choſen the weak things of the world, (unarmed fiſhermen, tent-makers, aſſiſted with no human force), to confound the things that are mighty; (to break through all the oppoſition that the kings and rulers of the world do make againſt them, to pull down the ſtrong holds, caſt down the reaſonings, level the heights of the philoſophers, who do exalt themſelves againſt the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 10. 4. 5.)

28. And (he hath choſen the) baſe things of the world, ᶻ and things which are deſpiſed hath God choſen, yea, and things which are not, (i. e. the Gentiles who are eſteemed baſe, and looked upon as nothing by the Jews), to bring to nought (Gr. to aboliſh) things that are; (to become God's church and people, and ſo to cauſe the Jewiſh church and œconomy to ceaſe, Rom. 11. 15. 17. Philip. 3. 3.)

29. That no fleſh ſhould (have cauſe to) glory in his preſence, (either of their wiſdom, birth, or privileges.)

30. Not you who are advanced to this happy ſtate;) for of him are you in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us ᵃ wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption.

31. That according as it is written, (Iſ. 65. 16. viz.), He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord; (ſo it may be done by us Chriſtians.)

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 2. [a] Τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ τοῦ Θεοῦ, the church of God.] The ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus, the ſaints called, ſeem here to be words of the ſame import, denoting ſuch as are called out of the world, and ſeparated from others, through faith in Chriſt, to be a peculiar people to God, as the Jews were before: All Chriſtians being by virtue of this calling a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, 1 Pet. 2. 9.; though many members of the church of Corinth, and of other churches, wanted the inward ſanctification of the Holy Spirit. So that the word ſaints, in many places of the Acts, and the Epiſtles, is as large as the word Chriſtians, and ſtands oppoſed, not to the unſound Chriſtians, but to the Heathen world, Acts 9. 13. 32. 41. and 26. 10. 1 Cor. 6. 1. 2. See here 1 Cor. 14. 33. and 16. 1. 15. 2 Cor. 8. 4. and 9. 1. 12. and 13. 13.

Ibid. [b] With all that in every place.] Hence it appears that St Paul's epiſtles, though occaſionally written and directed to particular churches, were deſigned for the uſe of all Chriſtians.

Ibid. [c] Τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις ὄνομα Κυρίου, that call upon the name of the Lord Jeſus.] This in the New Teſtament is the character of a Chriſtian, that he is one that calleth on this name, Acts 9. 14. 21. and 22. 16. Rom. 10. 12. 13. 2 Tim. 2. 22.; and that theſe words ought not to be rendered paſſively, viz. all that are called by the name of Chriſt, is evident from the Septuagint, who ſtill tranſlate the phraſe, יקרא בשם, which is active, by ἐπικαλέσεται ἐν ὀνόματι Θεοῦ, or ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, i. e. he ſhall call on the name of the Lord. See Gen. 4. 26. and 12. 8. and 13. 4. and 21. 33. and 25. 25. Pſal. 79. 6. and 99. 6. and 116. 4. Iſ. 65. 1. Lam. 3. 55. Zech. 13. 9.: but when the phraſe runs thus, שם־ נקרא, that is, Thy name is called upon us, or we are called by thy name; it is rendered thus, τὸ ὄνομά σε ἐπικέκληται ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, Deut. 28. 10. 1 Kings 8. 43. 2 Chron. 7. 14. Iſ. 4. 1. and 63. 19. Jer. 14. 9. and 15. 16. Dan. 9. 18. 19. Amos 9. 12. See the note on Acts 9. 2. and 22. 16.

2*dly*, We are expreſsly told, that the diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians at Antioch, Acts 11. 26. Now, before this time, we find not only Stephen ἐπικαλούμενον, calling upon this name, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus, receive my ſpirit, Acts 7. 59. and St Paul bid to waſh away his ſins, calling upon the name of the Lord, or ἐπικαλούμενος τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, Acts 22. 16. but we find this to have been the character of a diſciple, or a convert to the faith of Chriſt, that he was one that called upon the name of the Lord. Thus Ananias ſpeaks to the Lord Jeſus of St Paul, He is one who hath received power from the high prieſt, to bind τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομά σου, all that call upon thy name, Acts 9. 14.; and of St Paul converted, it is ſaid, that he had deſtroyed τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, them that called upon this name in Jeruſalem, ver. 21.

3*dly*, The Reverend Dr Hammond, who here tranſlates this phraſe paſſively, doth elſewhere tranſlate it actively, the context forcing him ſo to do. So Rom. 10. 13. Whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, i. e. pray and adhere to Chriſt, ſhall be ſaved; and Acts 9. 14. He hath authority to bind all that call upon thy name, i. e. ſaith he, that publicly own the worſhip of Chriſt, Acts 22. 16.

Ibid. [d] Yea, both theirs and ours.] All the Greek interpreters, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, obſerve, that the words theirs and ours, are to be connected with the word Lord, τὸ δὲ αὐτῶν τε καὶ ἡμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ συνάπτεσθαι; and ſo the ſenſe is this, The Lord, I ſay, both of me who writ, and you to whom I write.

Ver. 3. [e] Χάρις ὑμῖν, &c.] It is unadviſedly ſaid by ſome, that this is a wiſh, and not a prayer. The full import of the phraſe is, as St Peter, 2 Pet. 1. 2. and St Jude ver. 2. and (a) Polycarp do cite it, viz. Grace and peace be multiplied to you from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Now, is not this to deſire for them grace and peace from God the Father, and conſequently to pray for it? Why therefore is it not alſo to deſire the ſame bleſſings from God the Son? Are they not both the givers of grace and peace to the church? Doth not Chriſt know all the neceſſities of his church in this kind? Doth not he who ſearcheth the heart and reins, Rev. 2. 24. know the deſires of his ſervants? And why then ſhould they only wiſh theſe things from I know not whom, and not pray to him who is the giver of grace and peace for them? Eſpecially when they have St Paul's example for it in theſe words, For this thing I beſought the Lord Chriſt thrice; and he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee, 2 Cor. 12. 8. 9. 10.; and again, The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, who hath loved us, and given us eternal conſolation, and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts, and confirm you in every good word and work, 2 Theſſ. 2. 16. 1 Theſſ. 3. 11. 12.

Ver. 4. [f] Ἐπὶ τῇ χάριτι τοῦ Θεοῦ, For the grace of God.] Here the context ſeems to reſtrain this phraſe to the favour of God ſhewed to the Corinthians, in vouchſafing theſe ſpiritual gifts, which is a frequent import of this phraſe in ſcripture. So Rom. 12. 6. Having gifts differing according to the grace of God that is given to us; whether prophecy, let us propheſy according to the proportion of faith, &c. Eph. 4. 7. 8. To every one of us is given grace according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Wherefore he ſaith, When he aſcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men, 1 Pet. 4. 10. As every one hath received the gift, ſo miniſter the ſame one to another, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God, 2 Cor. 1. 12. Not in fleſhly wiſdom, but by the grace of God we have had our converſation in the world, and more abundantly to you wards; our preaching to you being not in the words of human wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and in power, 1 Cor. 2. 4. Thus, to ſing with grace in the heart, Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16. is, ſay the ancients (b), to ſing uſing the ſpiritual gift vouchſafed to them by the Holy Ghoſt. Which interpretation is confirmed from the ſpiritual pſalms, hymns, and ſongs there mentioned. See 1 Cor. 14. 15. Eph. 6. 18. And this is very ſuitable to the language of the Jews, who, when the Hebrew mentions Chen, grace, do render it the ſpirit of prophecy. So Pſal. 45. 2. Grace is poured into thy lips. Datus eſt ſpiritus prophetiæ in labiis tuis, ſaith the Chaldee.

Ver. 5. [e] Ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ.] Eſthius ſaith, this ought not to be interpreted of the gift of tongues, becauſe λόγος, in ſcripture, never bears that ſenſe. But, 1. it is certain from ver. 7. that it is χάρισμα, a gift; and it is joined with faith and knowledge, which are gifts, 2 Cor. 8. 7. and cannot well be referred to any other gift vouchſafed then to the church And, 2. the word γνῶσις, relating to prophecy, or the knowledge of myſteries, was uſually attended with the gift of tongues. See Acts 19. 6. and though we find not the word λόγος abſolutely put in this ſenſe; yet λόγος σοφίας, the word of wiſdom, and λόγος γνώσεως, the word of knowledge, are reckoned among ſpiritual gifts, 1 Cor. 12. 8. All this indeed with Mr le Clerc paſſes for mere niceties; and he ſaith, It is "more "natural to underſtand by λόγος, the knowledge of "religion," though that, as he confeſſes, "is the "import of the following word, γνῶσις, knowledge;" ſo that, according to this expoſition, the apoſtle thanks God, here, and 2 Cor. 8. 7. commends them for abounding in the knowledge, and in the knowledge of religion. Beſides, the knowledge of religion cannot be called grace in the ſenſe given of that phraſe, ver. 4.; nor was the teſtimony of Chriſt confirmed to the Corinthians, ver. 6. by that, but by the gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Ver. 6. [f] Καθὼς, even as.] This particle ſignifies ſometimes, when, as Acts 7. 17. καθὼς δὲ ἤγγιζεν ὁ χρόνος, but when the time drew nigh.

Ver. 7. 8. [i] From theſe three verſes it is to be obſerved, 1*ſt*, That the Corinthians were abundantly repleniſhed with the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, the gifts of tongues and knowledge, ver 5. that they came behind the other churches in no gift, ver. 7.

2*dly*, That they obtained theſe gifts by Jeſus Chriſt, and through faith in him, ver 4.

3*dly*, That by theſe, the doctrine of Chriſt, the teſtimony of the apoſtles concerning him, That he was raiſed from the dead, and become the author of ſalvation to them that believe, was confirmed to them, ver. 6.

4*thly*, That by theſe gifts, and by this earneſt of the Spirit, they had encouragement to expect, or wait for the ſecond coming of the Lord.

Ver. 8. [k] Βεβαιώσει ὑμᾶς, who ſhall alſo confirm you to the end, &c.] Theſe words are by the ancients thus interpreted, viz. who, in that day of the Lord Jeſus, which you expect, will confirm you for ever blameleſs. And this is ſuitable to his prayer, that Chriſtians may be unblameable in the day of the Lord, Phil. 1. 9. 10. 1 Theſſ. 3. 12. 13. and 5. 23. For, ſay they, God is faithful who hath promiſed to them that obey the goſpel υἱοθεσίαν, the adoption, that is, the redemption of the body, Rom. 8. 23. or that they ſhall be partakers of that kingdom and glory to which he hath called them, 1 Theſſ. 2. 12. Others thus, He will do all that is requiſite on his part, (c) quod ſuarum eſt partium, to render you unblameable to the end; ſo that you ſhall not fail of it through any want of divine grace neceſſary to that end, or any unfaithfulneſs on God's part to his promiſe, who hath already reconciled you to himſelf, through the death of Chriſt, to preſent you holy, and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight; if you continue in the faith grounded and ſettled, and be not moved away from the hope of the goſpel, Col. 1. 21. 22. 23. See Philip. 1. 6. Heb. 3. 6. 14. That the apoſtle ſpeaks not here of any promiſe of perſeverance made to the elect only among the Corinthians, is evident, (1.) Becauſe he plainly ſpeaks to the whole body of the church, to the church of God which was in Corinth, to all that call upon the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And (2.) he ſpeaks not only of their being preſerved from falling away finally; but of their being preſerved unblameable; whereas it is certain, the elect are not always ſo preſerved.

Ver. 10. [l] Ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοΐ, That ye be perfectly joined in the ſame mind and judgment.] (d) This can be no further the matter of an exhortation than it is in our power to obey it; ſeeing then it is not in any man's power to change his ſettled judgment, or to think otherwiſe upon our intreaty, becauſe our exhortation gives no conviction to the underſtanding,

(d) Hoc ad affectus animi refertur. Sic γνώμη ſumitur, Apoc. 17. 13. 2 Macc. 9. 20. Grot

ing, it follows, that this exhortation must only be to do what was in the power of the Corinthians, viz. 1. To prevail with them to lay aside their strife, envy, and divisions, 1 Cor. 3. 3. and the sad consequents of them, debate, wrath, backbiting, whispering, swelling, tumult, 2 Cor. 12. 20.; and to this the reason of this exhortation leads, Be of one mind and judgment; for I hear there be contentions among you, ver. 11. And (2.) to engage them unanimously to own the doctrine they had received, and he had preached to them, 1 Cor. 15. 1. which, if they were so minded, might easily be done, since they so lately had received it, the heads of it were so few, 1 Cor. 15. 3. and it was so easy for them to consult the apostle in their doubtings of the sense of what he had delivered. But at this distance of time from the first discovery of the Christian faith, and after it is become a system of very many, and those disputable opinions, for the truth of which we have now no apostle, no living and infallible judge of controversies, to consult, if it be not sufficient to preserve unity in the church, that men heartily believe all the articles of the apostles creed, which are plainly delivered in scripture, and live peaceably and quietly together, following after peace and charity with all that call upon the Lord Jesus out of a pure heart, 2 Tim. 2. 22. and avoiding any separations from their brethren, where nothing sinful is injoined to be believed or done, to hold communion with them, I doubt there will be little union in the church of God.

Ver. 12. ⁿ Ἐγὼ μὲν Παύλου, I am of Paul, &c.] Of the Gentile part of the church of Corinth, some preferred St Paul, as being their spiritual father, who in Christ Jesus had begotten them through the gospel, 1 Cor. 4. 14. 15.; others preferred Apollos, as being an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, Acts 18. 24.; the Jewish Christians preferring St Peter as the chief apostle of the circumcision out of the territories of Judea. That this is here said, not by a fiction of names or persons, under which the apostle taxed the heads of the sects among the Corinthians; but that they really divided upon these accounts, is evident, first, from St Paul's thanking God that he baptized so few of them, lest they should have occasion to say, he baptized in his own name, and so made disciples to himself: Secondly, from these words, Let no man glory in men; for all are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, chap. 3. 21. 22.

Ibid. ⁿ I am of Christ.] (e) Epiphanius observes of the Ebionites, that they pleaded for the circumcision of Christians, from the example of Christ, who was circumcised, because the disciple was to be as his master; and so the import of these words may be this. Others say, I am for the circumcision of the Gentiles, that they may be like Christ.

Ver. 16. ᵒ Οὐκ οἶδα, I know not.] Therefore his inspiration, or divine assistance in writing his epistles, did not reach to an information in such things as these, but only to direct him in all to the truth he was to teach unto the churches. See chap. 16. 7. 1 Pet. 5. 12.

Ver. 17. ᵖ Οὐ γὰρ ἀπέστειλέ με Χριστὸς βαπτίζειν, Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach, &c.] i. e. When he appeared himself, and after sent Ananias to him, he expressly sent him to preach to the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. and 26. 16. 17. to bear his name before the Gentiles, Acts 9. 15. to be the witness of his resurrection, Acts 22. 15. But in that threefold rehearsal of his commission, there is no mention made of his being sent to baptize; nor was it needful, after the general commission given to Christ's apostles for that end, Matth. 28. 19. That was not, say the Greek expositors, his great business; for (f) to baptize is easy to any who is admitted to sacred orders; but to preach the gospel requires a divine revelation, and great assistance of the power of God. Hence Peter himself preaches to Cornelius and his kinsmen, but commands them to be baptized by others, Acts 10. 48. And this gospel he sent me to preach (not with the wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect): Men not ascribing the prevailing of it to the power of God, but to the persuasion of human wisdom; God not approving, ver. 19. and therefore not assisting the preaching of the gospel in that way. Ἴσως γάρ, εἰ καλλιφωνίᾳ καὶ ὑπερβολῇ λόγου πεισθήσονται ἂν τινες ὑπὸ τῶν ἀλλήλων κατηχούμενοι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐμφαινομένην ἀκολουθίαν, καὶ τὸ τῆς πίστεως καλλιφωνίᾳ ἐψυχαγωγεῖσθαι τοὺς ἀκροωμένους. Orig. Philocal. p. 25.

Ver. 20. ᵠ Πῦ σοφός;] That is, What hath been done by the wisdom of the philosophers, or by the Jewish doctors, or by the searcher into nature's secrets, to bring men to the true knowledge of God, and of his will? Hath not God discovered their wisdom to be but folly, in comparison of this way which he hath chosen to bring men to the knowledge of himself? The disputer of this world is by St Jerom rendered, Causarum naturalium scrutator, Com. in Gal. 3. and so the naturalists are styled by the Jews, רבני המקר, (g) Sapientes scrutationis, the searchers into the secrets of nature; though I conceive the apostle here doth rather understand the Midrashim, or the diſputers in the Jewiſh ſchools and academies, touching their traditions, That the σοφὸς, i. e. the wiſe men mentioned here, refers not to the Cochmin, or wiſe men of the Jews, but to the philoſophers among the Gentiles, is evident, for that the wiſdom of the wiſe, ver. 19. is the wiſdom of the Heathen world, appears from ver. 21. where it is ſaid, The world through wiſdom knew not God, which is true only of the Gentiles, not of the Jews. 'Tis therefore reaſonable to conceive the wiſe, in the 20th verſe, ſhould ſignify the ſame perſons. So doth St Paul interpret the wiſe in theſe words, I am a debtor to the Greek, and to the barbarian, to the wiſe and the unwiſe, Rom. 1. 14. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret (h), Oecumenius, Theophylact, upon the place, ſaying that by the wiſe, the apoſtle underſtands the man adorned with the verboſity and eloquence of the Greeks. I have not been ſolicitous to ſhew the agreement of the words of St Paul here with thoſe of Iſaiah, chap. 33. 18. becauſe I find not that Paul intendeth here to cite them.

Ver. 21. [r] Here two things are to be learned, 1. That from the creation, beauty, order, and grandeur of the world, and the direction of all things in it to an end, and the fitting them with parts and inſtruments adapted beſt to the obtaining that end, it might be known that the creator of the world was God alone, and ſo was only to be glorified as God, Pſal. 19. 1. 2. Rom. 1. 19. 20. Pſal. 104. 24. and 136. 5. Jer. 10. 12. and 51. 15. 2. That the goſpel was ſent into the world, that they who did not know the true God acceptably by the light of nature, might do it by the light of that revelation, which made ſuch a bright and glorious manifeſtation of the power, wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs of God, which they whom Satan had not blinded muſt diſcern, 2 Cor. 4. 4.

Ver. 21. [s] Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ 22. ἐπειδὴ καὶ.] The argument here ſeems to lie thus. The wiſe men among the Greeks, the ſcribe or interpreter of ſcripture among the Jews, are by this diſpenſation convinced of folly, and inſufficiency to give men the knowledge of ſaving truth; ἐπειδὴ γὰρ, for ſince the world by all its wiſdom could not obtain the right knowledge of God, he by this diſpenſation hath given this ſaving knowledge to believers. And ἐπειδὴ καὶ, ſeeing alſo the unbelieving Jews for confirmation of this doctrine require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after human wiſdom, who is on that account a ſcandal to thoſe Jews, and in the eſtimation of the unbelieving Greeks is fooliſhneſs; yet is he and his doctrine to the believing Greeks, Chriſt the wiſdom of God, they ſeeing in it wiſdom ſufficient to engage them to believe this doctrine; and to the believing Jews, the power of God, they being convinced of its truth by the ſigns wrought in confirmation of it: and with great reaſon do they ſo eſteem it; for what the unbelieving Greeks deem fooliſhneſs, hath more of ſound reaſon in it, than all the wiſdom of the Greeks, or thoſe who are accounted wiſe men by the Jews, have ſhewn; they who by them are deemed fools, having diſcovered that wiſdom of God in a myſtery, which they with all their wiſdom never knew; and that which they ſtyle weakneſs, is attended with ſuch a viſible power of God, as enables it, without human power or wiſdom, to prevail over all the ſtrength and wiſdom which Jew or Gentile can oppoſe againſt it.

Ver. 22. [t] Σημεῖον, a ſign.] From heaven, ſuch as was that of Moſes giving them bread from heaven, John 6. 30. 31. that in the time of Joſhua, when the ſun ſtood ſtill, chap. 10. 13. or of Elijah, who brought down fire from heaven to conſume the offering, 1 Kings 18. 38. and to conſume the captains and their fifties, 2 Kings 1. 10. 12. Luke 9. 54. the Son of man being to come in the clouds of heaven, as he did at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Dan. 7. 13. Matth. 24. 30. and to give ſigns from heaven, Joel 2. 30. as he did at the day of Pentecoſt, Acts 2. 2. and as God did by a voice from heaven at our Saviour's baptiſm, Matth. 3. 17. at his transfiguration, Matth. 17. 5. at his preaching, John 12. 28. 29.

Ver. 23. [u] Ἰουδαίοις μὲν σκάνδαλον, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block. "Your Jeſus," ſaith Trypho, "having by this fallen under the extremeſt curſe of "the law of God, we cannot ſufficiently admire "that you ſhould expect any good from God, who "place your hopes in a man that was crucified, ἐπ' "ἀνθρώπου ἐσταυρωμένου." Dial. cum Juſt. p. 227. 249. 317. And again, "We doubt of your Chriſt, who "was ſo ignominiouſly crucified; for our law ſtyles "every one that is crucified, accurſed. Hence by way of ignominy they ſtill call our Saviour Talui (i) ſuſpenſum, one hanged upon the tree.

Ibid. [x] To the Greeks fooliſhneſs.] "They count "us mad," ſaith Juſtin Martyr (k), "that after the "immutable and eternal God, the Father of all "things, we give the ſecond place ἀνθρώπῳ ἐσταυρωμένῳ, "to a man that was crucified. "It is wicked and a-"bominable," ſaith Celſus (l). "The wiſe men of "the world inſult over us," ſaith St Auſtin (m), "and aſk, Where is your underſtanding, who wor-"ſhip him for a God, who was crucified?" So M. Felix, pag. 9. Arnob. l. 1. p. 20. Lact. l. 4. c. 16. Euſeb. l. 3. de vita Conſt. c. 1.

Ver. 26.

Ver. 26. ῥ Οὐ πολλοὶ σοφοὶ, not many wise.] This seems to be spoken in a direct opposition to that celebrated maxim of the Jews, "That prophecy re-"sides not, but upon a wise, a strong, and a rich "man."

Ver. 28. ˢ Καὶ τὰ μὴ ὄντα, &c.] To confirm the explication of these words given in the paraphrase, let it be noted,

1. That the apostle, in this chapter, often speaks conjunctly of the Jew and Gentile, interweaving them together in his discourse. So ver. 20. he speaks of the wise men of the Greeks, and then of the Scribes among the Jews; ver. 22. of the Jews requiring signs, and the Greeks wisdom; of Christ crucified being to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Gentiles foolishness. So here, ver. 27. he seems to speak of the gospel preached by the apostles in a plain familiar way, and by them deemed weakness, and styled foolishness, as confounding all the wisdom and the power of the Greeks; and ver. 28. of the Gentile church succeeding and abolishing that of the Jews. Note therefore,

2. That the Jews looked upon themselves as the only ἰυγενῆς, persons of true nobility, as being of the stock of Abraham: "Even the poorest Israelite," saith R. Akibah, "is to be looked upon as a gentle-"man, as being the son of Abraham, Isaac, and "Jacob:" but the Gentiles they horribly despised, as the base people of the earth, not fit to be conversed with by them, they being in their law styled οὐκ ἔθνος, not a nation; λαὸς ὁ τιχθησόμενος, a people that shall be born, Psal. 22. 31.; ὁ κτιζόμενος, that shall be created in the generation to come, Psal. 102. 19. and so yet had no being, Deut. 31. 21. ὁ λαὸς, not a people, Hos. 1. 10.; and it being said by the prophet, that all the Heathens are as nothing, and were accounted as nothing, Is. 40. 17. they still accounted them as such. Hence Mordecai is introduced as praying thus, Lord, give not thy sceptre τοῖς μὴ οὖσι, to them that are not, Esther 4. 11.; and Esdras speaking to God thus, As for the people which also came of Adam, thou hast said they are nothing, but like unto spittle, and hast likened the abundance of them to a drop that falleth from a vessel. And now, O Lord, these Heathens, who have ever been reputed as nothing, have begun to be lords over us, 2 Esdras 6. 56. 57. Thus Abraham is said to be the father of the Gentiles, before that God who calleth things which are not as if they were (n), Rom. 4. 17.; and Clemens Romanus (o) saith of the Gentiles, "He called "us who were not, and would that of no being we "should have a being." So fitly are the Gentiles represented here by τὰ μὴ ὄντα, τὰ ἀγενῆ, τὰ ἐξουθενημένα, the things base, accounted as nothing, and the things which are not. See also 1 Cor. 6. 4. And this is the ancient exposition of Origen, who speaking of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, and God's provoking the Jews to jealousy by them that were not a nation, he confirms this from these words, God hath chosen the base things of the world, and the things which are not, that he might abolish the things which were before, that Israel according to the flesh might not glory before God (p).

Ver. 30. ᵗ Σοφία, &c. wisdom.] As being the author of that evangelical wisdom, which far excels the wisdom of the philosopher and scribe, and even that legal constitution which is called the wisdom of the Jews, Deut. 4. 6.; the author of justification, as procuring for us that remission of sins which the law could not give, Gal. 2. 21. and 3. 21.; the author of sanctification, as procuring for, and working in us, not only an external and relative holiness, as was that of the Jews, but ὁσιότητα τῆς ἀληθείας, true and internal holiness, Eph. 4. 24. wrought in us by the Holy Spirit; the author of redemption, not from the Egyptian bondage or Babylonish captivity, but from the servitude of Satan, the dominion of sin and death, and from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, or the redemption of the body, Rom. 8. 21. 23. They who say Christ is made our righteousness, by his righteousness imputed to us, have the same reason to say also, that he is made our wisdom, by his wisdom, and our sanctification, by his holiness imputed to us.

See a discourse concerning the imputation of Christ's perfect righteousness, or obedience to the law, to us for righteousness, or justification, at the end of this epistle.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. AND I, brethren, (have acted suitably to what I told you, that Christ sent me not to preach the gospel with wisdom of words, 1 Cor. 1. 17. for) when I came to you, (I) came not with excellency of speech, or of (human) wisdom, declaring to you ᵗ the testimony of God.

2. For

2. For I determined [b] not to know any thing among you, (i. e. to diſcover any other knowledge to you), ſave (that of) Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified.

3. And I was with you [c] in weakneſs, and [d] in fear, and in much trembling, (or in much fear and trembling.)

4. And my ſpeech, and my preaching, was not with enticing words of man's wiſdom, but [e] in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power; (the power of God confirming what I preached with ſigns and wonders, Rom. 15. 19. 2 Cor. 12. 12.)

5. That your faith ſhould not (ſeem to) ſtand in the wiſdom of man, but in the power of God.

6. Howbeit, we ſpeak the (higheſt) wiſdom [f] among them that are perfect (men in Chriſt Jeſus, i. e. fully inſtructed in the principles of Chriſtian faith); yet not the wiſdom of the (Heathen) world, nor of the princes of the world, (the Jewiſh magiſtrates and doctors), who come to nought, (and are to be aboliſhed.)

7. But we [g] ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, [h] even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained [i] before the world, (to be revealed in due time), to our glory; (i. e. to be the means of our happineſs and glory.)

8. Which [k] none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

9. But (God hath dealt with us) as it is written, (Iſ. 64. 4.), [l] Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

10. But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit; for the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep (and myſterious) things of God.

11. (And as it is among men, ſo it is here in reference to theſe things); for what man knoweth the (ſecret) things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man which is in him? even ſo the (ſecret) things of God knoweth no man, (Gr. none), but the [m] Spirit of God (which is in him.)

12. Now we have not received the ſpirit of the world, (which ſuggeſts worldly wiſdom), but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13. Which things alſo we ſpeak, not in the words which man's wiſdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth, [n] comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual.

14. But [o] the natural man (who acteth only the principles of human reaſon, and of worldly wiſdom) [p] receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are fooliſhneſs to him, (as being deſtitute of his human wiſdom, chap. 1. 23.); [q] neither can he know them (by any ſtudy of his own), becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned, (i. e. by ſcripture-prophecies, and by the revelation of the Spirit; and therefore while he continues to reject this way of knowledge, he cannot receive them.)

15. But he that is ſpiritual, (i. e. who hath the revelation of the Spirit), [r] judgeth (or diſcerneth) all things (relating to this myſtery, ver. 7.), yet he himſelf is judged of no man; (or diſcerned by none, who hath no higher principle than that of nature to diſcern things by.)

16. For who (without a revelation) hath known the mind of the Lord, [s] that he may inſtruct him, (or, which will, and can inſtruct him in theſe things? ſure no man by natural principles); but we (who are ſpiritual) have the mind of Chriſt, (and ſo are able to diſcern and inſtruct others in it.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, the teſtimony of God.] This is the reading of Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact, who intimate not in the leaſt, that they knew any copies which read μυστήριον. The teſtimony of the apoſtles concerning the Meſſiah, or the Son of God, his death, his reſurrection and exaltation to be a Prince and Saviour, is called the teſtimony of God, 1 John 5. 9. becauſe God teſtified to the truth of theſe doctrines by ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, Heb. 2. 4.

Ver. 2. [b] Οὐ εἰδέναι τι, not to know any thing.] To act as one who knew nothing τῆς ἔξω σοφίας, of the eloquence and wiſdom of the Greeks, but only to give you the knowledge of a crucified Saviour, which was to them fooliſhneſs, chap. 1. 23. So Chryſoſtom.

of the truth of what I said concerning Christ out of the prophets, who spake by the Spirit, and comparing spiritual things revealed to us with spiritual things revealed to them, ver. 13. reasoning with the Jews out of the scripture, as St Paul's manner was, Acts 17. 2. and saying no other things but those which Moses and the prophets said should come, that Christ should suffer, and that he should rise from the dead, and should shew light to the Gentiles, Acts 26. 22. 23.

Others, as Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact (r), understand by this phrase, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost; only it must be noted against Mr le Clerc, that neither the word πνῦμα is to be restrained to the gift of tongues, but comprehends all the internal gifts of the Holy Ghost; nor must the word δυνάμις, power, be restrained to healing diseases, but comprehend all the external gifts shewed upon others, as casting out devils, raising the dead.

Ver. 6. [f] Ἐν τοῖς τελείοις, among them that are perfect;] i. e. fully instructed in the principles of the Christian faith. That this is the sense of the word perfect here, appears from the opposition of those that are perfect, to babes in Christ; as in those words, You have need that one teach you which be the first principles of the oracles of God, and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong drink; for every one that useth milk, is unskilful in the word of righteousness. Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection, Heb. 5. 12. 13. and 6. 1. εἰς τὴν τελειότητα. Thus to that question of the young man, What lack I yet? Christ answereth, εἰ θέλεις τέλειος εἶναι, If thou wilt be perfect, i. e. fully instructed in the conditions of life required by the gospel, go sell all and follow me, Matth. 19. 21. So Philip. 3. 15. Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, i. e. fully instructed in our Christian liberty, mind this. See 1 Cor. 13. 10. Col. 1. 28. Strong meat is for them that are perfect, Heb. 5. 14.

Ver. 7. [g] We speak the wisdom ἣν προώρισεν ὁ Θεὸς πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, which God hath ordained before the world to our glory. Hence also it seems plain, that God hath appointed his gospel for the salvation of all to whom it is revealed; for though the apostle chargeth many of the church of Corinth with those things that would exclude them, without repentance, from this glory, yet he excludes none of them from being by God ordained, or appointed to receive glory by it.

Ibid. [h] Τὴν ἀπεκκεκρυμμένην, the hidden wisdom;] i. e. before, not after the revelation of it; for this mystery, saith the apostle, God hath revealed to us by his Spirit, ver. 10. It is the mystery which hath been hid from ages and generations, but now is made manifest to the saints, Rom. 16. 25. 26. Eph. 1. 9. and 3. 3. 4. 9. 10. and 6. 19. Col. 1. 26. 27. and 2. 2. and 4. 3. 4.

Ibid. [i] Πρὸ τῶν αἰώνων, before the world.] At the beginning of the ages of the world, Gen. 3. 15. and before any of them were completed, or run out. Hence it is styled the mystery concealed in the times of the preceding ages, Rom. 16. 25. as being not made known in other ages to the sons of men as now it is, Eph. 3. 5. but being a mystery hid from those ages, ver. 9. In this sense seemeth it to be, that God hath promised us eternal life, πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, from ancient generations, ἐξ ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, saith Photius; and this grace in the promise of it is said to be given us in Christ, 2 Tim. 1. 9. πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, a long time ago, saith Dr Hammond; ἄνωθεν, καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, or of old, saith Theodoret.

Ver. 8. [k] Οὐδεὶς τῶν ἀρχόντων, none of the princes.] Pilate, or the Jewish rulers, for they only can be said to have crucified the Lord of glory; they only are the rulers which were to be abolished, ver. 6. and they are styled οἱ ἄρχοντες, princes and rulers, Luke 14. 1. and 18. 18.; the princes who stood up, and the rulers which took counsel against the Lord, and against his Anointed, Psal. 2. 2. Acts 4. 26. They were the princes who delivered him to be condemned to death, and crucified him, and this they did out of ignorance, Acts 3. 17. and 13. 27.

Ver. 9. [l] Ὀφθαλμὸς οὐκ εἶδε, eye hath not seen.] These words do not immediately respect the blessings of another world, but are spoken by the prophet of the gospel-state, and the blessings then to be enjoyed by them that love God, Rom. 8. 28.; "For all the pro-"phets," say the Jews (s), "prophesied only of the "days of the Messiah; but as for the world to come, "or the state of things then, (as it is written), Eye "hath not seen, O God, beside thee;" where the gloss adds, The eyes of the prophets could not see these things. Hence the apostle adds in the following verse, But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; whereas our future happiness is not yet revealed, saith St John, 1 John 3. 2. Yea, the words of Isaiah, chap. 64. 4. in their primary sense may only intimate, that no man, by his own sense or reason, or by instruction from others, can discern any other god besides the true God, or know what kindness he will afford them that wait on him. And both the context, and the opposition of these words to the revelation of these things by the Spirit, shew the primary intent of the apostle to be this, that no human wisdom, by any thing that may be seen, heard of, or conceived by us, can acquaint us with the things taught by the Holy Spirit, without a revelation.

Ver. 11. [m] Εἰ μὴ τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, but the Spirit of God.] Theſe words accord with thoſe of the book of wiſdom, Thy counſel who hath known, except thou give wiſdom, and ſend thy Spirit from above, which knoweth and underſtandeth all things? chap. 19. 11. whence it ſeems plainly to follow,

1. That the Holy Spirit is omniſcient, "as knowing all things, even the deep things of God. Wiſdom is a loving Spirit, and will not acquit a blaſphemer of his words; for God is witneſs of his reins, and a beholder of his heart, and a bearer of his tongue; for the Spirit of the Lord filleth the world, and that which containeth all things hath the knowledge of the voice," Wiſd. 1. 6. 7.

2*dly*, That the Holy Spirit is with God, and in God, even as intimately as the ſoul is in the body, according to thoſe words of the book of Wiſdom, "She is μετά σε, with thee, an aſſeſſor of thy throne, and was preſent with thee when thou madeſt the world." Wiſd. 9. 4. 9.

Ver. 13. [n] Πνευματικὰ πνευματικοῖς συγκρίνοντες, comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual]; "that is," ſaith Mr le Cl. "ſpeaking ſpiritual things to ſpiritual men." But where doth συγκρίνω ſignify to ſpeak; or why doth he limit what is ſpoken to the ſpiritual man, ſince the apoſtles ſpake as well to the unbelieving Jew and Gentile, as to the ſpiritual man? And how doth it appear that ἄνθρωπος, man, is here to be underſtood, becauſe it follows in the next verſe, rather than πράγματα, things, which is underſtood in the immediate foregoing words? The interpretation of the fathers is much more probable, viz. We ſpeak theſe things "in the words taught by the Holy Ghoſt, (t) comparing the things which were writ by the Spirit of the Old Teſtament, with what is now revealed to us by the ſame Spirit, and confirming our doctrines from them." Moreover, from this and the preceding verſes, as alſo from the following, it is exceeding evident that the apoſtles ſpake and writ by inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, as did the prophets of old time, and delivered only thoſe things as from God, which God revealed to them by the Holy Spirit, according to thoſe words of St Peter, We preach the goſpel to you by the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

Ver. 14. [o] Ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος, the natural man.] "By the natural man," ſaith Mr le Cl. "is not here meant the man that makes uſe of nothing but reaſon; but the man that is wholly devoted and enſlaved to earthly things, and entirely taken up with the concernments of this life, like a brute creature. The oppoſition made here between ſpiritual and animal things," ſaith he, "plainly proves what I have ſaid." Whereas there is not a word ſpoken of ψυχικὰ, animal things, in the whole chapter, but only an oppoſition betwixt ψυχικὸς, the natural or animal, and πνευματικὸς, ſpiritual perſon, whom I ſhall prove to be a perſon endued with a ſpiritual afflatus, and by that confound his notion. That the natural man here is the man who rejects revelation, and admits of no higher principle to judge of things by, but philoſophy, and demonſtration from the principles of natural reaſon, or in the words of (u) Porphyry, τῆς κατὰ τὸν λογισμὸν πιθοῦς ἐυρισκομένης, of perſuaſion to be found out by a rational deduction, is the expreſs aſſertion of Theodoret (x), St Chryſoſtom (y), Photius, Oecumenius, and Theophylact (z) upon the place; they therefore thought the word would bear this ſenſe: And evident it is to any one who conſiders the chain of the apoſtle's diſcourſe, from chap. 1. 17. to the end of this chapter, that this muſt be the ſenſe; for ver. 17. he begins to declare he preached the goſpel, οὐκ ἐν σοφίᾳ λόγου, not in wiſdom of words, or human wiſdom, here, ver. 1. that he did not καθ' ὑπεροχὴν λόγου ἢ σοφίας, with excellency of ſpeech or human wiſdom; there the perſons which reject the goſpel are σοφοὶ, the wiſe men of the world; verſ. 19. 20. 21. ſtyled σοφοὶ κατὰ σάρκα, wiſe men according to the fleſh; the Greeks that ſeek for wiſdom, ver. 22. they who eſteemed it fooliſhneſs are the ſame Greeks, ver. 23. here it is the ψυχικὸς, natural man, who receives it not, and to whom it is fooliſhneſs. Who therefore ſees not that the natural man is the ſame with the wiſe man, the diſputer, the philoſopher, the Greek there? There the goſpel rejected by them for want of this wiſdom, and accounted fooliſhneſs, is indeed the power of God, and the wiſdom of God, ver. 24. Here it is the wiſdom of God in a myſtery revealed to the apoſtles by the Spirit, ver. 7. 10. i. e. the Spirit, not of the world, or of human wiſdom, but the Spirit they had received from God, that they might know it, ver. 12. and therefore they delivered it not in the words of human wiſdom, in which the Greeks gloried, and which they ſought for in the goſpel, but in words taught them by the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 13. when then it follows, But the natural man receives not τὰ τῦ Πνεύματος, the things of the Spirit, muſt he not be the man who receives not the things taught by the revelation of the Holy Ghoſt? The oppoſition which he bears to the πνευματικὸς, the man who hath this wiſdom revealed to him by the Spirit of God, demonſtrates this to be the ſenſe.

Ibid. ῥ Οὐ δέχεται, &c. he receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God.] But counts them fooliſhneſs, chap. 1. 23. when propounded to him, becauſe he doth not ſee them proved from principles of natural reaſon, by philoſophical deductions, which is the wiſdom he ſeeks after, ver. 22. Hence again it is evident he is the Greek, and not the ſenſual perſon.

Ibid. ſ Οὐ δύναται γνῶναι, he cannot know them, viz. By that wiſdom which alone he will be conducted by, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned, or by the revelation of the Spirit; for being myſteries, they are not knowable by human reaſon, till God is pleaſed to reveal them. So ver. 9. 10. 11. 16.

Note alſo, That the apoſtle doth not here diſcourſe of the inability of an Heathen to underſtand the ſenſe of any revelations diſcovered to him, for how then are they to be diſcovered to him? but only of his inability to find out, and originally come to the knowledge of them by the mere light of reaſon: and from the denial of this, he infers the neceſſity of a ſupernatural revelation, that the hidden wiſdom of God may be made known to the world. Nor doth he ſay, that the natural man cannot underſtand theſe revelations when diſcovered to him, becauſe he wants further means to do it, but only that he cannot know them, before they are diſcovered by the revelation of the Spirit; and that he will not then receive them, becauſe they are not taught him, as the wiſdom of the world is, by deductions from principles of human reaſon. The Jew, ſaith he, admits of revelation, and ſo he only doth require a ſign to prove this revelation; but the Greek ſeeks after human wiſdom, and becauſe he finds not that in our way of preaching, he will not receive the revelation, though it be confirmed by demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power.

Ver. 15. τ Ἀνακρίνει, judgeth all things.] The paſſive ἀνακρίνεσθαι is rendered diſcerned, in the foregoing verſe, and ſo ſhould have been rendered here; and the active, ſearcheth or diſcerneth, as Acts 17. 11. and here chap. 10. 25. 27. and 14. 24. So Iren. l. 4. c. 66. Hic examinat omnes, a nemine autem examinatur.

Ver. 16. Ὃς συμβιβάσει αὐτὸν, That he may inſtruct him.] Though theſe words in the prophet Iſaiah do certainly refer to God, they lying in the Hebrew thus, Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord? and (who is) the man of his counſel, that hath made him to know? chap. 40. 13. 14. yet as they are varied here thus, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? who will (or can) direct him? they ſeem plainly to refer to the ſpiritual man, and to affirm, that he could not be inſtructed in the myſteries of the goſpel by any human wiſdom. 1ſt, Becauſe our knowing of the mind of Chriſt from him may enable us to direct others; but not that Lord who affords us this knowledge. 2dly, Becauſe this is plainly introduced as a proof, that the ſpiritual man can be judged, or diſcerned by no other perſon, who is not ſpiritual, and therefore muſt reſpect not God, but him.

Πνευματικὸς here, and in other places of this epiſtle, is not the man who is adorned with the fruits of the good Spirit, much leſs, as Mr. Cl. ſuggeſts, the man who reliſhes or is affected with the ſpiritual doctrines of the goſpel; but (a) ὁ τῆς τῦ πνεύματος χάριτος ἐξιωμένος, the man who is endued with a ſpiritual afflatus, and hath thoſe gifts of the Spirit which are ſtyled the word of wiſdom, and of knowledge, chap. 12. 8. For, 1. he is the man who ſpeaks in demonſtration of the Spirit, ver. 4. the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, ver. 7. to whom God hath revealed it by the Holy Spirit, ver. 10. that he might know the things that are freely given us of God, ver. 12. and who ſpeaks of them in words taught by the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 13. and who by this revelation of the Spirit hath the mind of Chriſt made known to him, ver. 16. who ſpeaks πνεύματι Θεῦ, by the Spirit of God, and by the Holy Ghoſt, chap. 12. 3. Such were the prophets in the firſt age of the church, who by this afflatus, performed all ſacred offices in the church, before they had ſtated church-officers among them. See note on 1 Cor. 14. 32. Whence the apoſtle ſaith, If any man be a prophet among you, or ſpiritual, let him know, (i. e. acknowledge and diſcern by his ſpiritual afflatus), that the things which I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, 1 Cor. 14. 37. And to thoſe prophets he writes thus, Brethren, if any man be overtaken with a fault, you that are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch a one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, Gal. 6. 1. See the note there. This is the conſtant notion of the ſpiritual man in Irenæus (b), who, ſpeaking of thoſe men who had the prophetical gifts for the edification of the church, ſaith, They are men whom the apoſtle ſtyles ſpiritual. When afterwards church-governors were appointed, they ſeem to have been choſen out of theſe ſpiritual men, or to have had for a time, together with their ordination, this gift, which therefore he ſtyles the gift of truth; and from whom, ſaith he, the truth is to be learned by others. If the church of Rome would from this chapter gather the infallibility of their doctors met in council, let them ſhew it by their ſpiritual gifts, or exhibit chariſmata veritatis, as Irenæus (c) ſpeaks.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. AND I, brethren, (though I ſpeak the higheſt wiſdom among them that are perfect; yet) could (I) not ſpeak unto you as to ſpiritual (perſons), but as unto carnal, (by reaſon of thoſe fruits of the fleſh which ſtill abide in you, ver. 3. and your affection to thoſe who are only wiſe according to the fleſh, chap. 28. and) even as unto babes in Chriſt.

2. I have fed you with milk, (the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, Heb. 5. 12. 13. and 6. 1. See 1 Cor. 15. 2. 3.), and not with meat, (the higher doctrines of Chriſtianity); for hitherto (or then) [a] ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3. For ye are yet [b] carnal; for whereas there is (yet) among you envying, and ſtrife, and diviſions, (which are the works of the fleſh, Gal. 5. 20. 21.), are ye not carnal, and walk as men (who have little of the Spirit in you? See note on chap. 9. 8.)

4. For while one ſaith (in oppoſition to each other), I am (the diſciple) of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?

5. Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos? (not authors of your faith), but (only) miniſters by whom ye believed, (which faith alſo they wrought in you), even as the Lord gave (his gifts) to every man, (and his bleſſings on their labours.)

6. I have planted (the goſpel among you), Apollos watered (the ſeed ſown); but God (only) gave the increaſe (of it.)

7. So then, neither is he that planteth, (to be eſteemed as) any thing, nor he that watereth, [c] but (the glory of all muſt be aſcribed to) God that giveth the increaſe.

8. Now he that planteth, and he that watereth [d] are one, (in their deſign and miniſtry); and every man (of them) ſhall receive his own reward, (from that God whoſe workmen they are), according to his own labour.

9. (I ſay, according to his labour): For we are labourers together with God, (his grace aſſiſting us); ye are [e] God's huſbandry, ye are God's building.

10. According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wiſe [f] maſter-builder, (aſſiſted by divine wiſdom), I have laid the foundation, (Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified, 1 Cor. 2. 2.), and another (coming after me) buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11. For other (true) foundation can no man lay, than that (which) is laid (already by me), which is (faith in) Jeſus Chriſt.

12. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, (i. e. ſound doctrine, which will bear the trial of the fire); wood, hay, ſtubble, (human eloquence and wiſdom, legal rites, and Judaical traditions, which will be aboliſhed and vaniſh away);

13. Every man's work ſhall be made manifeſt: [g] for the day (of Chriſt's advent to deſtroy the Jewiſh temple, church, and nation) ſhall declare it, becauſe it ſhall be (Gr. it is) revealed by fire; (i. e. to be attended with great tribulation, Matth. 24. 21. πυρὶ πειραζομένη, with burning for trial, 1 Pet. 4. 12.); and the fire ſhall try every man's work of what ſort it is, (whether it be gold or ſilver, to abide the fire; or hay and ſtubble, to be conſumed by it.)

14. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon; (as ſound evangelical doctrine will, ſuffering nothing by, but being confirmed by the conflagration which ſhall burn up the Jewiſh œconomy); he ſhall receive a reward; (be approved as a wiſe builder, and ſhall be eminently preſerved from the evils of that day of trial, Matth. 24. 13.)

15. If any man's work ſhall be burnt, (as theirs muſt be, who build upon the foundation of legal obſervances and Judaical rites, for they muſt periſh with that church and temple, which is the foundation of them), he ſhall ſuffer (the) loſs (of all his labour), but he himſelf ſhall be ſaved, [h] yet ſo as by fire; (i. e. not without great hazard and difficulty, as one ſnatched out of the fire.)

16. Moreover, to paſs from their falſe doctrines, to the evil effects of them in your diviſions): Know ye not that ye (Chriſtians) are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you, (the Chri- stian church, as the Schechinah did in the temple?)

17. If (then) any man [t] defile the temple of God, (by dividing that church which is his temple, and in which one and the same Spirit dwells, into parts and factions), him shall God destroy; for the temple of the Lord is holy; (and therefore not to be profaned by those divisions which render you carnal, 1 Cor. 3. 1. 3.), which temple ye are.

18. (And because you break into these divisions on the account of, or are taught these practices by the philosophers of this age; men in whom you glory for their eloquence and wisdom): Let no man deceive himself: If any man among you seemeth to be [x] wise in (the wisdom and learning of) this world, let him (embrace that gospel and doctrine of Christ, which the world calls foolishness, and so) become a fool (to them), that he may be wise, (according to the wisdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. 25.)

19. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God; for it written, (Job 5. 13.), He taketh the wise in their own craftiness, (causing one sect of philosophers to destroy what another established, and so shewing the uncertainty and vanity of their pretended wisdom.)

20. And again, (Psal. 94. 11.), The Lord knoweth the thoughts (and machinations) of the wise, that they are vain.

21 Therefore let no man (so) glory in men, (as to be induced by their esteem of them to rend or divide the church, or to indulge to those vile practices which corrupt the temple of God). For [y] all things (or persons) are yours, (as being appointed for your service);

22. Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, (they have received their apostleship for your sakes); or the world, (as being made for you), or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours, (as being all designed for your good);

23. And you are (only) Christ's, (who is your head), and [z] Christ is God's, (or of God, having, as Mediator, his commission and his power from him, and acting all things to his glory.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verse 2. [v] Οὐ γὰρ ἐδύνασθε, for yet you could not, add, bear it.] So in the Old Testament, lo ochal is often used, i. e. I cannot, or, I would not, where endure, or bear it, is understood; so Job 31. 23. by reason of his highness I could not, sup. endure; Psal. 101. 5. Him that is of an haughty eye, and proud look, I cannot; Is. 1. 13. the calling of assemblies I cannot, i. e. bear.

Ver. 3. [b] Σαρκικοί, carnal.] This word being here plainly applied to the works of the flesh, seems to imply, that the spiritual man, opposed to him, should signify the man endued with the fruits of the good Spirit, or who walketh in the Spirit, not fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, Rom. 8. 1. 4. Gal. 5. 16. And thus the Greek interpreters do understand these words; hence noting, that it is possible for men to have great gifts, as the Corinthians had, and yet be carnal. Yet Irenæus (d) interprets the words thus, That they were carnal, because the Spirit of the Father did not rest upon them, i. e. because he, being the Spirit of love and union, would not abide with them when they indulged to envy and divisions, or be unto them a Spirit of instruction; and according to this interpretation, he must deny them to be spiritual, as the word signifies one who enjoys some spiritual gift, and receives some illumination from him; or as one that is not purely governed by the revelation made by the Spirit, but rather walks κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as a man attending, not the dictates of the Spirit, but of human reason, or of his natural inclinations; for that this is the genuine import of that phrase, to walk as men, see note on Rom. 3. 5. 1 Cor. 9. 8. Whatever be the sense, it must be noted, that the apostle doth not here style them carnal, in that worst sense in which the carnal person is represented as one who is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, Rom. 8. 7. 8. and therefore can do nothing pleasing to God, and as it wholly doth exclude us from any interest in Christ, Gal. 5. 24. for he allows them to be babes in Christ, ver. 1.; but as it imports men, through the too great prevalency of their carnal appetites lusting against the Spirit, still subject to such things as shewed some strong remainders of a carnal mind in them.

But yet one great difficulty remains scarce observed by any interpreter excepting Crellius, viz. how the same Corinthians could be such babes in Christ, and have such need of milk, and not of meat, and yet be enriched in all utterance and knowledge, 1 Cor. 1. 5. and abound in faith, utterance, and knowledge, 2 Cor. 8. 7.

I answer, That these encomiums must be restrained to some few of them who were their extraordinary church-officers, and enjoyed this faith and knowledge for the instruction of the rest; and then, notwithstanding this, it may be true, that the apostle could not write to the generality of them as such, but rather as to babes in Christ. Or, 2. This faith, utterance, and knowledge must be restrained to the gift of miracles, of tongues, and the interpretation of them, which might be given for the confirmation of the goſpel, and the good of others, to them who were not ſpiritual in the beſt ſenſe, but of very ſmall proficiency in the ſaving fruits of the good Spirit. Hence we find them puffed up on the account of theſe gifts, envying others who had them in an higher meaſure, and abuſing them to vain oſtentation and confuſion in the church, and not to edification, which things ſufficiently evidence they were but babes in Chriſt.

Ver. 7. [c] Ἀλλὰ Θεὸς, but God, &c.] Whence it is evident, that there can be no cauſe why you ſhould run into factions about, or deſire to be named from them, who have no excellency but from God, and do nothing but by his aſſiſtance.

Ver. 8. [d] Ἓν εἰσιν, are one.] Καὶ τὴν διακονίαν, according to their miniſtry, ſaith (e) Clemens Alex. as being God's miniſters in this diſpenſation; or, ὁτι τῷ πνεύματι, as having both received their different gifts from the ſame Spirit, it being one and the ſame Spirit who divideth to every man as he will, 1 Cor. 12. 11.

Ver. 9. [e] Θεοῦ γεώργιον, God's huſbandry.] This, I think, is better rendered God's field, by Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact (f), who hence infer, that the field is God's; the apoſtles only, γεώργοι αὐτοῦ, his labourers ſent forth to labour in it, and enabled by him for that work; and that they ought as a field to be fenced, ἐν τῷ φραγμῷ τῆς ὁμονοίας, with the hedge of concord, and not be divided into parties. Accordingly the word anſwers to the Hebrew Shadeh: ſo Prov. 24. 30. I went by γεώργιον, the field of the ſlothful; and chap. 31. 16. The wiſe woman conſidereth γεώργιον, a field, and buyeth it.

Ver. 10. [f] Ἀρχιτέκτων, a maſter-builder.] So the Jews call their wiſe men, בנאים, architecti. See Buxtorf. lex. Talm. p. 318. which metaphor the apoſtle here uſes.

Ver. 13. [g] Ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα δηλώσει, for the day will declare it.] Here obſerve,

1*ſt*, That a day abſolutely put, doth often ſignify a day, or a time of puniſhment; ſo they that come after him, ſhall be aſtoniſhed at his day, Job 18. 21. The Lord ſhall laugh at him, for he ſeeth that his day is coming, Pſal. 37. 13. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom, what they did in the day of Jeruſalem, Pſal. 137. 7. So the day of Midian, Iſ. 9. 4. Wo unto them, for their day is come, the time of their viſitation, Jer. 50. 27.

2*dly*, That in like manner the day here mentioned, is the day of our Lord's coming, to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews, to burn their temple, and to deſtroy the Jewiſh œconomy, will appear probable from the deſcription of that day, as a refiner's fire, Mal. 3. 2. 3. and 4. 1. 2. Joel 2. 1. 13. 30. 31.; and as the fire of an oven, burning up the chaff and ſtubble; for, behold, the day of the Lord cometh that ſhall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, ſhall be as ſtubble, and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up.

But whether we underſtand theſe words of that day, or any other day of judgment, this is certain, that the apoſtle cannot be here ſuppoſed to ſpeak of the Roman purgatory-fire: 1. Becauſe the fire the apoſtle ſpeaks of, as (g) Origen hath noted, is not πῦρ ὑλικὸν καὶ αἰσθητὸν, ἀλλὰ τροπολογικὸν, fire properly, but metaphorically ſo called; as appears from theſe words, he ſhall eſcape as by fire. 2. Becauſe this fire is to try every man's work, Paul and Apollos's, as well as theirs who built on the foundation hay and ſtubble; and, ſure, they will not ſay Paul and Apollos went to purgatory. 3. This fire ſhall try every man's work of what ſort it is: now, purgatory-fire doth not try every man's works, but puniſh them for them.

Ver. 15. [h] Ὡς διὰ πυρὸς, as out of the fire.] To be ſaved out of the fire, is a proverbial ſpeech concerning them that eſcape with great danger out of a calamity; ſo it is uſed in the Old Teſtament, I have plucked them as a fire-brand out of the fire, Amos 4. 11. Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire? Zech. 3. 2.; and in the New, Jude 23. Others ſave with fear, plucking them out of the fire. So L. Æmilius in Livy (h), ſaith, "He eſcaped the popular flame half-"burnt." The interpretation of Sir Norton Knatchbull, "He ſhall be ſaved, but ſo as that he paſs "through the fire of perſecution with conſtancy to "the faith," accords well with Chriſt's words, Matth. 24. 13. but not with the uſe of this proverbial expreſſion. Now, hence it is evident, that the apoſtle ſpeaks not of the Gnoſtics, who denied the reſurrection, 1 Cor. 15. 14. 17. and ſo believed in vain, and taught, that Chriſt might be denied with the mouth in the time of perſecution, and ſo were then aſhamed of him, and alſo were abominably filthy both in doctrine and manners; for of ſuch the apoſtle would not ſay, They ſhould be ſaved, yet ſo as by fire; but as Jude and Peter do, they are of old ordained to condemnation, their judgment lingereth not, and their damnation doth not ſlumber, Jude 4. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 3.

Ver. 17. [i] Εἴ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ φθείρει, if any man corrupt the temple of God.] I have in the paraphraſe followed the common interpretation of theſe words; but the like words uſed, chap. 6. from ver. 15. to 19. by way of dehortation from fornication, and 2 Cor. 6. 16. from communion with Heathens in their idolatrous rites and evil practices, and by way of inducement to cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, chap. 7. 1. more naturally incline us to refer theſe verſes to the corrupting of the temple of God, by filthineſs of the fleſh, uncleanneſs and fornication, or by filthineſs of the ſpirit, i. e. idolatrous practices; both which the Corinthians did. See the note on 1 Cor. 7. 1. And then the connection will run thus, I have declared you to be a building of God, ver. 9. as being built up together for an habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. 2. 22.; if therefore you do not keep this temple of God holy, but corrupt it by joining the temple of God with idols, 2 Cor. 6. 16. or profane and defile it by uncleanneſs and fornication, you may expect, that theſe ſins, by which God's temple is deſtroyed, ſhould end in your own ruin and deſtruction.

Ver. 18. [k] Σοφὸς εἶναι ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, to be wiſe in the wiſdom of this world.] That the Corinthians were induced to eat things offered to idols in the idol-temples, by men pretending to great knowledge, ſee chap. 8. 1. 2.; that they alſo introduced among them the doctrine of the lawfulneſs of fornication, ſee note on chap. 5. 1. on chap. 6. 16. on chap. 7. 1.: and to this ſenſe of the two laſt verſes agree the deſcants of the ancients, who ſay, the apoſtle, ver. 17. begins to ſpeak περὶ τῦ πεπορνευκότος, of him that had committed fornication, chap. 5. 1. and againſt them qui turpiter viventes corpora ſua violando corruperunt, who, by filthy practices, had corrupted their bodies, and violated the temple of the Holy Ghoſt: theſe teachers ſeem to have been the Nicolaitans, who received their doctrines from the philoſophers.

Ver. 21. [l] Πάντα ὑμῶν ἐστιν, all are yours.] The Jews believed that the world was made for them, and that God deſpiſed the Gentiles, and looked upon them as nothing when he made it, 2 Eſdr. 6. 55. 59.; the apoſtle on the contrary affirms, the world was made for the Gentiles converted to the Chriſtian faith: and adds, that the apoſtles had received their gifts and authority for their ſakes, that if life were continued to them under continual perils, it was for their furtherance and joy in the faith, Philip. 1. 25.; or if we, ſaith he, be always given up to death, ſo that death worketh in us, it is that life may work in you, 2 Cor. 4. 11. 12.; for we ſuffer all things for you, ver. 15. 2 Tim. 2. 10. that things preſent, the preſſures they now ſuffered; and things to come, the proſperity and adverſity they might afterwards be ſubject to, were for their ſakes; for whether we be afflicted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, or whether we be comforted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, 2 Cor. 1. 6.

Ver. 23. [m] Χριστὸς δὲ Θεοῦ, and Chriſt is God's.] Here the Socinians cry out, Vide hic diſcrimen inter Deum et Chriſtum, ſee here the difference betwixt God and Chriſt. "Hence it appears," ſaith Crellius, "that "Chriſt is in no wiſe God moſt high, as having ano-"ther above him, as his head, on whom he depends, "and from whom he is here manifeſtly diſtinguiſh-"ed."

But the fathers thought not ſo, who ſay, Chriſt is of God, ὡς προαιώνιον, γέννημα καὶ ὡς αἰτίαν ἔχων τὸν Πατέρα, as being begotten by him before all ages, and having him for his Father, ἐξ αὐτῦ γεγεννημένος κατὰ τὴν θεότητα, as receiving the divine nature from him. Others grant this of Chriſt as Mediator betwixt us and God, in which ſenſe he performing that office as man, or by virtue of his human nature, in which alone he could be a prophet ſent from God, or offer up himſelf to the death for us, or intercede in our behalf, or be exalted to the right hand of God, to be a Prince and a Saviour. He therefore was exalted thus to the glory of God the Father, and ſo depended on him in the exerciſe of that office. See note on 1 Cor. 11. 3.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. (WE are yours, I ſay, yet) Let a man (alſo) ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God, (i. e. of thoſe revelations of the goſpel which are ſtyled myſteries, as not being before revealed to the world. See note on chap. 2. 2. 7.)

2. Moreover, it (chiefly) is required in ſtewards, that a man (taking that office upon him) be found faithful.

3. But (whether it be thus or not) with me it is a very ſmall thing [a] that I ſhould be judged of you, or of man's judgment; yea, I judge not my own ſelf, (ſo as to acquieſce in that judgment.)

4. For I know nothing (of unfaithfulneſs) by myſelf, [b] yet I am not thereby juſtified (at Gods tribunal); but he that (further) judgeth me is the Lord.

5. Therefore [c] judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will [d] make manifeſt the counſels of the heart; and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God.

6. And theſe things, brethren, [e] I have in a figure transferred to myſelf, (one rude in ſpeech, but not in knowledge, 2 Cor. 11. 6.), and to Apollos, (a man of eloquence and wiſdom, Acts 18. 24.), for your ſakes; that you might learn in (the example of) us, not to think of (other) men above that which is written, (viz. that we are only miniſters of Chriſt by which ye believed, chap. 3. 5.), that no one of you be puffed up for one againſt another (becauſe of the different gifts vouchſafed to them.)

7. For [f] who maketh thee (what doctor ſoever thou thou art) to differ from another? And what (gift) haſt thou which thou didſt not receive (from God?) Now if thou didſt receive it, why doſt thou glory as if thou hadſt not received it (from him?)

8. Now [a] ye (Corinthians) are full (of ſecular wiſdom); now ye are rich, (both in wealth and in ſpiritual gifts), 1 Cor. 14. 26.); ye have reigned as kings (flouriſhing in the enjoyment of theſe things in all tranquillity and honour) without (any want of) us; and I would to God ye did reign (indeed, and not in conceit only), that we alſo (poor, perſecuted, and deſpiſed apoſtles) might reign with you.

9. For I think that God hath ſet forth us, the apoſtles, laſt, (i. e. as the laſt, or the meridian gladiators), as it were (men) [b] appointed unto death: for we are made a ſpectacle to the world, and to angels, and to men.

10. We are (counted as) fools for Chriſt's ſake, but ye (who flouriſh in your eloquence and wiſdom, are accounted) wiſe in Chriſt; we are weak (as to bodily preſence, 2 Cor. 10. 10. and bodily infirmities, 1 Cor. 2. 3. 2 Cor. 12. 9. and made ſtill weaker by our continual wants and perſecutions), but ye are ſtrong (and luſty); ye are honourable (for your gifts and wiſdom, which have gotten you a great name and reputation among others), but we are deſpiſed, (or in diſgrace, every where.)

11. Even to this preſent hour, we both hunger and thirſt, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place, (or are in no certain condition;)

12. And labour, working with our own hands; being reviled, we bleſs; being perſecuted, we ſuffer it, (or, we bear, as weak perſons, who know not how to eſcape, or help ourſelves;)

13. Being defamed, we intreat; we are made as the [i] filth of the world, and (are as) the offſcouring (or refuſe) of all things to this day.

14. (But though I thus ſpeak of your glorying in theſe things, with the neglect of us, ver. 8.), I write not theſe things to ſhame you, but, as my beloved ſons, I warn you (to behave yourſelves hereafter more like dutiful children towards me.)

15. For though you have ten thouſand inſtructors in Chriſt, yet have you [k] not many fathers, (indeed not any beſides me); for in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the goſpel.

16. Wherefore, I beſeech you, be ye followers of me, (adhering to the doctrine received from me, and walking as I do, and teach, ver. 17.)

17. For this cauſe have I ſent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved ſon, and faithful in the Lord, who ſhall bring you into remembrance of my ways which are in Chriſt, as I teach every where in every church.

18. Now ſome (among you) are puffed up, as though (becauſe I have ſent Timothy to you) I would not (myſelf) come to you:

19. But I will come to you ſhortly, if the Lord will, and will know (and examine), not the ſpeech (and eloquence) of them which are puffed up, but the power (and ſpiritual authority which attends their preaching, whether that be equal to the power God hath given us for edification.)

20. For the kingdom of God is (confirmed and propagated) [l] not in (and by the wiſdom of) word, but in (and by the) power (of the Spirit; which if they want, they cannot be ſent from God, as we are.)

21. What will you? Shall I come unto you [m] with a rod, (inflicting puniſhments upon you), or (will you ſo reform, that I may come unto you) in love, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs?

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 3. [a] Ἵνα ὑφ' ὑμῶν ἀνακρι θῶ, that I ſhould be judged of you.] Not that he was unconcerned whether the Corinthians had a good eſteem of him, or not; the contrary is evident from the whole drift of his epiſtles, in which he labours to convince them of the truth of his doctrine, and of his ſincerity in the diſcharge of his office, and rejoiceth greatly in their affection to him, 2 Cor. 6. 13. and 7. 14. 15. and 8. 24.: his meaning only is, that their judgment is little to him in compariſon of the final and unerring judgment of the Lord.

Ver. 4. [b] Οὐκ τούτῳ δεδικαίωμαι, yet am I not thereby juſtified.] Here alſo the apoſtle doth not intend to ſay, that he and others could have no good aſſurance of their preſent juſtification and favour with God from the teſtimony of an upright conſcience, which, ſaith St John, gives confidence with God, 1 John 3. 21. for then farewell all joy and comfort in this world: he doth himſelf aſſure us, that their rejoicing was this, even the teſtimony of their conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity they had their converſation in this world, 2 Cor. 1. 12.; he adviſeth all men to approve their actions to themſelves, and then, ſaith he, they ſhall have rejoicing in themſelves, and not in another, Gal. 6. 4.: his meaning therefore is, That our final juſtification, or abſolution from condemnation, depends not on the judgment which we paſs upon ourſelves, but upon that which God, the righteous Judge, will paſs upon us at the laſt. Here alſo note in St Paul another ſenſe of juſtification, as it relates to our abſolution from condemnation, and our approbation as righteous at the laſt day, which will will be, saith he, according to our works, 2 Cor. 5. 10. and our fidelity in execution of the trusts committed to us, ver. 2.

Ver. 5. [e] Μὴ πρὸ καιροῦ τι κρίνετε, judge nothing before the time.] The apostle doth not here condemn all judgment, civil or ecclesiastical, of any person's deeds or words, or bid us suspend our judgment of things occurring to our senses till the day of judgment; but only forbids our censures of things uncertain, of which no righteous judgment can be passed, because we cannot be certain of the truth of that judgment, and of things which it belongs not to us to judge of. And this appears both from the words, and the occasion of them: from the words, for they respect the hidden things of darkness, and the counsels of the heart, of which no certain judgment can be passed; from the occasion of them, they passing their censures on St Paul, ver. 3. and questioning his fidelity in his office, ver. 2. of whom they they had no authority so to judge, nor any occasion so to judge.

Ibid. [f] Ὃς φανερώσει τὰς βουλὰς τῶν καρδιῶν, who will make manifest the counsels of the heart.] Hence note, That Jesus Christ must have the knowledge of the secrets of the hearts of all men subject to his judgment, and so must be that God who alone knows the hearts of all men, 1 Kings 8. 39. and is alone the searcher of all hearts, 1 Chron. 28. 9. to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doing, Jer. 17. 10.; and therefore Christ expressly ascribes this knowledge to himself, by saying, All the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts, and I will give to every one of you according to your works, Rev. 2. 23.

Ver. 6. [g] Μετεσχημάτισα, I have in a figure transferred.] This seems not to refer, as most interpreters conceive, to what the apostle had said, chap. 1. 12. viz. their saying I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, I of Cephas; for here is nothing said of Cephas: but it refers to what he had said, chap. 3. 5. 6. 7. 8. that Paul and Apollos were only ministers by whom they believed, that therefore neither Paul nor Apollos were to be looked upon as any thing, they doing nothing but by the grace given them by that God, to whom therefore the whole praise was due for the success of all their labours; and this scheme of speech I have used, saith he, touching myself and Apollos, instructing you not to think highly of other doctors among you, who have done less for the promoting your faith than we have done.

Ver. 7. [h] Τίς σε διακρίνει; who maketh thee to differ?] The apostle manifestly speaking here of those gifts of the Spirit which were immediately infused without human industry, and were dispensed by God, and by his Spirit, according to his good pleasure, 1 Cor. 3. 5. and 12. 11. it cannot be hence argued, that no man doth any thing to make himself differ from another in any virtue or pious disposition. For to what purpose are men continually exhorted and stirred up by powerful motives to all Christian duties, and particularly to excel in virtue, if these exhortations and motives are not proposed to engage them to exercise these Christian virtues, to chuse the good and refuse the evil? And if one man, upon consideration of these motives, doth chuse to live a pious life, whereas another is not by the same motives prevailed on so to do, doth he not differ from another by virtue of that choice? And though the grace of God by way of excitation worketh in us thus to will, yet since our faculties do first deliberate upon, and then comply, and chuse to do that thing to which this grace excites us; if to consider be to differ from him that does not so, and to comply with, and embrace the call of God, be to differ from him who complies not with the same call, it must be certain, that as God's grace preventing and exciting, so my faculties co-operating, tend to make me differ from another, though having also these faculties from God, the action may be well ascribed, and the whole glory of it must be due to him.

Seeing then no act of virtue, and no good habit is produced in us without a frequent and manifold co-operation of our own faculties to the same action and habit, whereas these gifts of tongues, interpretation and prophecy, were gifts conferred upon Christians in the primitive times, without any such co-operation of their faculties, it cannot, with like reason, be inquired of the former, as it may be of those gifts, who made thee to differ from another in them? And though all ground, and even pretence of glorying, by this immediate infusion of these gifts, is evidently excluded, yet the apostles do themselves glory in those good actions which they chuse to do, 1 Cor. 9. 15. 16. 2 Cor. 1. 12. and 11. 20. and say to others thus, Let every man try, and approve his own work, and then shall he have καύχημα, rejoicing, or glorying in himself, Gal. 6. 4.

Ver. 8. [i] Κεκορεσμένοι ἐστέ, ἐπλουτήσατε, ye are filled, ye are rich.] All the ancient commentators have noted in their prefaces to this epistle, that Corinth (i) was a city which abounded in wealth, and was full of rhetoricians, and of philosophers, and that hence arose their disorders, pride, and vain-glory, as well as from their gifts; I thought fit in the paraphrase to take notice of both.

(i) Κορίνθῳ μὲν πλουσιωτάτῃ βιωτικῶς ὑπάρχει, πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων πάντων τῇ τῶν χρημάτων περιουσίᾳ ----- ἔτι δὲ καὶ ῥητόρων πολλῶν ἐμπλέως ἡ πόλις φιλοσόφων.

Ver. 9.

Ver. 9. [h] Ὡς ἐπιθανατίους, as men appointed unto death.] Here the apoſtle ſeems to allude to the Roman ſpectacles, τῆς τῶν θηριομάχων, καὶ μονομαχίας ἀνδροφόνου, that of the beſtiarii, and the gladiators (k), where, in the morning, men were brought upon the theatre to fight with wild beaſts, and to them was allowed armour to defend themſelves, and ſmite the beaſts that did aſſail them; but in the meridian ſpectacle were brought forth the gladiators naked, and without any thing to defend them from the ſword of the aſſailant, and he that then eſcaped was only reſerved for ſlaughter to another day: ſo that theſe men might be well called ἐπιθανάτιοι, men appointed for death; and this being the laſt appearance on the theatre for that day, they are ſaid here to be ſet forth ἐσχάτοι, the laſt. Of theſe two ſpectacles Seneca ſpeaks thus (l): "In "the morning men are expoſed to lions and to "bears; at mid-day to their ſpectators, thoſe that "kill are expoſed to one another; the victor is de-"tained for another ſlaughter; the concluſion of "this fight is death. The former fighting, com-"pared to this, was mercy; here is only butchery; "they have nothing to cover them; their whole "body is expoſed to every ſtroke," &c. Hence Tertullian (m) cites the words thus: Puto nos Deus apoſtolos noviſſimos elegit velut beſtiarios: "I think God hath "choſen us apoſtles laſt, as men to be expoſed to "wild beaſts."

Ver. 13. [i] Περικαθάρματα, περίψημα,] Theſe words, which we render filth and off-ſcouring, do probably relate to the ſacrifices which the Heathens uſed for the luſtration of a city. "The Athenians," ſaith Phavorinus (n), "nouriſhed ſome very baſe and refuſe "people, and when any calamity or plague befel "them, they ſacrificed them for the purgation of "the city, and theſe they called καθάρματα." And Suidas ſaith (o), they ſaid of ſuch a man, "Be thou "our περίψημα, redemption, our propitiation, and "then flung him into the ſea as a ſacrifice to Nep-"tune." Hence Origen ſaith (p), That our Lord giving up himſelf for the propitiation of our ſins, was made much more than his apoſtles, περικάθαρμα τῶ κόσμω, καὶ πάντων περίψημα, the luſtration of the world, and peculiar ſacrifice of all men.

Ver. 15. [k] Οὐ πολλοὺς πατέρας, not many fathers.] The maſters of tradition among the Jews (q) called them children whom they inſtructed in their traditions; and the Targum upon Numb. 3. 1. obſerves, that Nadab and Abihu are called the ſons of Moſes, becauſe he had inſtructed them; for he who teacheth another, is, as it were, his father. Thus the diſciples of the prophets are called the ſons of the prophets; ſo Jonathan, "Theſe are the names of "the ſons of Aaron, the diſciples of Moſes, and the "ſons of Iſrael, who were called by his name." And ſo both Irenæus (r), and Clemens Alexandrinus (s) do obſerve, "That they were called fathers who "taught and catechiſed others, and they ſons who "were taught by them."

Ver. 20. [l] Οὐκ ἐν λόγῳ, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει, not in word, but in power.] It is propagated, ſaith Theophylact, διὰ σημείων τῇ δυνάμει τοῦ Πνεύματος γινομένων, by miracles done by the power of the Spirit; for to convince men of the truth of it, ſaith Chryſoſtom, it is not enough to uſe fine words, but the dead muſt be raiſed, the devils caſt out, and other mighty wonders muſt be wrought, for by theſe things the goſpel is eſtabliſhed.

Ver. 21. [m] Ἐν ῥάβδῳ, with a rod.] That the apoſtles had power of inflicting corporal puniſhments on ſome who did oppoſe the progreſs of, or who notoriouſly offended againſt the rules of the goſpel, is the opinion of all the ancient commentators, who inſtance in the death inflicted by St Peter on Ananias and Sapphira, Acts 5. 10. the blindneſs inflicted by St Paul on Elymas, Acts 13. 11. the delivery of Hymenæus and Alexander, and the inceſtuous perſon, unto Satan, 1 Tim. 1. 20. 1 Cor. 5. 5. ὥστε παιδεῦσαι τὸ σῶμα, ſo as to chaſtiſe the body of them, ſaith Theodoret; ἵνα νόσῳ αὐτὸν τύξῃ, that he might macerate him with ſome diſeaſe, ſay Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact; and ſo they interpret theſe words, Shall I come unto you with a rod? that is, ἐν κολάσει, ἐν τιμωρίᾳ, with puniſhments and chaſtiſements. And this ſenſe will appear highly probable, if we conſider these words of the apostle, I write unto you, being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness, according to the power God hath given me for edification, and not for destruction, 2 Cor. 13. 10. For, that these words cannot be understood only of the power of excommunication, common to him with others, we may learn from the same words, 2 Cor. 10. 8. where the mighty weapons of his warfare, able to remove every height exalting itself against, and to captivate every mind to the obedience of Christ, and to avenge all disobedience, being premised, it follows, For should I boast exceedingly of the power God hath given me for edification, and not for destruction, I should not be ashamed.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. IT is reported commonly, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not [a] so much as named among the Gentiles, (viz.) [b] that one should have his father's wife; (i.e. his stepmother.)

2. And [c] ye are puffed up, and [d] have not rather mourned (for the scandal of this great offence, nor taken care) that he that hath done this deed, (so reproachful to the society of Christians), may be taken away (and cast out) from among you, (as he ought to be.)

3. For I verily, as (being) absent in body, but [e] present (with you, Col. 2. 5.) in (and by the) spirit (exciting me so to do), have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed, (that he ought to be removed from your body, and delivered up to Satan);

4. (And therefore do command you) in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together (in your Christian assemblies), and my spirit (supplying my absence), [f] with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, (is present with you),

5. To deliver such an one to (the buffetings of) Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, (so lasciviant in him), that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

6. [g] Your glorying (in such a doctor, or such wisdom) is not good: know ye not, that (as) a little leaven [h] leaveneth (and soureth) the whole lump, (so such a member continued among you will defile the whole body, or society?)

7. [i] Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, (for as much) as ye are (by your Christianity obliged to be) unleavened: For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us (Christians, and at that feast all leaven was to be put out of their houses, Exod. 12. 15.)

8. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with (the) old leaven (of our former uncleanness), nor with the (Pharisaical) [k] leaven of malice, and (deceitful) wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

9. [l] I wrote to you in an epistle, (or, I had writ to you in this epistle, before I was fully acquainted with the state of your affairs, by the coming of Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, 1 Cor. 16. 17.), not to company with fornicators.

10. Yet not (intending) altogether (to forbid you any conversation) with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11. [m] But now (since I heard of this great miscarriage, and have been more exactly informed of the state of your church) I have (changed my style, and) written to you not to keep company, if any man that is [n] called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, (a contumelious person), or a drunkard, or an extortioner, (and that so strictly as to charge you) with such a one [o] no not to eat.

12. [p] For what have I to do to judge (or censure) them also that are without (the church, as Heathen fornicators, and the stepmother of this incestuous fornicator are); do not ye (and all other churches and societies) judge them that are within (their body?)

13. But them that are without, God judgeth: therefore (leaving them to the judgment of God, censure them that thus offend within your body, and you will, by so doing) put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

three great infamies, with which the (a) Heathens loaded the primitive Chriſtians, that they had inceſta convivia among them, and practiſed the very crime here cenſured by St Paul; and the words ὅλως ἀκούεται, it is every where heard of, do make it not improbable, that this very thing might give the riſe to that vile objection againſt Chriſtianity, eſpecially if the Corinthians had the foundation of this practice from the Jews, from whom the Chriſtians for ſome time were not diſtinguiſhed.

Ibid. [b] Ὥστε γυναῖκα τινὰ τὸν πατρὸς ἔχειν, that one ſhould have his father's wife.] Either as his wife, or ſo as to commit fornication with her. Now this, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, was done by them agreeably to the Jewiſh doctrine concerning proſelytes, viz. that they were "as perſons new-born, and had loſt all their "kindred they had before:" ſo that by the law, as (b) the rabbins expounded it, they might marry their mother and ſiſter. And to this (c) Tacitus ſeems to refer in his account of the Jews, when he ſaith, "All "things are by them deemed profane, which to us "are ſacred; rurſum conceſſa apud illos quæ nobis "inceſta, and what we account inceſtuous is with "them lawful;" and that they are firſt of all taught to contemn the gods, parentes, liberos, fratres vilia habere, and to have no regard to parents, children, and brethren. But conſidering, that Corinth abounded with philoſophers, and that (d) Chryſippus the Stoic reckons the enjoyment of a mother, ſiſter, or daughter, as things blamed without reaſon; and that hence the (e) Nicolaitans and Carpocratians had their doctrine of the community of women, not excepting mothers, and daughters, and ſiſters; I think it probable, that this corruption might have had its riſe from them, and that, upon one or other of theſe accounts, they ſo tamely endured him who had done this infamous thing; yea, they were puffed up, ſay the Greek interpreters, on account of the eloquence and wiſdom of this very man.

Ver. 2. [c] Πεφυσιωμένοι ἐστὲ, ye are puffed up.] Either in your conceit, that you have got ſuch a profound and eloquent teacher; or on the account of ſome high wiſdom, which makes you look on theſe things as indifferent.

It is conjectured, that this woman, cohabiting with her ſon-in-law, had divorced herſelf from her huſband; and true it is, as I have obſerved, note on chap. 7. 11. that the Attic laws allowed the woman to do this, but then ſhe was firſt to bring τὰς ἀπολύσεως γράμματα, the cauſes why ſhe deſired to leave her huſband before the Archon, or judge of ſuch matters, and to have his allowance ſo to do; if this ſtepmother did not this, ſhe was ſtill her huſband's wife; if ſhe did, and the cauſes ſhe alledged were allowed of by the judge, this freed her from that relation to her former huſband, and then he ſuffered no wrong by this action; as the apoſtle intimates that he did, by ſtyling him ἀδικηθέντα, the perſon that had ſuffered wrong, 2 Cor. 7. 12.

Ibid. [d] Καὶ οὐχὶ μᾶλλον ἐπενθήσατε, and have not rather mourned.] It was the cuſtom, both of the Jews and Chriſtians, when any one was to be cut off from the church as a dead member, to do it with faſting and humiliation, to ſhew their ſympathy with him, and to demonſtrate their ſorrow for the ſcandal brought upon the ſociety.

"The ſchool of Pythagoras," ſaith Origen (f), "put coffins in the room of them who deſerted the "ſociety, looking upon them as dead men; and the "Chriſtians lament them who have been guilty of "laſciviouſneſs, or any other abſurd action, as per-"ſons loſt and dead to God." And, among the apoſtolical conſtitutions (g), this is one, With ſorrow and mourning cut off from the church the incurable perſon; for, ſaith the apoſtle, you ſhall put away from among you the evil perſon: and to this cuſtom the apoſtle ſeemeth to allude, 2 Cor. 2. 1. 3. and 12. 21.

stance, as Elisha did the actions of Gehazi by his prophetic spirit, 2 Kings 5. 26. So Chrysostom and Theophylact. And so the phrase seems to be used in these words, For though I am absent in the flesh, yet I am with you in the spirit, rejoicing and beholding your order, and the stedfastness of your faith, Col. 2. 5. since, in his absence, he could not behold their order, and the stedfastness of their faith by his own spirit, but only by the assistance of the Holy Spirit. So also do they interpret τῷ ἐμῷ πνεύματι, my spirit, ver. 4. by my spiritual gift. So that the sense of these words, ver. 3. 4. seems to run thus, "I, by the spirit of "discerning, and the authority God hath given me, "have already judged, that this person ought to be "delivered up to Satan; and therefore when you "are gathered together in the name of Christ, and "have my spirit, who also presides in your assem-"blies, and there assists you in the performance of "your Christian offices, and have the power of "Christ ready to confirm, and execute your sen-"tence, do you in his name deliver such a one to "Satan."

Ver. 4. ᶠ Σὺν τῇ δυνάμει, with the power of the Lord Jesus Christ.] The word δυνάμις, power, hath still reference to some miraculous and extraordinary power, and is not used, that I know of, concerning any simple act of discipline, as when Christ answers St Paul thus, ἡ δυνάμις μου, my power is perfected in weakness; and the apostle saith on that account, Most gladly will I rejoice in my weakness, ἵνα ἡ δυνάμις τοῦ Χριστοῦ, that the power of Christ may rest upon me, 2 Cor. 12. 9. 10. i. e. say the ancients, that, in the midst of my manifold infirmities, the power of Christ, enabling me to do all kind of miracles, may more conspicuously reside in me. This miraculous assistance is by the apostle sometimes called simply, the power, 1 Cor. 2. 4. and 4. 19. 20. and 12. 28. 29.; sometimes the power of God, 1 Cor. 18. 24. and 2. 5. 6. 14. 2 Cor. 4. 7. and 13. 4.; and sometimes the power of Christ, as in the place now cited. Now, among the powers of Christ, which attended the preaching of the gospel, this was one, of delivering men for their offences up to Satan, to inflict corporal punishments on them for the destruction of the flesh. This power seems to have been peculiar to the apostles, and therefore here St Paul prescribes the doing of it, the authority or power of his spirit being present with them. That this is indeed the import of delivering up to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, is evident not only from the concurring exposition of the ancients, who all interpret it of some disease to be inflicted on him by Satan (i), but also from the end of that delivery to him, which is, saith the apostle here, for the destruction of the flesh; and in the case of Hymenæus and Philetus, that they might learn not to blaspheme. Now, bodily afflictions plainly tend to mortify the flesh, and to awaken men, as oft as they came thus from a miraculous power, to consider of their ways, and quit those courses which thus subject them to the hand of God; whereas excommunication hath no apparent tendency to those ends, when no such dreadful issue follows from it; and therefore seems not to be all that is intended by this delivery up to Satan: though, I confess, the Jews expected some like effect of their excommunication, called Cherem, which, saith Buxtorf (k), ran in this form of words, Sint super ipsum plagæ magnæ, et fideles, morbi magni, et horribiles; let his strokes be great, and his diseases horrible. Moreover, the apostle speaks not of this as of a common act of discipline, which every presbyter might exercise, but as of that which required his extraordinary presence in the Spirit, and the power of Christ assisting them; and therefore seems to speak of it as an act which was to be attended with some miraculous effect.

Ver. 6. ᵉ Οὐ καλὸν τὸ καύχημα ὑμῶν.] Some Latin copies omit the negative, ὐ, whence, saith Dr Mills, this is undoubtedly the true reading; whereas it is retained by all the Greek commentators, and all the versions, by Hilary the deacon, and Cod. Alex. and so undoubtedly ought to be read: that also φύραμα ζυμοῖ, and not δυλοῖ, is the true reading here, and Gal. 5. 9. see proved Examen Millii here.

Ibid. ʰ Ζυμοῖ, leavens.] i. e. soureth and corrupteth; so Jerom, totam massam corrumpit, "it corrupts "the whole lump." Thus Plutarch saith (l), the priest of Jupiter might not touch leaven, because ἡ ζύμη δὲ γίγνεται ἐκ φθορᾶς, αὐτὴ καὶ φθορὰν τὸ φύραμα μιγνύμενη, leaven both arises from corruption, and corrupts the mass it is mixed with.

Ver. 7. ⁱ Ἐκκαθάρατε τὴν παλαιὰν ζύμην, purge out the old leaven.] Here the apostle speaks of cutting off the incestuous person, according to the metaphor of the Jews, whose saying is, that as a little leaven leavens the whole lump, so concupiscence corrupts the whole man; and that by the command to abstain from leaven, adultery is forbidden. This impurity he calls the old leaven to be purged out, because the Corinthians were infamous for it to a proverb, as Phavorinus, Hesychius, and Erasmus shew (m). He alludes also to the command to put away leaven out of their house, in commanding to put away the evil perſon; and to the paſchal feaſt, in giving this reaſon why the old leaven ſhould be put away, becauſe Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrificed for us; which being done once for all, we Chriſtians muſt ever keep the feaſt, by being always a new lump, pure from hypocriſy, which is the leaven of the Phariſees, Luke 12. 1.; from the leaven of falſe doctrine, and corrupting of the word of God, which is the leaven of the Phariſees and Sadducees, Matth. 16. 6. 12.; and from the leaven of wickedneſs, and wicked men, according to thoſe words of the pſalmiſt, Deliver me out of the hands of the wicked, and from the hands of the cruel, ורומץ, and the leavened, Pſal. 71. 4. i. e. the ſour, and the angry man, who corrupts and depraves others.

Ver. 8. [k] Μὴ ἐν ζύμῃ κακίας, not with the leaven of that malice;] Which is uſually carried on with diſſimulation of affection, and concern for piety, and ſo is Phariſaical; nor with that wickedneſs which prompts us to deceive another to his hurt. Thus Theophylact here ſaith, "He is κακὸς, an evil man, "who doth evil things; but he is πονηρὸς, who doth "them with profound ſubtilty, and deceitful or hurt-"ful counſel." Thus πονηροὶ καὶ γόητες, evil men and deceitful are joined together, as deceiving and being deceived, 2 Tim. 3. 13. But with the unleavened bread of ſincerity; which expreſſion ſeems to allude to the import of the Hebrew, מצות, or azyma, which, ſaith Bochart (n), ſignifies panes puros et ſinceros, pure and ſincere loaves, free from all mixture of leaven. And ſo this is an exhortation to reject ſuch falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers, as this doctor was, and others in the church of Corinth, who transformed themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 13. and yet were not ἐξ εἰλικρινείας, men of ſincerity, 2 Cor. 2. 17. but corrupters of the truth, who walked in craftineſs, handling the word of God deceitfully, 2 Cor. 4. 2. and by their ſubtilty ſeduced them from the ſimplicity which was in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 3. More intolerable is it in the Doctor to reject theſe words, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀζύμοις εἰλικρινείας καὶ ἀληθείας, upon the ſole authority of the Æthiopic verſion, they being owned by all the other verſions, by all the Greek ſcholiaſts, by Origen, Ed. Huet, in Jer. p. 143. in Matth. p. 170. in Joh. p. 163. 172. by Hilary D. by Jerom, l. 1. contra Pelag. F. 97.; and the very word Mattſoth, Azymos, might have taught him the pertinency and elegancy of theſe words; that ſignifying, ſaith Bochart, panes puros, et ſinceros, chap. 6. 5. He rejects ἀδὶ ὡς, upon the ſole authority of the ſame verſion, though it be owned by all the other verſions, and all the Greek and Latin commentators. See the miſchief of this licentiouſneſs, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 9. [l] Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, I had written to you in this epiſtle.] All the Greek commentators upon this place conclude he wrote this, οὐκ ἐν ἄλλῃ ἀλλ' ἐν ταύτῃ, not in another, but in this epiſtle. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Photius, and Theophylact on this place. And whoever heard among the ancients of more than fourteen epiſtles of St Paul? or of one word cited from an epiſtle of his to the Corinthians, ſuppoſed to be loſt? It cannot therefore be concluded hence, that any epiſtle of St Paul writ and ſent to the church of Corinth, is loſt; but only, that ſome things in this epiſtle were changed by him, before he ſent it to them. "But," ſaith Mr Clerc, "there is a contrariety in this in-"terpretation to all the rules of grammar," which it ſeems none of the Greek ſcholiaſts underſtood ſo well as he. Moreover, it is the common obſervation of grammarians, that the Aoriſt is ſo called, becauſe it is of an indefinite ſignification, and is ſometimes uſed for the perfect, ſometimes for the pluſquamperfect tenſe. So Herod laying hold of John, ἔδησεν αὐτὸν, had bound him, Matth. 14. 3.; he commanded his ſervants to be called, οἷς ἔδωκε τὸ ἀργύριον, to whom he had given the ſilver, Luke 19. 15.; Jeſus ἐμαρτύρησεν, had teſtified, John 4. 44.; ἐξῆνευσεν, he had withdrawn himſelf, John 5. 13.; Annas ἀπέστειλεν, had ſent him bound to Caiaphas, John 18. 24. 2. That τῇ, as Pavorinus ſaith, is put ἀντὶ τοῦ ταύτῃ, inſtead of this, he both confeſſes, and proves from Col. 4. 16. 1 Theſſ. 5. 27.; and where then is the contrariety of this interpretation to the rules of grammar?

Ver. 11. [m] Νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, but now I have written to you.]

Object. 1. This ſhews, ſaith Mr Clerc, that the apoſtle here ſpeaks of this epiſtle, and in ver. 9. of another.

Anſ. This only ſhews, that he ſpeaks of this epiſtle ſent, and ver. 9. of what he had writ in it, before he ſaw this cauſe to change his ſtyle, and to add to what he had ſaid before, a railer and a drunkard.

Object. 2. But, ſaith he, he had no where, in the former part of this, admoniſhed his Corinthians not to aſſociate with fornicators.

Anſ. Nor is it to be wondered, that he ſhould no where ſay that which he had changed into theſe words, ver. 11. And ſecondly, according to my expoſition, what he before had written, is contained in the immediate preceding words, ver. 10.

Ibid. [n] Ὀνομαζόμενος ἀδελφὸς, called a brother.] Some think the word ὀνομαζόμενος refers to the words following, and imports, that, if any man be defamed, and noted for the vices following, he is by the apoſtle's direction to be avoided: but the word plainly refers to the brother, and imports, that if any one, who hath profeſſed himſelf a Chriſtian, be found guilty of these crimes, he is to be avoided. Now, of all these sins, some among the Corinthians were still guilty; of fornication, 2 Cor. 12. 21.; of covetousness and extortion, 1 Cor. 6. 8. 2 Cor. 11. 20; they were idolaters, 1 Cor. 10. 7. 14. 20.; railers, or contumelious persons, 2 Cor. 10. 2. and 11. 19.; drunkards, 1 Cor. 11. 21.

Ibid. ° Μηδὲ συνεσθίειν, no not to eat.] According to the Jewish canons, it was not lawful to eat or drink with one that was under their cherem. Tertullian and Theodoret carry this farther. and say, cum talibus non vult nos cibum sumere, nedum eucharistiam, with such we must not eat at our own, much less at the Lord's table. But this, being a matter of discipline, can concern only those who are intrusted with the government of the church, not private communicants; though doubtless, he who was by excommuncation separated from the place where this and other sacred functions were performed, was also separated from the table of the Lord.

Ver. 12. ᵠ Τί γὰρ μοι καὶ τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν, for what have I to do to judge them that are without?) Here our critic Mr le Cl. is too bold; 1. When he quarrels with St Paul's Greek; asking, what construction this is, τί μοι κρίνειν? I answer none at all, but τί μοι προσήκει καὶ τοὺς ἔξω κρίνειν, what concerns it me to judge them that are without? is both good sense and good Greek. As in Latin, Quid mea refert? in English, What is it to me? So τί μοι ὄφελος, what profit (is it) to me? 1 Cor. 15. 32. τί γὰρ, what is it, to the truth of God? Rom. 3. 3. τί γὰρ, quid enim refert? Philip. 1 18. 2. It is horibly bold to add, without any, yea, against all copies, μὲν οὖν γε instead of κρίνειν οὐχί, which have no affinity either in letters or in sense. The words need none of these criticisms; they are taken from Deut. 13. 5. and 22. 21. and there they run thus, καὶ ἐξαιρεῖς τὸ πονηρὸν ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν, so shall you put away the evil from among you; and the Greek commentators read them thus, καὶ ἐξαιρεῖτε τὸ πονηρὸν, and you will put away the evil. So the whole sense runs thus, κέκρικα, I have judged already of the incestuous person, ver. 3. " and I judge " concerning all other persons, in profession Christi- " ans, but in practice fornicators, &c. that you ought " not to communicate with them: but I say no- " thing of the stepmother of this person, who " hath not owned the Christian faith; for what " belongs it to me to judge of them who are with- " out the church? Do not you in your church, and " civil assemblies, judge them only which are of " your body? But them who are without the church, " God who is the governor of all men, judgeth; " and by thus judging those that are within your " body, you will put away the evil, or this evil " person from you."

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. DAre any of you, having a matter (of complaint, suit, or action) against another, ᵃ go to law before the unjust, (the Heathen tribunals); and not (rather, submit it to be heard) before the saints?

2. Do ye not know (from Daniel), that the ᵇ saints (of the Most High shall receive the kingdom, Dan. 7. 27. and so) shall judge the world? And if the world shall be judged by you (Christians, and by Christian magistrates), are ye unworthy (of the smallest judicatures, or) to judge ᶜ the smallest matters?

3. Know ye not (from Christ), that we (endowed with the Holy Spirit) ᵈ shall judge (condemn, and cast out the prince of this world, and his evil) angels? ᵉ how much more (worthy are we, by the assistance of the same Spirit, to judge of the) things that pertain to this life?

4. If then ye have judgments (controversies, or judicial causes) of things pertaining to this life; (do ye) set them to judge who ᶠ are least esteemed in (and by) the church? (i. e. the Heathen magistrates.)

5. I speak (this) to your shame; is it so that (by this action you should even confess before the Heathen, that) there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6. But brother goeth to law with (his Christian) brother, and that before the unbelievers; (as if there were not among them one believer sufficient to decide their controversies?)

7. Now therefore ᵍ there is utterly a fault (or a defect) among you, because ye go to law (about these matters) one with another: why do you not rather take wrong? why do you not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8. Nay, (so far are you from this Christian temper of bearing injuries with patience, that) you do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9. (And what will be the issue of these evil practices?) Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind,

10. Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11. And such were some of you; but ye are washed (by baptism), but ye are sanctified, but ʰ ye are justified, in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12. (And whereas your false teachers encourage you you to eat things offered to idols, in the idol-temples, chap. 10. 23. and to indulge unto exceſs, becauſe all meats are lawful; I grant that) all (theſe) things are lawful to me, but all things (lawful) are not expedient (to be done, eſpecially when tending to my brother's ruin, or my own); all things (of this nature) are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any, (ſo as that I cannot refrain from them in ſuch caſes.)

13. Meats (indeed are) for the belly, and the belly for meats, (nor have either of them any other uſe); but (this is only for this preſent life; the time will come, when) [i] God ſhall deſtroy both it and them. And (but now whereas ſome extend theſe words, All things are lawful for me, to fornication alſo; know ye that) [k] the body is not (at all) for fornication, but for (the ſervice of) the Lord, (the head of the body); and the Lord for (the reſurrection and glorification of) the body.

14. And (accordingly) God hath both raiſed up the Lord, and will alſo raiſe up us by his own power.

15. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt (your head? 1 Cor. 12. 12. 27.): ſhall I then [l] take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? (as I by fornication ſhall moſt ſurely do), God forbid.

16. What? know ye not, that he who is joined to an harlot, is one body (with her)? For two, ſaith he, ſhall (by that action) be one fleſh, (as doing that, by which, according to God's inſtitution, two are made one fleſh.)

17. But he that is joined to the Lord, is one ſpirit (with him, as being partaker of his Spirit; for by one Spirit we Chriſtians are all united to this head, Rom. 8. 11. 1 Cor. 12. 13.)

18. Flee (therefore) fornication; (for) every (other) ſin that a man doth, is without (the pollution of) the body; but he that committeth fornication, [m] ſinneth againſt (and polluteth) his own body.

19. What, know ye not that [n] your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, (and) which you have of God; and you are not your own, (he having by his Spirit taken poſſeſſion of you, and ſealed you up as his own proper goods.)

20. (You, I ſay, are not your own): for you are bought with a price, (even the precious blood of Chriſt), [o] therefore glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are God's, (by right of purchaſe, and the poſſeſſion of his Spirit.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Verſe 1. [a] Κρίνεσθαι ἐπὶ τῶν ἀδίκων, go to law before the unjuſt.] The ſaying of the Jews is this, That (o) "he who goes to law before "the tribunal of the Gentiles, profanes the name "of God, and gives honour to an idol; that he is "to be accounted a wicked man, and as one that "hath reproached and blaſphemed, and lifted up "his hand againſt the law of Moſes." Accordingly, the apoſtle here repreſents this action in the Chriſtian, as a reproach to the ſociety, and to the Spirit of wiſdom which was poured out upon the church, ver. 5. 6. and as that which gave occaſion to the Heathens to obſerve in the Chriſtians a contentious ſpirit.

Ver. 2. [b] Οἱ ἅγιοι τὸν κόσμον κρινοῦσι, the ſaints ſhall judge the world.] We often read that even the beſt of ſaints ſhall ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, Matth. 25. 33. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rev. 20. 12.; that they ſhall be aſſeſſors with Chriſt then, we read not; the words of Chriſt, Matth. 19. 28. in what ſenſe ſoever taken, prove it not; they being ſpoken not of all ſaints, of whom the apoſtle here ſpeaks, but of the twelve apoſtles only. Theſe words muſt therefore admit of one of theſe two ſenſes, viz. That there ſhall be Chriſtian magiſtrates, who ſhall be governors, and ſo judges of the world, according to the prophecy of Iſaiah, That kings ſhall be their nurſing-fathers, and queens their nurſing-mothers, Iſ. 49. 23.: and that of Daniel, chap. 7. 18. The ſaints of the Moſt High ſhall take the kingdom; or, that they ſhall judge and condemn the world by the faith preached for a teſtimony to them, as Noah did, Heb. 11. 7. (whence is the goſpel ſo often called the teſtimony of Chriſt, Matth. 10. 18. and 24. 14. Luke 21. 13. 1 Cor. 1. 6. and 2. 1. 2 Theſſ. 1. 10. 1 Tim. 2. 6. 2 Tim. 1. 8.); and by the Spirit given to convince the world of ſin, of righteouſneſs and judgment, John 16. 8. in which ſenſe our Lord ſaith, Now is the judgment of this world, John 12. 31.

Ibid. [c] Κριτηρίων ἐλαχίστων, the ſmalleſt matters.] This word κριτήρια here, and ver. 4. ſaith Grotius, doth not ſignify tribunals, but controverſies and judicial cauſes. Accordingly the βιωτικὰ κριτήρια, judgments concerning things of this life, ver. 4. are by Photius rendered, τὰ βιωτικὰ φιλονικήματα, καὶ τὰς πρὸς ἀλλήλους δίκας καὶ ἔριδας, their controverſies, contentions, and judicial cauſes againſt each other, about theſe matters.

Ver. 3. [d] Ἀγγέλους κρινοῦμεν, We ſhall judge angels.] i. e. evil angels, ſay all the Greek ſchoaliſts; and this the Chriſtians gloriouſly did by expelling them from their ſeats, and their dominions, and forcing them to confeſs before their votaries, they were only devils. See the general preface, sect. 18. in which sense, saith our Saviour, Now is the prince of this world cast out; the prince of this world is judged, John 12. 31. and 16. 11.

Ibid. [o] Μήτι γε βιωτικά,] How much more, μήτι γε πόσῳ γε μᾶλλον, Hesychius, Phavorinus, and Photius apud Oecumenium.

Ver. 4. [p] Τοὺς ἐξουθενημένους, them who are least esteemed.] That the ἐξουθενημένοι are the Heathens, hath been shewed, note on 1 Cor. 1. 27. 28. Moreover, it is manifest that these words are to be read by way of question, as in the paraphrase; or by way of charge against them, thus, "If you still retain your secu-"lar judicatures, or tribunals, you set them to be "judges over you, who are despised in the church." For the apostle doth not here command them to do this, but sharply doth rebuke them for it, saying, I speak this to your shame: And this he doth, by shewing that this in effect signified, that there was not a wise man among them.

Ver. 7. [q] Ὅλως ἥττημα, there is utterly a defect.] Among you, that you go to law at all, it being either, on the one side, want of patience and Christian contentment, that you do not rather bear some injuries, than thus seek to redress them; or, on the other, covetousness and injustice, which moves you to do wrong to, and defraud your brethren.

Ver. 11. [r] Ἀλλ' ἐδικαιώθητε ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, &c. but ye are justified in the name of our Lord.] Here is the figure called Hyperbaton, for we are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and sanctified by the Spirit of our God. So Philem. 5. Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus Christ, and towards all saints; i. e. which faith thou hast towards Christ, and love to his saints. Moreover, whereas Mr Cl. here saith, "That to be "justified is the same thing with being washed, or "sanctified, and that to be so by the name of the "Lord, is to be so by taking upon them the pro-"fession of the Christian religion in baptism;" he is utterly out in both: for sure I am he cannot produce one passage in all St Paul's epistles, where δικαιωθῆναι, to be justified, bears any such sense; but it still signifies to be absolved from the guilt of sin, and approved as righteous, either at present, or before God's tribunal. And so the name of Christ, when we are said to be justified by it, must signify, not the profession of Christianity, but faith in Christ dying for us, and be the same with ἐν αὐτῷ, in him, for in him shall all that believe be justified, &c. Acts 13. 39. Moreover, justification here is ascribed to the name of Christ, i. e. to faith in him; sanctification, to the Spirit of God; which shews they cannot signify the same thing; for where the cause is different, the effect must be so also.

Ver. 13. [s] Ὁ Θεὸς καταργήσει, God shall destroy both it and them.] From these words that opinion, not of Origen only, but of Athanasius (p), St Basil (q), Hilary (r), Theodoret (s), and others, seems to be confirmed, that at the resurrection, when we shall neither eat nor drink, marry, nor be given in marriage, Matth. 22. 30. there will be, as no meats, the world being then burnt up; so no belly, nec quæ sunt sub ventre, nor any difference of sexes.

Ibid. [t] Τὸ δὲ σῶμα οὐ τῇ πορνείᾳ, the body is not for fornication.] The heresy of the Nicolaitans held, that it was lawful to eat things offered to idols, and to commit fornication, Rev. 2. 14. 15. as Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Theodoret, and St Austin testify. See the notes on 2 Pet. 2. and the epistle of St Jude. And therefore Theodoret introduces the words thus, τοῦτο λέγεις, This thou sayest in defence of thy eating thus, and of thy fornication, All things are lawful for me.

Ver. 15. [u] Ἄρας οὖν.] Taking them then from Christ, shall I make them the members of an harlot? For, saith Hilary here, Membra adhærentia meretrici desinunt esse membra Christi: "The members which "cleave to an harlot, cease to belong to Christ."

Ver. 18. [w] Εἰς τὸ ἴδιον σῶμα, against his own body.] Other sins pollute the heart and the soul, but those of fornication and uncleanness do properly pollute the body. Hence are those actions styled always in the scripture, pollutions; for "though all sins," saith Hilary, "render a man carnal, yet is this more "especially desiderium carnis, quod sordibus macu-"latam animam cum corpore tradit gehennæ, carnal "concupiscence, which exposes to hell the soul, "together with the body, defiled by its filthiness." This argument against fornication, from the defilement of the body by it, plainly shews, that it is a sin against the law of nature, and is a fault in man, as man.

Ver. 19. [x] Τὸ σῶμα ὑμῶν ναὸς, &c. your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost.] Two things concur to make up the notion of a temple.

1. That the Divinity should either dwell in, or give some signal tokens of his especial presence there. Hence was the temple of Jerusalem called the house of God's habitation, and the tabernacle, the house where the Divinity or Shechinah dwelt in the midst of them. Accordingly, I am with you, Hag. 2. 4. is there interpreted, ver. 5. My Spirit is in the midst of you, or, among you. Hence is the tabernacle styled the place of the habitation of God's glory, Psal. 26. 8. and from thence he is said to shine forth, when he gave

gave them a teſtimony of his gracious preſence. Now the Holy Spirit being that in the New Teſtament which anſwers to the Shechinah in the Old, he dwelling in the bodies, and being preſent in the aſſemblies of the ſaints, doth make them a ſpiritual temple, or habitation of the Lord, Eph. 2. 22.

2*dly*, That it be a place dedicated, and appropriated to his uſe. Hence were the tabernacle and temple, ſo often ſtyled the houſe and temple of the Lord, and by him my houſe, according to thoſe words of Chriſt, Wiſt you not that I muſt be ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός; in my Father's houſe? For as to be (t) ἐν τοῖς τοῦ διὸς, is to be in the temple of Jupiter, ſo to be ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρὸς, muſt ſignify to be in my Father's temple; and therefore, ſaith the apoſtle, you are not your own, as being dedicated and appropriated to God's uſe and ſervice.

He alſo ſaith, If any man corrupt, or deſecrate, the temple of God, him will God deſtroy, for the temple of God is holy, 1 Cor. 3. 17. i. e. appropriated and conſecrated to his uſe; and he exhorts all Chriſtians to abſtain from all idolatrous and profane actions by this inquiry, What communion hath the temple of God with idols? proving all Chriſtians to be the temple of God, and ſo appropriated to him by theſe words, You are the temple of God, as God hath ſaid, I will dwell and walk in them; I will be their God, and they ſhall be to me a people, 2 Cor. 6. 16.

Excellent therefore is the inference of Tertullian (u), "That ſince all Chriſtians are become the "temple of God, by virtue of his Holy Spirit ſent "into their hearts, and conſecrating their bodies to "his ſervice, we ſhould make chaſtity the keeper "of this ſacred houſe, and ſuffer nothing unclean "or profane to enter into it, leſt that God who "dwelleth in it, being offended, ſhould deſert his "houſe thus defiled."

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. NOW (to ſpeak) concerning the things whereof you wrote unto me, (viz.) [a] It is good for a man not to touch a woman, (i. e. to live unmarried, or without the uſe of a woman, or it is not good to marry, Matth. 19. 10. This I grant, as Chriſt did to him, who, having the gift of continency, can receive the ſaying.)

2. Nevertheleſs, to avoid (that) fornication (which is ſo common at Corinth, and ſo freely practiſed by the Nicolatians, under the pretence that matrimony is a thing indifferent), let every man have (ἐχέτω, retain) his own wife, and let every woman have her own huſband.

3. Let (alſo) the huſband render to the wife due benevolence, (i. e. the conjugal duty), and likewiſe alſo the wife to the huſband.

4. (For) the wife [b] hath not power over her own body, but the huſband; and likewiſe alſo the huſband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5. Defraud ye not (therefore) one another (of this benevolence), except it be with (mutual) conſent for a time, that ye may give yourſelves [c] to faſting and prayer, and (then) [d] come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6. But I ſpeak this (which I am now about to ſay of continence, ver. 2.) [e] by permiſſion, and not by commandment (of the Lord, injoining continence, ver. 25.)

7. For I would that all men were (unmarried), even as I myſelf (am); but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8. I ſay therefore [f] to the unmarried (men), and (to the) widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I (do.)

9. But if they [g] cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn, (or be inquieted with filthy luſtings.)

10. And to the married I command, yet not I (only), but the Lord (alſo, Matth. 19. 9.), [h] Let not the wife depart (or ſeparate herſelf) from her huſband.

11. But if ſhe depart, (Gr. ἐὰν δὲ χωρισθῇ, but if ſhe be ſeparated), let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her huſband; and let not the huſband put away (or divorce) his wife.

12. But to the reſt (you mention to me, who are coupled with unbelievers), ſpeak I, [i] not the Lord, (by any deciſion he hath made, or any precept he hath given in this caſe, ver 25. as in the former inſtance); If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13. And the woman which hath an huſband that believeth not, and (yet) he be pleaſed to dwell with her, [k] let her not leave him.

(u) Cum omnes templum ſimus Dei, illato in nos et conſecrato Spiritu Sancto, ejus templi æditua et antiſtita pudicitia eſt, qui nihil immundum nec profanum inferri ſinat, ne Deus ille, qui inhabitat, inquinatam ſedem offenſus derelinquat. De cultu fœmin. l. 2. c. 1.

14. For

14. For the unbelieving husband is (Gr. hath been) sanctified [1] by the (believing) wife, and the unbelieving wife is (Gr. hath been) sanctified by the (believing) husband; [m] else were your children (seminally) unclean, (and so not to be admitted to the Christian covenant), but now are they holy.

15. But if the unbelieving (person will) depart, (and so break off the matrimonial duty), let him depart; a brother or sister [n] is not under bondage, (Gr. is not inslaved) in such cases: but God hath called us to peace, (and therefore we must give no occasion of quarrel with, or separation from so near a relative, or of disturbance of the family.)

16. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether (by dwelling with him) thou shalt (not be a means to) save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt (not, by dwelling thus with her, be a means to) save thy wife?

17. [o] But (whether this be so, or not) as God hath distributed (the gift of continence) to every man, (or not), as the Lord hath called every one (to the faith, married to an unbeliever, or servant to them, or not), so let him walk, (doing nothing on his part contrary to those relations): and so ordain I in all churches (which I have converted.)

18. Is any man called, being circumcised? [p] let him not (endeavour to) become (as one) uncircumcised: is any (man) called in uncircumcision? let him not be circumcised.

19. Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, (that renders us more or less acceptable in the sight of God), but the keeping of the commandments of God (is all in all.)

20. Let every man (still) abide in the same calling in which he was called (to the faith, not thinking himself obliged by it to quit his calling.)

21. Art thou called, being a servant? care not for it; but if thou canst (lawfully) be made free, use it rather: (care not, I say),

22. For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman, (being delivered by him from his bondage to sin, John 8. 36.); likewise he that is called, being free, (nevertheless) is Christ's servant.

23. [q] Ye are bought with a price, (Gr. have you been bought with a price from your slavery?), be not ye (again) the servants of men (who are unbelievers, 1 Tim. 6. 2.)

24. (Otherwise), brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein [r] abide with God.

25. Now [s] concerning virgins, I have no (particular) commandment of the Lord; [t] yet I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be (found) faithful (in my apostolical function, by advising still what is best and most expedient in those cases to be done.)

26. I suppose therefore that this is good [u] for the present distress (of Christians, daily subject to persecution), I say, that it is good for a man so to be, (i. e. a virgin still.)

27. Art thou (then) bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed; art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28. But if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned; nevertheless, such (in these times of persecution) shall have (more) trouble in the flesh; but I spare you, (not thinking it therefore fit to lay the yoke of celibacy upon you.)

29. But this I say, brethren, (that) the time (of this life) is short; it remains (then), that both they that have wives, be as though they had none;

30. And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31. And they that use this world, [x] as not abusing it, (or as those that use it not): for the fashion of this world passeth away.

32 But (this advice I give, because) I would have you without carefulness (for the things of the world; now so it is that) he that is unmarried careth (only) for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33. But he that is married, careth (also) for the things that are of the world, (and is solicitous) how he may please his wife.

34. [y] There is (the same) difference also between a wife and a virgin: (for) the unmarried woman careth (only) for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit; but she that is married, careth (also) for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35. And (of) this (difference) I speak for your own profit, not that I may cast a snare upon you, (by restraining you wholly from marriage), but for that which is comely, and that you may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36. But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely towards his virgin, [z] if she pass the flower of her age, (Gr. if it be over-aged), and need so require, (or he thinks this ought to be done), let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them (who so think) marry.

37. [a] Nevertheless, he that stands stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed (or determined) in his heart that he will keep his virgin, (i. e. virginity), doth well.

38. So then, he that giveth (her) in marriage doth well, but he that giveth (her) not in marriage doth better. (Or thus, so that he that marrieth doth well, but he that marrieth not doth better.)

39. The wife is bound by the law, ſo long as her huſband liveth; but if her huſband be dead, ſhe is at liberty to be married to whom ſhe will, only (ſhe ought to do it) [b] in the Lord

40. [c] But ſhe is happier if ſhe (can, and therefore doth) ſo abide, after my judgment; and I think alſo I have the Spirit of God, (to direct me even in this judgment; δοκῶ δὲ κἀγὼ, I think that I alſo have the Spirit of God.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VII.

Verſe 1. [a] Καλὸν ἀνθρώπῳ γυναικὸς μὴ ἅπτεσθαι, it is good for a man not to touch a woman.] It was an old philoſophical queſtion, An uxor ducenda eſſet? Whether a man ſhould marry? in which many of them held the negative, as Bion and Antiſthenes (x), who ſaid, An handſome wife would be common, one deformed a puniſhment, ὁ λοιπὸν ἄρα, therefore we ſhould have none. Hence that of Menander (y), ὁ γαμεῖς ἐάνγε μὴ ἔχῃς, if thou art wiſe, thou wilt not marry. This was held out of different ſentiments, as, v. g. by ſome out of good liking to that celebrated doctrine of Plato, Κοινὰς μὲν γυναικὰς, κοινὰς δὲ εἶναι παῖδας, that women and children ſhould be common; and this doctrine was improved by the Nicolaitans into all manner of impurity, who therefore did ἀναιδῶς ἐκτρυφῶσιν, commit whoredom without ſhame. But others of the ſchool of Pythagoras refuſed to touch a woman, as being an impediment to philoſophy, and that which defiled that purity they aimed at. Hence Apollonius (z) the magician is repreſented as a man of ſo great chaſtity, γυναικὸς ὅτι καθαρὸν ἑαυτὸν μίξεως διὰ τέλος ἤγαγε, that he lived ever free from converſe with women. And Porphyry ſaith (a), That a philoſopher muſt not marry; that to live the intellectual life, we muſt abſtain from women, all uſe of them being a defilement. The word γυνὴ, which in this chapter ſtill ſignifies a wife, ſeems to refer this queſtion to the firſt opinion; but the phraſe, γυναικὸς μὴ ἅπτεσθαι, inclines us to refer it to the latter; the firſt queſtion being too groſs to be propounded by the Corinthians to the apoſtle; the ſecond being a queſtion then in vogue, on the account of which Apollonius and the Pythagoreans obtained great repute.

Ver. 4. [b] Οὐκ ἐξουσιάζει, hath not power.] Here is a plain argument againſt polygamy; for if the man hath not power over his own body, he cannot give the power of it to another, and ſo he cannot marry another; nor could his wife, excluſively to him, have the power of his body, if he could give his body to another.

Ver. 5. [c] Τῇ νηστείᾳ καὶ τῇ προσευχῇ, to faſting and prayer.] The apoſtle ſpeaks not here of ordinary prayer, which is the daily work of Chriſtians, but of extraordinary devotions on ſome ſpecial occaſions; for daily prayers, public or private, needed no ſuch conſent of parties, nor by them could either of them be defrauded of their due benevolence. Vain therefore are the queſtions of St Jerom, Quale illud bonum eſt quod orare prohibet, quare non ingrediuntur eccleſias? as if the bed undefiled could hinder mens prayers, or their going to church. Vain is his inference, Si ſacerdoti ſemper orandum eſt, ergo ſemper carendum matrimonio, "If the prieſt muſt always "pray, he muſt never marry;" for to pray always and without ceaſing, is alſo the duty of the laity, Luke 18. 1. Eph. 6. 18. 1 Theſſ. 5. 17.

Ibid. [d] Καὶ πάλιν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνέρχεσθε, and come together again.] This chapter affords many arguments againſt the vow of continence, and thoſe perpetual divorces from the bed, which are ſo commonly practiſed by the Papiſts, on pretence of religion: For, 1. The apoſtle here admits of no ſeparation of the wife and huſband, but only with condition that they come together again to perform conjugal duties, as the word συνιέναι doth import, not allowing a perpetual ſeparation, no not that they may give themſelves to prayer and faſting; and that for a perpetual reaſon, at leaſt whilſt an age capable of temptation, and which may be ſubject to incontinence, remains. 2. He declares the gift of continence not to be common to all, but proper to ſome only, as being the proper gift of God, and therefore not to be gotten by our induſtry: I would, ſaith he, that all men were unmarried, even as I myſelf am; but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that: He then that can receive it, ſaith our Saviour, let him receive it, Matth. 19. 12. Whence it is natural to conclude, that all men cannot. 3. Notwithſtanding the preſent neceſſity which rendered it ſo deſirable, that they might ſerve the Lord without diſtraction, and which made their condition better and more happy, who had the gift of continence, he abſtains from laying any obligation to celibacy upon them, leſt he ſhould lay a ſnare on their conſciences, ver. 35. and bring them under a neceſſity of burning, ver. 9. much leſs would he have urged young men and women to that vow, which lays a greater snare, and an absolute necessity upon them, rather to burn than marry. And, lastly, he supposes, that some cannot contain, ver. 9.; some have a necessity to marry, and need so requires them to do, ver. 36. 37. This respects not what the apostle had said, but what he was about to say of continence, it being very usual with the apostle to make this preface to what he was about to say: so ver. 29. of this chapter, τοῦτο δὲ φημι, But this I say, brethren, the time is short; chap. 1. 12. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, But this I say, viz. that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; chap. 11. 17. τοῦτο δὲ παραγγέλλων, But as to this I am about to declare unto you, I praise you not; 1 Thess. 4. 15. see Gal. 3. 17. Blot out therefore the note here, and substitute this in the room of it.

Ver. 8. [i] Ἀγάμοις, the unmarried men.] The apostle begins his discourse concerning the virgin man and woman, ver. 25.; here therefore he must speak of the unmarried man, or the man loosed from a wife, and of the widow, as ver. 11. Ἄγαμος is the woman who must not embrace a second marriage; and, perhaps this only was St Paul's case, as may, saith Grotius, be probably collected from this place, and may be argued from the testimony of Clemens of Alexandria (b), and the interpolated Ignatius, who both reckon St Paul among the apostles that were married, and from the strictness of the Jewish canons, which obliged all Jews to marry at twenty.

Ver. 9. [k] Εἰ δὲ οὐκ ἐγκρατεύονται γαμησάτωσαν, if they contain not, let them marry.] Had the apostle then known of any vow of continence, or any ecclesiastical law rendering it a damnable sin, and a renouncing their first faith to marry, though they burned, he could not so generally have propounded and prescribed marriage as the remedy of that disease, but would have restrained his words, as Esthius here doth, Iis quibus conjugii contrahendi potestas esset, id est, qui a lege et voto continentiæ sunt liberi, to those who were free from the law and vow of celibacy: but I believe he knew of none whom God's law had placed under a necessity of burning; that is, say the Greek commentators, of being subject to the insults of lust.

Ver. 10. [l] Γυναῖκα ἀπὸ ἀνδρὸς μὴ χωρισθῆναι, let not the wife depart from her husband.] Note, That the apostle speaks here of the married persons, who had mutually embraced the Christian faith, forbidding them to divorce themselves, except for cause of fornication, as it was customary for women as well as men to do, both amongst the Jews and Romans. Dr Lightfoot on this place cites this canon from R. Juchanan, The wife hath power to put away her husband; and he gives instances of it in Herodias divorcing herself from Philip, and Drusilla from Azizas; and our Lord supposes this was practised, in these words, If a woman put away her husband, and marry another, she commits adultery, Mark 10. 12. That this was common among the Heathens, is apparent from that saying of Seneca (c), "That none blushes "at it, because there was scarce a marriage with-"out it." Hence had they divers names for the divorce of both kinds; for the wife being after marriage carried to the house of her husband, her divorce was called ἀποπεμπὴ (d), a sending her away from his house; and because the woman, being not mistress of the house, could not do this to the man, but only leave his house, her divorce was called ἀπόλυσις, a leaving of the house, though it was conceived in the usual form, Res tuas tibi habeto. See note on 1 Tim. 3. 2. 12. And therefore, though the word ἀφιέναι be used both ver. 12. and 13. it was not amiss in our translators, when it related to the man, to render it, let him not ἀποπέμπειν, put, or send her away, and when it related to the woman, to render it, let her not ἀπολύειν, leave him. That here the apostle condemns these divorces with our Saviour, is evident, because he saith, he speaks this by commandment of the Lord.

Ver. 12. [m] Οὐκ ὁ Κύριος, not the Lord.] St Paul doth not say this, to intimate that this direction was given by him, only as a man using his natural reason to direct them to what he thought best, but not as delivering the mind of Christ; for he had before declared the contrary, saying, We have the mind of Christ, chap. 2. 16. and after doth it in these words, If any man think himself a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, chap. 14. 37. But he speaks thus to declare, our Lord, in his discourse touching divorce, had not decided the case de imparibus conjugiis, of the marriage of a believer with an infidel, but left this to the decision of the apostles, by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, promised to lead them into all truth. Theophylact here notes, that this and the former verse speak of those who were both infidels when they first married; for, saith he, οὐδ' ὅλως ἐξὸν πρὸς ἄπιστον ζευγνύσθαι, it was not lawful for a Chriſtian to be joined to an infidel.

Ver. 13. [k] Μὴ ἀφίτω αὐτὸν, let her not leave him.] This caution was needful, becauſe the primitive Chriſtians were ſometimes in doubt of this, as finding that the Jews did null all marriages of the holy ſeed with infidels; and hence conjecturing that they alſo might be obliged to do ſo, and thinking it ἀσεβὲς, an impious thing to cohabit with an Heathen, eſpecially if he were alſo addicted to unnatural luſts, and that by being ὁμόκοιτοι, bed-fellows to ſuch a one, they communicated with him in his iniquity and idolatry; and concluding, that as he who was joined to an harlot, was one body with her, ſo ſhe that was joined to an idolater was one body with him. Hence Juſtin Martyr ſaith of one of theſe Chriſtian women, not without ſeeming approbation of the fact, that (e) τὸ λεγόμενον παρ' ὑμῖν ἐπιτρόπιον δοῦσα ἐχωρίσθη, giving him a bill of divorce, ſhe was ſeparated from him.

Ver. 14. [l] Ἐν τῇ γυναικὶ, by the wife.] Uxoris gratia, becauſe of the wife; i. e. he is to be reputed as ſanctified, becauſe he is one fleſh with her who is holy. So ἐδούλωσεν Ἰσραὴλ ἐν γυναικὶ, καὶ ἐν γυναικὶ ἐφυλάξατο, Iſrael ſerved for a wife, and for a wife he kept ſheep, Hoſ. 12. 12. I deſire that you faint not, ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί μου, by reaſon of my tribulations, Eph. 3. 13. and that no man be ſhaken ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις, by reaſon of theſe tribulations, 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. See Naldius in the 23d ſignification of the particle Beth. Or we may take theſe words in the ſenſe of the Greek interpreters, viz. the unbelieving huſband hath been ſanctified to the believing wife, by his conſent to cohabit with her, and to have ſeed by her.

Ibid. [m] Ἐπεὶ ἄρα τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι, νῦν δὲ ἅγιά ἐστιν, elſe were your children unclean, but now they are holy.] He doth not ſay, elſe were your children baſtards, but now they are legitimate; but elſe were they unclean, i. e. Heathen children, not to be owned as an holy ſeed, and therefore not to be admitted into covenant with God, as belonging to his holy people. That this is the true import of the words ἀκάθαρτα and ἅγια, will be apparent from the ſcriptures, in which the Heathens are ſtyled the unclean, in oppoſition to the Jews in covenant with God, and therefore ſtyled an holy people. So Iſ. 35. 8. ὁδὸς καθαρὰ ἔσται ἐκεῖ, καὶ ὁδὸς ἁγία κληθήσεται, an high way ſhall be there, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs, ἀκάθαρτος, the unclean ſhall not paſs over it; but the redeemed of the Lord ſhall walk therein, ver. 9. And chap. 52. 1. God ſaith of Jeruſalem the holy city, There ſhall no more come into thee, ἀπερίτμητος καὶ ἀκάθαρτος, the uncircumciſed and unclean. So Acts 10. 28. You know that it is unlawful for a Jew to keep company with a man of another nation; but God hath ſhewed me that I ſhould call no man common, or ἀκάθαρτον, unclean. Whence it is evident, that the Jews looked upon themſelves as δοῦλοι Θεοῦ καθαροὶ, the clean ſervants of God, Neh. 2. 20. and upon all Heathens, and their offſpring, as unclean, by reaſon of their want of circumciſion, the ſign of the covenant. Hence, whereas it is ſaid, that Joſhua circumciſed the people, chap. 5. 4. the Septuagint ſay, περιεκάθαρεν, he cleanſed them. Moreover, of Heathen children, and ſuch as are not circumciſed, they ſay, they are not born in holineſs; but they on the contrary are ſtyled, Zeray Kedoſh, σπέρμα ἅγιον, an holy ſeed, Iſ. 6. 13. Ezra 9. 2. and the offſpring from them, and from thoſe proſelytes which had embraced their religion, are ſaid to be born כקרושה in holineſs, and ſo thought fit to be admitted to circumciſion, or baptiſm, or whatſoever might initiate them into the Jewiſh church; and therefore to this ſenſe of the words holy and unclean, the apoſtle may be here moſt rationally ſuppoſed to allude, declaring that the ſeed of holy perſons, the offſpring born ἐκ τῶν ἁγιασμένων, of ſaints, as (f) Chriſtians are ſtill called in the New Teſtament, are alſo holy. And though one of the parents be ſtill a Heathen, yet is the denomination to be taken from the better, and ſo their offſpring are to be eſteemed not as Heathens, i. e. unclean, but holy, as all Chriſtians by denomination are. So Clemens Alexandrinus (g) infers, ſaying, "I ſup-"poſe the ſeed of thoſe that are holy is holy, ac-"cording to that ſaying of the apoſtle Paul, The "unbelieving wife is ſanctified by the huſband," &c. Hence thence the argument for infant-baptiſm runs thus. If the holy ſeed among the Jews was therefore to be circumciſed, and be made federally holy by receiving the ſign of the covenant, and being admitted into the number of God's holy people, becauſe they were born in ſanctity, or were ſeminally holy; for the root being holy, ſo are the branches alſo: then, by like reaſon, the holy ſeed of Chriſtians ought to be admitted to baptiſm, and receive the ſign of the Chriſtian covenant, the laver of regeneration, and ſo be entered into the ſociety of the Chriſtian church. The ſubſtance of this argument is in Tertullian de anima, cap. 39. and in the author of the queſtions, ad Antiochum, q. 114.

Ver. 14. Elſe were their children ἀκάθαρτα, unclean, &c.] I think that the other tranſlation, elſe were their children baſtards, is not ſufficiently confuted by ſaying, that then the argument will not prove what the apoſtle had aſſerted; for what more strongly enforceth the believer of each sex to own that they may lawfully cohabit still as man and wife, than this inference, that otherwise they must own that the guilt of whoredom lay upon them both; and that their children were born ἐκ πόρνης, i. e. bastards, Deut. 23. 2. but then the word used for a bastard by this apostle, being νόθος, Heb. 12. 8. and the word γνήσιος, being the proper word for a legitimate offspring, had the apostle intended such a sense, he would have used the words, which in the Greek writers are generally used in that sense, and not such words as in the Septuagint, and in the Jewish language, always have a relation to fœderal holiness, or the want of it; but none at all to the legitimacy, or spuriousness of the birth.

Ver. 15. [n] Οὐ δεδούλωται, is not under bondage.] That it, saith Hilary (b), "The Christian in this case is "free to marry to another Christian." "He is free," saith Photius (i), "to depart, because the other "hath dissolved the marriage." "If he depart," say Chrysostom (k), Oecumenius, and Theophylact, "because thou wilt not communicate with him "in his infidelity, be thou divorced, or quit the "yoke; for it is better that thy marriage should "be dissolved, than thy piety." These fathers therefore plainly supposed, that the laws which say, He that marries her which is put away committeth adultery, Matth. 5. 32. and that the wife is bound to the husband as long as he liveth, ver. 39. Rom. 7. 1. 2. 3. concerned only equal marriages; partly because the apostle saith, he had no commandment of the Lord to produce for the decision of this case; and partly because he doth not here say, as in the case of equal marriages, ver. 11. ἐὰν χωρισθῇ, if she be separated, let her remain unmarried. It is the opinion of Mr Thorndike (l), that the apostle looked upon marriage made by persons before they were Christians, to lay no stricter obligations on them, than the laws which they were under, when the marriage was contracted, designed to lay upon them. But this seems not consistent with our Lord's decision touching divorce and polygamy; for though they were allowed both by Jews and Gentiles, our Saviour pronounces them disagreeable to the first institution of matrimony by God; and these laws binding all that were Christians, no Christian convert could, after his or her conversion, do any thing on their parts opposite to them; and whatsoever liberty of divorce the laws of Jew or Gentile might allow of, the apostle will not permit the believing wife or husband to make use of them by beginning the separation, ver. 12. 13. 15. If then these words, A brother or sister is not in bondage in these cases, do import they are not obliged to live unmarried, such a total and perpetual desertion must dissolve the matrimony, and render the deserting person as dead unto the other. But though all the Romanists, and many of the reformed, allow of this interpretation of the fathers, it must be dangerous to admit of it, without this restriction. A brother or sister is not inslaved, after all means of peace and reconciliation have been in vain attempted, and the unbeliever hath entered into another marriage, or rather hath dissolved the former by adultery, as may well be supposed of those Heathens who thus separated from their Christian mates. And this interpretation seems to be confirmed, from the former words relating to the case of the believing wives and husbands; if they depart, let them remain unmarried; it being not to be supposed that believers would dissolve the bond of matrimony by adultery. Therefore the apostle seems to grant this in the case of unbelievers departing from Christians on the account of their faith.

Ver. 17. [o] Εἰ μὴ, but:] Or rather, if not. So אִם לֹא and אִם Gen. 18. 21. ἢ δὲ μὴ, and if it be not so, see chap. 24. 8. and 42. 16. 37. Job 9. 24. εἰ δὲ μὴ, and if it be not so, who will make me a liar? and chap. 24. 25. John 14. 2. εἰ δὲ μὴ, if it were not so, I would have told you. See Naldius de partic. Heb. p. 92. To others, εἰ δὲ μὴ, seems to be misplaced, as being added to the beginning of this verse, when indeed it belongs to the close of the former, thus, How knowest thou, O man, εἰ τὴν γυναῖκα σώσεις, whether thou shalt save thy wife, or not? And so the ver. 17. will begin ἑκάστῳ, as the 20th and the 24th verses, which answer to it, do.

Ver. 23. [q] Τιμῆς ἠγοράσθητε, have ye been bought with a price?] That the charity of Christians was employed to buy their brethren out of slavery, we learn from the apologies of Justin Martyr (m), and Tertullian (n), who tells us, That "the offerings of "Christians at the sacrament, were, amongst others,

" employed for that uſe ?" And that theſe words ought to be rendered by way of interrogation, is evident from the preceding diſcourſe, which is ſtill by way of queſtion ; Is any man called, being uncircumciſed ? ver. 18. Art thou called being a ſervant ? ver. 21. And that they are to be thus interpreted, the deſign of the apoſtle ſhews, which is to inform them, that their Chriſtianity did not exempt them from their ſecular relations to Heathens, the believer ſtill continuing in his conjugal relation, and in the ſame relation of a ſervant to his Heathen maſter. Now to tell them they were bought with a price by Chriſt, and therefore ought not to be the ſervants of men, is plainly to contradict this deſign ; but it is well conſiſtent with the foregoing advice, If thou canſt be made free, uſe it rather, to add, Are ye then bought out of ſervitude by the charity of Chriſtians ? return not again to the ſervice of unbelievers.

Ver. 24. [r] Let him abide with God.] Neither deſerting his maſter upon pretence of being God's ſervant, nor doing any thing againſt the laws of God, in obedience to his maſter.

Ver. 25. [s] Περὶ τῶν παρθένων ἐπιταγὴν Κυρίου οὐκ ἔχω, concerning virgins I have no commandment of the Lord.] To produce, touching their continuance in, or change of that ſtate. Here Eſthius takes care to add, that the apoſtle muſt be underſtood only de virginibus quæ nondum Deo voverunt continentiam, of ſuch virgins which were not under the vow of continence. And when the apoſtle ſaith without exception, If a virgin marry ſhe hath not ſinned, ver. 28. he adds, Niſi ſit virgo Chriſto dicata, i. e. unleſs ſhe be a virgin conſecrated to Chriſt by ſuch a vow ; both which exceptions ſeeing St Paul, aſſiſted by the Holy Spirit, thought not fit to add, we may preſume that he knew nothing of that matter.

Ibid. [t] Γνώμην δὲ δίδωμι, &c. but I give my judgment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord, to be found faithful.] This, ſaith the apoſtle, is all that is required of a miniſter of God, and a ſteward of his myſteries, that he be found faithful in adminiſtering the grace of his apoſtleſhip, 1 Cor. 4. 1. 2. And this fidelity was ſtill attended with the power of Chriſt aſſiſting them, as appears from theſe words, I thank Chriſt Jeſus our Lord who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the miniſtry, 1 Tim. 1. 12. So that this phraſe doth not imply, as ſome imagine, that the apoſtle had only an ordinary aſſiſtance in this advice, ſuch as any pious ſkilful paſtor may ſtill expect ; much leſs, that this is a counſel which might be diſregarded without ſin.

Ver. 26. [u] Διὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν ἀνάγκην, for the preſent diſtreſs.] This phraſe plainly ſhews, this cannot relate ad pacata eccleſiæ tempora, to the peaceable times of the church, for they are not times of tribulation, as the word ἀνάγκη often ſignifies. So Luke 21. 24. There ſhall be ἀνάγκη μεγάλη great tribulation ; ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν στενοχωρίαις, in afflictions, neceſſities, diſtreſſes, 2 Cor. 6. 4. ; ἐν ἀνάγκαις, ἐν διωγμοῖς, in neceſſities, and perſecutions, 2 Cor. 12. 10. Nor can it ſignify the troubles common to this life, for they are not always inſtant, or preſent. See ver. 28. where the phraſe is, θλῖψιν ἐν σαρκὶ, trouble in the fleſh.

Ver. 31. [x] Ὡς μὴ καταχρώμενοι, as not abuſing it.] So this expreſſion is uſed in Philo (o), " This is an- " other's, do not covet it ; this is thy own, uſe it " ſo as not abuſing it ; haſt thou abundance ? give " to others : for the excellency of wealth conſiſts " not in thy purſes, but in helping thoſe that " want."

Note alſo, That they who interpret theſe words, The time is ſhort, with relation to the troubles ſhortly to come at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the faſhion of the world paſſing away, of a new ſcene of things beginning to appear, ſeem not to give the true import of the apoſtle's words : For, 1. it is not eaſy to conceive what concernment the Corinthians then had in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem ; what peculiar troubles happened ; what loſs of wives or of poſſeſſions they did then ſuſtain ; or indeed, what perſecution they then lay under, from which the deſtruction of Jeruſalem might free them.

2. The faſhion of the world's paſſing away, ſeems plainly to refer to the diſſolution of it, or at leaſt to our paſſing out of it in a ſhort time, according to thoſe words of St John, Love not the world, nor the things of the world ; for the faſhion of the world paſſeth away, and the luſts thereof, 1 John 2. 15. 17. Again, to have, and uſe theſe things, as if we had them not, or did not uſe them, is to be moderate in the enjoyment of them ; not to be much affected with them when we have, or much afflicted when want, or loſe them.

Ver. 34. [y] Μεμέρισται ἡ γυνὴ καὶ ἡ παρθένος, there is a difference between a wife, and a virgin.] The reading of the king's manuſcript is this, καὶ μεμέρισται, and is diſtracted. And then begins the 34th verſe thus, καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἄγαμος, καὶ ἡ παρθένος ἡ ἄγαμος, and the unmarried woman, i. e. the widow, and the virgin careth for the things of the Lord. But though this reading makes a good ſenſe, it is not found in any of the Greek or Latin interpreters. 2. It makes too great a variation from the ordinary reading, by adding καὶ before μεμέρισται, and by joining ἡ γυνὴ ἡ ἄγαμος, which in all printed copies, and ancient interpreters, are ſepa-rated. And, 3. it makes ἡ γυνὴ here to signify the sex only, and to be indeed a virgin, or unmarried woman; whereas in this chapter it above twenty times signifies a wife, and always stands opposed to the virgin, or unmarried person. So ver. 1. 2. ver. 3. twice; ver. 4. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. twice; 16. twice; 27. thrice; 29. 39. which observation is sufficient to destroy this reading; especially seeing the common reading gives a good sense, and may be rendered thus, "The virgin and the wife are divided, "or drawn several ways; the first looking only "after purity, the second after the pleasure of her "husband also."

Ver. 36. [z] Ἐὰν ᾖ ὑπέρακμος, if it be over-aged.] The Jews (p), from the precept to increase and multiply, thought themselves obliged to marry at twenty, and that they offended against the law if they did not so; declaring, that whosoever neglected this precept was guilty of homicide. The philosophers say, with Hesiod (q), "That γάμος ὥριος, marriage was seasonable "to the woman about thirty, to the male from thir-"ty to thirty-five." By the law of Lycurgus (r), they who continued unmarried were prohibited to see the games: by the laws of the Spartans they were punished: and by Plato they are declared unworthy of any honour: to either of these opinions the discourse of the apostle may relate.

Ver. 37. [a] Note, It is generally supposed, that these three verses relate to virgins under the power of parents and guardians; and hence the usual inference is this, "Children are to be disposed of in mar-"riage by their parents." Now, this may be true, but it hath no foundation in this text: for τηρεῖν ἑαυτοῦ παρθένον, is not to keep his daughters, but his own virginity; or rather his purpose of virginity: for, as Phavorinus (s) informs us, "He is called a virgin, "who freely gives up himself to the Lord, renoun-"cing matrimony, and preferring a life spent in "continency."

And that this must be the true import of these words, appears from this consideration, that this depends upon the purpose of his own heart, and the power he hath over his own will, and the no necessity arising from himself to change this purpose: whereas the keeping a daughter unmarried, depends not on these conditions on her father's part, but on her own: for, let her have a necessity, surely the apostle would not advise the father to keep her a virgin, because he hath determined so to do; nor could there be any doubt, whether the father had power over his own will or not, when no necessity lay upon him to betroth his virgin. The Greek runs to this sense, "If he had stood already firm in his heart, "finding no necessity," to wit, to change his purpose; and hath "power over his own will" not to marry, finding himself able to persist in the resolution he hath made to keep his virginity; he doth well to continue a virgin: and then the phrase, "If "any man thinks he behaves himself unseemly to-"wards his virgin, if it be over-aged," and thinks he ought rather to join in marriage; refers to the aforesaid opinions of Jew and Gentile, that all ought to marry at such an age; if any think thus, saith the apostle, let them do what they will, let them marry, for in so doing they do not sin: and then he concludes with those words applied to both cases, So then both he that marries, doth well; and he that marries not, doth better.

Ver. 39. [b] Ἐν Κυρίῳ, in the Lord] That is, ὁμοπίστῳ, to one of the same faith, says Theodoret, Tertullian, St Cyprian, and St Jerom, declaring, that all marriage with Heathens is forbidden to Christians. Hence also it is evident, that second marriages are allowable. See Rom. 7. 3. 1 Tim. 5. 14.

Ver. 40. [c] "This, say some, is not spoken with the "authority of an apostle, or a teacher sent from "God, but in such a style as implies an ordinary "assistance, such as any skilful pastor may still ex-"pect."

But these men did not well consider, that the apostle was writing to them, who were apt to question his apostleship, and required a proof of Christ speaking in him, 2 Cor. 13. 3. to whom it was proper to say, Whatsoever you may conceive of me, I suppose I have the Spirit of God. Nor, 2. that δοκέω is frequently an expletive, and so δοκῶ ἔχειν may be here rendered, I have the Spirit of God. So ὁ δοκεῖ ἔχειν, that which he seems to have, Luke 8. 18. is ὁ ἔχει that which he hath; Matth. 13. 12. οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν, they which are accounted to rule, Mark 10. 42. is ἄρχοντες, they which rule, Matth. 20. 25. So in this epistle, ὁ δοκῶν ἑστάναι, is he that stands, chap. 10. 12. ὁ δοκῶν εἶναι φιλόνικος, he that is contentious, chap. 11. 16. and εἴ τις δοκεῖ προφήτης, If any man be a prophet or spiritual, let him know, that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord, chap. 14. 37.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. [a] NOw as (for the plea mentioned in your letter) touching (the lawfulneſs of eating) things offered to idols, we (who abſtain from eating theſe things, to the ſcandal of others) know (as well as others), that (an idol is nothing, for) we all have (this) knowledge; (yet) knowledge (when it is not joined with charity) puffeth up (againſt), but charity edifieth (our brother.)

2. And (therefore) if any man think he knoweth any thing, (and by reaſon of that knowledge deſpiſeth others, not regarding their welfare); he knoweth nothing yet [b] as he ought to know.

3. But if any man love God, (and for his ſake, his brother, John 4. 17. uſing his knowledge to the glory of God, and the benefit of his brother); the ſame is known (and accepted) of him.

4. As concerning therefore the eating of thoſe things that are offered in ſacrifice to idols, we (alſo generally) know that [c] an idol is nothing in the world, (of that it is eſteemed by them that worſhip it, i. e. no deity); and that there is no other God but one.

5. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, [d] as (to the Heathens) there are gods many, and lords many, (they having their celeſtial and terreſtrial gods, and lords);

6. But (or yet) to us (Chriſtians) there is but [e] one God the Father, of whom are all things, and we in (or for) him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him.

7. [f] Howbeit there is not in every man this knowledge; for ſome with conſcience of the idol's (being ſomething) unto this hour eat (what is offered to) it, as a thing offered to an idol, (i. e. not as common meat, but as a ſacred banquet in honour of the idol); and their conſcience being weak, (i. e. erroneous, ſubject to ſtumble and fall), is defiled.

8. But (it is to be conſidered by us, that) meat commendeth us not to God; for neither if we eat, are we the better (for ſo doing, in the ſight of God); neither if we eat not, are we the worſe: (you therefore ought not ſo to eat, as to give occaſion to the fall of your weak brother);

9. But (rather to) take heed, leſt by any means this liberty of yours become a ſtumbling-block to them that are weak; (ſo as to provoke them to fall from Chriſtianity, or to defile themſelves with idolatry.)

10. For if any man (who with this erroneous conſcience goes to theſe feaſts) ſee thee who haſt knowledge [g] ſit at meat in the idol-temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him that is weak be (the more) emboldened (by thy example) to eat thoſe things which are offered to idols, (in honour of the idol; or as thinking it no hurt to worſhip idols?)

11. And (ſo) through thy knowledge ſhall the weak brother periſh, for [h] whom Chriſt died.

12. But (ſurely it deſerves well to be conſidered, that) when ye ſin ſo againſt the brethren, and wound their weak conſciences, ye ſin againſt Chriſt, (wounding and murthering the members of his body; defeating the great end of his death, and deſtroying them whom he deſigned to ſave.)

13. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, (and ſo to periſh), [i] I will eat no fleſh whilſt the world ſtands, leſt I make my brother to offend, (and periſh.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VIII.

Verſe 1. [a] Περὶ τῶν εἰδωλοθύτων, now, as touching things offered to idols.] This is that other doctrine of the Nicolaitans, nullam differentiam eſſe docentes idolothyton edere, that things offered to idols might be eaten without diſcrimination; which the apoſtle here ſets himſelf to confute, ſpeaking of theſe things both in the general, chap. 10. 23. to the end; and, in particular, as they were eaten with relation to the idols in the idol-temple.

Ver. 2. [b] Καθὼς δεῖ γνῶναι, as he ought to know.] To know thus, ſaith St Bernard (t), is to know in what order, with what ſtudy and endeavour, and to what end we ought to know all things. In what order, as deſiring to know that firſt which is moſt neceſſary to ſalvation. With what ſtudy, as deſiring moſt ardently to know that which is moſt vehemently to be loved, and moſt tends to provoke love in us. To what end, viz. not out of curioſity, vain-glory, or filthy lucre, but for the edification of thyſelf, or of thy brother.

Ver. 4. [c] Οὐδὲν εἴδωλον, an idol is nothing.] This aphoriſm, that an idol was nothing, was uſual among the Jews, who were taught by the Old Teſtament, that the Heathen deities were הבלים and אלילים vanities and nothings. Thus in Echa Rabboth (u), or the old comment on the Lamentations, Rachel ſpeaks thus to God, Why envieſt thou an idol, which is nothing? And in the Elle Shemeth Rabba (x), we have this aphoriſm, There is nothing ſolid in an idol. And hence the Rabbins concluded, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, That it could have no power to pollute, and that whatſoever worſhip was paid to it, if it were not worſhipped under the notion of a God, it was nothing; but whatever they meant of an idol's being nothing, it is certain the apoſtle only means, that it is nothing of a god: for he proves that it is nothing, becauſe there is no god but one; and ſo all the criticiſms about the word εἴδωλον, idol, are impertinent.

Ver. 5. ὥσπερ εἰσὶ θεοὶ πολλοὶ, as there are gods many, and lords many.] Here Mr Clerc (y) tranſlates the words thus, "as really there are gods many, "&c." and magiſterially ſaith, "The apoſtle hath "no reference to the gods or idols of the Heathens; but by gods in heaven, are meant God and "the angels; in the earth, magiſtrates, who are al-"ſo called the lords of the world." But he proves not a word of all this: yea, the contrary is not only ſaid by all the ancient fathers and commentators upon the place (z), who both aſſert and prove the contrary; but alſo is evident from the words themſelves: for firſt, when the apoſtle had ſaid expreſsly, We Chriſtians know there is no God but one; would he immediately add, There are really gods many? What would this have been, but, as Chryſoſtom and Theophylact ſay, τοῖς φαινομένοις μάχεσθαι, to ſpeak things repugnant? Which to avoid, the apoſtle adds, though there be οἱ λεγόμενοι θεοὶ, thoſe that are called gods, by theſe words ſeparating them from him that truly is ſo: and ſhewing they are only ſo in name, but not in reality; not in truth, but in word only. And this is evident from the words following: Though (to them) there be gods many, and lords many, παρ' ἡμῖν δὲ θεὸς ὁ κύριος λεγόμενος, yet to us (Chriſtians) there is but one God, and one Lord. Laſtly, whereas he ſaith, By gods in heaven are meant God and the angels, let him ſhew any inſtance in the New Teſtament, where Θεοὶ is put for God and the angels; or where both are thus mentioned under that one name. Here to be ſure it cannot be ſo; for the apoſtle had not only ſaid before, We Chriſtians know there is no other God but one; but ſaith after, This is he, of whom are all things, i. e. whoſe creatures the angels are; could he then ſay, in the intermediate words, There really are many gods in heaven, God and the angels?

Ver. 6. ὁ Εἷς Θεὸς ὁ Πατὴρ, one God the Father.] Hence the Arians and Socinians argue thus againſt the Deity of Chriſt, viz. "As he who ſaith there is "one emperor, to wit, Cæſar, ſaith in effect there "is no other emperor but Cæſar; ſo he that ſaith "there is one God the Father, ſaith in effect, there "is no other God beſides the Father. Again, He "who, having ſeparately ſpoken of one God, pro-"ceeds diſtinctly to ſpeak of one Lord, to wit, Je-"ſus Chriſt, doth by that diſtinct title ſufficiently "ſhew Jeſus Chriſt is not that God."

Anſ. To the ſecond argument the reply is obvious, by retorting the argument as do the ancient commentators, againſt this Arian objection, thus: That, as the apoſtle, by ſaying, There is one Lord, to wit, Jeſus Chriſt, cannot be reaſonably ſuppoſed to exclude the Father from being alſo the Lord of Chriſtians, as he is often ſtyled in the New Teſtament; ſo neither by ſaying, There is one God the Father, ought he to be ſuppoſed to exclude Jeſus Chriſt from being alſo the God of Chriſtians. So (a) Origen and (b) Novatian. Eſpecially, if we conſider, 1. That he is here ſtyled that one Lord by whom are all things, i. e. by whom all things are created, Eph. 3. 9.; all things which are in heaven, or in earth, Col. 1. 16.; for he that made all things is God, Heb. 3. 5.; and by the work of the creation is the Godhead known, Rom. 1. 20.; and this is elſewhere made the very deſcription of God the Father, that it is he by whom are all things, Rom. 11. 35. Heb. 2. 10. 2. That all things were created, not only by this Lord, but εἰς αὐτὸν, for him alſo, Col. 1. 16.; now this is the very thing which the apoſtle here aſcribes to God the Father.

2dly, To the other argument I anſwer, That we and all the ancients aſſert, as truly as they can do, the unity of the Godhead, and that Chriſt Jeſus is not another God, but only another perſon from the Father; and that the application of the word God, here, to the Father, doth not neceſſarily exclude the Son from being God alſo; but only from being the fountain of the Deity, as the Father is. Thus when theſe words, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and laſt, Rev. 1. 17. and 2. 8. and 22. 13. are by St John applied to Chriſt; it cannot be concluded hence, that the Father is not alſo Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, as he is often called in the Old Teſtament: and though our Saviour be the proper title of our Lord Jeſus, as his very name informs us; yet is the Father in ſcripture ſtyled our Saviour, 1 Tim. 1. 1. and 2. 3. and the Saviour of all men, chap. 4. 10. The primitive fathers therefore conſidering God the Father as the fountain of the Deity, and Jeſus Chriſt as God of God, do frequently aſſert two things which may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage, viz.

1ſt, That (c) Chriſtians acknowledged one God only, even the Father, and yet that Jeſus Chriſt was truly God, of the ſubſtance of the Father.

2dly, That God the Father was the Creator of all things, and yet that all things were created by the Word.

Ver. 7. [t] Ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡ γνῶσις, there is not in all this knowledge.] This contradicts not what is ſaid, ver. 1. We all have knowledge; that being ſpoken of them who abſtained from things offered to idols, out of ſcandal to others only; this of them who through weakneſs did eat of them: the firſt, being well-informed Chriſtians, knew there was but one God the Father, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to be worſhipped: the weak thought there might be ſome deaſtri, or inferior lords, to whom ſome reverence was due.

Ver. 10. [u] Ἐν εἰδωλείῳ κατακείμενον, ſitting at meat in the idol's temple.] The Gentiles, ſaith Joſephus (d), offer hecatombs to their gods, καὶ χρῶνται ἱεροῖς πρὸς εὐωχίαν, and uſe their temples for their banqueting-houſe; ſo we read Judg. 9. 27. Amos 2. 7. and in profane authors very frequently: when therefore, ſaith the apoſtle, the weak Jew who abhorred idols, or the Gentiles newly converted from the worſhip of them, ſhall ſee thee doing the ſame thing which Heathens do in honour of their idols, and that in places appropriated to their worſhip; will they not be tempted, by the example of ſuch a ſtrong and knowing Chriſtian, to conclude, that either idolatry is by Chriſtians accounted no ſin, or that the idol deſerves ſome honour; and ſo comply with them from theſe erroneous principles in eating things offered to idols?

Ver. 11. [h] Δι' ὃν Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν, for whom Chriſt died.] From this, and the like place, Rom. 14. 15. it is ſtrongly argued, that Chriſt intentionally died for thoſe that may for ever periſh; for here the apoſtle diſſuades the Corinthians from ſcandalizing their weak brethren, by an argument taken from the irreparable miſchiefs they do to them, the eternal ruin they may bring upon them by this ſcandal: whereas if it be as ſome aſſert, "That all things, "even the ſins of the elect, ſhall work together for "their good, and that they can never periſh;" if the apoſtle knew and taught this doctrine to them, why doth he go about to fright them from this ſcandal, by telling them it might have that effect, which he before had told them was impoſſible? If you interpret his words thus, "So ſhall he periſh for whom "in charity you ought to judge Chriſt died;" it is certain from this doctrine, that they muſt be aſſured this judgment of charity muſt be falſe, or that their brother could not periſh. In the firſt caſe, they could not be obliged to act by it; and in the ſecond, they could not rationally be moved by it to abſtain from giving ſcandal on that impoſſible ſuppoſition. If you interpret him thus, "So ſhalt thou do that which in "its nature tends to make thy brother periſh, and "might have that effect, had not God determined "to preſerve all for whom Chriſt died from periſh-"ing?" Since this determination renders it ſure to me, who know it, that they cannot actually periſh, it muſt aſſure me there can be no cauſe of abſtaining from this scandal, lest they should perish by it. Moreover, by thus offending, saith the apostle, you sin against Christ, viz. by sinning against them whom he hath purchased with his blood, and destroying them for whose salvation he hath suffered: deny now this intent of Christ's death, and shew, if you can, in what Christ hath demonstrated his great love to them that perish; how they can ever sin against redeeming love; or how by thus offending them, who neither do, nor can belong to him as members of his body mystical, we are injurious to Christ.

Ver. 13. Οὐ μὴ φάγω κρέα, I will eat no flesh.] It being customary for the Heathens to consecrate all the flesh they used to eat to some dæmon or idol (e), and the weak Jews being so nice in matters of that nature, this necessity might sometimes lie upon the Christians to abstain from all flesh, to avoid the offence of the weak brother; and the apostle here engageth rather to submit to it, than to be an occasion of his ruin. See Theodor. H. Eccl. l. 3. c. 15. and the note on Rom. 14. 2.

Note also, That there is nothing in this chapter which intimates that the apostle discourseth of a conscience doubting about things indifferent, but rather that he all along discourseth of an erroneous conscience, which, from a false persuasion, falleth into sin; for, saith he, some, with conscience of the idol to this hour, eat it as a thing offered to the idol, ver. 7. Now, so to do is to act plainly, not from a doubting conscience about a thing indifferent, but from an erroneous conscience about a thing unlawful; and yet this is the man whose conscience being weak, is defiled. And in this sense are the words ἀδυνὴς, ἀδύνατα, ἀδυνεῖν, to be weak, and weakness commonly used in the Septuagint, answering to the Hebrew כשל, which signifies to fall and stumble. See note on Rom. 5. 6.

2. Πρόσκομμα γίνεσθαι τοῖς ἀδυνάτοις, to be a stumbling-block to the weak,] ver. 9. is not barely to offend them, or to induce them to do any thing with a doubting conscience, but to make them stumble at the Christian faith, or fall off from it, or perish by idolatry: for thus it follows, and so shall thy weak brother perish. So Rom. 9. 32. 33. Israel stumbled at the stone of stumbling, as it is written, Behold, I lay in Zion λίθον προσκόμματος, a stone of stumbling; 1 Pet. 2. 8. To them that be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, is made λίθον προσκόμματος, a stone of stumbling.

3. To scandalize, or offend this weak brother,] ver. 13. is not only to do a thing ungrateful to him, or to cause him to sin by acting with a doubting conscience, but to divert him from the faith, or cause him to dislike it, because he sees that Christians so freely do communicate with idols, or to encourage him to join idolatry with the profession of it. That this is the constant sense of the word σκανδαλιζεσθαι, see note on Rom. 14. 13. 21.

Hence evident it is, that what dissenters say from hence against our ceremonies, that they offend, or grieve them, that they cannot comply with them by reason of those doubts which they lie under, touching the lawfulness of the use of them, is impertinent to the apostle's argument; if they would have the apostle here to patronize them, they must confess that they are acted herein by a false judgment, and erroneous conscience, as the weak person mentioned by him was.

Nevertheless this seemeth to press hard on them who believe the schism of such weak persons will finally tend to their ruin, and render them exiles from the flock of Christ, and yet for things indifferent, will, in this dreadful sense, cause their weak brother to offend, or to be scandalized; since this they do for that which commends them not to God, which doing, they are not the better, or omitting, they are not the worse, ver. 8. For if schism and idolatry be equally damning sins, and equally cause my brother to offend, and him to perish for whom Christ died, we are equally to take heed in both cases, lest ἐξουσία ἡμῶν, our power to do the thing indifferent become a stumbling-block to the weak, or the erroneous in their judgment of these things. For let men imagine what other difference they please in the case, whilst the sad issue or event is in general the same, viz. the perishing of my brother, and my power to have abstained from that, which, through his erroneous conscience, gave occasion to it, is the same, I fear the guilt will be the same.

To this purpose tend those words of Origen (f), "If we did more diligently attend to these things, "we should avoid sinning against our brethren, and "wounding their weak consciences," ἵνα μὴ εἰς Χριστὸν ἁμαρτάνωμεν, "that we may not sin against Christ." Πολλάκις ἀπολλυμένων ὑπ' ἐμοῦ τῇ ἁμαρτίᾳ γνώσει, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἄλλοις τισὶ τῶν περὶ ἡμᾶς ἀδελφῶν, δι' ὃς ὁ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανεν, ἐφ' οἷς εἰς Χριστὸν ἁμαρτάνοντες τίσομεν δίκας ἐνδικωμένης τῆς τῶν ἡμᾶς ἀπολλυμένων ψυχῆς ἐξ ἡμῶν. "Our brethren that are among "us, for whom Christ died, often perishing, not "only by our knowledge, but by many other ways "and things; in which things we sinning against "Christ, shall suffer punishment, the soul of them "that perish by us, being required of, and avenged "upon us."

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. [a] AM I not (who thus abſtain from what is offenſive to the weak) an apoſtle (as well as others?) am I not free (to do what they may?) [b] have I not ſeen Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, (as well as they?) and are not you my work in the Lord? (and ſo if others have a power to live upon your temporal things, have not I rather? verſ. 11. 12.)

2. If I be not (ſo viſibly and demonſtratively) an apoſtle to others, yet doubtleſs I am (ſo) to you; for the [c] ſeal (and teſtimony) of my apoſtleſhip are you in the Lord, (as being converted by me, exerciſing the ſigns of an apoſtle among you in all patience; in ſigns and wonders, and in mighty deeds, 2 Cor. 12. 12.)

3. My anſwer (or apology) to them that do examine me, (why I and my companions uſe not the ſame freedom as other apoſtles and evangeliſts), is this,

4. Have we not power to eat, and to drink, (without uſing ſo much abſtinence, or at the charge of the church as well as they?)

5. Have we not power [d] to lead (or carry) about a ſiſter, a wife, as well as other apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?

6. Or I only, and Barnabas, have we not power to forbear working, (and to receive maintenance of the church as others do?)

7. [e] Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charge? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? (and ſhall we ſoldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Tim. 2. 2., the planters of his ſpiritual vineyard, the paſtors of his flock, Acts 20. 28. be debarred of this privilege?)

8. Say I theſe things [f] as a man (only, from principles of natural reaſon and equity?) or ſaith not the law the ſame alſo?

9. For it is written in the law of Moſes, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn; doth God (ſay this only to ſhew he) take-(th) care for oxen?

10. Or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? [g] For our ſakes, no doubt, this is written, that (in this ſpiritual huſbandry, 1 Cor. 3. 9.) he that ploughs ſhould plough in hope (of reaping ſome advantage by it); and (that) he that threſheth in (that) hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope.

11. If (then) we have ſown unto you ſpiritual things, is it a great thing if we ſhall reap (ſome of) your carnal things? (Rom. 15. 27.)

12. If others be partakers of this [h] power over you, are not we rather (ſo, who laid the foundation of a Chriſtian church among you, 1 Cor. 3. 10. and have begotten you through the goſpel? 1 Cor. 4. 15.). Nevertheleſs, we have not uſed this power (among you, 2 Cor. 11. 7. 8. 9.), but (chuſe rather to) ſuffer (the want of) all things, leſt we ſhould hinder the (advancement of the) goſpel of Chriſt.

13. (And not to inſiſt only on myſtical interpretations of the law); do not you know that they who miniſter about holy things, (excoriating, waſhing, and preparing a ſacrifice for the altar, as do the Levites), live of the (holy) things of the temple; and (that) they which wait at the altar, are (according to the inſtitution of the law) partakers with the altar? (for that conſumes not always the whole ſacrifice, but leaves ſome portion to be eaten by the prieſts.)

14. Even ſo hath the Lord (Jeſus, in the goſpel, Matth. 10. 10. Luke 10. 7.) ordained, that they who preach the goſpel ſhould live of the goſpel.

15. But (yet) I have uſed none of theſe things, neither have I written theſe things that it ſhould be ſo done unto me; for it were better for me to die (for want of food), than that any man ſhould make my glorying (in thus advancing the goſpel) void.

16. (I ſay my glorying); for though I preach the goſpel, I have nothing to glory of (upon that account); for neceſſity is laid upon me (by the command and ſpecial call of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſo to do), yea, wo is to me if I preach not the goſpel, (becauſe then I ſhall be guilty of diſobedience to the heavenly viſion, Acts 26. 9.)

17. [i] For if I do this thing willingly, (if I chuſe to take nothing for preaching the goſpel, when I am under no obligation ſo to do), I have a (ſpecial) reward, (and may glory in it); but if againſt my will (I preach the goſpel, yet am I under a neceſſity of doing this; and therefore cannot glory in it, or expect any ſpecial reward above others for it; ſince) a diſpenſation of the goſpel is committed to me, (and ſo in that I only can diſcharge my truſt.)

18. [k] What is my reward then? (or what is matter of ſpecial reward and glory to me?) Verily (this), that when I preach the goſpel, I may make the goſpel of Chriſt without charge, that I abuſe not (or uſe not, ſee 1 Cor. 7. 31.) my power (which is given me) in the goſpel; (and this matter of rejoicing I have.)

19. For though I be free from all men, (as being a ſervant to none); yet have I made myſelf (as a) ſervant to all, that I might gain the more.

20. To the (unconverted) Jews I became as a Jew, (circumciſing Timothy for their ſakes, Acts 16. 3.), that I might gain the Jews; to them that (in their opinion) are (yet) under the (obligation of the)

the) law, as under the law, (purifying myself in the temple, because they were zealous of the law, Acts 20. 21.—26.), that I might gain them that are under the law.

21. To them that are without law, (the unbelieving Gentiles, I became) as without law, (discoursing to them from those natural principles which they owned, Acts 17. rather than from the law and the prophets), being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ, (or obedient to the law of Christ, and taking care notwithstanding that I did nothing contrary to the moral law of God, and to the rules of Christianity), that I might gain them that are without law.

22. To the weak (converts among the Gentiles) I became as weak, (by condescending to abstain from what might hurt their consciences), that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men (by my compliance with them in all lawful matters), that I might by all means save some.

23. And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker of (the promise and rewards of) it, with you.

24. Which neither you, nor I, shall obtain by the bare profession or knowledge of it, without charity, and a life suitable to the precepts of it: for) know ye not (among whom the Isthmian games are acted), that they who run in a race, run all, but one (of them only) receiveth the prize? so (therefore) run (your Christian race) that ye may obtain (the reward of it.)

25. And (then you will be moved to abstain, as I do, from what may cause your weak brother to fall and perish; for) every man that striveth for the mastery, (or is a wrestler in these games), is temperate in all things, (i. e. observeth a strict abstinence.) Now they (who thus abstain, that they may prevail in wrestling) do it (only) to obtain a corruptible crown (of bays or olives), but we (Christians, by using this temperance, shall obtain) an incorruptible (crown.)

26. I therefore so run (this race), not as uncertainly, (or not regarding whether I am within the lines, or come first to the goal or not); so fight I, not as one that beateth the air, (i. e. not vainly, as you seem to do; for what advantage have you by going to the idol-temples, or eating things offered to idols, to the destruction of your brother?)

27. But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, (by denying myself these liberties in things indifferent); [1] lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away, (as being not partaker of the blessings of the gospel, ver. 23.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IX.

Verse 1. [a] Οὐκ εἰμι ἀπόστολος; am not I an apostle?] The apostle here, from his own example, in abstaining from the power which the Lord hath given him, to receive the necessaries and conveniencies of life from them to whom he preached the gospel; shews how much it concerned them, in a matter unnecessary, to abstain from the exercise τῆς ἐξουσίας, of their rightful power granted by Christ; to avoid the scandal of the weak, and to promote mens spiritual welfare. So Estius. This condescension indeed was not in the exercise of his apostolical authority: but it was in that which he might have challenged as an apostle of Christ, 1 Thess. 2. 6. Hence he speaks thus, Am not I an apostle? And therefore have I not ἐξουσίαν, power to eat and drink? Yea, it was in that he might have challenged by the nature of his office, ver. 7. by the prescriptions of the law, ver. 8. and by the ordinance of Christ, ver. 14. And this abstinence he used not only in Achaia, but in Thessalonica, 1 Thess. 2. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 8. that he might be an example for their imitation, ver. 9. It was not therefore any private or personal right which he here waved, but a right of office belonging to all who did officiate in things sacred. See note on 2 Cor. 9. 2.

Ibid. [b] Οὐχὶ Χριστὸν ἑώρακα; have I not seen Christ?] The apostles being chosen to be witnesses of the resurrection, it was requisite that St Paul being called to that office, should also see him risen. Hence Ananias speaks thus to him, "The God of our fathers hath "chosen thee, that thou shouldst see the just one, and "shouldst hear the words of his mouth; for thou shalt "be his witness to all men, of what thou hast seen and "heard," Acts 22. 14. 15. and 26. 26. Accordingly we find that Christ was seen of him, 1 Cor. 15. 8.; yea, often appeared to him after his resurrection, Acts 18. 9. and 22. 18. and that he was taught the gospel by the immediate revelation of Jesus Christ, Gal. 1. 12. The Syriac, Arabic, and some MSS. read thus, Am I not free? Am I not an apostle? Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?

Ver. 2. [c] The seal of my apostleship are ye in the Lord.] This text seems very much abused by our sectaries, when from these words they argue, That seeing they have been instrumental to work some reformation in others by their preaching, or discourses; therefore they have a legal, yea, divine call to exercise their ministry, and to administer the holy sacraments; which argument will plead as much for masters or mistresses of large families, who have successfully employed themselves in a religious education of their children and servants; and for school-masters, maſters, who have inſtilled good principles of virtue and religion into their ſcholars; and for every good man and woman, who ſpend themſelves in examples of exhortations, and encouragements to others, to lead a virtuous and religious life, and therefore prevail more than others; becauſe they know they do it not from proſpect of advantage, or in purſuance of their calling, but out of pure affection to their ſouls. Moreover, I inquire, what it is they would prove from theſe words; is it that they are of the number of Chriſt's apoſtles? If not, why do they uſe this text? Is it that they have converted men from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity, by ſigns and miracles, and powers of the Holy Ghoſt? Or that the ſigns of an apoſtle have been wrought among their auditors, by ſigns, wonders, and powerful operations, as this apoſtle doth, 2 Cor. 12. 12.? Or that they have given their hearers ſuch a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in them, as St Paul did, chap. 13. 3.? Or by their means their hearers were endowed with the gifts of tongues and prophecy, as the Corinthians were? If not, this text cannot concern them at all, who had no ſuch ſeal, or ſign of their apoſtleſhip, as St Paul ſaith he had.

Ver. 5. [d] Ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα περιάγειν, to lead about a ſiſter, a wife.] It is the obſervation of Hilary, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, that as ſome women attended on the Lord when he was on earth, to miniſter neceſſaries to him and his diſciples; ſo ſome rich women converted by them, followed the apoſtles to provide diet, and other neceſſaries for them; and they who ſo interpret theſe words, tranſlate them a ſiſter-woman. This expoſition Theodoret mentions, but ſeems not to approve: And indeed it ſeems to have had its riſe from (g) Tertullian when he was a Montaniſt.

For Clemens of Alexandria (h) not only ſaith, that he that marrieth, εἰκόνας ἔχει τὰς ἀποστόλους, hath the apoſtles for examples; and that St Peter carried his wife with him till her martyrdom: but confutes the enemies of matrimony from theſe very words, Have we not power to lead about a ſiſter, a wife, as well as other apoſtles? Adding, that οὐχ ὡς γαμετὰς, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀδελφὰς, περιῆγον τὰς γυναῖκας, (i) they carried their wives about, not as wives, but as ſiſters, to miniſter to thoſe that were miſtreſſes of families; that ſo the doctrine of the Lord might, without any reprehenſion, or evil ſuſpicion, enter into the apartments of the women. This expoſition ſeemeth, 1. moſt agreeable to the words, which are not γυναῖκα ἀδελφὴν, but ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα, which cannot well be rendered a ſiſter-woman, there being no ſiſter which is not a woman. 2. It is moſt agreeable to the context, which plainly ſeems to ſpeak not of ſuch wealthy women, which could nouriſh the apoſtles out of their abundance, but of ſuch which were to be nouriſhed with them by others. And, 3. to the language of the Jews, who called their wives, ſiſters. Thus Tobit ſaith to his wife, μὴ λόγον ἔχε, ἀδελφὴ, Take no care, my ſiſter, Tob. 5. 20. And Clemens, in the words now cited, ſaith, They were carried with them, not as wives, but as ſiſters. And laſtly, this ſeems beſt to conſult the credit and eſteem of the apoſtles, who could not without evil ſuſpicion carry about with them ſingle women, or the wives of other men. As for the women who are ſaid to have followed Chriſt, they were none of his retinue, they attended not upon his perſon, but upon his doctrine, and ſo they miniſtered no ſuch ground of ſuſpicion. But hence, I think it doth not follow, as Mr Cl. ſaith, that St Paul then had a wife, but only that he, or Barnabas had one, or at leaſt might have had one, no law then forbidding it: Tertullian ſaying, if not in his own ſenſe, yet in the perſon of the orthodox, Licebat apoſtolis nubere, et uxores circumducere. De exhort. caſtit. cap. 8.

Ver. 7. [e] Τίς στρατεύεται, who goeth a warfare?] The pertinency of this inſtance will be more viſible, if we conſider that both in the Old and New Teſtament, the miniſterial function is repreſented as a warfare. See note on 1 Tim. 1. 18. And the levite who was conſecrated to the ſervice of the tabernacle, is ſaid to enter into the hoſt, Numb. 4. 3. λειτουργῶν, to officiate, ſaith the Septuagint, to ſerve the ſervice, ſaith the Chaldee. The church of God is alſo repreſented as his vineyard, Iſ. 5. 1. to 5. Matth. 20. 1. and 21. 18. 33.—40. 41. Luke 13. 6. 7. and as his flock, Iſ. 40. 11. and 63. 11. Matth. 26. 31. Luke 12. 32. Acts 20. 28. 29. 1 Pet. 5. 1. 2. But then St Chryſoſtom (k) and Theophylact obſerve, that he ſaith not, "Who goeth to warfare, "and is not rich? Who plants a vineyard, and "heaps not up gold of the fruits of it? Who feeds "a flock, and makes not a merchandiſe of the "ſheep? Teaching us that the ſpiritual paſtor ſhould "be content with little, and ſeek only what is ne-"ceſſary, not what is ſuperfluous."

Ver. 8. [f] Κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as a man.] This phraſe in the New Teſtament doth always ſignify to ſpeak, act, and live after the manner of a mere natural man, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, not acting by the guidance of divine wiſdom, or not assisted by the Holy Spirit. So Rom. 3. 5. I speak κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as a man, by mere strength of reason, would be apt to argue, 1 Cor. 3. 3. Are ye not carnal, and walk as men, i. e. as natural, and not spiritual men? ver. 1. 1 Cor. 15. 32. If κατ' ἄνθρωπον, after the manner of men, i. e. the Heathen manner, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, Gal. 1. 11. The gospel which was preached by me, was not κατ' ἄνθρωπον after man, i. e. it was not the product of human wisdom, but received from the revelation of Jesus Christ, Gal. 3. 15. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men, i. e. what is acknowledged in all civilized nations. See note on 1 Pet. 4. 6.

Ver. 10. ᾿Δι᾽ ἡμᾶς γὰρ ἐγράφη, for our sakes this was written.] A like expression occurs in Maimonides (l), who having cited these words, Thou shalt not take the dam with the young, saith, "If God took such "care for beasts and birds, how much more for "men?" And R. Menachem, on the same words, saith, The intention of the command was not to shew mercy to birds, sed propter homines hoc dicit, but he saith this to teach men mildness and commiseration; and Philo (m) in the beginning of his discourse περὶ θυόντων, of those who offer sacrifice, says, the law took not care of brutes, but of reasonable creatures, ὐ τῶν θυομένων, ἀλλὰ τῶν θυόντων, by its prescriptions that the sacrifice should be perfect and without blemish, having regard not to the things offered, but to him that offered them, that he should be free from vile passions, or evil dispositions. So that these words do not import, that God takes no care for beasts, for he saveth man and beast, Psal. 36. 6. and giveth to the beasts their food, Psal. 147. 9.; but only that the commands he gives us, to shew mercy and kindness to our beasts, are especially designed to teach us greater kindness to our brother man. Thus the high priest Eleazer (n) saith to Aristæas, That "all the precepts of this nature deli-"vered by Moses, had λόγον βαθὺν, a profound sense; "and that God did not make them, as being con-"cerned about mice or weasels, or such like beasts, "but that all these laws were made for righteous-"ness sake, and the information of our manners.

Ver. 12 [illegible] ἐξουσίας ἡμῶν, power over you.] So ἐξουσίας πνευμάτων [illegible] over unclean spirits, Matth. 10. 1. ἐξουσίας [illegible], power over all flesh, John 17. 2.

Ver [illegible] τοῦτο πράσσω, If I do this willingly.] [illegible] interpretation of Oecumenius, and it [illegible] to suit with the scope of the apostle [illegible] sense mentioned by the ancients, [illegible] by most interpreters, is this, "If I [illegible] gospel as a volunteer, having "no command from Christ to do it, I might expect "a peculiar reward; but having this command from "Christ, I execute it only in obedience to the "trust committed to me, and so I cannot glo-"ry in, or expect a reward for that above o-"thers."

Ver. 18. ᾿ Note first, from ver. 12. 15. 18. That our power, in things indifferent and uncommanded, is not be used to the hinderance of the gospel of Christ, and the scandal of the weak.

2*dly*, That there is καύχημα, or matter of glorying in things done by the assistance of the grace of God, and it is for the glory of a man to do them, ver. 15. 16. 2 Cor. 11. 10. ἡ καύχησις ἡμῶν, our rejoicing or our glorying, is this, even the testimony of our conscience, 2 Cor. 1. 12. And again, Let every man approve himself to his own conscience, and then shall he have τὸ καύχημα, rejoicing in himself, and not in another, Gal. 6. 4. The glorying therefore, or the καύχημα, which the apostle elsewhere doth reject, and exclude, is only that of the merit of our works, or their sufficiency to procure the justification of a sinner, Rom. 3. 27. and 4. 2. or that which doth exclude the help, or the assistance of the grace of God in Christ, 1 Cor. 1. 29. 31. Note,

3*dly*, That there may be some actions eminently good, which fall under no particular command, I say, particular command; for I believe this very action of St Paul, in which he glories, was done according to that charity which seeketh not her own, but the things of Jesus Christ, Phil. 2. 5.; and that it was in the general his duty to take care not to hinder the gospel of Christ, ver. 12. and to cut off occasion from others to glory, to the impairing of the truth, 2 Cor. 11. 12. to perform that which rendered him instrumental to gain the more, ver. 19. and therefore he saith, ver. 27. All this I do for the gospel's sake, that I may be partaker of it with you. I think every good work, which respects our duty towards God, falls under the general command of loving God with all our heart, our mind, and soul; and all the kindness we shew to our brother under the command of loving him as our own selves; and think no action eminently good can be done by any Christian, which is not comprehended under the general precept of doing whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report, if there be any virtue, any praise, Philip. 4. 8. But yet this action, as to the substance of it, being under no precept, but being a refusal, to use the power God had granted to him as much as others, and this refusal being done out of respect unto God's glory, and the good of souls, was that of which he justly gloried,

Note alſo, That the agoniſtical phraſes mentioned in theſe four laſt verſes, are fully and excellently explained by the Reverend Dr Hammond, who informs us,

1*ſt*, That the (p) Iſthmian games were celebrated among the Corinthians, and therefore the apoſtle ſpeaks thus to them, Know ye not?

2*dly*, That of the five games there uſed, the apoſtle alludes only to two or three, running, ver. 24. 26. wreſtling, ver. 25. cuffing, ver. 26. 27.

3*dly*, That he who won the race by running, was to obſerve the laws of racing, keeping within the white line, which marked out the path or compaſs in which they were to run, and was alſo to outrun the reſt, and come firſt to the goal, otherwiſe he ran uncertainly, ver. 24. 26. and was ἀδόκιμος, one to whom the prize would not be judged by the βραβεῦαι, or judges of the games.

4*thly*, That the athletæ, combatants, or wreſtlers, obſerved a ſet diet (q), both for the quantity and quality of their meat, and carefully abſtained from all things that might render them leſs able for the combat, whence they are here ſaid to be temperate in all things, ver. 25.

5*thly*, That he who cuffed uſed to prepare himſelf for the exerciſe by a (r) σκιομαχία, or thruſting out his arms into the air. And this is ſtyled, ſo fighting as to beat the air, ver. 26. But when he came to the combat, then his fiſt ſtrove to hit the face and eyes of his adverſaries: and this is, ver. 27. ὑπωπιάζειν, to ſtrike under the eye, or give his adverſary a blue eye, and applied to the body, is ſo to keep it under, by beating it black and blue, as theſe combatants did one another.

6*thly*, That the rewards of all theſe exerciſes, was only a crown made of the leaves of ſome plant, or boughs of ſome tree, the olive (s), bays, or laurel, which therefore the apoſtle here calls a corruptible crown, ver. 25.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. MOreover, brethren, (to make you the more diligent in running this Chriſtian race, and to avoid theſe ſins which will cauſe you to fail of the prize you run for, I ſhall lay before you the caſe of the Iſraelites, your forerunners, ſhewing what privileges, and what advantages they had, and by what means moſt of them ſo unhappily miſcarried: for to begin with their privileges), I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that all our fathers (the church of Iſrael) ² were under (the protection of) the cloud, and all paſſed through the ſea;

2. And (ſo) were all baptized into (the covenant made with God, and the doctrine taught by) Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea;

3. And did all eat ³ the ſame ſpiritual meat, (that manna which was a type of Chriſt, the true bread which came down from heaven, John 6.;)

4. And did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink; (for they drank of that ſpiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Chriſt), (as typifying him, and the ſpiritual waters to be received from him, John 3. 37. 39.)

5. But (notwithſtanding theſe privileges and favours, common to them with us) with many of them God was not well pleaſed; for they were overthrown (by him) in the wilderneſs, (Heb. 3. 17.)

6. Now theſe things were ⁴ (written for) our examples, (who ſucceed them in like privileges and favours), to the intent we ſhould not luſt after evil things, as they alſo luſted (after fleſh, when they had manna, food ſufficient for them, Numb. 11. 4.)

7. Neither be ye idolaters, (by eating things offered to idols, and partaking of the table of devils), as were ſome of them; as it is written, ⁵ The people sat down to eat and drink (of the sacrifices offered to the golden calf), and [o] rose up to play.

8. Neither let us commit [r] fornication, as some of them committed (fornication at the sacrifices of Baal-Peor, Numb. 25. 16. 17. 18.), and (upon that account there) fell in one day [s] three and twenty thousand (of them.)

9. Neither let us tempt [t] Christ (our Lord), as some of them also tempted (him), and were destroyed of serpents, (Numb. 21. 5. 6.)

10. Neither murmur ye, as some of them also murmured, (Numb. 14. 2.), and were destroyed [u] of the destroyer, (ver. 37.)

11. Now all these things happened to them for examples (to posterity); and they are written for our admonition, [x] upon whom the ends of the world (the last of ages) are come, (i. e. the Christian age.)

12. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, (and is in high favour with God, as they once were, and still think they are), take heed lest he fall.

13. (And whereas the great inducement to symbolize with Jew or Gentile in their rites is this, that you may avoid persecutions, you have no cause to doubt of Christ's protection under them, for he hath so preserved you hitherto, that) there hath no temptation taken you, but such as is common to man, (ἀνθρωπινος, supportable by the strength and resolution of a man); but (moreover) God is faithful, [y] who will not suffer you to be tempted (at any time) above that you are able; but will with the temptation also make a way (so fair) to escape (it), that you may be able to bear it.

14. Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from (the) idolatry (committed by the participation of things offered to idols in the idol-temple.)

15. I speak as to wise men (in what I am now offering, to shew the idolatry of this practice); judge ye (the reasonableness of) what I say.

16. [z] The cup of blessing which we bless (or receive with thanksgiving to God for it), is it not the [a] communion of the blood of Christ? (or that rite by which we Christians do profess to hold communion with, and own him as our Lord and Saviour, who shed his blood for us)? The bread which we break, is it not (also) the communion of the body of Christ? (i. e. do we not by eating at his table declare our fellowship with, and own him as our Lord, whose body was thus broken for us?)

17. [b] For we being many are one bread, and one body; (or because the bread is one, one loaf being broken for us all, we who partake of it being many, are one body, owning ourselves thereby all members of that body of which Christ Jesus is the head); for we are all partakers of that one bread; (and thus you see, that, by partaking of this Christian sacrifice, we own ourselves to have communion with the Lord Jesus, and with the whole society of Christians.)

18. Behold Israel after the flesh, (and see if it be not so there also; for) are not they who eat of the sacrifices (the peace-offerings, for of these only did the people eat), [c] partakers of the altar, (and so hold communion with him whose altar it is? chap. 9. 13.)

19. What say I then? (i. e. what need I then to say?) that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing, (which can of its own nature pollute?)

20. But (this) I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice [d] to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils, (or do service to them, by partaking of things offered to them in the idol-temples; for)

21. You cannot drink the cup of the Lord (and thereby declare your fellowship with him, and that you own him as your Lord, in opposition to all others), and (yet drink) the cup of devils, (and so make the like acknowledgements concerning them); ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, [e] and the table of devils.

22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy (by bringing devils into competition with him)? are we stronger than he, (so that we need not fear the punishments he may inflict on them who give his honour to another?)

23. (And whereas you plead thus for yourselves), All things are lawful for me, (i. e. all meats may lawfully be eaten; be it so), but (yet) all (lawful) things are not expedient (to be done); all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not, (as charity doth, chap. 8. 1.)

24. (For the rule of charity is this): Let no man seek his own (only), but every man another's wealth, (preferring the public to his private good, and the good of souls to that of his own body.)

25. (Concerning then the eating of things offered to idols in the general, and without relation to the idol-temple, in which to eat them is idolatry, I thus determine): Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat (ye), asking no question for conscience-sake, (as if you thought it matter of conscience, whether you might eat it, if offered to idols, or not.)

26. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; (and therefore you may eat of any creature the earth provideth for your food, without scruple of conscience, when others are not scandalized at it.)

27. (And again I say), If any of them that believe not, bid (or invite) you to a feast, and you be disposed to go, [f] whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience-sake.

28. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice to idols, (thinking, that, by thus partaking in such meat, you must own the idol, or concur in the worship of it), eat not for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience-sake. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof; (who therefore can repleniſh thee out of other meats provided for thy food.)

29. Conſcience, I ſay, (meaning) not thy own, but (that) of the others (who ſhewed thee this was offered to idols); for why is my liberty (ſo uſed by me as that I be) judged of (and condemned by) another man's conſcience?

30. For if I by grace be a partaker (of God's good creatures), [t] why (do I uſe them ſo as that) I am evil ſpoken of (by others), for that for which I give thanks (becauſe of benefits received by it?)

31. Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, [u] do all to the glory of God.

32 Give [x] none offence, neither to the (weak) Jews, nor to the (unbelieving) Gentiles, nor to the (weak members of the) church of God;

33. (But walk) even as I (do, who) pleaſe all men in all (lawful) things, not ſeeking my own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. X.

Ver. 1. [a] Ὑπὸ τὴν νεφέλην ἦσαν, were under the cloud.] To underſtand the alluſion here, note, That to be under the cloud, is to be under the protection or covert of the cloud. "For the cloud of "glory," ſaith the tradition of the Jews (t), "ſignified the care and providence of God, and his preſence with them day and night;" and that accordingly it compaſſed their camp as a wall doth a city. And therefore of the feaſt of tabernacles, which in the Hebrew is Chagigah Succoth, the feaſt of coverings, the Jews ſay (u), it was eſpecially appointed to admoniſh them of the divine protection exhibited to them by the cloud. And the Chaldee paraphraſe ſaith, this feaſt was inſtituted, "that their poſterity "might know, that I made the children of Iſrael to "dwell under the ſhadow of the cloud." And therefore Philo (x) ſtyles it σκιαστήριον, a covering. And ſo the pſalmiſt repreſents it, when he ſays, He ſpread out the cloud for a covering to them, and a fire to enlighten them by night, Pſal. 105. 39.; and the prophet, when he ſays, The Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her aſſemblies a cloud, and ſmoke by day, and the ſhining of flaming fire by night; for upon all their glory ſhall be a covering, Iſ. 4. 5. 6.; πᾶσα τὰ περικύκλω αὐτῆς σκιάσει ἡ νεφέλη, the cloud ſhall overſhadow all her circuits, ſaith the Septuagint; he was to them as a covering by day, and a light of ſtars in the night-ſeaſon, ſaith the book of Wiſdom, chap. 10. 17. By theſe things Mr Clerc may ſee we have good warrant for ſaying, The cloud was a covering to them, and that they were under the cloud, becauſe it was over them; not only becauſe it went before them, which indeed is a greater impropriety than that which he charges upon others, that being indeed none at all; for what hinders the ſame cloud from being at one time contracted into the figure of a pillar, and at another expanded as a covering? For do we not read, that the cloud covered the mount, Exod. 24. 15.? that it covered the ſeat of the congregation, Exod. 40. 34.? that it covered the tabernacle, Numb. 9. 15. 16.? The learned biſhop of Ely notes, that there were three ſeveral uſes of the cloud: "1. To guide them in "their journeys, and this it did, as a pillar going "before them. 2. To preſerve them from the heat "of the ſun in the wilderneſs; and then it was "ſpread out as a covering, Pſal. 105. 39. and was "a cloud ſhadowing the camp, Wiſd. 19. 7. 3. "To defend them from their enemies, that they "might not aſſault them; and ſo it ſtood betwixt "the whole hoſt of Iſrael, and the Egyptians, and "was a cloud of darkneſs to the latter, ſo that they "came not near the Iſraelites, Exod. 14. 20.; it "therefore muſt be large enough to darken their "whole camp."

2*dly*, That they all paſſed through the ſea ſo as to come to the oppoſite ſhore, ſaith Joſephus (y); they went through it, ſaith St Paul elſewhere (z); through the middle of it, ſay the Septuagint (a). I confeſs ſome rabbins and many commentators ſay, they only fetched a compaſs like to an half-circle in the ſea, and came out again on the ſame ſide; becauſe before they entered into the ſea, they were in the edge of the wilderneſs of Ætham, Numb. 33. 6.; and after they had paſſed the ſea, they go three days journey in the wilderneſs of Ætham, Exod. 15. 22. But to this it is anſwered, that the wilderneſs on each part of that arm of the ſea, was called the wilderneſs of Ætham, and beyond the Red ſea was the ſame with Shur, Exod. 15. 22.; for the Hebrew word קצה which we render edge, is by the Septuagint forty times rendered μέρος, a part. And here, ſay they, they came to Buthan, ὅ ἐστι μέρος τῆς ἐρήμου, which is ſome part of the wilderneſs, Numb. 33. 6.; intimating, that beyond the ſea there was another part of the ſame wilderneſs.

3*dly*, They were baptized into Moses in the cloud.] i. e. into the doctrine taught by Moses; for the cloud was not only for direction, but for a covering over them; according to the words of the psalmist, He spread out the cloud for a covering, Psal. 135. 39.

And in the sea;] for they were covered with the sea on both sides, Exod. 14. 22.; so that both the cloud and the sea had some resemblance to our being covered with water in baptism: their going into the sea resembled the ancient rite of going into the water, and their coming out of it, their rising up out of the water. And this the Jews (b) do so far own, that they say, "They were baptized in the desert, "and admitted into covenant with God before the "law was given."

Note, 4*thly*, That the cloud had a bright shining side, as well as a dark side; so that their baptism in the sea answered to that of water; and their baptism in the cloud to baptism by fire, or by the Holy Ghost, which, say the Jews (c), was represented by the Schechinah, or the cloud of glory.

Ver. 3. [b] Τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα, τὸ αὐτὸ πόμα, the same meat, and the same drink.] For though some manuscripts omit τὸ αὐτὸ, the same, in both these verses, yet is that word to be retained in both places; for so read Irenæus (d), and all the Greek expositors. See Examen Millii in locum. And whereas Esthius interprets the words thus, They eat the same among themselves, not the same with us; this exposition is contrary, not only to what St Austin (e) and all the Greek fathers teach, but also to the scope of the apostle, which is to shew, that they had the like spiritual advantages and privileges with us, which yet he doth not do, unless their spiritual meat and drink signified or typified to them Christ, as ours doth to us. That all of them were not believers in Christ by faith, but some of them were unbelievers, is no objection against this sense; for so it is with Christians now; the wicked not partaking of the benefit of Christ by faith, as the fathers speak, though they receive the sacrament of his body and blood with their mouths.

Note also, That St Paul represents manna as spiritual food, and the rock as being spiritual, and affording them spiritual drink, agreeably to the descants of the Jews: "For manna," saith Philo (f), "is the "food of the soul; it signifies the law of God, and "the divine logos, whence all permanent instruction "and knowledge flows: and this is the heavenly "food, of which Moses, in the person of God, "speaketh, saying, Behold, I rain down for you "bread from heaven." "The food of the soul," saith the same Philo, "is heavenly, not earthly, as "the holy scripture testifieth, saying, I rain down "for you bread from heaven." He calls the manna (g) put into the ark τῆς ἐρανίου καὶ θείας τροφῆς τὸ μνημεῖον, "the memorial of the divine and heavenly "food;" and saith, "that manna (h) is the divine "logos, the cœlestial and incorruptible nourish-"ment of a soul desirous of knowledge." The Jews also declare, that manna (i) was a type of the eternal happiness of man, that it had its rise from heaven, and thence descended on the earth, by opening the gates of heaven; that it is "the divine "light incorporated; the splendor of the glory of "the majesty of God; the bread on which angels "feed, and by which the sons of the world to come "are to subsist." And with these representations of it agree the words of the apostle, saying, The Jews by eating of it did eat τὸ αὐτὸ βρῶμα πνευματικὸν, the same spiritual food with us. But here Mr Clerc saith, "The word πνευματικὸς, spiritual, is here opposed to "φυσικὸς, natural, not to σωματικὸς, corporeal; for "manna was a corporeal food, which could not be "spiritual in any other respect than as it was pre-"pared, not by sensible causes, but by spirits, viz. "angels, whose bread therefore it is said to be," Psal. 78. 2. I answer, Here is nothing true, or at least nothing certain: For, 1. The Chaldee paraphrast saith, it is called the bread of angels in the psalmist, because it came from heaven, the habitation of the angels; as the psalmist himself interprets it, saying, He opened the gates of heaven, he rained upon them manna for to eat, and gave them bread from heaven; bread of the mighty did man eat. 2. Why doth he say, "It could not be called spiritual food in "any other sense than as it was prepared by spi-"rits?" Is it because it was corporeal food? And might it not be also the food of the soul? Are not bread and wine corporeal food? and yet may they not be also spiritual food? Yea, doth not the apostle's argument plainly require that the manna ſhould be ſpiritual? for how elſe did they eat the ſame ſpiritual food with us? And, 3. How abſurd is it to ſay, it is called ſpiritual food, becauſe prepared by ſpirits? Can he give one inſtance of any corporeal thing, called ſpiritual upon that account? Was it not ſpiritual meat, as the water iſſuing from the rock was ſpiritual drink, and was that ſo becauſe prepared by ſpirits?

And this rock was Chriſt;] i. e. it typified Chriſt; for as the rock, being ſmitten, gave forth waters, ſo our Lord being ſmitten, water came forth out of his ſide; and the Holy Ghoſt ſignified by this effuſion of waters from the rock, was poured forth as a river. "By the ſolid rock," ſaith Philo (k), "Moſes "underſtands the wiſdom of God, which is the nurſe "and the inſtructor of all that deſire the incorruptible life. He, by a ſynonymous word, calls the "rock manna, that is, the moſt ancient of beings, the "divine logos." And again, "The rock cleft in "the top, is the wiſdom of which he makes the "ſouls that love him to drink; and being thus "made to drink, they are alſo filled with the univerſal manna, for manna is called τὶ, which is the "progeny of all things. Now, the moſt general "cauſe of all things is God, and the ſecond the "word of God." By theſe things Mr Clerc may be convinced, that the Jews might underſtand theſe types by tradition, and ſeeing them thus accompliſhed, might be induced to believe. And as for Chriſtians, the apoſtle here ſhews the influence they ought to have on them, viz. to preſerve them from the like offences, leſt they became ſubject to the like judgments to which the Jews were obnoxious, ver. 5. 6. But Mr Clerc denies, that the words bear this ſenſe, the rock ſignified Chriſt, or repreſented him; and ſaith, the import of theſe words, That rock was Chriſt, is only this, "That which may be ſaid "of that rock in a carnal ſenſe, may in a ſpiritual "be affirmed of Chriſt;" which is to expound the apoſtle as ſpeaking thus, "They all drank the ſame "ſpiritual drink, for they drank of the rock that "followed them:" Now, what may be ſaid of that rock in a carnal ſenſe, may be ſaid of Chriſt in a ſpiritual, i. e. they all drank the ſame ſpiritual drink, becauſe they drank what was carnal. Moreover, we find many phraſes of the like nature, both in the Old and the New Teſtament; as when it is ſaid, The three branches are three days; the ſeven kine, and ſeven ears of corn, are ſeven years; the four great beaſts, are four kingdoms; thou art the golden head; the ſeed is the word, the field is the world, the reapers are the angels, the harveſt is the end of the world; the hair is Jeruſalem; this bread is my body, this cup is my blood, &c. Gen. 40. 12. & 43. 26. Ezra 5. 5. Dan. 7. 17. & 2. 38. Matth. 13. 38. 39. & 26. 26. 27. Luke 8. 11. Now, in all theſe inſtances, doth not is import typifies, ſignifies, repreſents? Why therefore ſhould it not do ſo in the like propoſition, This rock is Chriſt? or what one inſtance can Mr Clerc produce, that any thing was ever ſaid to be another thing, becauſe what might be ſaid of it in a carnal ſenſe, might in a ſpiritual ſenſe be ſaid of the other? And is it not ſufficient prejudice againſt this παρεμπνία, or uncouth interpretation, that it hath no parallel example? whereas our expoſition is confirmed from numerous examples of like nature.

Ver. 6. ᵉ Τύποι ἡμῶν, our examples.] "The ex"amples he here puts," ſaith Theodoret, "exactly "anſwer to the ſins of the Corinthians;" for as the Jews luſted to eat fleſh, ſo the Corinthians luſted to eat things offered to idols, when they had other meat provided plentifully by God for them; for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulneſs thereof, ver. 28.

Ver. 7. ᵈ Ἐκάθισεν ὁ λαὸς φαγεῖν, &c. The people ſat down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play.] When the Heathens had offered upon the altar, and conſumed that part which belonged to the god they worſhipped, they banqueted in the idol-temple upon the remains, and ſo did epulis accumbere divum, as Virgil ſpeaks (l), at long tables prepared for that purpoſe; whence this is by the apoſtle called partaking of the table of devils; and uſed very appoſitely, ſay the fathers, to convince the Corinthians, that by eating things offered to the idols in the idol-temple, they muſt be guilty of Heatheniſh idolatry.

Ibid. ᵉ Roſe up to play.] Here almoſt all the critics obſerve, That παίζειν, to play, bears an impure ſenſe, importing their fornication with one another; as when we ſay, ſuch an one hath played the whore. But this criticiſm ſeems here to be without foundation: For, 1. the ſcripture often mentions their idolatry, but never charges them with whoredom, then committed when they made the golden calf; all that God himſelf charges upon them is, that they had made them a molten calf, and had worſhiped and ſacrificed to it, and ſaid, Theſe be thy gods, Exod.

Exod. 32. 8. 35. Nehem. 9. 18. Psal. 106. 19. 20. Acts 7. 41. 2. The apostle speaks of whoredom in the verse following, as a distinct sin, and therefore cannot reasonably be supposed to charge them with it here. 3. The exposition of the ancients, That they rose up to dance before the calf, is confirmed by these words, And when Moses saw the calf and the dancing, he was wroth, Exod. 22. 19. And because this was done after the manner of the Heathens (m), and was one of the rites by which they honoured their gods, the apostle useth it as a confirmation of their idolatry. And this is all the fathers seem to mean by saying, that to play is used ἀντὶ τῦ εἰδωλολατρεύειν, for committing idolatry; and the Jerusalem Targum, when it saith, they did ludere cultu peregrino, play after the Heathen manner.

Ver. 8. [r] Μηδὲ πορνεύωμεν, Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed.] How prone the Christians of the church of Corinth were to this sin, which made the Heathen Corinth infamous to a proverb, we learn from these words of the apostle, I fear when I come, I shall bewail many who have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness, and fornication, and lasciviousness, which they have committed, 2 Cor. 12. 21. See 1 Cor. 3. 16. 17. and 5. 11. and 6. 9. 13. 15. 16.

Ibid. [s] Εἰκοσιτρεῖς χιλιάδες, three and twenty thousand.] The number of the slain was four and twenty thousand, Numb. 25. 9. and so Oecumenius saith some ancient copies read here; but of this number one thousand was slain by the judges, and that probably the day before the plague; three and twenty thousand by the immediate hand of God. Now the design of the apostle here, is only to mention them who fell in one day by the hand of God. See Bochart. Hieroz. l. 2. c. 34.

Ver. 9. [t] Τὸν Χριστὸν, Christ.] This reading ought not to be questioned; for we find it not only in Hilary the deacon, St Chrysostom, Oecumenius, Theophylact; but in Irenæus (n). Hence Primasius of old proved the divinity of Christ, as being that God whom they tempted, Psal. 106. 14. and others his pre-existence before the birth of the blessed virgin, against the Socinians. That the apostle here cannot speak, as Crellius contends, of Moses, is plain,

1*st*, Because though the name of Jesus be once given to Joshua, Heb. 4. 8. in the New Testament, as being the true import of his name, and the translation of it by the Septuagint; yet is the name Christ never given to Moses, nor doth it bear any affinity with his name. Nor,

2*dly*, Is Moses ever called Christ in the Old Testament? For though Crellius contends that name is given him in these words of Habakkuk, chap. 3. 13. Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, with thy Christ; yet it is evident, that this is spoken of God's going forth with Joshua, by the captain of the Lord's host, (who is described, Josh. 5. 14. 15. and so honoured by Joshua, as to leave no place of doubting, that he was a divine person); for, ver. 11. the prophet saith, The sun and moon stood still, as they did only in the time of Joshua, chap. 10. 12. and ver. 12. Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the Heathen in anger, as he did by Joshua, and then follow the words cited. 2*dly*, This appears farther from the words tempt and tempted, which, both in the Old and New Testament, signify distrusting the power, or the will of God to do what he had given those who tempted him sufficient evidence, he was both able and willing to perform. See this proved, note on Matth. 4. 7. Now thus they did not tempt Moses, Numb. 11. 6. but God, by distrusting his power to give them bread and water in the wilderness, ver. 5.

Their second answer therefore is, That there being no accusative case expressed after the words, Καθὼς καὶ τινὲς αὐτῶν ἐπείρασαν, as some of them tempted, they may as well add God, as we add him. But,

1*st*, This exposition must ascribe that divine power to Christ, which belonged unto him they tempted in the wilderness, by virtue of the preceding argument, and also render it as wicked, and as dreadful to tempt Christ now, as it was to tempt God then: and so by consequence it must ascribe to him that divine nature, from which a divine power is inseparable.

2*dly*, They have not yet produced one instance, where the person spoken of in reference to the same action in the same instance, is thus changed. Crellius indeed, who never wants a shift, such as it is, brings his instance from ver. 6. viz. These things were spoken, that we might not be lusters after evil things, as they also lusted; but as here is the fallacy of a transition, ἀπὸ ἄλλο γένος, from things to persons; so is here nothing said, ver. 6. to signify, that the evil things forbid to the Corinthians, to be the subject of their lusts, were to be quails or flesh, as in the Jews they were, but only, that they were for the kind, evil, as theirs also were.

Ver. 10. [u] Ὑπὸ τῦ ὀλοθρευτῦ, of the destroyer.] i. e. By a plague sent by the hand of Samuel, the angel of death, called ὀλοθρεύων, the destroyer, Heb. 11. 28. Wisd. 18. 25. and him that had the power of death, Heb. 2. 14. Now the Corinthians murmured, ſaith Theodoret, becauſe ſome of them had received only inferior gifts; ſay others, by reaſon of the perſecutions they ſuffered for the Chriſtian faith.

Ver. 11. [k] Τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων, the end of the ages.] This phraſe either ſignifies the end of the Jewiſh age, as if the apoſtle did intend to ſay, theſe things which happened in the beginning of the Jewiſh age, were recorded for caution and example to us, who are come to the concluſion of it: or the laſt of the ages of the world, i. e. the Chriſtian age; for the Jews, according to the tradition of Elias, divide the duration of the world into three ages; the age before the law, the age of the law, and the age after the law, or that of the Meſſiah, Talmud in Sanhedr. cap. Chelek.

Ver. 13. [l] Ὃς οὐκ ἐάσει ὑμᾶς, who will not ſuffer you;] i. e. any of you, who do what in you lies to arm yourſelves againſt them, to be tempted above what you are able; this therefore ought not to be reſtrained to the elect: For the preceding words, No temptation hath happened to you, are ſpoken to all the members of the church of Corinth; and God hath doubtleſs engaged to all that enter into covenant with him, to enable them to perform the condition of that covenant; ſince a covenant upon an impoſſible condition, he knows, cannot be performed; and all are bound to pray in faith, that God would not ſuffer them to be tempted above what they are able by his ſtrength to bear.

Ver. 16. [m] Τὸ ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας, the cup of bleſſing.] The paſchal cup being ſtyled by the Jews the cup of bleſſing, becauſe they ſanctified it, i. e. they gave thanks for it in theſe words, Bleſſed be thou, O Lord our God, the king of the world, who haſt created the fruit of the vine; and being alſo ſtyled the cup of bleſſing of the table, it cannot reaſonably be doubted, that the euchariſtical cup was ſo called for the ſame reaſon, and that it was ſanctified or conſecrated by thankſgiving to God for it.

Ibid. [n] Κοινωνία, the communion.] This word communion hath two ſignifications: 1. When the ſubject ſpoken of may be diſtributed into parts, ſo that each man may have a ſhare of it, it denotes a diſtribution and communication of thoſe parts to the community, or body mentioned. Thus in the caſe of alms, ſeeing there is a diſtribution of our ſubſtance to thoſe that want, this is in ſcripture ſtyled κοινωνία, and is ſometimes rendered contribution, Rom. 15. 26. ſometimes diſtribution, 1. 9. 13. Heb. 13. 16. and ſince there were διαιρέσεις, diviſions and diverſities of gifts, miniſtrations, and operations, vouchſafed to the church; all which the Holy Spirit wrought, dividing to every member of it ſeverally as he would, 2 Cor. 12. 11. the giving theſe gifts and ſeveral operations to them, is called the communion of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 13. 13. Phil. 2. 1. Thus becauſe one conſecrated loaf was anciently diſtributed among all the communicants, and they all drank their ſhare of the ſame cup of bleſſing, therefore the bread thus broken, and ſhared out, may be ſaid to be the communion, or communication of the body of Chriſt, as being the communication of that bread which repreſented his broken body; and the cup they ſeverally drank of, may be ſtyled the communication of the blood of Chriſt, as being the communication of that wine which repreſented his blood ſhed: And to this import lead the following words, becauſe the bread, or loaf, is one, of which we all partake, we being many are one body, for we are all partakers of one loaf, according to the old proverbial expreſſion, σύσσιτοι καὶ σύσσημοι.

But where the ſubject mentioned is not capable of ſuch diviſion or diſtribution, but every one is to have the whole, or the ſame with another, it imports a fellowſhip and comunion in the ſame thing; in which ſenſe we are ſaid to be called by God εἰς κοινωνίαν, to the fellowſhip of his Son, 1 Cor. 1. 9. to have κοινωνίαν, a fellowſhip in his ſufferings, to have κοινωνίαν, communion with God the Father, and the Son, 1 John 1. 5. and in the apoſtles ſymbol, to believe the communion of ſaints: And in this import of the word the ſenſe runs thus, Do we not by partaking of this bread and wine, conſecrated in memorial of Chriſt giving his body broken, and his blood ſhed for us, hold communion, or declare our fellowſhip with Chriſt? Both theſe ſenſes ſeem agreeable to the ſcope of the apoſtle, and the firſt infers the ſecond.

Ver. 17. [o] Ὅτι εἷς ἄρτος, ἓν σῶμα οἱ πολλοί ἐσμεν, becauſe the bread is one, we being many are one body.] Theſe words, The bread which we break, the loaf or bread is one, and we all partake of one loaf, and therefore are one body, ſhew how groſsly the church of Rome hath varied from Chriſt's inſtitution, in diſtributing to the communicants ſeverally an unbroken wafer, ſo that they neither are partakers of one bread, or loaf, or of bread broken, as the cuſtom both of Jews and Chriſtians was to do. It alſo deſerves to be noted from the teſtimonies of Jamblicus (o) and Laertius (p), that anciently this was a token of friendſhip; and that Pythagoras forbade his ſcholars ἄρτον κλᾶσθαι, to break their bread, becauſe that was not to be broken which made friendſhip.

tar.] i. e. Do they not by partaking of the gift consecrated by the altar, and of which one part is consumed upon it, partake with the altar, and own that they communicate with, and worship that God, at whose altar or table the meat was offered in honour of him? Mal. 1. 7. For as swearing by the altar is swearing also by him whose altar it is, Matth. 23. 20.; so having communion with the altar, is having communion with him whose altar it is. To illustrate this let it be noted. 1. That in these שלמים, or peace-offerings, there was a threefold participation: 1. God had his part offered him upon his altar, viz. the blood and the intrails; part was given to the priest, viz. the breast and the shoulder; and part to the offerer, viz. the skin and the rest of the flesh; and this in token, say the Jews, of friendship and communion of the party offering them, with God and the priest. And he by eating the remainder, and feasting on it in the temple or the holy city, became partaker with the altar, or with God, who had received his share upon the altar. Note, 2. That these peace-offerings were offered either by way of thanksgiving for mercies obtained, or by way of vow, or of free devotion; for this division of peace-offerings we find, Lev. 7. Moreover these being offered to the God of Israel, signified the owning him as that God from whom they received and expected all their mercies.

Ver. 20. [q] Δαιμονίοις, to devils.] Here Mr Clerc saith, "the word δαιμόνιον doth not necessarily signify devils, or evil spirits; for the Heathens did "not always sacrifice to evil spirits, if we consider "what were their true thoughts." But the wisdom of God did not think fit to consider the speculations of some of their philosophers; but what was indeed their practice, and what the objects and directors of their worship were, and who was gratified by it. They pretended to own a supreme deity, but the spirits which spake in the oracles they consulted, which moved their idols, and resided in them, and set up, and promoted their whole idolatrous worship, were doubtless evil spirits; and so the primitive Christians engaged to force them to confess themselves to be, even before them who paid homage to them (q). The pulling down of this idolatrous worship is, in our Saviour's language, the casting out of the prince of this world, John 12. 31. and 16. 11. The converting the Gentiles from this idolatry to the worship of the true God, is the turning them from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. the delivering them from the power of darkness, Col. 1. 13. who before walked according to the prince of the power of darkness, Eph. 2. 2. and were led captive by Satan at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26. The Psalmist, according to the Septuagint, saith, ὅτι πάντες οἱ θεοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν δαιμόνια, that all the gods of the Heathens are devils, Psal. 96. 5. And of the Jews who sacrificed to them, it is said they sacrificed to devils, and not to God, Leshaddem, to evil, wasting, and destroying spirits. The Jews said the same of the Gentiles, that they were θύοντες δαιμονίοις, sacrificing to devils, and not to God, Baruch 4. 7. and so they are also styled 2 Chron. 11. 15. Rev. 9. 20.; and so all Christians ever did expound this place, and with good reason, it being absurd to think St Paul is here dissuading Christians from having fellowship with good angels.

Ver. 21. [r] Καὶ τραπέζης δαιμονίων, and of the table of devils.] This being the design of the apostle to shew that the Corinthians could not partake of the idol-sacrifices in the idol-temples without being κοινωνοὶ τῶν δαιμονίων, men who held communion with devils; and the proof of this being taken from the practice of Christians in partaking of the eucharist, and of the Jews in partaking of sacrifices offered at the altar, it is evident, that the 16th verse must be interpreted suitably to this design, and so as to be a fit medium to prove this conclusion. It is therefore evident.

1*st*, That κοινωνία, communion, cannot here signify the real and substantial communication of the body and the blood of Christ, since that sense renders the apostle's argument infirm; for how doth it hence follow, that because Christians eat substantially the body, and drink the blood of Christ, therefore they who eat of the idol-sacrifices are guilty of idolatry, and hold communion with devils? Moreover, the eating of things offered to idols, could not in this sense make them that did it communicators of the devils; for sure they did not eat of the substance of the devils. This therefore cannot be the import of the words. Nor,

2*dly*, Can the sense of them be to this effect: The cup and bread communicate to us the spiritual effects of Christ's broken body, or his blood shed for us; though this be in itself a certain truth. For,

1. These spiritual effects cannot be shared among believers, so that every one shall have a part of them only; but the same benefits are wholly communicated to every due receiver. See note on ver. 16.

2. The apostle here attempts to prove, not that the Corinthians, by eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, received any spiritual influence from devils, but only that, by that action they did partake of what was offered to them, and was a solemn part of their religious worship, as the eating theſe ſacrifices was ſtill reputed; ſo that by it they muſt own themſelves to be worſhippers of idols, and then, by parity of reaſon, he muſt, by the example of the euchariſt, intend to prove, not that the Chriſtian did partake of the ſpiritual effects of our Lord's paſſion, but that he did partake of what was conſecrated in honour of him, and received as a ſolemn act of religious worſhip and communion with him. And this appears yet farther from the words which the apoſtle uſeth, as the cloſe of this argument, and as the thing which anſwers to the two preceding inſtances: for they do not run thus, By the things which the Gentiles offer they receive ſpiritual influences from evil ſpirits; but thus, This I ſay, to complete this argument, and to render the ſacrifice offered to idols parallel to thoſe of Chriſtians, and of Jews, that as theſe are offered to the honour of Chriſt, and of the God of Iſrael, ſo the things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, and I would not that ye ſhould be partakers with devils, viz. by feaſting of the ſacrifices thus offered to them, and of which the devils had a part; and that it was by the act of eating and drinking of theſe idol-ſacrifices that they became partakers of the cup and table of devils, and thereby guilty of idolatry: as the fathers (r) declare, ſo is it evident from theſe words, Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils, ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils; it was therefore by theſe actions that they held communion with them, and committed idolatry the eating of the feaſt made of things offered to idols in the idol-temple being as much a fœderal rite as was the eating the peace-offerings of the Jews, eaten in the temple, or the holy city, or the ſacramental bread eaten in the church by Chriſtians; whence the oblations made there were ſtyled σπονδαὶ ἐν τιμῇ δαιμόνων, oblations in honour of the dæmons.

Ver. 27 [r] Πᾶν τὸ παρατιθέμενον ὑμῖν ἐσθίετε, Whatſoever is ſet before you eat.] The apoſtle had before diſcourſed of eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, and ſhewed, 1. The ſcandal it might give to the weak Gentile Chriſtian; and, 2. That it was indeed an idolatrous action. Here he begins his diſcourſe of eating at all things offered to idols, with reſpect chiefly to the weak Jewiſh convert. And, 1*ſt*, Whereas, by their canons (s), an idol, and all things appertaining to it, and whatever was offered to it, was wholly forbidden, the Rabbins pronouncing the eating, or poſſeſſing any thing of it forbidden, in theſe words, Thou ſhalt not bring an abomination into thine houſe, Deut. 7. 26.; the apoſtle relieves the conſcience of the Chriſtian in this caſe, letting him know that he might eat theſe things, when ſold in the ſhambles, without ſcruple of conſcience, ver. 25. 2*dly*, Whereas their canons teach, (t) That if an Heathen make a banquet for his ſon or daughter, a Jew is forbidden to eat of his meat, becauſe he is forbidden, if called, to eat of his ſacrifice, Exod. 34. 15. the apoſtle exempts the conſcience of the Chriſtian from this obligation alſo, ver. 27.

Ver. 30. [s] Τί βλασφημοῦμαι; Why am I evil ſpoken of?] This is the expoſition of all the Greek ſcholiaſts; and it is confirmed by the parallel place, Let not your good be evil ſpoken of, Rom. 14. 16. i. e. let not your faith, or the liberty you take by reaſon of it, be uſed ſo as to miniſter occaſion to others to ſpeak evil of that faith, as the Jews did of Chriſtianity upon occaſion of this liberty; for they held the eating of things offered to idols to be idolatry (u), and pronounced all idolaters to be apoſtates from the law and the prophets: and this was one of their great objections againſt Chriſtians, "That they "did eat things offered to idols, and thought not "themſelves defiled by doing ſo;" though in truth this was done chiefly by the heretics of thoſe times, the Nicolaitans (x), the Gnoſtics (y), the followers of Baſilides; but "the true Chriſtians," ſaith Juſtin Martyr (z), "will rather ſuffer death than be guilty "of idolatry, or eating things offered to idols."

Ver. 31. In things not capable of honouring God poſitively, be careful that you act so, that the name of God be not blasphemed, or his doctrine evil thought, or evil spoken of, by reason of your actions. Yea do, and abstain from all things so, as to satisfy your own conscience, and discover to others, that the honour of God, and the advancement of the interests of his kingdom, are much dearer to you than any gratifications of your carnal appetites, or any temporal concern.

Ver. 32. [x] No offence.] As by thus eating things offered to idols in the idol-temple, or elsewhere, being thus admonished of it, ver. 28. you are like to do; for the Jew will be apt hence to conclude, that Christianity renders you enemies to the law and the prophets; the Gentiles, that your professed abhorrence of idols is not real, and that the practice in which you comply with them is not sinful; and the weak Christian will be tempted, by your example, to eat these things with conscience of the idol, chap. 8. 7. or to fly off from the Christian faith.

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. BE ye (therefore) followers of me (in this condescension for the good of others), as I also am of Christ (in it, Rom. 15. 2. 3. Gal. 6. 2. Philip. 2. 5. 6. 2 Cor. 8. 9.)

2. Now I praise you, brethren, that you remember me in all things (I have taught you), [a] and keep the ordinances, (Gr. traditions), as I delivered them to you.

3. But (I must further advertise you of some things which I had no occasion when present to take notice of, and therefore) I would have you know, that the head of every man is Christ, and the head of the woman is the man, and [b] the head of Christ is God; (and so as Christ, as Mediator, acts in subordination to the Father, so must the woman act in subordination to the man.)

4. Every man (therefore) praying or prophesying (in the church), [c] having his head covered, dishonoureth [d] his head (Christ, as acting unsuitably to that relation which he bears to God and Christ; for man ought not to cover his head, because he is the image and glory of God, ver. 7.)

5. But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth [e] with her head uncovered, dishonoureth (the man) her head, (whose glory she is, as being put in subjection to him), for that is even all one as if she were shaved, (and so had removed the token of subjection to the man, which nature gave her.)

6. For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn; but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn, or shaven, let her be covered. (See note on ver. 5.)

7. For a man indeed ought not to cover his head (as a sign of subjection), forasmuch as he is [f] the image and glory of God, (as having the government of the world committed by God to him); but the woman (ought to cover her head, forasmuch as she) is the glory of the man, (as being taken from, made for him, and put into subjection to him.)

8. For the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man.

9. Neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man.

10. (Moreover) for this cause ought the woman to have [g] power (a veil) upon her head, because of the (evil) angels, (she being tempted by the prince of them to do that which is perpetual cause of shame to her, and which increased her subjection to the man, Gen. 3. 16. ought therefore to use this token of shamefacedness and subjection.)

11. Nevertheless, neither is the man without the woman, nor the woman without the man in the (wisdom of) the Lord, (ordaining that one should come out of the other.)

12. For as the woman is (taken out) of the man, even so is the man also (propagated) by the woman; but all (these) things (are) of God, (who made woman out of the man, and by his benediction increaseth men by the woman.)

13. Judge in yourselves; is it comely that a woman pray (publicly) to God uncovered, (when God himself hath given her a covering by nature, to intimate to her, that she should be veiled?)

14. [h] Doth not even nature itself (which hath made man the image and glory of God, created him before the woman, and given him dominion over her) teach you, that if a man have long hair, (the covering and token of subjection of the other sex), it is a shame to him? (See note on ver. 5.)

15. But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her, (she being fitted by it to represent the condition of her sex); for her hair is given her for a covering, (i. e. in token of subjection to her husband.)

16. But if (after what hath been thus said) any man seem (still) to be contentious, (I shall add only this, that) we have no such custom, [i] neither the churches of God; (it being only customary in the assemblies of Heathens for women to pay their devotions to the gods thus. See note on ver. 5.)

17. Now in this (other thing) that I (am about to) declare unto you, I praise you not, (viz.) that you come together (so as is) not for the better, but for the worse.

18. For first of all, when you come together in the church, I hear that there be [k] divisions (Gr. schisms) among you; and I partly believe it, (or I believe believe it true, κατὰ μέρος τι, of ſome part of you.)

19. [l] For (according to our Lord's ſaying, Matth. 18. 7.) there muſt be alſo hereſies (or ſects) among you, (the fleſh, the world, and the devil tempting to it, and the wiſdom of God permitting it), that they who are approved (of him), may be made manifeſt among you.

20. When you come together therefore (thus) to one place, this is not (acting as if you came) to eat the Lord's ſupper, (the feaſt of Chriſtian charity and communion.)

21. For in (your way of) eating, [m] every one taketh before (the) other his own ſupper, (not tarrying for, or regarding others, ver. 33.); and (ſo it falls out, that) one (who had nothing to bring) is (ſtill) hungry, [n] and another (with his plenty) is drunken.

22. What, have ye not houſes to eat and to drink in (if need be before you come? ver. 34.), or deſpiſe ye (thoſe poor Chriſtians who are members of) the church of God (as well as you?), and (put to) ſhame them that have not (what to eat or drink?) What ſhall I ſay to you? ſhall I praiſe you in (doing) this? I praiſe you not.

23. (To come together thus, I ſay, is not to come as they ought to do, who aſſemble to eat the Lord's ſupper): For I have received of the Lord, that which alſo I (as I received) delivered to you, that the Lord Jeſus, the ſame night in which he was betrayed, [o] took bread;

24. And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and ſaid (to them all), [p] Take, eat; this is my body which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me (giving my body to be broken for you all.)

25. After the ſame manner alſo he took [q] the cup, when he had ſupped, ſaying, This cup (i. e. the wine contained in it) is the (memorial of the) new teſtament (or covenant ratified) in my blood; this do ye, as often as you drink it, in remembrance of me (confirming this covenant with my blood.)

26. For as often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do [r] ſhew (by this memorial of it) the Lord's death till he come (to judgment.)

27. Wherefore, whoſoever ſhall eat this bread, and (or) [s] drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, (as they muſt do who by this practice thwart the great deſign of this inſtitution, which was to ſhew his equal love to all, to whom he equally gave theſe elements, and to oblige us to live in a continual remembrance of it), ſhall be guilty of (violating the ſacrament of) the body and blood of the Lord.

28. But [t] let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29. For he that eateth and drinketh [u] unworthily, (as they who make theſe diviſions and diſtinctions, and commit theſe diſorders, when they come together to eat the Lord's ſupper, do), eateth and drinketh [x] damnation (Gr. judgment) to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lord's body (to be given as an indication of his equal kindneſs to all his members, without any difference or diſtinction; and as a ſymbol of their mutual communion with one another, chap. 10. 16. 17.)

30. For this cauſe (the not diſcerning the Lord's body, it is that) many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep.

31. For if we would (thus) judge (and diſcern) ourſelves, we ſhould not be judged (or thus puniſhed by God.)

32. But when (neglecting this) we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world, (but awakened by thoſe chaſtiſements to reform thoſe evil practices which render us obnoxious to condemnation.)

33. Wherefore, my brethren, (that this miſcarriage may be rectified), when ye come together to eat (the Lord's ſupper), tarry one for another, (that ye may all eat of that, and your love-feaſts together.)

34. And if any man (pretend to do this out of) hunger, let him eat at home (before he come); that you come not together to condemnation. And the reſt will I ſet in order when I come; (or, as for the other things relating to this ordinance, or your letter, I will ſet them in order when I come.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XI.

Ver. 2. [a] Ὅτι καθὼς παρέδωκα ὑμῖν, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε, that you keep the traditions as I delivered them to you.] This commendation muſt be reſtrained to the generality, or ſounder part of the church of Corinth, or muſt be underſtood, as ſuch general expreſſions uſe to be, ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ, as for the moſt part, or excepting thoſe few things in which afterwards I find reaſon to complain of your neglect, chap. 15. 3. and here, ver. 23.

Vain is the note of Eſthius on this text, that it makes plainly for unwritten traditions. For, 1. The word tradition is common to things written and unwritten, to things delivered by word and by epiſtle, 2 Theſſ. 2. 15.; the whole Chriſtian faith is a tradition, Jude 3.; the doctrine of Chriſt's death, burial, and reſurrection is a tradition, παρέδωκα γὰρ, for I delivered to you theſe doctrines, ſaith St Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 3.; and will the Romaniſts ſay, that theſe things are not written in the New Teſtament? 2. To prove traditions extra-ſcriptural, it is not ſufficient to cite a paſſage out of ſcripture ſpeaking of traditions not then writ by one apoſtle; but it muſt be proved, that theſe these traditions were neither then, when mentioned, in writing, nor afterwards committed to writing by himself, or any other inspired person. 3. The traditions mentioned here, and 2 Thess. 2. 15. were traditions immediately delivered to those churches from the mouth of an apostle; and when the Romanists can make this good from like authentic testimony of any of their fardle of traditions, we shall be ready to receive them.

Ver. 3. [b] Κεφαλὴ δὲ Χριστοῦ ὁ Θεὸς, and the head of Christ is God.] "We are hence taught," saith Sclichtingius, "that the head of Christ is God; whereas the "most high God can have no head above him, so "that Christ who hath this head above him, cannot "be most high."

Ans. To this some of the fathers answer, That God is here said to be the head of Christ, as being the (a) Father of the Son, and so the cause of him; but yet as the woman is of the same nature with the man who is her head, so is Christ of the same nature with God the Father: they also add, that the word head is here used as a note of principality or causality in the Father (b), but not of subjection in the Son; which wholly enervates the argument of Crellius from this place. And though the schools seem not to allow of this language, yet it is used by Irenæus in these words, "The Father is above all things, "and he is the head of Christ; the Word is through "all things, and he is the head of the church (c)."

Others answer, That the Father is here styled the head of Christ, considered as Mediator, in which relation he received his kingdom and dominion from him, John 17. 2. 1 Cor. 15. 27. Heb. 2. 8.; and exercises it wholly to his glory, Philip. 2. 9. 10. 11.; in which sense the Father may be styled his head, because he doth all things according to his Father's will, to his glory, and by authority derived from him: and this interpretation is confirmed from these words, The head of every man is Christ; he being man's head by virtue of the power and dominion given him over all flesh, chap. 15. 27. John 17. 2. Eph. 1. 19.—22.; and that power being given to the man Christ Jesus.

Ver. 4. [c] In the church.] For that the apostle speaks not of prophesying at home, as Mr Clerc imagines, but in the church, is evident from the apostle's argument, ver. 16. against this practice, in these words, We have no such custom, neither the churches of God: his argument to the contrary is answered in the note on ver. 6.

Ibid. [d] Τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ, his head.] That is, Christ (d); for, 1. He is the head of the man, ver. 3. 2. This seemeth most agreeable to the reason assigned, why he should be uncovered when he doth service in the church, viz. because he is the image and the glory of God. And, 3. Did he dishonour his own head by covering it, he ought never to be covered; whereas if this only respects his head Christ, whom he represents in praying and prophesying in the church, it is sufficient that he is uncovered, when he thus acteth as his minister. Lastly, The head the woman dishonoureth, is the man, styled her head; and so the head the man dishonoureth, is Christ, styled his head, ver. 3.

Ver. 5. [e] Κατὰ κεφαλῆς ἔχων, with his head covered, ἀκαλυπτοκεφαλοῦσῃ τῇ κεφαλῇ, with her head uncovered.] For explication of these words, let it be noted from Theodoret (e), "That the men of Corinth, accor-"ding to the custom of the Greeks, both wore long "hair, and prayed to God with their heads covered "in the public assemblies." So also, saith Plutarch (f), did the Romans; so, saith Lightfoot (g), did the Jews; so did, saith Servius (h), "all that sa-"crificed to any god, excepting Saturn." But the Heathen woman paid her devotion to the gods, resoluta comas, seu capillos, with her hair loose and hanging down; or in the language of the poets, crine jacente, aut demisso. Note,

2*dly*, That the Jews judged it τὸ αἰσχρὸν, a shameful and indecent thing for a woman to be shaved, and permitted this only in the case of whoredom (i), as a token of their shame. And among the Heathens it was indicium ultimi luctus, a token of the highest grief. "It is customary," saith Plutarch, "for men to be shorn, and for women to wear long "hair; and therefore in times of mourning, the "men let their hair grow, and the women are sha-"ved, this being contrary to custom among the

3*dly*, That the apoſtle doth not here approve of the woman's praying or propheſying in the church, as is evident from 1 Cor. 14. 34. 1 Tim. 2. 11. 12.; though here he ſays nothing to the contrary, as intending to rectify that diſorder, when he ſpoke of other diſorders in the caſe of propheſying, chap. 14. 34.

Ver. 7. ᵉ Εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ, the image and glory of God.] True here is the note of Theodoret, that man is here ſtyled the image and glory of God, neither as to his body, nor as to his ſoul; for in reſpect of the ſoul the woman is equally the glory of God, as to ſpirituality and immortality, and ſo is equally ſaid to be made after his image, Gen. 1. 27.; but κατὰ μόνον τὸ ἀρχικὸν, only as to rule and government, which is the proper glory of a man, according to the pſalmiſt's words, Thou haſt crowned him δόξᾳ καὶ τιμῇ, with glory and honour, and haſt ſet him over the work of thy hands, and haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet, Pſal. 8. 5. 6.

Ver. 10. ᶠ Ἐξουσίαν ἔχει ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, a veil upon her head becauſe of the angels.] Here let it be noted, 1. That all the ancient interpreters agree in this, that ἐξουσία, which we render power, doth ſignify a veil or covering, which, being put over her head, compels her to hang down her eyelids; and it is here, ſay they, called power, as being τῆς τοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἐξουσίας καὶ κυριότητος ἐνδεικτικὸν, the token of the power and dominion of the man over her. Note,

2*dly*, That the reading διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας, by reaſon of her revelations, as Mr Clerc doth inſtead of διὰ τοὺς ἀγγέλους, without conſent of any copy, or verſion, is not to be endured. Moreover διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας, ſignifies barely by meſſage, not by reaſon of her revelations, that being properly in Greek διὰ τῆς ἀγγελίας τῆς παρ' αὐτῆς.

3*dly*, That evil angels are abſolutely ſtyled angels in theſe words of this epiſtle, Know ye not that ye ſhall judge angels, 1 Cor. 6. 3.? and elſewhere, the angels that ſinned, 2 Pet. 2. 4.; or that kept not their firſt ſtation, Jude 6. Note,

4*thly*, That among the nine maledictions of the women which the Jews reckon up, this is one, That " ſhe is to have caput velatum inſtar lugentis (m), " her head covered like one that mourneth;" and this, they ſay, ſhe is to wear, not ſo much as a token of ſubjection, as of ſhame; whence Philo (n) calls the τὸ ἐπικάρσιον, cover of the woman's head, τὸ τῆς αἰδοῦς σύμβολον, the ſymbol of her ſhame; and this ſhame, ſay they, is due to her (o), " becauſe ſhe brought the " firſt ſin into the world." " It is with her," ſay they, " as when one tranſgreſſeth and is aſhamed; " and therefore ſhe comes forth with her head co- " vered." " She ought," ſaith Tertullian (p), " by " her habit to reſemble Eve, a mourner and a pe- " nitent, ob ignominiam primi delicti, for the ſhame " of the firſt ſin:" hence he often interprets this text of evil angels (q).

Moreover, in the judgment both of Jews and Chriſtians, the ſerpent which deceived Eve, acted by the ſuggeſtion of the devil (r), or of Sammael, whom the Jews ſtyle the prince of devils. That therefore theſe words may be interpreted as in the paraphraſe, is evident not only from theſe obſervations, but eſpecially from a place parallel to this, Let the woman learn in ſilence with all ſubjection. For I ſuffer not a woman to uſurp authority; for Adam was firſt formed, then Eve, (as here, ver. 8. 9.); and Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the tranſgreſſion, 1 Tim. 2. 11. 12. 13. where the ſame reaſon is aſſigned for her ſubjection, which I offer for explication of theſe words.

Others interpret the words thus: The woman ought to act decently in the church, and therefore to be covered, becauſe of the angels, who are preſent in the aſſemblies of the ſaints, it being the opinion, both of (s) Jews and Chriſtians, that the miniſtering angels are there preſent.

Ver. 14. ʰ Ἢ οὐδὲ αὐτὴ ἡ φύσις, doth not even nature itſelf? The expoſition given in the paraphraſe is ſo natural, and ſo well founded on the words and argument of the apoſtle, and ſo agreeable to the ſentiments of all the ancient commentators on the place, that we ſeem not here to need the induſtry and learning the critics have ſo liberally ſpent upon this place; the apoſtle here by nature underſtanding not any inward principle implanted in the heart and reaſon of a man, but the firſt riſe and conſtitution which man and woman have received from the God of nature. It is againſt nature, ſay the fathers, for a man to wear long hair, for by it he assumes the habit of a woman, ᾧ ἄρχειν ταχθεὶς τὸ τῆς ὑποταγῆς σύμβολον παραδέχεται, and being made by God to rule, he takes upon him the symbol of subjection. Of the criticisms upon the word κομᾶν they say not a word.

Ver. 16. [i] Οὐδὲ ἐκκλησίαι Θεοῦ, nor the churches of God.] Hence it is manifest, 1. That the apostle here cannot be thought to have respect only to the custom of the Greeks, as Mr Cl. imagines, for then why doth he plead the custom of all the churches of God against this practice?

2*dly*, Hence note, That in things only respecting decency, and in conforming to which there is no violation of the command of God, the custom of the church should be our rule, it being an argument of pride and a contentious spirit, in matters of so little moment to be singular, and to create disturbance to the church of God.

Ver. 18. [k] Σχίσματα, schisms.] Here the word schisms is used not of men separating from the church, but of them coming together in the church, but yet eating the Lord's supper separately, and so as not to join with the whole assembly in that ordinance; so the word also is used, chap. 1. 10. not "of a separation from the unity of the catholic "church," saith Esthius, "but of sects and divi-"sions in the church."

Ver. 19. [l] Δεῖ γὰρ αἱρέσεις εἶναι, for there must be heresies, &c.] This necessity of heresies is not absolute, or of God's making, but only on supposition of the pride, and vain-glory, strife, envyings, and contentions which are already in the church of Corinth, 1 Cor. 3. 3. and God's permission that men so affected, should act according to the corrupt affections and dispositions of their hearts, as the necessity of diseases in the body arises from mens intemperance: Nor is the reason here assigned of them properly causal, as if the wisdom of God designed there should be heresies for this end, that they who were approved of him might be made manifest, but rather eventual (t); as if the apostle had said, whence it will come to pass, that they who are approved will be made manifest.

Ver. 21. [m] Ἕκαστος τὸ ἴδιον δεῖπνον προλαμβάνει, every one takes before his own supper.] It is the opinion of Dr Lightfoot, that the apostle speaks not here of the agapæ, or love-feasts which accompanied the eucharist, as the tradition of the ancient church supposed; but of the paschal supper, which these Judaisers did eat before the eucharist, as thinking that the eucharist, which our Lord instituted after that supper, was only an appendix of it; and that it was not instituted in commemoration of the death of Christ, but as a new form of their commemoration of their deliverance out of Egypt; and that on this account the apostle here repeats the institution of that sacrament by our Lord, and so oft tells them, that Christ appointed this supper for the commemoration of his death, and that we might shew it forth till he comes, and charges them with not discerning it to be the Lord's body, ver. 29. But he seems to be mistaken in both these conjectures. For,

1*st*, It is very unlikely they should mistake the Lord's supper celebrated then every week at least, for that paschal supper, which was only to be celebrated once a-year, and was then rather to be celebrated at home, in every man's family, than in the church; and which, according to the Jewish canons, could not be observed at all in Corinth, or out of Judea, whilst the temple stood.

2*dly*, Those words of the apostle in the preceding chapter, viz. The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? and those that follow, Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils, do plainly shew that the apostle there supposes, they well knew that in that supper they were partakers of the cup and table of the Lord, and had communion with his body and blood.

Dr Lightfoot adds, That those words, one is hungry, and another is drunken, refer not to the poor and the rich, but to the Gentile who came fasting to the Lord's supper; whereas the Judaising Christian, according to his custom, drank freely at his paschal supper; and he concludes that the apostle doth not here reprehend their manner of coming to these suppers, but that he reprehends them for the very use of them. But here again he seems much mistaken. For,

1*st*, It is evident the apostle reprehends them not for the supper itself, i. e. the eating and the drinking, but because they did προλαμβάνειν, take their meat and their drink before others, not staying till they came, ver. 21. 33. Hence for a remedy of this disorder, he saith not, Abstain from these suppers, but only when ye come together, tarry one for another.

2*dly*, That the hungry here were the Gentile converts, who chose to eat the eucharist fasting, is very improbable, not only because it was then generally received at night; but because the apostle both here, and ver. 34. allows all to eat and drink before they come, not taking notice of any that scrupled the doing this. Moreover the οἱ μὴ ἔχοντες, the hungry here, are not men who have no houses, but who have nothing to eat, or drink; for they were put

to ſhame by this, that they had nothing to eat, or drink, as others had, nor were thought worthy to partake with them that had, in the aſſembly of which they were a part; it being not the place where they aſſembled, which is called the church of God, but the perſons who aſſembled; for by the ſame action was the church deſpiſed, and they that had nothing put to ſhame: Now it is not eaſy to conceive how by this ſeparate meeting in a church, they ſhould deſpiſe a church, whereas by denying their poor brethren any ſhare in their banquet, they viſibly deſpiſed them.

And with that agrees the note of St Chryſoſtom, on the place, that an aſſembly is called, ὰκ ἵνα διηρημένοι ὦμεν, οἱ συνιλθέντες, ἀλλ' ἵνα οἱ διηρημένοι συνημμένοι, not that they who came together might be divided, but that they who are at home divided, may join together.

3*dly*, Theſe agapæ, or feaſts of charity, being mentioned by St Jude, ver. 12. by Ignatius, ep. ad Smyrn. § 8. by Clemens Alex. pædag. l. 2. c. 1. p. 41. by Tertullian, apol. c. 39. by the Apoſtolical Conſtitution, l. 2. c. 28. and by Julian (u) the apoſtate, it is very unreaſonable to call this cuſtom in queſtion, or to imagine that Paul here rather referred to a paſchal ſupper, than to this appendix of the ſupper of our Lord. When I call it an appendix, I do not mean that it was eaten by them after the Lord's ſupper; for the word προλαμβάνειν, to take before his own ſupper, ſhews the contrary, viz. that this banquet was celebrated before the Lord's ſupper; but only that it was joined to the Lord's ſupper, in imitation of our Lord, who celebrated the ſacrament after the paſchal ſupper.

Ibid. [n]Ὃς δὲ μεθύει, and another is drunken.] This may either refer to the Gentile converts among the Corinthians, retaining ſtill their Heathen cuſtom of drinking liberally after their ſacrifices, whence μεθύειν, to be drunk, is by the grammarians thought to have its original from μετὰ τὸ θύειν, becauſe of the free drinking they indulged to after their ſacrifices; or to the Judaiſing converts, who thought themſelves obliged to drink plentifully at their feſtivals, four large cups of wine, ſaith Dr Lightfoot (x), at the paſchal ſupper, and to be quite drunk, ſaith Buxtorf (y) in the feaſt of Purim.

Ver. 23. [o]Ἔλαβεν ἄρτον, took bread, &c.] The argument lies thus: Chriſt gave an equal diſtribution of the ſacramental bread to every one at the table, in token that he died equally for all; and he appointed them all to eat together of it at one common table, in remembrance of his love to them all: Can you then eat every one ſeparately his own ſupper, excluding thoſe to whom he equally diſtributed the ſacred bread, from any ſhare of yours, leaving them hungry, and in want of bread, and yet conceive you worthily eat the Lord's ſupper, and duly participate of, and thankfully commemorate this great feaſt of love? But farther obſerve,

1*ſt*, That this bread is called in the preſent tenſe τὸ σῶμα κλώμενον, τὸ σῶμα διδόμενον, Chriſt's body broken, his body given, Luke 22. 19. even whilſt he was alive, and ſo his body was not actually broken, or given for us; it therefore could not be literally and naturally his broken body, but only by way of repreſentation, as being then inſtituted to repreſent that body which was ſhortly to be given, and broken on the croſs for us: So alſo it is ſaid of his blood, yet in his veins, that it is τὸ αἷμα τὸ ἐκχυνόμενον, his blood ſhed, and this according to the uſual ſacramental phraſe, Matth. 26. 28. Mark 14. 24. Luke 22. 20. Thus, before the paſchal ſacrament was celebrated, it was ſaid, This πάσχα ἐστι τῷ Κυρίῳ, is the paſſover to the Lord, Exod. 12. 11. 13. i. e. this is that which is inſtituted to repreſent it; for this night I will ſmite all the firſt-born of Egypt, and will paſs over you: And of circumciſion it is ſaid, This is my covenant, Gen. 14. 10. before that Abraham was actually circumciſed, ver. 23. 24.

2*dly*, Obſerve, that St Paul calleth that five times bread which they did eat of, which was to them the communion of the body of Chriſt, and by eating of which unworthily, they became guilty of the body of Chriſt, not diſcerning the Lord's body, 1 Cor. 10. 16. 17. and 11. 26. 27. 28. He therefore five times calls that bread which was conſecrated, and by our Saviour called his body: Now is it not a wonder that one ſingle paſſage, mentioned by our Saviour whilſt he was alive, ſhould be deemed ſufficient to make us all believe that his whole body, and ſo his hand was in his hand, and that this living Chriſt was at the ſame time dead, and ſacrificed; and that the ſame body which was whole before the eyes of his diſciples, was alſo broken for them at the ſame time, with many thouſand contradictions more; and yet that what the Holy Ghoſt, who knew the meaning of our Saviour's words better than any Romaniſt, hath ſaid ſo often to inform us that this element is, after conſecration, bread, ſhould not be thought ſufficient to make us think it bread, though it appears to all our ſenſes ſo to be?

Ver. 24. [p]Λάβετε, φάγετε.] See the defence of theſe words againſt Dr Mills, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 25. [q]Πότηριον, the cup.] Note here two reaſons for the participating of the cup by the whole body of the church of Corinth. 1. Becauſe it is the blood of the new covenant, which belongs as much to the laity as to the prieſts; the blood ſhed for the remiſſion of the ſins, not only of the prieſts, but of the laity. 2. Becauſe by the drinking of this cup they remembered Christ's blood shed for them, and shewed forth his death. Now, since these reasons do equally concern all Christians, the drinking of the cup, by which this commemoration, by our Lord's institution, is to be made, must equally concern them; for sure the means which Christ appointed for such an end, ought to be used by all who are obliged to pursue that end: And if the apostle here reprehends the Corinthians for varying from the tradition received from the Lord in celebration of the sacrament, he would have reprehended them much more, had they so varied from it as to neglect the distribution of that cup, which he had instituted for those sacred ends.

Ver. 26. ʳ Τὸν θάνατον Κυρίου καταγγέλλετε, ye shew the Lord's death.] If then this be the end and use of this sacrament, to be a solemn commemoration of the death of Christ during his absence from us; if it was designed to be a standing memorial of his sufferings till he came again to judgment; the obligation that lies upon all Christians to observe it, is perpetual, and ought not to cease till the world ends. "Indeed," saith Teodoret (z), "after his pre-"sence there will be no more need of the symbols "of his body, because the body itself will then ap-"pear." Which words are a full confutation of the doctrine of transubstantiation.

Ver. 27. ˢ Ἢ πίνῃ, or drink.] Here Walker's note is this: The Greek ἤ, or, that he might lead you to think there was something in the Popish argument taken hence to prove that whole Christ was contained in either species; because either by eating or drinking unworthily, men become guilty of profaning both the body and blood of Christ: But for justification of our version and, it may be noted, that the Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic versions read and, and so does Clemens Alex. strom. 1. p. 271. Cyril. Al. de ador. Sp. p. 421. Athanas. de pass. Dom. p. 1027. Aut quæst. ad Antioch. p. 375.

2*dly*, That according to Phavorinus, ἢ κεῖται ἀντὶ τοῦ καί, that is, ἤ is often put for and: so what is in the Hebrew, וְ or, is in the Seventy rendered καί, and, Lev. 4. 23. 28. Numb. 15. 18. Mal. 2. 17. So what is ἤ, Luke 20. 2. is καί, Matth. 21. 23. Mark 11. 28. So the promise made to Abraham, καὶ τῷ σπέρματι αὐτοῦ, Gen. 17. 8. is the promise made to him ἢ τῷ σπέρματι, or to his seed, Gal. 3. 16.; and so the Hebrew vowel when it divides or distributes, is rendered sometimes ו, or, as Exod. 21. 17. Deut. 3. 34. 2 Sam. 24. 13. Psal. 8. 4. Prov. 20. 20. and sometimes καί, and, as Josh. 8. 22. 1 Sam. 17. 34. Jer. 13. 23. Amos 5. 19. Judg. 4. 6. 13. 7. and eating and drinking going here before, ver. 26. and following after, ver. 28. 29. this intermediate verse must bear the same sense.

Ver. 28. Δοκιμαζέτω ἑαυτὸν, let him examine himself.] Δοκιμάζειν is to discern or approve; so δοκιμάζεις, thou approvest the things which are most excellent, Rom. 2. 18. Happy is the man that condemneth not himself, ἐν ᾧ δοκιμάζει, in that which he approves, Rom. 14. 22. Δοκιμάζειν ἑαυτὸν is to approve himself to himself, or discern how it is with himself. So 2 Cor. 13. 5. ἑαυτοὺς δοκιμάζετε, prove your ownselves: Know ye not that Jesus Christ is among you, except ye be reprobates? Gal. 6. 4. Δοκιμαζέτω, Let every man approve his own work. And so here the sense is, "Let a "man approve himself to his own heart, as a good "Christian, and one that comes to celebrate this "ordinance with a grateful commemoration of the "love of Christ dying for him, and with true cha-"rity, and unfeigned kindness, to all those for "whom he did equally shed his blood, and gave "his body to be broken:" And so he may repair to it with a true Christian spirit, and in an acceptable manner.

Ver. 29. ᵗ Ἀναξίως, unworthily;] i. e. not discerning the Lord's body: which words plainly teach us what it is to eat and drink unworthily, viz. to do it so as in that action not to discern the Lord's body. Now this, as hath already been observed, cannot signify not to apprehend the sacrament to represent Christ's body broken, and his blood shed for us; for of this ignorance had the Corinthians been guilty, the apostle would have argued ex non concessis, from things not granted by them, chap. 10. 16. 21. It therefore signifies their behaving themselves as if they had not considered that this sacrament was instituted in thankful and practical remembrance of Christ dying for them, and ratifying by his blood the covenant in which he promised to be merciful to their iniquities, and remember their sins no more; and as a feast of love designed equally for the benefit of all his members, and to knit them in the closest bonds of unity and friendship to each other. When this was wanting, they did not discern aright the Lord's body, or the sacrament of it, and so did eat and drink unworthily. In the Talmud, saith Dr Pocock (a), there is a distinction betwixt a man who eat the passover לשם מצוה, in obedience to the command, (which was, that they should do it as a memorial of God's passing over them when he destroyed the Egyptians, by reason of the blood of the paschal lamb, Exod. 12. 13. 14. and he that thus eat it, was the just man that walked in the ways of the Lord, mentioned Hos. 14. 9.), and betwixt another who did eat it only as common food, i. e. without reſpect to the commandment, or the ends of its inſtitution; and he is compared to the tranſgreſſor there mentioned, that ſhall fall therein. So here, he that eateth this holy ſacrament with a thankful memorial of the benefits conferred upon us, the death from which we are delivered by the blood of Chriſt, the true paſchal lamb ſacrificed for us, eats it worthily; but he that partakes of it only as common bread and wine, not conſidering the ends for which it was deſigned, and the benefits of Chriſt's death it repreſented and conſigned, diſcerns not the Lord's body, i. e. he putteth no ſufficient difference betwixt that and common food, as the word διακρίνω doth import. See note on Rom. 14. 23.

Ibid. [x] Κρίμα, damnation.] The word imports temporal judgments; as when St Peter ſaith, The time is come ἄρξασθαι τὸ κρίμα, that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God, 1 Pet. 4. 17. not damnation ſurely: and this is certainly the import of the word here, 1. Becauſe the Corinthians did thus eat unworthily, and yet the judgments inflicted on them for ſo doing were only temporal, viz. weakneſs, ſickneſs, and death, ver. 30. 2. Becauſe the reaſon aſſigned of thoſe judgments is, That they might not be condemned in the other world, or that they might not be obnoxious to damnation.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. NOw concerning ſpiritual gifts (or perſons, ver. 3.), brethren, (which is another thing in and about the exerciſe of which you offend, making them matter of contention, emulation, and vain-glory,) I would not have you ignorant (of what it concerns you to know of them, and yourſelves that exerciſe them.)

2. Ye know that (before your converſion to that faith, by which you received theſe gifts) ye were Gentiles, carried away to (the ſervice of) [a] thoſe dumb idols, (which could not ſpeak themſelves, much leſs enable you to ſpeak), even as you were led (by ſeducing guides.)

3. Wherefore I give you to underſtand, that no man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jeſus [b] accurſed, (or anathema); and that no man can ſay that Jeſus is the Lord, (and confirm that doctrine with ſupernatural gifts and miracles), but by the Holy Ghoſt.

4. Now there are [c] diverſities of (theſe ſpiritual) gifts, but (it is) the ſame Spirit (which enables us to exerciſe any of them.)

5. And there are differences of adminiſtrations (or offices in the church to which this diverſity of gifts belongs), but (it is) the ſame Lord (who hath appointed all theſe offices, Eph. 4. 12.)

6. And there are diverſities of operations (performed by theſe officers in the church by virtue of theſe gifts), but it is the ſame God, who (by giving them this Spirit) worketh (them) all in all.

7. [d] But the manifeſtation of the Spirit (in the exerciſe of theſe gifts) is given to every man, (not for his own private uſe, but) to profit (others) withal.

8. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wiſdom, (to reveal that faith to others which is the wiſdom of God); to another the word of knowledge, (to reveal myſteries, 1 Cor. 13. 2. and underſtand the mind of God in the Old Teſtament for confirmation of that faith), by the ſame Spirit.

9. To another faith, (to enable him to believe firmly, that he ſhould be impowered to do things moſt difficult), by the ſame Spirit; to another the gift of healing (all manner of diſeaſes) by the ſame Spirit.

10. To another the working of miracles, (or powers, ſuch as the raiſing the dead to life); to another prophecy, (enabling him to foretel things future, and ſpeak by a divine afflatus); to another diſcerning of (the) ſpirits (of others); to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues.

11. But all theſe (gifts) worketh that one and the ſame ſpirit, dividing them to every man ſeverally [e] as he will.

12. For as the (natural) body is one, and (yet) hath many members, and (Gr. but) all the members of that one body being many, are one body, (the body is one ſtill, the whole being animated by the ſame ſoul, which is a ſpirit); ſo alſo [f] is (it in the body of) Chriſt, (all whoſe members, though they be many, and adorned with different gifts, make but one body myſtical, united by the Spirit to their head Chriſt Jeſus.)

13. For by one Spirit [g] we are all (Gr. have been all) baptized into (this) one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and (by receiving of that living water we) have been all made [h] to drink into (or, of) one ſpirit.

14. (All I ſay); for (as) the (natural, ſo the myſtical) body is not one member, but many.

15. If the foot ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body?

16. And if the ear ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the eye, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body?

17. * If the whole body were an eye, where were

the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18. But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

19. And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20. But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21. And the eye (the man endowed with the word of wisdom, or knowledge) cannot say to the hand, (the person employed in lesser ministries), I have no need of thee; nor again, the head, (the person placed in the highest dignities in the church), to the feet, (the deacon, or man employed in the lowest offices of the church), I have no need of you.

22. Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary; (Gr. but the members of the body which seem more weak are more necessary, viz. the brain, the stomach, and the guts.)

23. And those members of the body which we think to be less honourable, (Gr. more dishonourable), upon these we bestow (Gr. put) [i] more abundant honour, and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24. For our comely parts have no need, but God [a] hath tempered the body together, (agreeably to the condition of each member), giving more abundant honour (or covering) to that part that lacked; (placing them so, that even nature may be a covering to them.)

25. And so hath he dealt also with the body mystical, making the meaner offices of them who attend upon the poor more necessary, and to them more honoured who need their help), that there should be no [i] schism in the body, but that the members should have the same care for (and regard to) one another.

26. And whether one member (of the natural body) suffer, all the members suffer with it (by sympathy), or one member be honoured, (or adorned), all the members rejoice with it; (i. e. if being indisposed, it becomes sound, being weak, it recovers strength, all the members are eased, and so may be said to rejoice with it.)

27. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular, (or severally are members of that body, and so ought to act in the mystical body as do the members in the natural, rejoicing with them that do rejoice, and mourning with them that weep, Rom. 12. 15.)

28. [m] And God hath set some in the (body of the) church, first apostles, (to exercise the gift of wisdom), secondarily, prophets, (to exert those of knowledge and prophecy); thirdly, teachers, (to labour in the word and doctrine); after that (workers of) miracles; then (they that have the) gifts of healing, helps (to take care of the poor), governments, (rulers of the church), diversities of tongues.

29. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

30. Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

31. But covet earnestly the best (and the most useful) gifts; and yet shew I to you a more excellent way (of ministering to the welfare of the church, and of your own souls, even that of charity.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XII.

Verse 2. [a] Πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα ἄφωνα, to dumb idols.] For though the priests told them they were only the receptacles of those deities they worshipped; that they resided in the image, and gave answers by it, as the Christian writers (b) own, yet both the prophets, and writers of the New Testament, and all the fathers in their apologies, still represent them as they were in themselves, saying, They have mouths, but speak not, Psal. 115. 5. and 135. 16.; are dumb stones, Hab. 2. 19. et muta simulacra, and such only as gave answers, when they gave any, by the means of evil spirits.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἀνάθεμα, accursed.] This the Jews did, as we learn, not only from the words of Justin Martyr (c), but also from their nineteenth prayer against heretics (d), made by Samuel the younger, in the days of Gamaliel. Their exorcists and diviners therefore, though they pretend to it, saith the apostle, cannot be acted by the Spirit of God. Nor can they who confirm the doctrine of Christ by miracles, be acted by any other but the Holy Ghost; for no evil spirit would assist them to confirm a doctrine so opposite to, and destructive of their kingdom and designs.

Ver. 4. [c] Διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων, there are diversities of gifts.] These gifts being in the nature of spiritual faculties, or habits, are very properly ascribed to that Spirit, who animates the Christian, and by whom he lives the new life; and these ministries, as properly to the Lord Christ, whose ministers and ſervants the apoſtles, prophets, teachers, &c. are, in the propagation of the goſpel. Theſe operations being miraculous, and far exceeding the power of any creature, as fitly are aſcribed to the Creator of all things. But whereas Crellius hence infers, that this third perſon being diſtinguiſhed from the other two by the title of the ſame God, he only muſt be truly and properly ſo called; he might as well have argued, that becauſe the ſecond perſon mentioned here is ſtyled the ſame Lord, he muſt be only ſo excluſively to the ſame God; and becauſe the firſt is called the ſame Spirit, he muſt be ſo excluſively of the ſame God and Lord, who yet are equally ſpirits.

Ver. 7. 8. 9. 10. [d] It is exceeding difficult to fix the true import of all theſe gifts, I therefore ſhall only propoſe what follows by way of conjecture, till I receive better information from more able hands.

1*ſt*, then, By the word of wiſdom I underſtand the wiſdom given to the apoſtles to reveal the goſpel to the world, for that in this epiſtle is ſtyled the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, the hidden wiſdom, 1 Cor. 2. 6. 7. and elſewhere, the manifold wiſdom of God, Eph. 3. 10. Chriſt, the great teacher of it, is alſo ſtyled the wiſdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. and in him are ſaid to be contained all the treaſures of wiſdom, Col. 2. 3. The apoſtles, to whom this goſpel was committed, are called σοφοὶ, wiſe men; Behold, I ſend unto you prophets and apoſtles, Luke 11. 49. and wiſe men, Matth. 23. 34. and they are ſaid to teach this goſpel according to the wiſdom given to them, 2 Pet. 3. 15.

2*dly*, The word of knowledge being diſtinguiſhed from that of revelation, and of prophecy, 1 Cor. 14. 6. and 13. 8. and being ſet by way of appoſition, or explication with the knowledge of all myſteries, 1 Cor. 13. 2. ſeems to ſignify the gift of underſtanding myſteries, or things concealed; ſuch was the myſtery of calling the Gentiles before it was revealed, Rom. 9. 25. Eph. 1. 9. and 3. 9.; the myſtery of recalling the Jews, Rom. 11. 25.; the myſtery of iniquity, 2 Theſſ. 2. 7.; the myſtery of the beaſt, Rev. 10. 7.; but more eſpecially the gift of underſtanding the myſtical ſenſe of the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament. And in this ſenſe St Barnaby ſeems to ſpeak of it, when he ſaith, ſect. 6. Bleſſed be God ὁ σοφίαν καὶ νῦν δίμιν ἐν ἡμῖν τῶν κρυφίων αὐτοῦ, who hath given us the wiſdom and knowledge of his ſecrets; and ſo it agrees with that gift which the fathers call προγνωσις, as when Irenæus (e) ſaith, Some have the knowledge of things to come, and viſions, and prophetical ſayings; and the man thus gifted ſeems to be, in St Clemens Romanus, the powerful man to utter knowledge.

3*dly*, That by faith, we are to underſtand a miraculous faith, enabling them to do things moſt difficult, ſeems highly probable from theſe words, Though I have all faith ſo as to remove mountains, 1 Cor. 13. 2. But chiefly I would underſtand by it a peculiar impulſe that came upon them when any difficult matter was to be performed, which inwardly aſſured them God's power would aſſiſt them in the performance of it. See note on James 5. 15. Whence it is often mentioned as a preparatory diſpoſition to the working ſuch miracles, and is ſometimes ſtyled the faith of God, Mark 11. 22. ſometimes faith without doubting, Matth. 21. 21.; and ſo it was a prerequiſite to the caſting out ſtubborn devils, Matth. 17. 20. and to the enſuing gifts of healing and working miracles; and hence perhaps it is that in the following enumeration of them, ver. 28. 29. 30. we find no mention of it.

4*thly*, Ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, the working of miracles, is, by the fathers, referred to the power reſiding in the apoſtles to inflict diſeaſes, and even death itſelf upon offenders, as in the caſe of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts 5. 5. 10. and of Elymas the ſorcerer, Acts 13. 11. and of the inceſtuous perſon, 1 Cor. 5. 4. where the apoſtle makes mention τῆς δυνάμεως Χριστοῦ, of the power of Chriſt; and where he ſpeaks of his rod, he calls it the power that God hath given him, 1 Cor. 4. 19. 20. 2 Cor. 10. 8. and 13. 10.: but yet I doubt not but theſe words are truly rendered the working of miracles, for to them the word δυνάμις, power, generally relates in the New Teſtament; as when mention is made of the miracles done by Chriſt himſelf, Matth. 11. 20. 23. and 13. 54. 58. and 14. 2. Mark 5. 30. Luke 4. 36. and 5. 17. and 6. 19. and 19. 37. Acts 2. 22. and 10. 38. and of the miracles done by others in the name of Chriſt, Matth. 7. 22. Mark 9. 39. Luke 9. 1. Acts 1. 8. and 4. 33. and 6. 8. and 8. 13. and 19. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 4. 2 Cor. 12. 12. Gal. 3. 5. 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. Hence it is frequently mentioned in conjunction with ſigns and wonders, Acts 2. 22. and 8. 13. Rom. 15. 19. Heb. 2. 4. It is alſo here plainly diſtinguiſhed from the gift of healing, and it is as plainly diſtinguiſhed from the power of caſting out devils, in theſe words, In thy name have we propheſied, and caſt out devils, and done δυνάμεις πολλὰς, many mighty works, Mark 7. 22. It therefore rightly ſeemeth in the paraphraſe to be reſtrained to the doing things beyond the courſe of nature, and wrought by an immediate divine hand, ſuch as the ſupplying a defective member, or the raiſing of the dead. Thus to the firſt order of the ſucceſſors of the apoſtles, Euſebius (f)

ascribes many strange powers of the Holy Ghost; and Justin Martyr (g) speaks of the powers done in his time by the name of Christ.

5thly, The gift of prophecy is not to be restrained, as some do, to teaching, and the interpretation of the scripture, which it importeth only, as that was done by a particular inspiration of the Holy Ghost; for otherwise, as here, the prophets and the teachers are two distinct offices in the church, so also are they reckoned as such in the church of Antioch, Acts 13. 1. and they are reckoned as distinct χαρίσματα in these words, Having gifts different, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministry; or he that teacheth, on teaching, Rom. 12. 6. 7.; and so they are reckoned by Justin Martyr (h), when he saith, One man receives at baptism the spirit of understanding, ὁ δὲ προγνώσεως, ὁ δὲ διδασκαλίας, another of foreknowledge, or prophecy, and another of teaching; and this discovers to us another sense of prophecy, viz. that it imports, as Irenæus saith, πρόγνωσιν τῶν μελλόντων, the foreknowledge or prediction of things future, and that in order to the exhortation to some duty. Thus Agabus foretold by the Spirit the dearth that was to come on all Judea, Acts 11. 28. 29. 30. that other Christians might be moved, as they were, to send their charity thither. Thus Judas and Silas being prophets, διὰ λόγου πολλοῦ, with many words they comforted the brethren, and established them, Acts 15. 32. This gift was exercised also by foretelling who would be fit persons to do good service in the church. Thus St Paul commits a charge to Timothy, according to the foregoing prophecies concerning him, 1 Tim. 1. 18. and saith, Neglect not the gift that is in thee, that was given thee by prophecy, chap. 4. 14. And that in this sense the fathers understood it, is evident not only from the word πρόγνωσις, foreknowledge, by which they do express it, but from the arguments they use against the Jews, to convince them that God had left their church, and had owned and embraced the societies of Christians, because he had left them no prophets, but had transferred that gift to the Christians: and these predictions being made by revelation of the Spirit, ἀποκάλυψις or revelation, is accounted a part of this gift; for to the prophet is ascribed his revelation, 1 Cor. 14. 26. 30. and the revelation of St John is the book of his prophecy; and to the prophet is ascribed the manifestation of the secrets of mens hearts, as in those words, If all prophesy, and there come in an unbeliever, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all, and thus are the secrets of his heart laid open, 1 Cor. 14. 24. Thus of those prophets, Irenæus, l. 5. c. 6. saith, that they did not only explain the mysteries of God, but also τὰ κρυφία ἀνθρώπων εἰς φανερὸν ἄγειν ἐπὶ τῷ συμφέροντι, manifest the secret things of men, when it was needful or profitable for them, or the church. See Origen against Celsus, l. 1. p. 34.

6thly, The διάκρισις πνευμάτων, discerning of spirits, not only imports the faculty of discerning betwixt the impulse of false and true prophets, which he that hath, seems to be styled by St Clemens, ὁ σόφος ἐν διακρίσει τῶν λόγων, a wise man in discerning words, and betwixt the lying wonders and magical operations of evil spirits, and the powers of the Holy Ghost, as 1 Cor. 14. 29. 1 Thess. 5. 20. 21. 1 John 4. 1. but also a judgment of discerning the spirits of other men, whether they were qualified for such an office in the church, and accordingly chusing them out for that work. So the Spirit, in the prophets, said, Separate me Barnabas and Paul for the work whereunto I have called them, Acts 13. 2. 3. And thus the Holy Ghost is said to have constituted the bishops and presbyters in Asia, Acts 10. 28. because, as Clemens R. i) saith, they constituted bishops and deacons, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, making trial of them by the Holy Ghost; and Clemens of Alexandria (k), that St John ordained to be of the clergy τοὺς ἀπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος σημαινομένους, such as were signified to him by the Spirit. Ignatius (l) saith of the bishops of his time, that they were constituted, not by men, but Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γνώμῃ, by the counsel of Christ Jesus. St Cyprian (m), that they were constituted, not only by the consent of the people, and the suffrage of their fellow-bishops, but also judicio divino et Dei testimonio, by the judgment and testimony of God. And, lastly, This gift seems also to imply a discovering of what was done inwardly, or in the spirit of a man; so Peter discerned the heart of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts 5. 3. 9. and of Simon Magus, Acts 8. 21. 23. St Paul of Elymas, Acts 13. 10. and of the lame man, seeing he had faith to be healed, Acts 14. 9. And Ignatius (n) speaks of the Spirit in him that did foretel and τὰ κρυπτὰ ἐλέγχων, reprove things secret.

Ver. 11. • Καθὼς βούλεται, as he will.] Here seems to be a plain argument for the personality of the Holy Ghost, because a will is here ascribed to him. 2. Hence it is evident that he is no creature, because no creature can enable others to do these works. 3. That he is God; for as all this diversity of operations is ascribed to the same God, ver. 6. so it is here said, All these worketh one and the same Spirit (o).

Ver. 12. [f] So is Chriſt;] that is, ſaith Chryſoſtom, τὸ τῦ Χριστῦ σῶμα, the body of Chriſt, that is, his church, as appears from ver. 21. The head cannot ſay to the feet, I have no need of you; this being not true of Chriſt the head of that church, which is his body, but only of the miniſterial heads under him.

Ver. 23. [g] Ἐις ἓν σῶμα ἐβαπτίσθημεν, we were baptized into one body.] Vain here is the note of Mr Clerc, viz. "That we are baptized that we might be called "by one name, be of one ſociety, the church of "Chriſt:" for it is not by partaking of one ſpirit that we are called Chriſtians, but by profeſſing faith in Chriſt. The apoſtle is plainly proving, that as the natural body is one, ſo is the myſtical: now, the natural body is one, as being informed by one ſoul and ſpirit united to it, and animating all the parts of it; ſo is it, ſaith he, in the myſtical body united together by one and the ſame Spirit received in baptiſm, and from our ſpiritual head Chriſt Jeſus communicated to all the living members of his body, to give them ſpiritual life and motion. See Eph. 4. 16.

Ibid. [h] Ἐις ἓν πνεῦμα ἐποτίσθημεν, were made to drink of one Spirit.] So our Lord repreſents the participation of the Holy Spirit, ſaying, If any man thirſt, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth, out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living waters. This ſpake he of the Spirit, which they that believed in him ſhould receive, John 7. 37. 38. 39.; and the apoſtle calls the water, which was a ſymbol of the Spirit, ſpiritual drink, 1 Cor. 10. 4. And as believers are ἓν πνεῦμα, one ſpirit with Chriſt, 1 Cor. 6. 17. ſo doth Chriſt invite them to come to him to drink of this Spirit.

Ibid. [i] Τιμὴν περισσοτέραν, more abundant honour.] The cloaths God made to cover the nakedneſs of Adam and Eve, are ſtyled by Onkelos, cloaths of honour; and the word τιμὴ, here rendered honour, is in the Septuagint put to ſignify a cover; ſo, Behold, he is to thee a covering of thy eye, Gen. 20. 16. is in the Septuagint, εἰς τὴν τιμὴν τῦ προσώπυ συ, for an honour on thy face.

Ver. 24. [k] Συνεκέρασε τὸ σῶμα, hath ſo tempered the body.] Agreeable to this is that of Cicero (p), "Principio corporis noſtri magnam natura ipſa vi- "detur habuiſſe rationem, quæ formam noſtram, "reliquamque figuram in qua eſſet ſpecies honeſta, "eam poſuit in promptu; quæ autem partes cor- "poris ad neceſſitatem datæ, aſpectum eſſent de- "formem habituræ, atque turpem, eas contexit "atque abdidit; hanc tam diligentem naturæ fabri- "cam imitata eſt hominum verecundia, quæ enim "natura occultavit, eadem omnes, qui ſana mente "ſunt, removent ab oculis."

(p) De officiis, l. 1. n. 177.

Ver. 25. [l] Ἵνα μὴ ᾖ σχίσμα, that there may be no ſchiſm in the body.] Of this ſchiſm of the members againſt the body, ſee Menenius apud Livium, l. 2. c. 32. Max. Tyr. diſſ. 5. p. 50.

Ver. 27. For illuſtration of this long compariſon betwixt the body natural and myſtical, obſerve, 1. That this compariſon is taken from the Jews, who teach, that ſuch order ought to be obſerved betwixt the prieſthood and the people, as in the human body, in which there are members ſuperior, and others ſerving to the reſt, for all of them ſerve the heart from whence life proceeds; and ſo it is meet that the Levites ſhould ſerve the prieſts, and the people the Levites; Paulus Fagius in Lev. 3. 7. The argument which the apoſtle uſeth from the compariſon of the natural with the myſtical body ſeems to conſiſt in theſe particulars.

1*ſt*, That as the moſt inferior members of the natural body are as much the members of that body as the moſt noble, ſo are the moſt inferior Chriſtians as much the members of Chriſt's body.

2*dly*, That there would be no perfect natural body without this diverſity of members, and in like manner no myſtical body without ſuch diverſity of gifts and offices as God hath ordered in his church, ver. 17. 19.

3*dly*, That the members are placed in the body according to the wiſdom and the good pleaſure of God, ver. 18. 24. and ſo it is in the members of the myſtical body, which therefore ought to acquieſce in the good pleaſure of his will, in whatſoever ſtation and condition his wiſdom doth ſee fit to place them.

4*thly*, That the members which ſeem the weakeſt, and the meaneſt, are as neceſſary and ſerviceable to the body as the other. Human life could not continue, nor human kind ſubſiſt without them, ver. 22. So in the myſtical body, they that are employed in works of charity and mercy to the poor, and the ſick, thoſe that ſerve tables, are in their kind as neceſſary and ſerviceable as other members of the church, and had their χαρίσματα, or ſpiritual gifts, as well as others, Rom. 12. 6. 7. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 11.

5*thly*, That as nature had provided a covering for the leſs honourable parts, and taught us to employ our care in covering and adorning them; ſo was it alſo with reſpect to the leſs honourable members of the eccleſiaſtical body, there were helps and miniſters particularly appointed to take care of them to cover their nakedneſs, and ſupply their wants, and promiſes were made to thoſe who employed themſelves in ſuch acts of charity, ver. 23. 24.

6*thly*, That as there was no diviſion in the members of the natural body, but all the members took care of, and were employed for the good of the whole; so God hath ordered matters thus in the body mystical, that there should be no divisions, no separate interests in it, but they should mutually regard the interests of one another, sympathising, and rejoicing together, ver. 25. 26.

Ver. 28. Note, for explication of these offices,

1*st*, That to prophets I ascribe the gifts of knowledge and of prophecy, from these words, If I have prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge, 1 Cor. 13. 2.; and as the first gift, the word of wisdom, belongs especially to the apostles, so it seems probable, that the second, the word of knowledge, should belong to the second office, that of prophets. But whereas Mr Clerc saith, That "the prophets did "not teach by inspiration, but only had been fitted "to teach by inspiration; that they spake as they "saw fit themselves; and those things which they "received from Christ, and his apostles, they interpreted after their own manner:" this seems to be confuted by these words of the apostle, If any thing be revealed to him that sitteth by, let the first prophet be silent; for the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

2*dly*, The teachers seem to be men, who, having received the doctrine of faith from the apostles, preached it to others for their conversion to the faith, and so they are the men who laboured in the word and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5. 17. "They were," saith Eusebius (q), ἀποστόλων μαθηταὶ, "the disciples of the "apostles, who built up the churches in the faith "which the apostles had planted, promoting the "preaching of the gospel more and more, and "spreading among them the salutary seed of the "heavenly kingdom." And they of them who preached the gospel to them who had not heard it, were called evangelists, and sometimes apostles: so Andronicus and Junia are called ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, men of esteem among the apostles, Rom. 16. 7.; and of these St John saith, For his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles; we therefore ought to receive such, that we may be fellow-helpers to the truth, Eph. 3. 7. 8. But whereas Theophylact and Mr Clerc say, that the prophets indeed spake by the Holy Ghost, but these teachers from themselves; this I cannot assent to, for διδασκαλία, teaching, is numbered among the spiritual gifts, Rom. 12. 6. and διδάσκαλοι, teachers, among them to whom Christ had given these gifts. See the note on Eph. 4. 11.

3*dly*, The helps seem to be the deacons and other officers, who ministered not only to the sick and poor, but in holy things also, in baptizing and distributing the eucharist; for ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι, whence comes the word helps, signifies to take care of others; and these also, as before I noted, had their spiritual gifts. As then the Talmudists, saith Dr Lightfoot, call the Levites, the helps of the priests; so may the apostle call the deacons, which answered to them, the helps of the apostles and bishops of the church.

4*thly*, Governments are almost generally supposed to denote the rulers of the churches planted by the apostles, and who are sometimes styled bishops, Acts 20. 28.; sometimes ἡγούμενοι, guides or rulers, Heb. 13. 7. 17.; and sometimes προϊστῶτες, presidents or prelates, Rom. 12. 8. 1 Thess. 5. 12.: but Dr Lightfoot conjectures, they were the men who had the gift of discerning spirits, because κυβερνήσεις, which we here render governments, signifies in the Old Testament, wise counsels, and skill in giving judgment of things. Thus ὁ νοήμων κυβερνήσεις κτήσεται, a man of understanding shall attain to wise counsels, Prov. 1. 5.; οὗ μὴ ὑπάρχει κυβερνήσεις, where no counsel is, the people fall; but in much counsel there is safety, Prov. 11. 14.; and μετὰ κυβερνήσεως, by wise counsel thou shalt make war, Prov. 14. 6. It is not reasonable, saith he, to suppose no office should be appointed for this so necessary gift, and yet no other is here mentioned to which we can apply it. Let the reader chuse which of these interpretations he likes best.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. (For) though I speak with the tongues of men, and of angels, (the languages of all nations, or know how to converse with angels), and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal; (benefiting no man by my empty and confused, and pleasing no man with my shrill and noisy sound.)

2. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing (worth in the sight of God.)

3. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned (for the faith), and have not charity (to man, but do this rather out of vain-glory, or to be admired and praised of men), it profiteth me nothing (as to my eternal state.)

4. Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not, charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,

5. Doth not behave itſelf unſeemly, ſeeketh not her own, is not eaſily provoked, thinketh no evil,

6. Rejoiceth not [b] in iniquity (or falſehood), but rejoiceth in the truth;

7. [c] Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

8. Charity never faileth (as to the proper and elicit acts of it); but (as for other gifts), whether there be prophecies, they ſhall fail; whether there be tongues, they ſhall ceaſe; whether there be (the gift of) knowledge, it ſhall vaniſh away.

9. For (with all our gifts) we know (ſtill but) in part, and we propheſy (but) in part, (knowing but few things in compariſon to our future knowledge.)

10. But when that (ſtate of knowledge) which is perfect is come, then that (knowledge) which is in part ſhall be done away.

11. When I was a child, I ſpake as a child, I underſtood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childiſh things; (and the like difference will there be betwixt us now and then.)

12. For now we ſee (only as) through a glaſs darkly; but then we (ſhall ſee) face to face, (with the greateſt nearneſs and perſpicuity, which now we cannot; for no man, ſaith God, ſhall ſee my face and live, Exod. 33. 20. 23. 2 John, ver. 12. 3 John, ver. 14.): now I know (but) in part; but then ſhall I know [d] even as alſo I am known, (more fully and completely, ſeeing God as he is, 1 John 3. 2.)

13. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, theſe three, (all great and excellent virtues, and ſuperior to the gifts now mentioned); but the greateſt of theſe is charity, (both for duration, as continuing when faith ſhall end in viſion, 2 Cor. 5. 7.; and hope in enjoyment, Rom. 8. 23. 24.; and for perfection, as rendering us more like to God, and beneficial to men).

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIII.

Ver. 1. 2. 3. NOte, Here is it to be noted, That the apoſtle in theſe verſes reckons up the things which were of higheſt value with the Jews, and which rendered their wiſe men the moſt celebrated. Thus of R. Jochanan Ben Zacchai (r), they ſay, that he underſtood "the lan-"guage of the angels;" and of R. Azai (s), that there was not in his days "a rooter up of moun-"tains" like to him, or one that could do ſo great things as he did. The man on whom the ſpirit of prophecy did reſt, or who was fit to receive him, muſt, ſay they, be "a wiſe man, a religious man, "a temperate man, and one that is endued with all "probity of manners (t)." Of alms, they ſay, that "whoſoever diminiſheth any thing of his ſubſtance "to beſtow in alms, ſhall be delivered from hell (u)." And as for martyrdom for the law, they thought it ſufficient to expiate, not only for their own ſins, but even for the ſins of the whole nation. Hence Joſephus brings in Eleazar (x), praying thus for the Jews, "Let my blood be an expiation for them, "and receive my life for their lives." And he ſaith of the martyrs that ſuffered under Antiochus Epiphanes, that "the divine providence ſaved all "Iſrael from the evils they ſuffered, by the blood, "and the propitiatory death of thoſe pious men (y)."

But here is raiſed a diſpute, Whether the gifts here mentioned were at any time, or could be exerciſed by them who wanted charity? or ſuch profuſe alms, and conſtancy in ſuffering to the death, were ever, or could be ſeparated from that grace? To which I anſwer, It is true, that the apoſtle here ſpeaketh only hypothetically, that were theſe things performed without charity, they would not profit to ſalvation; but then that ſuppoſition ſeems fairly to imply, the thing itſelf was not impoſſible; or that there was no neceſſary connection betwixt theſe gifts and actions, and the grace of charity. Moreover, our Saviour ſeems plainly to inform us, that men might propheſy, and caſt out devils, and do mighty works in his name, Matth. 7. 22. 23. and yet be workers of iniquity, and perſons whom he would not own at the laſt day. He alſo teacheth, that ſome may do their alms to be applauded by men, Matth. 6. 2. and therefore do them ſo as to receive no reward from God; and ſo informs us, that alms may be given without true love to God, or to our neighbour for his ſake. And laſtly, all the fathers teach (z), that

Ver. 6. ᵇ Ἐν ἀδικίᾳ, in iniquity.] That ἀδικία here signifies falsehood, the truth, to which it is opposed, shews; so it signifies in the Old Testament above an hundred times, and the word שקר, which in the Hebrew signifies a lie, is as often by the Septuagint translated ἀδικία, as ψεῦδος; so a right hand of falsehood, is δεξιὰ ἀδικίας, Psal. 144. 11.; the way of lying, is ὁδὸς ἀδικίας, Psal. 119. 29.; and he that telleth lies, is λαλῶν ἄδικα, see Psal. 107. 7. and 119. 69. 78. 86. 118. 128. 163. Psal. 63. 11. Exod. 22. 7.: now falsehood, and a lie, in the Old and New Testament, do often signify a false religion; or a religion containing a false object of worship. Thus the molten image is a teacher of lies, Hag. 2. 28.; and he that maketh it, is said to have a lie in his right hand, Is. 44. 20.; he that goes after them walketh in lies, Jer. 23. 14.; and inherits lies, ὡς ψευδῆ ἐκτήσαντο οἱ πατέρες ἡμῶν εἴδωλα; he turns the truth of God into a lie, Rom. 1. 25.; believes a lie, 2 Thess. 2. 10. 11. See the note on Rom. 3. 7. And the truth in the New Testament is emphatically put to signify the gospel, or the Christian faith: so epist. 2. of St John, ver. 3. 4. I rejoiced greatly to find thy children walking in the truth; and epist. 3. ver. 3. 4. I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth. So that the import of these words may be this: Charity will not permit us to rejoice, but rather cause us to be troubled, to find men still continue in their false worship, as the Gentiles, or in opposition to the gospel delivered to them, as the Jews do; but it rejoiceth to see men walking according to the truth of the gospel.

Ver. 7. ᶜ From these four comprehensive verses, we learn the properties and fruits of charity. 1. What it requires us to do to all. 2. What it will not permit us to do to any. 3. What it requires us to do, or will not permit us to do, to our offending brother.

First, What deportment it requires towards all men, viz.

1. It is good, kind, and tender-hearted towards all, ver. 4. The Lord make your charity to abound to one another, and to all men, 1 Thess. 3. 12.; for charity requiring us to love our brother as ourselves, it must engage us to consider him as we do ourselves, and so extend the same kindness to him, when he needs it, as we shew to ourselves, Gal. 6. 10.

2. It is active and laborious, engaging us by love to serve one another, Gal. 5. 13. 14. to do them any service we are able with good will, and without grudging; for there must be in us ὁ κόπος τῆς ἀγάπης, the labour of love, 2 Thess. 1. 3. Heb. 6. 10.

3. It rejoiceth in the truth, ver. 6. that is, in mens doing righteously, and living according to the gospel, which is called by way of eminence, the truth; it begets in us a complacency, and inward pleasure to behold truth and righteousness, piety and goodness prevailing in the world.

4. It makes us ready to believe all things, ver. 7. that is, all the good it hears, or can have any charitable ground to think of others.

5. It hopeth all things, ver. 7. i. e. it inclines us to hope still the best concerning mens intentions and actions liable to doubt; and if our brother be at present bad, to hope, and not despair of his amendment, and so still to endeavour his reformation by all proper means.

Secondly, The things which charity will not permit us to do to any, are these, viz.

1. Charity worketh no evil to our neighbour, in his person, estate, good name, or relations, Rom. 13. 10. much less in reference to his soul: and therefore,

2. It will not suffer us to scandalize, or to offend our brother, by doing any thing which either may embolden him to sin, or disaffect him to religion, or discourage him in the practice of his duty; for if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably, Rom. 14. 15.

3. Οὐ λογίζεται κακὸν, ver. 5. It will not permit us to surmise, or to suspect that evil of others which we do not know; it imputes not evil to them, nor puts it to any man's account beyond absolute necessity. It doth not censure their miscarriages as done out of malice, or with ill intentions. So Theodoret.

4. It rejoiceth not in iniquity, ver. 6. in any evil done to, much less by others; it permits no man to be pleased with any deceit, or falsehood spoken of, or done to others, or with any ill stories, or malicious insinuations concerning them.

5. It envies not the happiness, or the prosperity of others, but is well pleased with it, ver. 4.

6. Οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, it behaveth not itself unseemingly towards any, in words or gestures; it refuseth not to do the meanest offices of kindness to them, as if it were unseemly, or below us to be employed in them, ver. 5. So Chrysostom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact.

Ver. 12. ᵈ Καθὼς καὶ ἐπεγνώσθην, even as I am known.] I do not think that either these, or the words of St

John,

John, we ſhall ſee him as he is, afford any juſt grounds for the ſpeculations of the ſchools, touching the intuitive viſion of the eſſence of God, or their ſpeculum Trinitatis, without which the invocations of ſaints and angels cannot be excuſed from idolatry: for as the words, 1 John 3. 2. refer not to the viſion of God the Father, but of Chriſt Jeſus, appearing at the day of judgment in his glory, and rendering our bodies like unto his glorious body; ſo theſe words refer not to the knowledge of God's eſſence, but rather to the knowledge of thoſe great things he hath prepared for thoſe that love him, revealed now in part, by the Spirit of prophecy and wiſdom, 1 Cor. 2. 9. 10. which then, ſaith the apoſtle, we ſhall know in the moſt clear and perfect manner, as we ourſelves are known of God.

7. Οὐ φυσιοῦται, it vaunteth not itſelf, ver. 4. It is not puffed up againſt our brethren; it roots out of us all elation of mind, ambition, oſtentation, pride in over-valuing ourſelves, and deſpiſing others, Eph. 4. 2. οὐ περπερεύεται, it is not raſh, heady, or precipitate in ſpeaking of, or acting towards others. So Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius. It doth not curiouſly ſearch into other mens matters which belong not to us. So Theodoret.

8. It ſeeketh not her own praiſe, profit, or pleaſure to the hurt of others; but inclines men to ſeek the good of others, 1 Cor. 10. 24.

9. Οὐ δάκνει, it bites not with the tongue, Gal. 5. 14. 15. but cuts off all ſtrife, contentions, bitter zeal, animoſities, ver. 21. 22. all bitterneſs, wrath, clamour, evil-ſpeaking, Eph. 4. 31. 32.

Thirdly, The deportment charity requires to our offending brother, is expreſſed in theſe particulars.

1. Charity beareth long, and cauſeth us to endure provocations with much patience, before we do conceive any diſpleaſure againſt others.

2. It endureth all things, though grievous to be borne, without returning evil for evil; enabling us to forbear one another in love, Eph. 4. 2. Col. 3. 13. and will not ceaſe from being kind and well affected to our brother, by reaſon of any provocation whatſoever.

3. It covers all things, i. e. it inclines us to conceal the evil that we know of others; and thus it covers a multitude of ſins, James 5. 20.

4. Οὐ παροξύνεται, ver. 5. It is not highly exaſperated, and breaks not forth into violent ungovernable paſſions on any provocations.

5. It is eaſy to be intreated, ready to forgive, and full of mercy, Col. 3. 13. Eph. 4. 32. James 3. 17.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſe 1. FOllow (therefore) after charity (above all things), and deſire (alſo) ſpiritual gifts, but rather that ye may propheſy, (i. e. expound the ſcripture, or reveal ſome myſtery to the edification of the church.)

2. [a] For he that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue (not underſtood, nor explained), ſpeaketh not to (the underſtanding of) men, for no man underſtands him, but to (the underſtanding of) God (only); howbeit, (or though) in the Spirit he ſpeaketh myſteries (the profound things of God.

3. But he that propheſieth (in plain intelligible words), ſpeaketh to (the profit of) men, (viz.) to (their) edification (by the ſcripture he expounds), and (their) exhortation (by what he teacheth), and (to their) comfort (by his revelation.)

4. He that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, [b] edifieth himſelf (only); but he that propheſieth, edifieth the church.

5. I would that ye all ſpake with tongues, but rather that ye propheſied; for greater (becauſe more beneficial) is he that propheſies, than he that ſpeaketh with tongues, except he interpret (his tongue, and the myſtery he utters in it), [c] that the church may receive edifying (by it.)

6. Now (therefore), brethren, if I come unto you ſpeaking with (ſtrange) tongues, what ſhall I profit you, except I ſhall ſpeak to you (alſo) either by revelation (of ſome ſecret), or by knowledge (of ſome myſtery), or [a] by propheſying (i. e. foretelling of ſomething to come), or by doctrine (inſtructing you what to believe or practiſe?)

7. And (thus it is) even (in) things without life giving ſound, whether (it be) pipe or harp; (for) except they give a diſtinction in the ſound (to render it intelligible), how ſhall it be known what is piped or harped?

8. For if the trumpet (for example) give an uncertain ſound, who ſhall prepare himſelf to the battle (at the hearing of it?)

9. So likewiſe you, except you utter by the tongue words eaſy to be underſtood (by your auditors), how ſhall it be known what is ſpoken (by you?) for (by ſpeaking what they know not) ye ſhall (be as men who) ſpeak (only) to the air; (vain and unprofitable words, loſt in the ſpeaking, as the voice is in the air.)

10. There are, it may be, ſo many kinds of voices, (languages and idioms, as there be nations, or as the Jews compute, to the number of ſeventy) in the world, and none of them is without ſignification; (but this ſignification they have only to them that underſtand them.

11. Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, voice, I shall be to him that speaketh (as if he spake to) [e] a barbarian; and he that speaketh, shall be (as) a barbarian to me, (not understanding what he sayeth.)

12. Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts (Gr. of spirits, that you may not be barbarians, and unprofitable in the use of them), seek that you may excel (in them which tend) to the edifying of the church.

13. Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue (in which he cannot edify), pray that he may [f] interpret; (i. e. pray so, as to interpret what he prays.)

14. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, [g] my spirit prayeth, (i. e. my spiritual gift is exercised), but my understanding is unfruitful (to others.)

15. What is it then? (i. e. What then is to be done?) I will pray [h] with the spirit, (i. e. with my spiritual gifts), and I will pray with the understanding also; I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also: (i. e. so using my spiritual gift in prayer, and psalmody in the public, as that I may be understood by others.)

16. Else when thou shalt bless (i. e. give thanks to God) with the spirit (ual afflatus not understood by others), how shall he that [i] occupieth the room of the unlearned, (i. e. the laic, or the man who only knows his mother-tongue), say Amen (or give his assent) at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understands not what thou sayest?

17. For thou verily givest thanks well (with thy spiritual gift, i. e. piously), but the other is not edified (by it.)

18. I thank my God I speak with tongues more than you all.

19. Yet in the church (of God) I had rather speak five words with my understanding, (so employed), that by my voice I may teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

20. Brethren, be not (like) children in understanding (chusing what pleases you, before what profits others); howbeit, in (freedom from) malice be you (as) children, but in understanding be (and act as) men; (as persons of maturity of judgment to know what is fitting to be spoken.)

21. [k] In the law it is written, (by way of a sign to a disobedient and unbelieving people, thus); With men of other tongues and other lips, will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that they will not hear me, saith the Lord.

22. Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, (and so not to be used in their assemblies), but to them that believe not, (they being designed for the more speedy and effectual propagation of the gospel by this gift, among those nations whose languages they understood not); but prophesying (by teaching the doctrines of the New, or expounding the mysteries of the Old Testament) serveth not for them that believe not (that faith, or those scriptures), but for them that believe (them.)

23. If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or [l] unbelievers, will they not (be tempted by hearing you thus speaking to one another in unknown languages, to) say that you are mad?

24. But if all prophesy (one after another, ver. 31.), and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced (or discovered) of all, he is judged (or discerned) of all (that prophesy.)

25. And thus are [m] the secrets of his heart made manifest (by the prophets revelation of them); and so falling down upon his face, he will worship God (the searcher of the heart), and report (from his own experience) that God is in (or among) you of a truth.

26. How is it then, (or what is then to be done), brethren? (since) when you come together, every one of you (that is a spiritual or a gifted person) hath a psalm, (or) hath a doctrine, (or) hath a tongue, (or) hath a revelation, (or) hath an interpretation (of tongues.) Let all (these) things be done to edifying; (let them be managed so as best conduceth to the end for which they were designed, chap. 12. 7.)

27. If any speak in an unknown tongue, let it be (used only) by two, or at the most by three (at one meeting), and that by course, (i. e. successively); and let one (who hath the gift) interpret (what is spoken.)

28. [n] But if there be no interpreter (present), let him (that only speaks with tongues) keep silence in the church; and let him (only) speak (mentally) to himself, and to God (in prayer and thanksgiving, ver. 15. 16.)

29. Let the prophets speak two or three (successively), [o] and let the other (prophets) judge or discern.

30. (And) if (whilst one propheses) any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace, (or cease before the other utter his revelation.)

31. For (so) ye (that have the gift) may all prophesy one by one, that (by your mutual discourses) all may learn, and all may be comforted (or exhorted to good works.)

32. And (this is not difficult for you to do, since) [p] the spirits of the prophets are subject to (and therefore may be restrained by) the prophets.

33. (And God doubtless in this case would have the first to be silent); for God is not the author [q] of confusion, (which yet would follow upon all the prophets speaking together, so that one should confound the other), but of peace, as (as may be seen by the regular exercise of these gifts) in all the churches of the saints.

34. [r] Let your women keep ſilence in the churches, for it is not permitted to them to ſpeak (by way of teaching or propheſying, but only by joining with the church in prayer and pſalmody); but they are commanded to be under obedience, as alſo ſaith the law, (Gen. 3. 16.)

35. And if they will learn any thing, let them aſk their huſbands at home; for it is a ſhame (i. e. a thing indecent) for women [r] to ſpeak in the church.

36. (And whereas in this matter you think fit to practiſe contrary to all the churches of the ſaints, even thoſe in Judea, I aſk) What? came the word of God out from you (to all other churches?) or came it to you only, (and not to other churches, that you thus differ in your practice from them?)

37. If any man think himſelf to be a prophet, or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I (now) write unto you, are the commandments of the Lord. (See note on chap. 2. 15.)

38. But if any man (pretends to) be ignorant (whether they be ſo or not), let him be ignorant, (at his peril be it, I ſhall not contend farther with him; or ἀγνοείτω, let him not be acknowledged as a true prophet, or ſpiritual perſon.)

39. Wherefore, brethren, covet to propheſy, and forbid not to ſpeak with tongues, (provided theſe directions be obſerved; but)

40. Let all (theſe) things be done [s] decently, and in order.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIV.

Ver. 2. [a] Ὁ γὰρ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ, for he that ſpeaketh with an unknown tongue.] That what is ſaid in this verſe is ſpoken only by way of conceſſion, as Mr Clerc imagines, cannot be true, becauſe it is expreſsly ſaid, that in the Spirit he ſpeaketh myſteries; for myſteries, when the apoſtle ſpeaketh of ſpiritual gifts, hath ſtill relation to ſome profound ſecret things, as 1 Cor. 2. 7. and 13. 2. And πνεύματι λαλεῖ, cannot here ſignify, as Mr Clerc conceives, he ſpeaketh to his own underſtanding; ſince the apoſtle, through this whole chapter, is ſpeaking of ſpiritual gifts, which alſo he expreſsly calleth ſpirits, ſaying, ſeeing you are zealous πνευμάτων, of ſpirits, i. e. of ſpiritual gifts; and the afflatus or inſpiration here was to enable the man to ſpeak the myſtery, and not to uſe the unknown tongue. For explication of this whole matter, let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That the gift of tongues and prophecy, in their original donation, did ſtill go together; and they who ſpake with tongues, ſpake τὰ μεγαλεῖα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the great things of God, Acts 2. 11. and 10. 46.; they ſpake with tongues and propheſied, Acts 19. 6.; and the reaſon ſeems plain, viz. becauſe the gift of tongues was given as an help to prophecy. Now, theſe two things, thus joined by God, ſhould not have been uſed ſeparately by theſe gifted men; yea, the gift of tongues was only to be uſed when they were to ſpeak to Gentiles in their own language, which was one great deſign of the gift of tongues, ver. 22. Nor ſhould they have uſed the gift of tongues, when an afflatus came upon them, and ſome myſtery was imparted to them, by which the church was to be edified, unleſs they knew there was one preſent who had the gift of interpretation of tongues: this therefore was a great abuſe of this gift, that, when they had a myſtery revealed to them, they did not utter it in a language underſtood by the aſſembly, but only by themſelves, and ſo they did not edify the church by it, though it was given, as all the other gifts were, for edification, chap. 12. 7. Note,

2*dly*, That the gift of tongues being imparted per modum habitus, as a permanent gift, like to a habit; they who had received this gift could always uſe it at their pleaſure, and ſo could alſo uſe it when a prophetical afflatus came upon them; but the gift of prophecy, being an afflatus in manner of a revelation, could be only uſed, when the afflatus came upon them; ſo that the firſt gift might at any time be uſed without any freſh operation of the Holy Ghoſt, whereas the ſecond gift always required that afflatus.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἑαυτὸν οἰκοδομεῖ, edifieth himſelf.] He therefore underſtood himſelf, as the church did him that propheſied. And indeed, by ſpeaking what he himſelf underſtood not, he would have been as much a barbarian, and unprofitable to himſelf, as he was to others. To ſay with Cajetan, "The words were "pious which he uttered, and he had pious affec- "tions when he uttered them," is unſatisfactory; for what if the matter of them was ſo, ſince if he underſtood them no more than a parrot, his piety in ſpeaking of them could be no more than that of a parrot; he neither could know they were pious, nor receive any benefit by them, ſuppoſing they were ſo, whilſt he underſtood nothing of them; nor could any pious affections be raiſed in him by words not underſtood. To ſay with Grotius, ſentit in ſe vim Chriſti, "he perceives the gift of Chriſt operating in "him," if he perceived not the meaning of his own words, is to talk as unintelligibly as he ſpake; for that can only ſignify, he knew he had the gift of tongues, which ſure could not much edify him who formerly had uſed that gift, and ſo could not be ignorant he had the gift. Moreover, doth not the apoſtle bid him who ſpeaks with tongues not interpreted, ſpeak only to himſelf, and to God, ver. 28.? And can he ſpeak to himſelf more than to others, who who underſtandeth not himſelf? Or is it fit that he ſhould ſpeak to God he knows not what? However, it is certain, that the apoſtle not only diſlikes, but plainly forbids this way of ſpeaking in the church, ver. 28.; and ſo, by parity of reaſon, forbids the like way of ſpeaking to others in the church of Rome.

Ver. 5. [c] Ἵνα ἡ ἐκκλησίαν οἰκοδομὴν λάβῃ, that the church may receive edification.] Hence I gather, that in this unknown tongue he uttered ſomething tending to, and by God deſigned for, the edification of the church, though by uttering his myſtery, ver. 2. in an unknown tongue, he fruſtrated that deſign.

Ver. 6. [d] Ἢ ἐν προφητείᾳ, or in propheſying.] Though propheſying in this verſe, being diſtinguiſhed from revelation, knowledge, doctrine, ſeems only to import the foretelling of ſomething to come; yet doth the apoſtle in this, and the foregoing chapter, manifeſtly ſpeak of it in the whole latitude of the word, as comprehending all theſe other things; as, v. g. revelation, ſo ver. 24. If all propheſy, and there come in an unbeliever, and one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged by all, and ſo the ſecrets of his heart ſhall be made manifeſt: according to that other ſenſe we have given of this gift, chap. 12. that it was that which enabled them to manifeſt the ſecret things of men. Hence to the prophet is aſſigned his revelation, ver. 30. 2*dly*, Γνῶσις, here rendered knowledge, viz. of the mind and will of God. So chap. 13. 2. If I have prophecy, and know all myſteries, καὶ πᾶσαν γνῶσιν, and all knowledge. Whence to the prophet belongs the λόγος γνώσεως, the word of knowledge, mentioned chap. 12. 8. And this is the ordinary notion of it, viz. That it imports a gift by which the mind of God, or his will, is, by the divine afflatus, diſcovered for the good of others. And, 3*dly*, doctrine; whence the prophet is ſaid to ſpeak to the edifying of the church, ver. 3.; ſo that all may learn of him, be exhorted and comforted by him, ver. 3. 31. And prophecy in the Old Teſtament, doth often ſignify a divine afflatus, enabling him who had it to compoſe hymns or pſalms of praiſe to God, 1 Sam. 10. 5. 1 Chron. 25. 1.: accordingly the pſalm here mentioned, ver. 26. and the ſinging with the ſpirit, ver. 15. 16. are the effects of the prophetical afflatus by which the Chriſtians of thoſe times taught and admoniſhed one another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, Col. 3. 16. Eph. 5. 20. And the praying in the Spirit, ver. 15. or in the Holy Ghoſt, Jude 20. ſeems to be praying by a like afflatus of the Holy Ghoſt, helping their infirmities, and teaching them what was proper to be aſked for the good of the church. See note on Rom. 8. 26. 27. And therefore though when they came together, every man had a pſalm, a doctrine, a tongue, a revelation, and interpretation, for the correcting their miſcarriages in all theſe things, the apoſtle gives only rules concerning tongues and propheſying.

Ver. 11. [e] Βάρβαρος, a Barbarian.] It was not only the Greeks that called all other nations Barbarians, according to that of the apoſtle, I am a debtor to the Greek, and the Barbarian: in which ſenſe Julius Pollux (b) reckons up γλῶτταν Ἑλλάδα, καὶ βάρβαρον, the tongue of the Greeks and of the Barbarians; but almoſt every other nation called ſtrangers, who underſtood not their language, by that name, as the ſame Pollux (c) noteth in theſe words, τὰς δὲ βαρβάρους καὶ ξένας ἐκάλουν. So the Jews (upon thoſe words, When Iſrael came out of Egypt, and the houſe of Jacob miam luez, ἐκ λαοῦ βαρβάρου, from a ſtrange people), ſay, All language that is not the holy language is barbarous. So the Chaldeans (d) ſtyled thoſe who ſpake not Chaldee, and the Romans thoſe who ſpake not Latin. Hence Verres is (e), in Cicero's ſtyle, lingua et natione barbarus, by language and by nation a barbarian.

Ver. 13. [f] Προσευχέσθω ἵνα διερμηνεύῃ, let him pray that he may interpret.] Seeing it is evident from the 4th and 28th verſes, that he who ſpake with tongues, underſtood the meaning of his own tongue; nor can he be ſaid to have the gift of tongues, who only hath the gift of talking he knows not what, as the Phanatici did among the Heathens; nor can it be ſuppoſed, the Spirit of God ſhould aſſiſt men in that uſeleſs manner: theſe words cannot be here underſtood as an exhortation to this linguiſt, that he ſhould pray that he might underſtand, and ſo be able to interpret his own words, which he already could do, had he been as willing as he was able, and had not more regarded the vain oſtentation of his gift, than the edification of the church. Some therefore give the ſenſe of the words thus, "Let "him rather pray that he may have the gift of in-"terpretation, than that of tongues;" for covet, ſaith the apoſtle, the beſt gifts, chap. 12. 13.; ſeek to excel in thoſe which tend to the edification of the church, ver. 12. Now this doth the gift of interpretation more than that of tongues. But I rather chuſe to interpret them thus: "Let him (ſo) pray (with "his gift, as) that he may (by the words uſed in his "prayer, or by explaining it in a known language) "interpret and impart to others, what the afflatus "hath imparted to him, and not out of vain oſten-"tation utter it in a tongue unknown." To ſtrengthen this ſenſe, let it be obſerved, firſt, That the apoſtle here plainly diſcourſeth of ſpeaking with an unknown tongue in prayer, and of praying alſo by the afflatus of the Spirit, as is apparent from the illative words, For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, &c. 2*dly*, Obſerve from Budæus, that the particle ὅτως is ſometimes elegantly deficient, of which he gives two inſtances from Ariſtotle; to which add theſe from the New Teſtament, as in heaven ὡς (pro ὅτω ὡς) ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ſo alſo upon earth, Matth. 6. 10. Luke 11. 2.; ὡς εἰ ὁ Σατανᾶς, for ὡς ὅτω εἰ, and ſo if Satan, Mark 3. 26. As my Father ſent me, κἀγὼ for ὅτω κἀγὼ, ſo ſend I you; and with this ellipſis the word runs thus, ὅτω προσευχέσθω ἵνα ᾖ, let him ſo pray, as that he alſo may interpret. Or obſerve from Noldius and Paſor, that ἵνα ſignifies adeo ut, ſo as that. So the word was hidden from them, ἵνα μὴ αἴσθωνται αὐτὸ, ſo as that they perceived it not, Luke 9. 45.; he will do greater works than theſe, ἵνα ὑμεῖς θαυμάζητε, ſo that you may marvel at the greatneſs of them, John 5. 20.; Did I purpoſe according to God, ἵνα ᾖ παρ' ἐμοὶ, ſo as that there ſhould be with me, yea, yea, nay, nay, 2 Cor. 1. 17.; I rejoiced that you ſorrowed according to the fleſh, ἵνα ſo as that you might be damaged by us in nothing. So Rev. 8. 12. and 9. 20. and 13. 13.; and then the words may be rendered thus, Let him pray, ἵνα διερμηνεύῃ, ſo as that he may interpret.

Ver. 14. ε Τὸ πνεῦμά μου προσεύχεται, my ſpirit prayeth.] Here Mr Clerc aſks, What mortal would have rendered τὸ πνεῦμά μου by my gift? I anſwer, every one who knows the apoſtle is here ſpeaking of ſpiritual gifts. And, 2*dly*, He not only warrants, but conſtrains them to do ſo, by ſaying, ver. 12. ſeeing you are ζηλωταὶ πνευμάτων, zealous of ſpiritual gifts, and, ver. 32. πνεύματα προφητῶν, the ſpiritual afflatus's of the prophets are ſubject to the prophets; and, ver. 2. πνεύματι, he by the Spirit ſpeaketh myſteries. And, 3*dly*, The word πνεῦμα, never ſignifies the mind in all this diſcourſe, or the underſtanding, that being in the very next verſe νοῦς, the word oppoſed to πνεῦμα, ſpirit. He adds, What intolerable language is it to ſay, My gift prays? I anſwer, Juſt ſuch intolerable language as the Spirit intercedeth, Rom. 8. 26. for that is only, the gift of the Spirit intercedeth; and though that may paſs for a catachreſis, yet to ſay my gift is exerciſed in prayer, or as, ver. 15. I pray with my gift, is to give the true meaning of St Paul's words. When he adds, that nothing is more ordinary than for the ſpirit and the body to be oppoſed to one another; this is, 1. impertinent; here being no oppoſition betwixt the ſpirit and the body, but only betwixt the ſpirit and the mind, i. e. according to Mr Clerc betwixt my mind, and my mind; and what mortal would have ſo interpreted τὸ πνεῦμά μου? 2*dly*, The thing itſelf is not proved by him; ſee, ſaith he, Rom. 8. 23. where yet there is no ſuch oppoſition at all, but only an aſſertion, that they who have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit wait for the redemption of the body. Now, what mortal would have interpreted theſe words thus, We that have the firſt-fruits of the mind groan, waiting for the body oppoſed to it? See, ſays he, Gal. 6. 15. where again is no oppoſition betwixt the ſpirit and the body, but only betwixt the Spirit and the fleſh; or rather betwixt walking in the Spirit, that is, according to the conduct of the Holy Spirit, and fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh. See 1 Cor. 3. 1. 3. Rom. 8. 4. 5. 13. 14. 15.; he might more pertinently have cited 1 Cor. 7. 34. James 2. 26.

Ver. 15. ϛ Τῷ πνεύματι, with the Spirit.] I do not think that this phraſe, with the Spirit, relates here to the gift of tongues, but to an afflatus enabling them to pray and ſing by the impulſe of the Holy Ghoſt. The uttering what this afflatus ſuggeſted in an unknown tongue they had before received, was the great fault the apoſtle in this chapter endeavours to correct; the perſon ſpeaking with an unknown tongue is ὁ λαλῶν γλώσσῃ, the perſon ſpeaking with an afflatus, whether myſteries, ver. 2. prayer, or pſalmody, is ὁ λαλῶν πνεύματι, he that ſpeaketh by the Spirit.

Ver. 19. ζ Ὁ ἀναπληρῶν τὸν τόπον τοῦ ἰδιώτου, who fills up the place of the idiot;] that is, ὁ λαϊκὸς, the laic, ſay Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact. Buxtorf (f) informs us, this is a phraſe frequent among the Jews; and Maimonides (g) teacheth, that the word place is uſed to denote the dignity or eſtimation of any man, it being frequent with their Rabbins to ſay, Such a one fills up the place of his fathers in ſuch a thing, that is, he reſembles them. So Epictetus (h) in his Enchiridion ſaith, Ἢ φιλοσόφου τάξιν ἴσχυε δεῖ, ἢ ἰδιώτου, Thou muſt either hold the place of a philoſopher, or of one unlearned. So that to fill up the place of an idiot, or unlearned perſon, is to be one of them, or to be like them in want of underſtanding of ſtrange tongues. Ridiculous therefore are thoſe Popiſh commentators, who interpret this of the clerk of the congregation, there being no ſuch office then either among Jews or Chriſtians; but when the miniſter of the ſynagogue ſaid prayers, all the people of the ſynagogue anſwered Amen after him (i). "It was the cuſtom in the Jewiſh "church," ſaith Buxtorf (k), "to ſay Amen to the "bleſſings or curſings of the prieſt." To his curſes; ſo the woman ſuſpected of adultery was to confirm his imprecations, by ſaying, Amen, amen, Numb. 5. 22.; ſo all the people anſwered Amen to the curſes pronounced from Mount Ebal, Deut. 7. 15.—26.; and to the oath and imprecation impoſed upon them by Nehemiah, chap. 5. 12. 13. to his blessings; so when Ezra blessed the congregation, all the people answered Amen, amen, Neh. 8. 6. and this practice was from them translated to the primitive church.

Ver. 21. κ Ἐν τῷ νόμῳ γέγραπται, in the law it is written.] All interpreters I have met with refer this to the saying of the prophet Isaiah, chap. 28. 11. telling us, it is there mentioned as a miracle shewed to the people, that God would send prophets to them in a language they understood not; but I find no mention of any miracle there; wherefore it may be noted, that in the law, properly so called, among the curses threatened to them for a sign and a wonder (l), this is one, that the Lord shall bring against them a nation, whose tongue they understood not; and then it is intimated, that yet they would not hear. To both these places the apostle may here refer.

Ibid. In the law it is written, &c.] St Jerom upon Isaiah 28. 11. 12. saith, the apostle cites this, not according to the translation of the Septuagint, or of Symmachus, or Theodotion, but from the Hebrew. But Origen (m) saith, Ἐνρον τὰ ἰσοδυναμοῦντα τῇ λέξει ταύτῃ ἐν τῇ τοῦ Ἀκύλα ἑρμηνείᾳ κείμενα, I found in the translation of Aquilas words equivalent to those of the apostle here.

Ver. 23. ι Ἤ ἄπιστοι.] Here Grotius notes, that Heathens and unbelievers then used to come to the assemblies of the Christians; and so we read they did, Acts 13. 44. 48. and whilst they assembled in the Jewish synagogue, it could not be otherwise.

Ver. 25. ν Τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς καρδίας αὐτοῦ φανερὰ γίνεται, the secrets of his heart are made manifest.] For, as Theophylact notes, ἡ ἀποκάλυψις εἶδός ἐστι προφητείας, revelation is one species of prophecy. And though it is taken in a restrained sense, and so distinguished from prophecy, ver. 6. yet ver. 30. it is supposed that revelation belongeth to a prophet, and the doctrine, the revelation, the psalm, ver. 26. do all seem to belong to the prophets, the speaker with tongues, the interpreter of them, and the prophet, being the only persons mentioned in the ensuing words, and in this whole chapter; so that what cannot be ascribed to the one must belong to the other. See note on chap. 12. 10.

Ver. 28. ο Ἐὰν δὲ μὴ ᾖ διερμηνευτής, σιγάτω, But if there be not an interpreter, let him be silent.] The apostle permits him to use his tongue in the presence of one who had the gift of interpretation of tongues, because then the church was not only edified by the interpretation, but the faith of the hearers was confirmed by the exercise of two miraculous gifts; but the apostle permits him not to be his own interpreter, though he could do it, because his speaking that first in an unknown tongue, which he himself must afterward interpret in a known language, served only for ostentation, not for edification; nor could it be known whether his tongue was supernatural, or acquired only.

Ver 29. π Καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι διακρινέτωσαν, and let the rest discern.] Since it is impossible that the afflatus of the Holy Spirit should suggest any falsehood to him that had it, there can be no ground to judge him that had it, as Grotius (n) hath well observed upon this place. But, saith Theodoret, as the devil raised up false apostles to oppose the true apostles, 1 Tim. 4. 1. so did he also false prophets, 2 Pet. 2. 1. 1 John 4. 1. in opposition to those who truly were inspired; and of these, say the Greek interpreters, the true prophets were to judge. Or else διακρινέτωσαν, let them discern the agreement of what they utter with the dictates of the same Spirit in the Old Testament, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, 1 Cor. 2. 13. So in the conference, Acts 15. when Peter had given his judgment in that matter, St James adds, With this agree the words of the prophet, as it is written, ver. 15.

Ver. 32. ρ Πνεύματα προφητῶν, The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.] The common interpretation of these words, that the spirits of the true prophets are subject to the judgment, examination, and regulation of other prophets, seems not agreeable to the apostle's affirmation, that he that is spiritual is judged of none, 1 Cor. 2. 13. 15. nor is there any ground for judging his doctrine who speaks by the impulse of the Holy Ghost; nor doth the apostle say, the spirits of the prophets ought to be, but ὑποτάσσεται, actually are subject to the prophets. I prefer therefore the interpretation of Oecumenius and Theophylact (o), that this is spoken in opposition to the Heathen prophets; for the prophets among the Greeks, receiving an afflatus from the evil spirit, could not be silent if they would; but it was not so with the holy prophets; they had it in their power to speak, or to be silent; and to this the apostle refers, by saying, The spirits of the prophets, that is, their spiritual gifts, are subject to the prophets, that is, it is in their power to restrain them, and consequently they may prophesy the one after the other.

And

And upon this account the church rejected the ecſtatic prophets of the Montaniſts, that they had an ungovernable impetus; for, ſay they, "(p) they can "ſhew no truly inſpired prophet in the Old or New "Teſtament who was moved after this manner." Moreover, it is the opinion of perſons eminently learned and judicious, that in Corinth, and ſome other churches, there were then no ſettled paſtors to perform the public offices, but they were all performed by prophets, and by gifted men, excited to that work in the aſſembly, Chriſt being thus in the midſt of them, Matth. 18. 20. according to his promiſe. And this they judge more probable touching the church of Corinth, becauſe there ſeems no order to be obſerved among them, and no ſubjection of their prophets to any ruler of the church, no direction of the ſentence to them, when the inceſtuous perſon was to be delivered up to Satan, or when he was to be abſolved; but all ſeems to be done by the immediate authority of St Paul. They alſo from this chapter do obſerve, that whereas all the public offices then performed in the church were prayers and pſalmody, expounding or preaching the word, and thankſgivings, all theſe are here aſcribed to men endowed with theſe ſpiritual gifts; for that when they came together, ſome of them prayed, others compoſed ſacred hymns by their ſpiritual gifts, we plainly read, ver. 15. that their prophets did then teach for edification, inſtruction, and comfort, ver. 3. 31. That they did alſo ἐυλογῶν, bleſs, and ἐυχαριστῶν, give thanks, we learn from ver. 16. 17. that all, or any of theſe things were done by ſtated paſtors, we never read in theſe epiſtles: now, if this were ſo, the occaſional prophets might be ſubject to the ſtanding prophets mentioned chap. 12. and thus theſe words may be interpreted by them who like not the expoſition given in the paraphraſe.

Ver. 33. [q] Ἀκαταστασίας, of confuſion.] This alſo confirms the interpretation given of the preceding words; for the propheſying of many together would neceſſarily breed confuſion; whereas the neglect of judging of their prophecies could only be ſuppoſed to breed error.

Ver. 34. [r] Αἱ γυναῖκες ὑμῶν, Let your women be ſilent in the church.] In that of Corinth the women not only propheſied in the church, but they did it with the head uncovered, 1 Cor. 11. 5.; the latter indecency he corrects there, and the firſt here. See 1 Tim. 2. 12.

Ver. 35. [s] Ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ λαλεῖν, to ſpeak in the church.] So the Hebrew canon (q) ſaith, A woman muſt not read in the ſynagogue for the honour due to that aſſembly. And the Heathens declared it indecent for a woman δημαγορεῖν, to ſpeak publicly. Stob. ſerm. 72. p. 443. fff.

Ver. 40. [t] Εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξιν, decently and in order.] This order, ſaith Theodoret, he had taught in the words foregoing, Let all things be done decently; not like children, ver. 20.; not ſo as to give occaſion to others to ſay you are mad, ver. 23.; not ſo as to breed confuſion, ver. 33.; not indecently by women ſpeaking in the church, ver. 34. 35.; in order, that is, one after another; or by courſe, ver. 27. 31. See Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact deſcanting upon theſe words to this effect.

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. MOreover, brethren, I declare to you the goſpel which I preached to you, which alſo ye have received, and wherein ye ſtand, (Gr. have ſtood.)

2. [a] By which alſo ye are (in the way to be) ſaved, if ye keep in memory what (i. e. retain the goſpel as) I preached (it) to you; (which you will do) unleſs ye have believed in vain.

3. I declare, I ſay, the goſpel which I preached); for I delivered to you firſt of all, (or among the principal doctrines of faith), that which I alſo received, how that Chriſt died for our ſins, according to the ſcriptures:

4. And that he was buried, and that he roſe again the third day, according to the ſcriptures:

5. And that he was ſeen (after his reſurrection) of Cephas, (Luke 24. 34.), then [b] of the twelve, (ver. 36. John 20. 19. 26.)

6. (And that you may not depend upon their teſtimony only), after that he was ſeen of above [c] five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remain unto this preſent (day to teſtify it), but ſome are fallen aſleep.

7. After that he was ſeen of [d] James, then of all the apoſtles (at his aſcenſion.)

8. And laſt of all he was ſeen of me alſo, (Acts 9. 17.), [e] as of one born out of due time, (or ſhape.)

9. For I am the leaſt of the apoſtles, (and one) that am not meet to be called an apoſtle, becauſe I perſecuted the church of God.

10. But by the grace (and favour) of God (notwithſtanding) I am what (now) I am, and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all; yet (is it) not I, but the grace of God that was with me, (to which the fruit of all my labour is to be ascribed.)

which

11. Therefore, whether it were I, or they (who preach the gospel), so we preach, and so ye (also) believed.

12. Now if Christ be (so) preached, that (all who do so, unanimously affirm) he rose from the dead, [z] how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13. But (or for) if (it be so that) there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen.

14. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching (in) vain, and your faith is also vain.

15. Yea, and we are (then) found false witnesses of God, because [a] we have testified of (or by) God, that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not (at all.)

16. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised.

17. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, you are yet in your sins, (not justified nor absolved from them, seeing he died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, Rom. 4. 21.)

18. Then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ, (and suffered for his name), are perished, (so as never to rise up out of that sleep, and so are truly miserable.)

19. (For) [b] if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we (Christian sufferers) are of all men most miserable.

20. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept, (who therefore shall follow after him thus risen, as the whole harvest follows the first-fruits, ver. 23.)

21. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, (the wisdom of God so ordering it, that the same nature which had lost life and immortality should regain it.)

22. For as in (the man) Adam (and for his sin in eating the forbidden fruit) all (men proceeding naturally from him) die, even so [c] in (and by the man) Christ shall all (partakers of his nature and Spirit) be made alive.

23. But every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's [d] at his coming (to judgment.)

24. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up (Gr. deliver up) the (mediatory) kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all (other) rule, and all authority and power, (both of men and devils which opposed his church.)

25. (Which kingdom till then he cannot deliver up); for he must reign (according to the promise, Psal. 110. 1.) till he (who made this promise) hath put all enemies under his feet.

26. The last enemy which shall be destroyed (by him) is death.

27. For he (namely the Father) hath (saith the psalmist) put all things under his feet. But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted (from this subjection) who did put all things under him. (See note on Heb. 2. 8.)

28. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself (lay down his kingly office in governing his church, and as man) be subject to him that put all things under him, [e] that God (the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost) may be (immediately) all in all, (by a full communication of himself to, and an intimate union with all his saints.)

29. (I say, in opposition to them among you who say, there is no resurrection from the dead, that Christ is risen and become the first-fruits of them that slept); else what shall (will) they do [m] who are baptized for the dead, (as they must be, if he in whose name they are baptized be still dead), if the dead rise not at all, (and so Christ himself is not risen)? why are they then (who hold this doctrine) baptized for the dead?

30. And why stand we in jeopardy every hour (for a dead Jesus)?

31. I protest by your rejoicing (i. e. by that rejoicing) which I have (common with you under all our sufferings, Rom. 5. 3.) in Christ Jesus our Lord, I (run the hazard to) die daily; (or by that rejoicing I have in you as my children, and the fruits of my labours in Christ, 1 Cor. 9. 16. 2 Cor. 1. 14. and 7. 4. and 9. 2. Philip. 2. 16. 1 Thess. 2. 19.)

32. If [n] after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? (it will be then more reasonable to say), Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we die, (Is. 22. 13.)

33. (But) be not deceived (with such discourses, rather avoid them, for) evil communications corrupt good manners.

34. Awake to righteousness and sin not, (which advertisement is very needful), for some among you have not the knowledge of (that righteousness of) God, (which doth oblige him to render to men according to their works, 2 Thess. 1. 6. 7. Heb. 6. 10.). I speak this to your shame.

35. But some men will (yet) say, [o] How are the dead raised up (again)? [p] and with what (kind of) body do they come?

36. Thou fool, (who makest an inquiry about a matter of which thou hast an instance in the very seed thou sowest, for) that which thou sowest is not quickened except (first) it die, (and lie buried in the earth.)

37. And

37. And (again) that which thou ſoweſt, (when) thou ſoweſt (it is) not that body which ſhall be (again produced), but [q] bare (or naked) grain, it may chance of wheat, or of ſome other grain.

38. But God giveth it a body (clothed) as it hath pleaſed him, and (yet) to every ſeed (he giveth with the cloathing) his own (kind of) body.

39. (And as) all fleſh is not the ſame (kind of) fleſh, but there is one kind of fleſh of men, another (kind of) fleſh of beaſts, another of fiſhes, and another of birds:

40. (And as there is a like difference in the qualities of bodies; for) there are alſo celeſtial bodies, and bodies terreſtrial; but the glory of the celeſtial is one, and the glory of the terreſtrial is another:

41. (And as in the celeſtial bodies) there is one glory of the ſun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the ſtars; for one ſtar differeth from another ſtar in glory:

42. So alſo is (it as to) the reſurrection of the dead, (the body raiſed being in quality much different from the earthly body we at preſent have, for) it is ſown in corruption, (frail, mortal, ſubject to death and putrefaction), it is raiſed in incorruption, (not ſubject any more to death or diſſolution.)

43. It is ſown in diſhonour, (with ſome diſhonourable parts, 1 Cor. 12. 23. a vile body, Philip. 3. 21. ſubject to filth and deformity), it is raiſed in glory, (in clarity and ſplendor, ſhining like the ſun, Matth. 13. 43. and like Chriſt's glorious body, Philip. 3. 21. free from all defect or deformity of its members, or from any diſhonourable parts, 1 Cor. 6. 13.); it is ſown in weakneſs, (ſubject to weakneſs by labour, to decays by age, to impotency and waſting by diſeaſes), it is raiſed in power, (nimble, ſtrong, active, and that without renitency or moleſtation, grief, pain, or laſſitude.)

44. It is ſown a natural (Gr. [r] an animal) body, (having multiplicity of organs, muſcles, tendons, arteries, veins, nerves, by which, by the aſſiſtance of the animal and vital ſpirits, it perceives the objects of ſenſe, moves, and conveys nouriſhment to all its parts, wanting continual recruits of meat and drink), it is raiſed a ſpiritual body, (poſſeſſed and acted by the Holy Spirit, and advanced ſo far to the perfection of ſpirits, as to be free from groſſneſs, ponderoſity, from needing reſt, ſleep, or ſuſtenance); there is a natural (Gr. animal) body, and there is a ſpiritual body.

45. And ſo it written, The firſt man Adam (from whom we all derive our bodies and our animal life), was made a living ſoul, (Gen. 2. 7. whereas) the laſt Adam (i. e. Chriſt) was made [s] a quickening ſpirit, (as having power to quicken, and confer eternal life on all his members; or as being the giver of that quickening Spirit, by which we ſhall be raiſed from the dead, and made ſpiritual, as his body is.)

46. (I ſay there is an animal body, and there is a ſpiritual body); howbeit that (body) was not firſt which is ſpiritual, but that which is natural, (Gr. animal), and afterwards that which is ſpiritual.

47. (For) the firſt man (Adam) is (was) of the earth, earthy, (having a body formed of it, and ſo the animal body derived from him muſt be earthy); the ſecond man is the Lord (deſcending) [t] from heaven, (to raiſe our bodies, and advance them to that place.)

48. As is (was) the earthy, ſuch are they alſo that are earthy, (and live in the animal body as he did); and as is the heavenly, ſuch are they (to be) alſo, that are (to have) heavenly, (immortal, and ſhining bodies.)

49. And as we have born the image of the earthy (Adam, being begotten after his fall in his own likeneſs, with earthy, mortal bodies, Gen. 5. 3.), ſo we ſhall alſo [u] bear the image of the heavenly, (partaking in our bodies of his heavenly glory, he changing our vile bodies into the likeneſs of his glorious body, Philip. 3. 21.)

50. Now this I ſay, brethren, that [x] fleſh and blood (ſuch as ours is) cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth (or can) corruption inherit incorruption.

51. Behold, I ſhew you a myſtery, (i. e. a thing not known to you before), we [y] ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed (in our bodies before they enter into this kingdom):

52. [z] In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the laſt trump; for the trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead (in Chriſt) ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we (Chriſtians that are then alive) ſhall be changed, (as to this mortal body.)

53. For this corruptible (body) muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal (body) muſt put on immortality.

54. So when this corruptible ſhall have [a] put on incorruption, and this mortal ſhall have put on immortality, then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, [b] Death is ſwallowed up in victory, (i. e. is overcome for ever, ſo as never to have any ſtrength or power over our bodies any more.)

55. (So that Chriſtians may ſing triumphantly in the words of the prophet Hoſea, chap. 13. 14.), O death, [c] where is thy ſting? O grave, where is (now) thy victory? (it is for ever ſwallowed up of life, 2 Cor. 5. 4.)

56. The ſting of death (or that which cauſed death) is (was) ſin, and the ſtrength of ſin (to ſubject us to it) is (was) the law, (threatening death for it.)

57. But

57. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory (over it), through (the death and resurrection of) our Lord Jesus Christ.

58. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye stedfast (and) unmoveable, (by any temptations from this faith, and be ye) always abounding [d] in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord, (but shall be plentifully recompensed by him at the resurrection of the just.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XV.

Verse 2. [a] Δι' ὃ καὶ σώζεσθε, by which also ye are saved.] They who by embracing the Christian faith were brought into that way which leadeth to salvation, and in which, if they persevered, they would assuredly be saved, are styled in scripture, οἱ σωζόμενοι, the saved, Acts 2. 47. 1 Cor. 1. 28. and are said σώζεσθαι, to be saved, Rom. 8. 24. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 3. 21.; see note on Eph. 2. 5. 8. and on Tit. 3. 5.; so here it signifies, you are at present in a state of salvation, and will assuredly enjoy it, if you retain, and live suitably to the faith delivered to you.

Ver. 5. [b] Τοῖς δώδεκα, of the twelve;] i. e. of the society of the apostles, consisting formerly of twelve persons, and therefore so called still, John 20. 24. though in strictness of speech they were but eleven when Thomas was with them, and ten in his absence, Matth. 28. 16. Luke 24. 33.

Ver. 6. [c] Πενταχοσίοις ἀδελφοῖς, to five hundred brethren,] of whom he was seen in Galilee, where he had many disciples; for before his resurrection he told his disciples, that being risen, he would go before them into Galilee, Matth. 26. 32. After his resurrection the angel sent this message to them, Behold he goes before you into Galilee, there you shall see him, as he said unto you, Mark 16. 7. Now, it may reasonably be thought that the eleven, who went themselves into Galilee, to the mountain which Jesus had appointed, even after they had seen him at Jerusalem, Luke 24. 33. 36. would acquaint the seventy, and others who believed in Jesus, where it was he appointed to be seen of them; and then, no doubt, their curiosity, as well as their affection to him, would induce them to repair to the place. Now, that they who had believed in Jesus were very many, will be evident, if we consider how often it is said in the gospel that many believed on his name, John 2. 23. and 7. 31. and 8. 30. and 10. 42. and that great multitudes believed on him, John 12. 42. and 4. 1.; that many of the rulers believed on him, that he baptized more disciples than John, and that the Pharisees complained that the world was gone after him. If you say, we only read of the eleven going to Galilee, Matth. 28. 16. I answer, that others might go with them, though no mention be made of them; or that the rest might be inhabitants of Galilee, where most of Christ's disciples dwelt. If you still object, that the number of the names of Christ's disciples after his ascension are reckoned only one hundred and twenty, Acts 1. 15. it is answered by Dr Lightfoot, that the number of one hundred and twenty are not to be accounted the whole number of believers at that time, but only the number of those who had followed Christ continually, ver. 21.; to be sure they were not all the disciples in Judea, but only in Jerusalem.

That this appearance of Christ to them was before his ascension, is evident, because this was in Galilee, Luke 24. 50. and, saith tradition, on mount Tabor; his ascension was nigh to Jerusalem from the mount of Olives, Acts 1. 12.; and Christ and his angel giving them such timely notice of his going before them to the place, it is probable it was some considerable time before his ascension.

As for the note of some, That Christ was seen of these five hundred brethren in the air, because the Greek word is ἐπάνω, upwards, it seems very light; for that word joined with numbers still signifies plusquam, or more than, as doth our English word upwards, and the Hebrew מעלה; so Mark 15. 4. ἐπάνω τριακοσίων δηναρίων, is more than three hundred pieces of silver; ἀπὸ πέντε καὶ εἰκοσαετοῦς καὶ ἐπάνω, from five and twenty years and upwards, Numb. 4. 3. 23. 30. 35. 39. 43. 47. chap. 8. 25.; ἀπὸ εἰκοσαετοῦς καὶ ἐπάνω, from twenty years and upwards, Numb. 1. 3. 20. 22. 24. 26. 28. chap. 14. 29. 1 Chron. 23. 24. 2 Chron. 31. 17. Ezra 3. 8.; ἀπὸ μηνιαίου καὶ ἐπάνω, from a month and upwards, Numb. 3. 15. 22. 28. 34. 39. 43. chap. 26. 62.

Ver. 7. [d] Ἰακώβου, of James] the Just, the brother of the Lord, saith the tradition of the church, and the gospel of the Nazarens. See Dr Hammond and Jerom in Catal. script. eccles.

Ver. 8. [e] Ὡσπερεὶ τῷ ἐκτρώματι, as of one born out of due time.] Ἔκτρωμα, say Hesychius, Phrynicus, and Phavorinus, is παιδίον νεκρὸν ἄωρον, a dead child born out of due time; ἐκβολὴ γυναικὸς, one whom the woman casts forth. St Paul therefore having not seen Christ, of whom he was to testify, till after his conversion, and our Lord's ascension, as the rest of the apostles had, John 15. 27. Acts 1. 21. 22. speaks of himself as a witness born out of due time.

Ver. 12. [f] Πῶς λέγουσί τινες ἐν ὑμῖν, How say some among you?] That there were some in the apostle's time who taught that the resurrection was past already, we learn from 2 Tim. 2. 18. but that they were Jews who of Sadducees had embraced the Chriſtian religion, as Mr Le Clerc (r) aſſerts, I find no reaſon to believe; much leſs that the falſe apoſtle or apoſtles, ſo ſtyled by St Paul, not in his firſt but ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, ſhould be of the Jewiſh Sadducees, for they being the great oppoſers of Chriſt's reſurrection, Acts 4. 1. 2. and the great adverſaries of St Paul upon this very account, that he teſtified that Chriſt was riſen from the dead, Acts 23. 6. 8. and this doctrine being of ſo great importance, that the denying of it rendered both the preaching of the apoſtles, and the faith of their hearers vain, ver. 14. of this chapter. Sure the apoſtle could not ſay of ſuch men, Are they the miniſters of Chriſt? I am more; ſo 2 Cor. 11. 23. or that they transformed themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt, ver. 13.

The Gnoſtics (s) taught not that the reſurrection was paſt already, but only that the fleſh was not fit to riſe, and that it was incapable of ſalvation and incorruption; and therefore they are generally ſaid by the ancients to deny the reſurrection, but none of them inſinuate that it was paſt already. The Marcionites (t) are by Clemens Alexandrinus ſaid to have held this doctrine, and to have renounced matrimony, becauſe in the reſurrection, ſaith Chriſt, they do not marry: but Marcion began his hereſy in the ſecond century, and therefore could not infect the church of Corinth with it in St Paul's time. Menander indeed taught, "that they who received his "baptiſm, were made partakers of the reſurrection "by it, and that they ſhould not die;" and he, according to many of the ancients, was contemporary with St Paul; ſee note on 2 Tim. 2. 18. But haply St Paul refers here to none of theſe, but only to the philoſophers among them, as St Chryſoſtom thinks; for Corinth being an eminent city of Achaia, where the philoſophers and wiſe men of the world abounded, who looked upon the reſurrection of the fleſh as a thing both impoſſible and abſurd, (ſee here note on ver. 35.), and placed their future happineſs in their exemption from the clog and priſon of the body, they might put a new conſtruction on the doctrine of the reſurrection, ſaying it only did import a renovation of our manners, or a reſurrection from the death of ſin unto a life of righteouſneſs, and ſo it was performed already in that baptiſm in which we are raiſed with Chriſt from the dead, Col. 2. 12.

Ver. 15. [g] Ἐμαρτυρήσαμεν κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ, we have teſtified of God.] It being very rare that κατὰ with a genitive caſe ſignifies de, i. e. of, theſe words may be rendered per Deum, by God; as, Becauſe he could ſwear κατ' οὐδενὸς μείζονος, by none greater, he hath ſworn καθ' ἑαυτοῦ, by himſelf, Heb. 6. 13. and ver. 16. Men ſwear κατὰ τοῦ μείζονος, by a greater; ſo Matth. 26. 63. I adjure thee κατὰ Θεοῦ, by God. So in the Old Teſtament, The Lord hath ſworn καθ' ἑαυτοῦ, by himſelf, or, I have ſworn κατ' ἐμαυτοῦ, by myſelf, Iſ. 45. 23. Jer. 49. 13. Amos 6. 6.; ſo 1 Kings 2. 23. Solomon ſwears κατὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, by the Lord; and ver. 43. the oath of the Lord, κατὰ σου, made by the Septuagint them that ſwore κατὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, by the Lord, κατὰ by Malcon. See Iſ. 62. 8. Amos 4. 2. and 8. 7. 14. And then the ſenſe runs thus, We have pretended to be μάρτυρες αὐτοῦ, God's witneſſes in this matter, Acts 5. 32. and by the power of miracles, and of the Holy Ghoſt derived from him, to bear witneſs to the reſurrection of Chriſt, and ſo muſt be falſe witneſſes of God, if he hath not raiſed him from the dead. See here Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 19. [h] Εἰ ἐν τῇ ζωῇ ταύτῃ, If in this life only we have hope.] The apoſtle ſeems not here to ſay, That if there ſhould be no reſurrection of the body, the Chriſtian could have only hope in this life; for if the ſoul be immortal, and may be happy after its ſeparation from the body, this ſeems not to follow; but he argues thus, If Chriſt is not riſen for our juſtification, we are yet under the guilt of ſin, ver. 17. and if ſo, both ſoul and body muſt periſh after death, ver. 18. and then the hope of Chriſtians muſt terminate with this life, which being more eſpecially to them a life of miſery, by reaſon of the ſufferings to which their faith doth here expoſe them, they would of all men be moſt miſerable.

Ver. 22. [i] Ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, in Chriſt.] The opinion of the Jews was this, "That the Meſſiah was the ſe-"cond Adam who ſhould raiſe the dead; his name," ſay they (u), "is called Jinnon, Pſal. 72. 17. for he "ſhall raiſe them that ſleep in the duſt: and the laſt "man, or Adam, is the Meſſiah (x), who ſhall be a-"bove Moſes, and above the miniſtering angels; "he ſhall take away the old ſin from whence death "came, and in his days ſhall be the reſurrection of "the dead; and this God intended in the creation "of Adam, that he ſhould be immortal, but ſin "brought death upon him, therefore the divine in-"tention, which was not fulfilled in the firſt Adam, "was fulfilled in the King Meſſiah." Thus is the doctrine of the church delivered by Irenæus (y), "That Chriſt took our nature upon him, and ſuf-

Ver. 23. κ Ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ, at his coming.] This chapter contains many arguments against the doctrine of the resurrection of some saints before the rest, to reign with Christ on earth a thousand years. For, 1. From these words, every man in his own order, it might have reasonably been expected, that some mention should have been made, as of Christ the first-fruits, so of the first and second resurrection; but yet we see, that when the apostle is professedly speaking of the order in which we shall arise, he hath nothing to say of this first resurrection, which it seems is to happen a thousand years before the general resurrection; and nothing of a first or second advent of our Lord, one to reign on earth a thousand years, a second to judge all the world; and yet this double advent is as necessary as is Christ's reign on earth.

Moreover, the end, and the delivery-up of this kingdom, are here made contemporary with his advent, and the resurrection of all that are Christ's is to be at this very advent. But how can he deliver up his kingdom, and yet reign on earth a thousand years? In a word, if all that are his must be raised at his coming to the final judgment, then none before that coming, and then they must be all raised together, not some a thousand years before the rest.

Ver. 28. ι Ἵνα ᾖ ὁ Θεὸς πάντα ἐν πᾶσι, that God may be all in all.] He saith not that the Father, mentioned ver. 24. but that God may be all in all; and so he seems to lead us to that interpretation of the Godhead which comprehends Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and then the import of the phrase, that God may be all in all, will be this, that the Godhead may govern all things immediately by himself, without the intervention of a Mediator between him and us, to exact our obedience in his name, and convey to us his favours and rewards, we being then to tender all our duty immediately to him, and derive all our happiness immediately from him. So that as now Christ, Theanthropos, God-man, is all in all, Col. 3. 11. because the Father hath put all things into his hands, does all things, and governs all things by him, when this œconomy ceases, the Godhead alone will be all in all, as governing and influencing all things by himself immediately.

Moreover, the Jews say, "that the kingdom of "the Messiah shall return to its first author (z)", and so saith the apostle here; for, though it shall have no such end as the preceding monarchies had, Luke 1. 32. 33. by giving place to a succeeding kingdom, for till the world last, ὁ παραλύσεται, it shall not pass away or be dissolved by any other kingdom, Dan. 7. 14. but shall be an eternal kingdom in the sense in which he is a priest for ever, and hath τὴν ἱερωσύνην ἀπαράβατον, a priesthood that doth not pass away, Heb. 7. 17. 24. 25. and so he is able to intercede for ever for us; yet as that priesthood must needs cease when the subject of it ceaseth, and he hath none to intercede for, so must his kingly office cease, when all his friends have that eternal life conferred upon them, for which this power was committed to him, John 17. 2. and all his enemies are become his footstool, Psal. 110. 1. when there is no more an house of Jacob to reign over, or a throne of David to sit on, Luke 1. 32. 33. Rev. 11. 15.; and the whole office of a mediator must then cease, when God and man are made completely and indissolubly one.

For farther explication of this matter, let it be observed,

1*st*, That this mediatory kingdom was given to our Lord by the Father; for he hath put all things in subjection to him, ver. 27. and that after his resurrection; for it was given as the reward of his sufferings, and so could not be given till they were accomplished: He humbled himself, and became obedient to the death, even the death of the cross; wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name, which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father, Philip. 2. 8. 10. 11. Accordingly after his resurrection he speaks to his disciples thus, All power is given to me in heaven, and in earth, Matth. 28. 18. But why this reward should not cease when the work is done, why, v. g. his dominion over death should not cease when death is destroyed; his power of giving eternal life, or judging, when all are judged, and none are left to be crowned, I confess I do not understand.

2*dly*, Seeing the human nature only suffered, and seeing the divine nature is capable of no such exaltation, or new dominion, 'tis certain that this kingdom could be given to Christ only according to his human nature; for though the Godhead could alone enable him to execute his kingly office, yet was he thus exalted, this power and judgment was conferred upon him because he was the Son of man, John 5. 27. He intercedeth still in heaven by virtue of his blood, all favours are granted to the church through him, and God will judge the world by the man Christ Jesus.

(z) Pirk. Eliezer, c. 12. p. 26.

3*dly*, During this reign of Chriſt, God the Father immediately judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, that all men might honour the Son, by owning his authority, even as they honoured the Father, John 5. 22. 23. by owning his authority over them. He made him Lord of all things, to puniſh and reward according to his wiſdom, will, and pleaſure; and ſo his human nature, or Chriſt as man, though ſubject to the Father, as his viceroy, acting by the authority of him who put all things into his hands, and ſet him over the works of his hands, Heb. 2. 7. 8. and doing all to the glory of God the Father, yet ſeems not now to be in the ſame order of ſubjection to the Father as are other creatures, i. e. ſo as to act by his immediate command in all particular tranſactions, as the holy angels do, obeying his commands, and hearkening to the voice of his word, Pſal. 103. 20. They are all miniſtering ſpirits, Heb. 1. 13. 14. but he is ſet down at the right hand of God, in full poſſeſſion of his mediatory kingdom. Whilſt he continued on earth, and acted only as a prophet ſent from God, he always owned, that he could do nothing of himſelf, but as the Father gave him commandment, ſo he did, and ſo he ſpake, John 5. 30. and 8. 38. and 12. 49.; but being once exalted to be Lord of all things, he acteth as a Lord in all things which relate to his kingly office over his church, giving laws to all, as being Lord of all, and rewarding and puniſhing according to his will.

4*thly*, The exerciſe of this authority he ſhall then lay down when all things are ſubdued to him, no other kingdom or dominion being to be exerciſed in the celeſtial ſtate, but what is eſſential to the whole Godhead: and though he ſhall ever ſo far reign, as to be ſtill at the right hand of God, highly exalted in honour, dignity, and beatitude, and to have ſtill religious reſpect and veneration from all ſaints, who then are to reign with him, 2 Tim. 2. 12. and be owned by them as their King; and though the effects of his kingly power ſhall continue for ever, his enemies being deſtroyed, and his ſaints reigning in bliſs for ever; yet the exerciſe of that kingly power ſhall then ceaſe, and he as man ſhall be then ſubject to the Father, as other ſaints and angels will be; that ſo as Chriſt before was all in all, Col. 3. 13. with reference to his church, and from his fulneſs did they all receive, ſo now the Godhead may be all in all, and fill all things immediately by himſelf. This is only my conjecture of the ſenſe of this obſcure place, from which, upon better information, I ſhall willingly recede.

Ver. 28. Τότε καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ Υἱὸς, the word Υἱὸς crept in, ſaith Dr Mills, from the margin. See this confuted by full authority, Examen Millii.

Ver. 29. [m] Οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, who are baptized for the dead;] i. e. for that Jeſus, who, according to their doctrine, muſt be ſtill dead. To ſtrengthen this expoſition, let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That it is abſolutely certain, that all who received Chriſtian baptiſm were baptized in the name of Jeſus; but it is very uncertain whether any in the apoſtles time were baptized for them who died without baptiſm, or to fill up the place of thoſe Chriſtians who died after baptiſm: there is no intimation of any ſuch thing in ſcripture, or in primitive antiquity.

2*dly*, That the apoſtle doth not ſay, What do they that baptize for the dead? but τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι; what will they do who are baptized already, if the dead riſe not again? τί καὶ βαπτίζονται; why are they alſo baptized for the dead? We who believe otherwiſe of him, and preach ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, by this raiſed Jeſus, the reſurrection from the dead, Acts 4. 2. may well be baptized in the name of Chriſt; but why are they ſo who believe him dead? what will they do? what motive can they have to ſtand to their baptiſmal covenant, and own a dead man as their Lord and Saviour? what inducement can they have to continue faithful to him to the end, but this, that if they ſuffer, they ſhall alſo reign together with him? what will they do for comfort againſt the fear of death, if when they fall aſleep, they periſh, and ſhall not riſe again? muſt they not be as well the worſt of fools, as the moſt miſerable of men, to ſuffer thus for a dead man, who could not help himſelf, and therefore is not likely to give them any help in life, or hope in death?

3*dly*, That ὑπὲρ often ſignifies in gratiam, on the account, or for the ſake: ſo Rom. 1. 5. We have received grace and apoſtleſhip, &c. ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, for his name's ſake; Eph. 3. 13. I deſire that you faint not at my tribulations ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, which I ſuffer for your ſake; Philip. 1. 29. To you it is given ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, for the ſake of Chriſt, not only to ſuffer; Col. 3. 24. ὑπὲρ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, for the ſake of his body; 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. That you may be accounted worthy of the kingdom of God, ὑπὲρ ἧς καὶ πάσχετε, for the ſake of which ye alſo ſuffer. See more examples, both ſacred and profane, in Semidius on the place, and Dr Edwards in his preface to the authority, &c. of the holy ſcripture.

4*thly*, Obſerve, that οἱ νεκροὶ is uſed in ſcripture, when ſpeaking of one ſingle perſon. Thus when Chriſt had raiſed the widow's ſon, he bids John's diſciples tell him, that νεκροὶ, the dead are raiſed, Luke 7. 15. 22.; and ſo here, ver. 12. 13. If there be no ἀνάστασις νεκρῶν, reſurrection of one ſingle perſon from the dead, then is not Chriſt riſen; yea, the reſurrection νεκρῶν, of the dead in general is thrice mentioned by this apoſtle, when ſpeaking of the reſurrection of Chriſt alone: thus when he ſaith, God will judge the world by Chriſt, of which he hath given us a demonstration, having raised him ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead, Acts 17. 30. 31. it follows, that when they heard him asserting the resurrection of the dead, ἀνάστασιν νεκρῶν, they mocked; whereas he had only asserted the resurrection of Christ from the dead. Thus St Paul saith twice, περὶ ἧς ἐλπίδος ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, for the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question, Acts 23. 6. and 24. 21. and yet he was not called in question about the resurrection of the dead in general, for that the Pharisees believed as well as he, but only concerning one Jesus who was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive, Acts 25. 19. or risen from the dead. And so the apostle saith, Christ was declared to be the Son of God with power, ἐξ ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν, by his rising from the dead, Rom. 1. 4.; and here, If Christ be risen, how say some among you that ἀναστάσις νεκρῶν οὐκ ἔστιν, there is no resurrection of the dead? And this import of the phrase seems to be confirmed by the word ὅλως, viz. if it be wholly and entirely true of all that are dead, that they rise not, and so Christ is not risen, what avails it any that they are baptized for the dead?

Ibid. Ἐπεὶ τί ποιήσουσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ, were it not so, what will they do who are baptized for the dead?] Here Mr Dodwell refers to the custom mentioned by Epiphanius, that some heretics, when any who professed Christianity died without baptism, baptized others in their stead; whereas the words are only capable of these two interpretations, either that of the ancients (a), Why are they baptized for the resurrection of the dead? that is, in expectation and belief of that fundamental article of the Christian faith? Or why are they baptized for, or on the account of that Jesus who is dead, and, say they, is not risen from the dead? which is the sense I have given of these words. To make this evident, and shew the vanity of the interpretation which Mr Dodwell hath embraced, let it be noted,

1*st*, That the conjunctive particle, ἐπεὶ, as Phavorinus and Budæus have observed, signifies, εἰ δὲ μὴ, alioquin, quod si non; if it be otherwise, or were it not so. Thus it is used by the apostle, ten several times, Rom. 3. 6.; ἐπεὶ, if it be not so, that God is righteous, how shall he judge the world? chap. 11. 6.; ἐπεὶ, if it were otherwise, grace would not be grace; ἐπεὶ, and were it otherwise, works would not be works; and, ver. 22. ἐπεὶ, otherwise thou shalt be cut off, 1 Cor. 7. 14.; ἐπεὶ, were it not so, their children would be unclean, chap. 14. 16.; ἐπεὶ ἐὰν, otherwise when thou blessest in the Spirit, how shall the unlearned say, Amen? Heb. 9. 17.; ἐπεὶ, otherwise his will is of no force; and, ver. 26. ἐπεὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν, otherwise they would not have ceased to be offered; (which by the way is a probable inducement to believe, that the epistle to the Hebrews was written by St Paul; this conjunction being not once used in this sense in the evangelists, or in the other epistles): now hence it clearly follows, that this conjunction must contain an inference from what was said before, viz. That Christ was risen, as the first-fruits of them that slept, and were to be raised by him from that sleep, and was to reign till he had vanquished their last enemy, death; for, saith the apostle, if this were not so; that is, if Christ were not risen, or being risen, were not to reign till he had overcome death, and so had raised us also from it; why are men baptized ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, for a dead Jesus, or in hopes of a resurrection by him from the dead? So that one of these two senses of this dark passage must obtain.

2*dly*, Observe, that the apostle's question runs not thus, Why do they baptize others for the dead? or, Why are others baptized in their stead? but, τί ποιήσουσιν, What will they do who are baptized? Which question relating to the deportment of those who undergo this baptism, and not at all to them for whose sakes they do it, excludes any relation of these words to that pretended practice; for if it was done by any, it was not with relation to their own deportment, who were living, but with relation to the dead. Moreover, the three questions, Why are they baptized for the dead? or, Why stand we in jeopardy every hour? or, What advantageth it me, if I have fought with beasts at Ephesus? seem plainly to relate to the same matter, and therefore must all relate to the deportment of the living under the evils and persecutions which Christians suffered in this present life, and be to this effect; Why are they who say, Christ is not risen, and therefore can expect no resurrection from him, baptized in his name, or in expectation of this benefit from him? What will they do in the times of persecution? What inducement can they have to stand to their baptismal covenant, and own a dead man as their Lord and Saviour?

Add to this, that though Tertullian (b), by saying, Si autem et baptizantur quidam pro mortuis, supposes such a thing might be done by some, yet he neither mentions time nor persons. Epiphanius (c), in the fourth century, saith, they had a tradition concerning some heretics in Asia and Galatia, ὡς τινῶν μὲν παρ' αὐτοῖς προφθανόντων τελευτῆσαι ἀνὺ βαπτίσματος, ἄλλως δὲ ἀντ' αὐτῶν εἰς ὄνομα ἐκείνων βαπτιζομένων, That some among them being prevented by death from receiving baptism, others of them were baptized in their names, ἐξ οὗ τοῦτο ἴσχυε ἡ παράδοσις ἡ ἐλθοῦσα παρ' ἡμᾶς φησι τὸν αὐτὸν ἄγιον ἀπόστολον εἰρηκέναι, εἰ ὅλως, &c. and that he had received it by tradition; that upon this account the apoſtle ſaid, If the dead riſe not at all, why are they then baptized for the dead? But as he is the only perſon who ſpeaks of this tradition, ſo is he guilty of a manifeſt contradiction in his relation of it; for having told us, that the heretics who practiſed thus, owned indeed the reſurrection of our Lord; which, ſaith he, the Corinthians denied, and therefore were not of this ſect, but yet ſaid, νεκρὸς δὲ οὐκ ἐγείρεσθαι, that the dead were not to be raiſed, and ſo denied the reſurrection of the dead; yet he adds, that they uſed this practice, ὑπὲρ τῶ μὴ ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει ἀναστάσας αὐτὸς δίκην δοῦναι τιμωρίας βάπτισμα μὴ ἐληφότας, that they who died without baptiſm, might not, at the reſurrection, be puniſhed for want of baptiſm. St Chryſoſtom and Theophylact ſay, that the Marcionites, when any of their ſect died without baptiſm, put a live man under the bed in which the dead man lay, and then aſked the dead, whether he would be baptized; and the man under the bed anſwering, Yes, they baptized the dead man, εἶτα ἐγκαλέμενοι; and being accuſed of this ridiculous practice, they pleaded, that the apoſtle ſpake of ſome who were baptized for the dead, τὸ δὲ οὐκ ἔτως ἔχει, whereas he ſaid no ſuch matter, but only ſaid, If the dead riſe not, why are they baptized for the reſurrection of the dead? They therefore knew of no ſuch practice in the apoſtle's time, or of any tradition relating to it; and certain it is, the apoſtle could not relate unto this practice of the Marcionites, ſeeing Marcion began his hereſy in the ſecond century, and ſo long after the writing of this epiſtle. In a word, if they who are ſuppoſed to practiſe thus, believed the reſurrection, they could not be concerned in the apoſtle's argument againſt them, who did not believe it; if they did not believe the reſurrection of the body, when once dead, it cannot be imagined, why they ſhould be concerned to baptize a dead body, or any other body for it. See the text defended againſt the ſurmiſes of Dr Mills, Examen Millii, ibid.

Ver. 32. ᵃ Κατ' ἄνθρωπον, after the manner of men.] i. e. after the uſual manner of Heathens. That St Paul thus fought with beaſts indeed, and they would not touch him; they, ſaith Nicephorus (d), who writ the life of this apoſtle, do affirm; Theodoret ſeems plainly to hint the ſame thing in theſe words, "In human opinion I was made the food of beaſts, "but I was wonderfully preſerved from them (e)." And this ſenſe will appear the more probable,

1. From the phraſe κατ' ἄνθρωπον, which ſignifies, as men uſed to do, but never, according to mens purpoſes; or, to ſpeak after the manner of men. See the note on 1 Cor. 9. 8.

2. From the place here particularly mentioned, Epheſus, which cannot refer to the tumult there cauſed by Demetrius, for the apoſtle ſuffered nothing in it. Had he intended a combat with metaphorical beaſts, or ſavage men, that at Lyſtra, where he was ſtoned, and left for dead, Acts 14. 19. had been more properly mentioned. See the note on 2 Cor. 1. 8. 9. 10. where he ſpeaks of ſuch troubles that befel him in Aſia, as made him to deſpair even of life; though as we read nothing in the Acts of this fight with beaſts, ſo we read nothing of that trouble. It is therefore no objection againſt this interpretation, that this fight with beaſts is not recorded by St Luke, or that St Paul ſpeaks not expreſsly of it in the catalogue of his afflictions, 2 Cor. 11. it is ſufficient that there he tells us, he was in deaths often, ver. 23.

If this ſenſe be not liked, you may interpret κατ' ἄνθρωπον, according to the intention of men, it being the intention of the men of Aſia in that tumult, to deal ſo with Paul's companions, and much more with him, had not his friends diſſuaded him from entering into the theatre. See note on Acts 19. 29. And note alſo, that cruel and bloody-minded men are often repreſented under this metaphor of beaſts: ſo Ignatius (f), when he was carried from Syria to Rome, under a band of ſoldiers, (who, ſaith he, are the worſe for the kindneſs I ſhew to them), he ſaith, ἀπὸ Συρίας μέχρι Ρώμης θηριομαχῶ, from Syria to Rome I fight with beaſts. And Heraclitus the Epheſian ſaith (g), Epheſiorum cives converſos eſſe in beſtias, "The Ephe- "ſians were turned into beaſts, becauſe they ſlew "one another."

Ver. 35. ᵒ Ποίῳ σώματι, with what kind of body?] This was the queſtion of the philoſophers (h), whoſe chief objection againſt the reſurrection of the fleſh, and of the body, was this; That the body was (i) the priſon and the ſepulchre of the ſoul, and that it was her puniſhment to be tied to it; that the body was the great hindrance to the knowledge of the truth, and that we could not be truly happy, till by death we were delivered from it: It was therefore judged by them, not only an impossible thing, but even an unjust, unworthy thing, for God to raise these bodies, to be united to those souls, whose happiness consisted in being delivered from the body, and whose punishment it was to be confined to it; that being, according to their philosophy (k), not to make them alive, but die again. And therefore Celsus saith, "The "hope of the resurrection of the flesh, is the hope "of worms, a filthy, an abominable, and impossible "thing, which God neither will, nor can do." Hence probably it was, that the Valentinians, Marcionites, Basilidians, the followers of Saturninus, and other primitive heretics, denied so stiffly τῆς σαρκὸς ἀνάστασιν, the resurrection of the flesh, Just. Mart. dial. p. 307. 253. and said, Non esse capacem carnem vitæ, "that "the flesh was not capable of life," Iren. l. 1. c. 29. and l. 5. c. 41. because they held with the philosophers, Corpus esse carcerem, "the body was the pri-"son of the soul;" Idem, l. 1. c. 24. Now, to this objection the apostle here returns a full and satisfactory answer, by shewing the happy change which shall then pass upon the raised body; and this he seems to do with some resemblance to the ancient philosophy of the Pythagoreans and Platonists, and to the sentiments of the Jews.

Ibid. ᵖ That here are two questions, but then both have respect to the manner, or the qualities of the bodies to be raised, for the apostle saith not διὰ τί, Why are dead men raised to life again? or, Why do they live again? but, πῶς ἐγείρονται, How, after what manner are they raised? Are they raised with such mortal bodies, as they had before, or with bodies subject to the like distempers and infirmities, which we now suffer in this life; or if not, with what kind of bodies? Do their bodies rise naked? Or, are they clothed upon? This is exceeding evident from the whole discourse of the apostle, in answer to these questions, which gives no reason, why they being dead do rise again, but wholly is employed in shewing what are the qualities and conditions of the raised bodies of good men.

Ver. 37. ᵠ Γυμνὸν κόκκον, naked grain.] Note here, That the Jewish rabbins (l) use the same similitude of grain in the affair of the resurrection, and speak also of a clothing of the body raised, from the example of grain raised with a covering. See the note on 2 Cor. 5. 2. 3. 4. Note also, that St Paul is not discoursing of the identity of the raised body, but only of the qualities with which it is raised.

Ver. 44. ʳ Σῶμα ψυχικὸν, an animal body.] It seems hence probable, that the word sown doth not relate to the body's being lain in the earth, but rather to its production into the world; for when it is interred, it is no more an animal body, but a body void of life; it is not only weak, but wholly destitute of power: and this appears yet further, from the following proof of these words, It is sown an animal body, for so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul. The apostle doth indeed, ver. 36. 37. speak of seed sown in the earth, but then he speaks of it as still alive, and having its seminal virtue, or animal spirit in it, and after dying there; whereas our bodies first die, and then are cast into the earth.

2*dly*, Hence it is also probable, that the apostle discourseth not here of the different degrees of glory, which the saints hereafter shall enjoy; for he speaks only of what is raised, that is, the body, and of the qualities belonging to all bodies that are raised.

3*dly*, Certain it is, that the apostle in this chapter discourseth only of the resurrection of the just, since it is alone their bodies that shall undergo this happy change.

4*thly*, Observe, that there is another sense of the 44th verse, as good as that which I have given in the paraphrase, viz. "There is an animal body, i. e. a "body fitted for this lower sensible state in which "we live at present; and there is a spiritual body, "that is, a body fitted for our spiritual and celestial "state; in this state we are forced to serve our "bodies, and to attend their leisure, and mightily "depend upon them in the operations of the mind; "in the other, our bodies shall wholly serve our spi-"rits, and minister to them, and depend upon them, "and therefore may be styled spiritual." But,

5*thly*, That our bodies shall be then spiritual, thin and aereal, is neither a new doctrine, nor proper to the followers of Origen; for so both St Chrysostom and Theophylact upon the place allow it to be. "What incredible thing assert we," saith Isidore Pelusiot (m), "if we say the body is small and aereal? "for by this we do not deny it to be the same bo-"dy." And again, the apostle calls our bodies spiritual, διὰ τὸ κῦφος καὶ αἰθέριον μᾶλλον ἔσεσθαι, because hereafter they shall be light and ethereal (n). And this, which the apostle here says, is suitable to the philoſophy of the Pythagoreans and Platoniſts, who taught that good and pure ſouls were by death delivered from thoſe groſs and earthly bodies which preſs down the ſoul, Wiſd. 9. 15. and were after the diſſolution of the body, ſaid they, will be at the reſurrection of the body, ſaith he, inveſted with thin and aereal, with active and ſpiritual, with bright and ſhining, and laſtly, with celeſtial and eternal bodies (o). Now to this plainly anſwers the deſcription of our raiſed bodies here given by St Paul, in anſwer to the ſecond queſtion of the philoſophers at Corinth, With what bodies do they come forth out of the grave? declaring in their very terms, that this body will be σῶμα πνευματικὸν καὶ ἠθέριον, a ſpiritual and celeſtial body, ver. 44. 46. 48. 49. 2 Cor. 5. 1.; that it will be οἰκία αἰώνιος, an eternal houſe, σῶμα ἄφθαρτον καὶ ἀθάνατον, an incorruptible and immortal body, ver. 53. 54.; that it will be raiſed ἐν δόξῃ, in glory, and ſo be αὐγοειδὲς, a ſhining body: The juſt, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall then ſhine as the ſun, and as the brightneſs of the firmament, Matth. 13. 43. and as the ſtars, ſaith Daniel, Dan. 12. 3. And this anſwers to the σῶμα ἀστροειδὲς, which theſe philoſophers mention as the ſame with their αὐγοειδὲς, ſhining body. Laſtly, It is raiſed in power, and this is in ſenſe the ſame with their σῶμα ἐυκίνητον, agile body, and of quick motion. Indeed, the parallel is ſo exact, that ſeeing I find nothing of this nature in the life of Pythagoras, writ by Diogenes Laertius, or in Plato, but only in thoſe writers who lived ſince Chriſt's time, and were profeſſed enemies of Chriſtianity, Hierocles, Porphyry, Proclus, and Jamblicus, I am apt to ſuſpect, that, as in other things, they apparently dreſſed up their philoſophy and morality anew, to accommodate it the better to the Chriſtian philoſophy, that ſo there might ſeem leſs need of Chriſtianity; and particularly made the felicity of ſouls hereafter much like the Chriſtian doctrine, that ſo they might deſtroy, or render needleſs the doctrine of the reſurrection; ſo they gave to the dying ſouls of good men this ὄχημα ψυχῆς, or vehicle of a ſpiritual, immortal, ſhining, heavenly body alſo, from the Chriſtian notion of the change our raiſed bodies ſhould then undergo. See the text defended againſt the ſurmiſes of Dr Mills, Examen Millii. Ibid.

Ver. 45. πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν, a quickening ſpirit.] All the ancients, till St Auſtin, by a ſpiritual body, ſeem to underſtand a body poſſeſſed and acted by the Holy Spirit, as the natural body is by the animal and vital ſpirits; and ſay, that Chriſt was made a quickening Spirit, by the ſeed of the Holy Spirit, which unites him to all his members, and confers on them a new life and immortality. Irenæus is very expreſs and copious in this matter, ſaying (p), "That, as from the "beginning of our frame in Adam, that inſpiration "of life, which proceeded from God, united to the "body, animated man, and made him a reaſonable "creature; ſo in the end, the word of the Father, "and the Spirit of God united to the old ſubſtance "of the frame of Adam, make a living and a per"fect man, receiving the perfect Father; that as "we all died in the animal, we may be all quick"ened in the ſpiritual Adam; and that by the Spi"rit the bodies riſing are made ſpiritual, as by the "Spirit they have life eternal:" "It is called ſpi"ritual, as putting on the Spirit," ſaith Tertullian (q): "As receiving the whole energy and com"munion of the Spirit," ſaith Methodius (r). And that the reſurrection of the juſt ſhall be effected by the Spirit of God, ſeems to be plainly taught by the apoſtle in theſe words, If the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead dwell in you, he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you, Rom. 8. 10. And this agrees with the opinion of the Jews, who aſcribe the reſurrection to the Spirit, from Ezek. 37. 10. and in particular, to the Spirit of the Meſſiah. And from this differs not much the opinion of Theodoret, and others, That Chriſt is made a quickning Spirit, becauſe he himſelf being quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18. hath in himſelf the power to quicken, and raiſe the bodies of his ſervants to eternal life; for as the Father raiſeth up the dead, and quickeneth them, ſo the Son quickeneth whom he will, John 5. 21.; and as the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf, ver. 26.

Ibid. Moreover, that Chriſt is ſaid here to be εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν, for a quickening Spirit, not with relation to his quickening the ſoul, by the body only, is visible to any who will peruse the whole discourse of the apostle here, since it relateth only to the truth and manner of the resurrection. For after the apostle had dispatched his proof of our Lord's resurrection, he concludes thus: Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept; for as by man came death, so by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as ἐν τῷ Ἀδὰμ, by Adam, all men die, so also ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, by Christ, all ζωοποιηθήσονται, shall be made alive again. Now, this is the very word used by Christ, in reference to his power of raising the dead when he saith, As the Father raises the dead, καὶ ζωοποιεῖ, and makes them live again; so the Son ζωοποιεῖ, gives life to whom he will. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself, John 5. 21. 26.

After this the apostle proceeds to the inquiry of the unbeliever, How are the dead raised up, &c.? And in his answer to this, he begins with the same word; That which thou sowest, οὐ ζωοποιεῖται, is not quickened except it die; and then shews the difference of our present body subject to death, and the condition of our future bodies, saying, It is sown, or born into the world, σῶμα ψυχικὸν, an animal body; that is, a body, which, by the animal and vital spirits in it, lives, moves, perceives, and conveys nourishment to all its parts; it is raised σῶμα πνευματικὸν, a spiritual body, that is, a body quickened by the Spirit of Christ, Rom. 8. 11. and advanced so far to the perfection of spirits, as to be immortal as they are, Luke 20. 35. 36. and so fitted for the celestial and immortal state: for, saith he, so it is written, the first man Adam, from whom we all derive our bodies, and our animal life, was therefore made εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν, with a soul giving life to his body, and conveying this animal life to others, Gen. 2. 7.; the second was made εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν, to revive the body, and quicken it by his Spirit, John 6. 63.; for having promised, that he would raise up them who spiritually did eat his flesh, and drink his blood, he adds, τὸ πνεῦμά ἐστι τὸ ζωοποιοῦν, it is the Spirit that quickeneth. He saith also, That the first man, whose image we bear in our bodies, was χοϊκὸς, formed, ἐκ γῆς, from the dust, and so is to return to the dust; the second man, whose image we shall bear, is the Lord from heaven, to wit, descending from it with his glorious and heavenly body, whose image we shall bear by having bodies made like unto his glorious body; not then consisting, when they ascend thither, of flesh and blood, or subject to corruption, as now they are; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and mortal body must put on immortality. And this happy resurrection is to be effected by the Spirit of Christ dwelling in us; for if the Spirit of Christ dwell in us, he that raised up Christ from the dead, ζωοποιήσει καὶ, shall also quicken our mortal bodies, by his Spirit dwelling in us, Rom. 8. 11.; whence it is evident, that Christ, the second Adam, is said to be εἰς πνεῦμα ζωοποιοῦν, not with relation to our souls, but to our bodies, to be raised by him. And thus are these words expounded by Photius in Oecumenius, and by Theophylact on the place.

Ver. 47. Ἐξ οὐρανοῦ, from heaven.] Not as some fancy, because Christ's body was from heaven, and not from the Virgin Mary; for the scripture expressly teacheth, that he was begotten ἐξ αὐτῆς, from her body, Matth. 1. 16. Luke 1. 35. and was the fruit of her womb, Luke 1. 42.; that he was made ἐκ γυναικὸς, out of a woman, and came from the fathers τὸ κατὰ σάρκα, according to the flesh, Rom. 9. 5. And had his body been derived from heaven, it must have been immortal, as our bodies will be when we bear the image of the heavenly Adam; both which things make it necessary to interpret the Lord from heaven, as I have done in the paraphrase.

F. 84. 1. read portemus, which answers to the Greek Φορέσωμεν, as St Chrysostom reads, and as the Alexandrian and other copies read. The other reading is owned by Origen against Celsus twice, l. 5. p. 243. and also by Methodius. Theodoret also and Theophylact well note, that the words are not to be read by way of exhortation, Φορέσωμεν, let us bear, but Φορέσομεν, as a prediction of what we shall be; for the apostle, from ver. 42. to this verse, still passeth on from what we were, to what we shall be; and having said, As is the heavenly, such are (i. e. shall be) they that are heavenly; he proves this, because as we have borne the image of the earthly Adam, so shall we bear the image of the heavenly.

Note also, that Philo speaks much like the apostle; for he saith, "There are two kinds of men, "one made after the image of God, and another "made out of the earth (s)." The last he proves from the very words the apostle useth to prove there is a natural or animal body; the first from this, "That God made man after his own image, which "image he styles the divine word;" and says he is the ἐπουράνιος ἀστὴρ, "the heavenly star, the fountain "of all sensible stars." The last he calls "the "earthly and corruptible Adam; the first, the Adam "made after the image which is not," saith he,

" earthy, but heavenly. The one is heavenly, as " being made after the image of God; and ſo in- " capable of any corruptible or earthy ſubſtance; " the other out of ſeminal matter, which the ſcrip- " ture calleth earth." But then he ſaith, " That " the heavenly man was formed firſt, and after him " the earthy (t);" and, perhaps, for the correction of that error, the apoſtle might here ſay, That was not firſt which is ſpiritual, but that which was natural.

Ver. 50. ᵡ Σάρξ καὶ αἷμα, fleſh and blood, &c.] Moſt of the fathers interpret theſe words of fleſh and blood not naturally, but morally taken for the corrupt affections of the fleſh. But,

1. Though fleſh itſelf in ſcripture ſometimes bears this ſenſe, yet fleſh and blood jointly, never ſeems to have this import in the ſcripture.

2. It is plain, and confeſſed by St Auſtin (u), that the apoſtle is not here ſpeaking of the requiſites to make our ſouls meet to inherit this kingdom, but of the manner of the reſurrection of the body.

3. The apoſtle ſpeaks of fleſh and blood as ſubject to corruption here, ver. 52. or of ſuch fleſh and blood as muſt be changed, and put on incorruption, and ſo of fleſh and blood naturally taken.

4. It is evident to ſenſe, that fleſh may be cut and divided, and blood let out, and ſo muſt, whilſt they continue ſuch, be ſubject to corruption, and alſo that an heavenly and a ſpiritual body, an houſe from heaven, cannot conſiſt of ſuch fleſh and blood as we have at preſent.

It therefore muſt be ſaid, That though the ſame fleſh and blood may riſe from the grave, it will then, or afterwards, receive ſuch a change as will render it ſpiritual or incorruptible, and ſo, perhaps, when it comes to heaven, will not be fleſh and blood; or that it will be clothed with ſuch an heavenly body, as will keep it from a poſſibility of corruption; and ſo the import of theſe words may be this, " That " fleſh and blood unchanged, and unclothed with its " heavenly body, cannot inherit the kingdom of " God."

Ver. 51. ʸ Πάντες μὲν οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, πάντες δὲ ἀλλαγησόμεθα, we ſhall not all ſleep, &c.] This reading is much to be preferred before either of the other two, viz. we ſhall all riſe, or we ſhall all ſleep, but ſhall not all be changed; as being,

1. Not only the reading of Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and Theophylact on the place; but alſo of Origen (x), Theodotus, Apollinarius, St Jerom, and of Pſeudo-Juſtin, qu. 61. and 109.

2. As being inforced from the next words repeated thus, And we ſhall be changed; from the like words, 1 Theſſ. 4. 17.; and from the obſervation of almoſt all the commentators on the place, that the apoſtle in this chapter ſpeaks only of the reſurrection of the juſt; and from the falſehood of the other words, We ſhall not all be changed, ſeeing the bodies of the wicked will certainly be changed by the fire they go into; and laſtly, from the ſenſe, for what ſenſe is it to ſay, We ſhall not be changed in a moment, and to add this reaſon of that ſaying, viz. for the dead ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we ſhall be changed?

Note alſo, that it cannot be hence concluded, that he, and the reſt of the apoſtles ſhould live to the general reſurrection: no, he elſewhere diſcovers his expectation, that the ſame God who raiſed up Jeſus, ſhould raiſe them alſo from the dead, 2 Cor. 4. 14.; he ſpeaks this therefore, not in his own, but in the perſon of all pious Chriſtians that ſhould then live. See the note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. 17.

Ver. 52. ᵃ Ἐν ἀτόμῳ, in a moment.] It is the obſervation of St Jerom (y), that by theſe words the apoſtle cunctam primæ et ſecundæ reſurrectionis excludit fabulam, deſtroys the fable of the firſt and ſecond reſurrection. He doth it ſufficiently in the deſcription of the ſtate of all the raiſed bodies of the juſt. For though the patrons of this opinion would avoid it, it is certain, that the old aſſerters of it held, that they ſhould be raiſed to enjoy the pleaſures of meat and drink, as Irenæus ſpeaks (z). Now, can thin, ſpiritual, glorious, heavenly bodies, and ſuch as are made like to Chriſt's glorious body, eat and drink, and enjoy theſe ſenſual pleaſures? Moreover, who ſhall be changed? Thoſe that already have been raiſed a thouſand years? If not, they muſt not be alive, for Chriſtians then alive ſhall be changed; but if they muſt be changed, then muſt their bodies be raiſed corruptible, and they muſt twice bear the image of the earthy, or the animal Adam.

Ver. 53. Δεῖ γὰρ τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο.] It is here ſaid, τὸ φθαρτὸν, and τὸ θνητὸν, have not σῶμα for their ſubſtantive, but are put in the neuter gender abſolute, and ſtand to repreſent νεκροὶ, the dead; but this is a great miſtake; for the words are not only, τὸ φθαρτὸν, τὸ θνητὸν, but τὸ φθαρτὸν τοῦτο, τὸ θνητὸν τοῦτο, this corruptible, this mortal; now iſtud, ſaith Tertullian, is a word demonſtrative demonſtrative of the body; this hoc, ſaith Ruffinus, eſt vox corpus ſuum quodammodo contingentis, "is "the voice of one, as it were, pointing to the bo-"dy:" Moreover, what is mortal and corruptible; what puts on incorruption, but the body ſown in corruption, and raiſed in incorruption? ver. 42. What is mortal but the body? What therefore can be raiſed to immortality but the ſame body? When it is further ſaid, that the apoſtle, ſaying, οὐ πρῶτον τὸ πνευματικὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ψυχικὸν, that is not firſt which is ſpiritual, but that which is natural; he uſes the neuter gender, to ſignify the perſons of Adam and of Chriſt, that is another plain miſtake; they plainly being uſed to ſignify the body received from Adam, and raiſed by Chriſt, as it is evident from the precedent words, ἐστι σῶμα ψυχικὸν, καὶ ἐστι σῶμα πνευματικὸν, there is an animal body, and there is a ſpiritual body; but that body which is ſpiritual is not firſt, but that which is animal.

Ver. 54. [a] Ἐνδύσεται ἀφθαρσίαν, ſhall put on incorruption.] The ſcripture, and all the ancients, ſpeak of a clothing which our raiſed bodies ſhall put on. Thus Pſellus (a), in his commentary on the Chaldaic oracles, ſaith, "The Chaldees give the ſoul two "clothings; one of the ſpiritual body, weaved out "of that which is ſubject to ſenſe; the other a ſhi-"ning, thin body, not ſubject to the touch, which "they call the ſuperficies;" and the conjecture of the Jews is this, that it ſhall be "a clothing of "light," or of "a pure flame." So the ancient book Zoar ſaith (b), That "the bodies of the juſt "ſhall be clothed with the light of glory." R. Phineas ſaith, the bleſſed God will give to the bodies of the juſt, יפיות, an ornament, according to that of Iſaiah, ch. 58. 11. he ſhall ſatisfy the ſoul, בזיהרורות with white or ſplendid things; and R. Levi, that "the ſoul, in the ſtate of its glory, ſuſtains itſelf "by the ſuperior light," and when it returns to the body, "it ſhall come with this light, and then the "body ſhall ſhine as with the brightneſs of the "heavens." And this agrees with the tranſfiguration of our Lord's body, Matth. 17. 2.; and with his appearance to St Paul, Acts 9. 3.; and to St John, Rev. 1. 14. 15.; and to the deſcriptions made in the Old Teſtament, of the juſt riſing from their graves, That they ſhall ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever, Dan. 12. 3. Wiſd. 3. 7.; and in the New, That they ſhall ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of the Father, Matth. 13. 43.; and thus may they be ſalted, and preſerved from corruption by fire, Matth. 9. 49.

Ibid. [b] Κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νῖκος, Death is ſwallowed up in victory,] or, for ever, as εἰς νῖκος often ſignifies: ſo 2 Sam. 2. 26. Shall the ſword devour εἰς νῖκος, for ever? Job 36. 7. He will ſet them on the throne εἰς νῖκος, for ever; Jer. 3. 5. Will he keep his anger εἰς νῖκος, for ever? Lam. 3. 20. Why doſt thou forget us εἰς νῖκος, for ever? Amos 1. 11. His anger did tear εἰς νῖκος, for ever; and chap. 8. 7. He will not forget their works εἰς νῖκος, for ever. Nor is the phraſe εἰς νῖκος uſed in any other ſenſe in the Septuagint. Though therefore death is repreſented as the laſt enemy to be vanquiſhed, ver. 26. and the apoſtle aſks, O grave, where is thy victory? and gives thanks to God who giveth us the victory, ver. 55. 57.; yet ſeeing he hath given us this victory by ſwallowing death up for ever, by ſwallowing up death of life eternal, 2 Cor. 5. 4. I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould think the apoſtle had not here reſpect to the conſtant uſe of this phraſe in the Septuagint, it being taken from Iſ. 25. 8. See the text defended againſt the ſurmiſes of Dr Mills, Examen Millii, ibid.

Ver. 55. [c] Where is thy ſting?] What is by the apoſtle rendered πῦ, where, is in the Hebrew אהי, I will be; but that word is thought by a metatheſis to ſignify the ſame as איה, where; accordingly it is ſo rendered, Hoſ. 13. 10. by the Septuagint, the Chaldee, the Syriac, the Arabic, and in this 14th verſe by the Seventy, the Syriac, Arabic, and by many Jews, which is ſufficient to juſtify the apoſtle here. See Dr Pocock on Hoſ. 13. 10. 14.

5. Now I will come unto you when [a] I ſhall paſs (or ſhall have paſſed) through Macedonia; for I do (intend ſhortly to remove hence, and to) paſs through Macedonia.

6. And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whitherſoever I go.

7. For I will not ſee you now by the way, but I truſt (hereafter) to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit.

8. But I will tarry (ſtill) at Epheſus [b] till Pentecoſt.

9. For a great door, and effectual, is opened to me (for propagation of the goſpel there), and there are many adverſaries (of the truth, eſpecially thoſe of the circumciſion, which makes my ſtay there neceſſary.)

10. Now, [c] if Timotheus come (to you), ſee that he may be with you without fear (of diſturbance from the factions); for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I alſo do.

11. Let no man therefore deſpiſe him (becauſe of his youth, 1 Tim. 4. 12.), but [d] conduct (ye) him forth in peace, that he may come to me; for I look for him, with the brethren, (or I and the brethren look for him.)

12. As touching our brother Apollos, I greatly deſired him to come to you with the brethren, but [e] his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he ſhall have a convenient time.

13. Watch ye, ſtand faſt in the faith, quit ye (yourſelves) like men, be ſtrong.

14. Let all your things be done with charity, (or a ſincere deſire of your brother's weal.)

15. I beſeech you, brethren, (ſeeing) ye know the houſe of Stephanas, that it is the firſt-fruits of (the goſpel in) Achaia, and that they have (ever ſince) addicted themſelves to the miniſtry of the ſaints;

16. That you ſubmit yourſelves to ſuch, (giving reverence and honour to them), and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth.

17. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, (whom you ſent with your letters of inquiry to me), for that (account of your affairs) which was lacking on your part (in your letter) they have ſupplied.

18. (I am glad, I ſay), for they have refreſhed my ſpirit (with their preſence and diſcourſe), and (will, at their return, refreſh) yours; therefore acknowledge ye them that are ſuch.

19. The churches of Aſia ſalute you: Aquila and Priſcilla ſalute you much in the Lord, [f] with the church that is in their houſe, (i. e. their Chriſtian family.)

20. All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with an holy kiſs. (See note on Rom. 16. 16.)

22. If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be [h] Anathema Maran-atha, (i. e. accurſed when the Lord comes to judgment.)

23. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you.

24 My love be with you all in Chriſt Jeſus. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XVI.

Verſe 2. [a] Κατὰ μίαν Σαββάτων, upon the firſt day of the week] So we read in St Matthew, that our Lord roſe from the dead τῇ μιᾷ τῶν Σαββάτων, upon the firſt day of the week, chap. 28. 1.; in St Mark, that the Sabbath being over, Mary Magdalene and others came early τῆς μιᾶς τῶν Σαββάτων, the firſt day of the week, chap. 16. 9. and found Chriſt riſen from the dead; and in St Luke, that they reſted on the Sabbath-day, according to the commandment; and that they came to the ſepulchre, τῇ μιᾷ τῶν Σαββάτων, on the firſt day of the week, chap. 23. 56. and 24. 1. and ſo accordingly ſaith St John, chap. 20. 1.; ſo that this phraſe doth certainly import the firſt day of the week, the day of our Lord's reſurrection from the dead, and this the word μία uſually ſignifies in the Septuagint, when it is joined with days, weeks, and months; as the evening and the morning were ἡμέρα μία, the firſt day; ſo ἡμέρα μία τοῦ μηνὸς, is the firſt day of the month, Exod. 40. 2. Ezra 3. 6. and 10. 17.; and μία τοῦ μηνὸς is the firſt day of the month, Lev. 23. 24. Numb. 1. 1. 18. and 19. 1. and 33. 38. Deut. 1. 3. Ezek. 26. 1. and 32. 1. and 45. 18. Hag. 1. 1. and 2. 2.

Moreover, κατὰ μίαν may be rendered, every firſt day, as (c) κατὰ πόλιν, in every city, κατ' οἶκον, in every family, κατ' ἄνδρα, viritim, man by man, κατὰ μῆνα, every month, and κατὰ μίαν, ſigillatim.

2*dly*, Obſerve, that the Jews in every city where they dwelt had their collectors of alms (d), who, in the week-days, went about the city collecting alms, according to the quality and wealth of every Jew, and in the evening of the Sabbath diſtributed to the poor among the Jews, as much as was needful for the following week: and after this example the a-postle seems to have ordained, that the Christians should lay up for the poor, or make provisions for them on the Lord's day.

3*dly*, Observe, That from the beginning the Christians did assemble on the first day of the week, called by them the Lord's day, to perform their religious worship (e), to read the scriptures, to preach and celebrate the Lord's supper. "This day being "the Lord's day, we keep it holy," saith Dionysius bishop of Corinth (f). "On Sunday," saith Justin (g), "all Christians in the city or country meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection, and then we read the writings of the "prophets and apostles; this being done, the president makes an oration to the assembly, to exhort them to imitate, and do the things they "heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that "we celebrate the sacrament."

4*thly*, Observe, That the apostle gave order that here, and in the churches of Galatia, collections should be made for the poor on that day; and that all Christians, in compliance with that precept, still offered their alms upon that day. So Justin Martyr (h), "Then they that are able and willing give "what they think fit; and what is thus collected is "laid up in the hands of the president, who distributes it to orphans and widows, and other Christians, as their wants require."

5*thly*, Observe, That no good reason can be given, why the apostle should limit the collections of the churches of Corinth and Galatia to the first day of the week, but this, that this day was appointed for the worship of our Lord, and so more fit for the performance of those duties which concerned his distressed members in those times; for as the works of charity and mercy are proper duties of this day, so doth the day contain a special motive in it to enlarge their charity, as being the day in which they were begotten to a lively hope, through the resurrection of Christ Jesus from the dead, of an inheritance incorruptible, 1 Pet. 1. 3. and in which they constantly participated of his precious body and blood, and therefore having received spiritual things so plentifully from Christ, must be more ready to impart somewhat of their temporals to his needy servants.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἕκαστος ὑμῶν παρ' ἑαυτῷ τιθέτω θησαυρίζων, Let every one of you lay by him in store, that there be no gathering when I come.] From these last words it is gathered, that θησαυρίζειν is to put into a common box his charity, because, if they had kept it at home, there would have been need of gathering it when the apostle came. But the words ἕκαστος παρ' ἑαυτῷ τιθέτω, let every one place it with himself, admit not of this sense; nor when this was done could there be any necessity of making collections, as that imports, soliciting the charities of others, but only of receiving the charity thus laid by for the use of the saints; and yet that such need there was, is evident from the 8th and 9th chapters of the second epistle; for why is so much care taken that they might be ready, if their whole contribution was already in the common box?

Ver. 3. [c] Οὓς δοκιμάσητε δι' ἐπιστολῶν τούτους πέμψω, them with my letters will I send.] That this is the true sense, is evident, because the apostle, supposing himself then to be come to them, could not need their commendatory epistles.

Ver. 5. [d] Μακεδονίαν διέρχομαι, I do pass through Macedonia;] not presently, but after I have finished my stay at Ephesus, ver. 8.: for that St Paul writ this epistle from Ephesus, and not from Philippi, may be gathered from the salutations in the close of it, not from the churches of Macedonia, but of Ephesus; and in his second epistle he saith, he passed from Troas to Macedonia, and that there Titus came to him, 2 Cor. 2. 13. and 7. 5. 6. who was not come to him when he writ his first epistle.

Ver. 8. [e] Ἕως τῆς Πεντηκοστῆς, till Pentecost.] It therefore was the following Pentecost that he hastened to be at Jerusalem, Acts 20. 16.

Ver. 10. [f] Ἐὰν δὲ ἔλθῃ Τιμόθεος, If Timothy come to you.] Hence it appears that this epistle was not sent by Timothy, for then he must have come to them.

Ver. 11. [g] Προπέμψατε αὐτὸν, conduct him forth.] It is the observation of the reverend and learned Dr Hammond, that the word προπέμπειν signifies not only to accompany one, and bring him on his way, as ver. 6. but also to provide for the necessaries of his journey. But this seems not suitable to the inquiry of the apostle, Did I make gain of you by any of them whom I sent to you? Did Titus make a gain of you? 2 Cor. 12. 17.

Ver. 12. [h] Οὐκ ἦν θέλημα ἵνα νῦν ἔλθῃ, he was not willing to come now.] Perhaps because he would not countenance a faction that was begun under his name, by his presence with them, which, saith Aqui-

Ver. 19. [i] Σὺν τῇ κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίᾳ, with the church in their houſe.] This phraſe doth not import that the whole church of Corinth, &c. met in ſuch a family; for then this ſalutation would be the ſalutation of all the Chriſtians in that place; but that this is not ſo, is evident from ſo many ſalutations directed to other perſons and families in the ſame place. So Rom. 16. 5. Salute Aquila and Priſcilla, and the church in their houſe. See the note there. And then follow ſalutations to many other perſons, and brethren of the church. So Col. 4. 15. Salute the brethren in Laodicea, and Nymphas, with the church in his houſe. See the note there. So Philemon 2. we read thus, Paul a priſoner, to Philemon, —to Apphia, to Archippus our fellow-ſoldier, and to the church in thy houſe. And here, after this ſalutation, follow the words, All the brethren greet you.

It rather ſeems to ſignify, as all the Greek ſcholiaſts and Grotius ſay, a family conſiſting wholly of Chriſtian converts, as was the jailor's houſe, Acts 16. 31. 32. and that of Criſpus the chief ruler of the ſynagogue at Corinth, Acts 18. 8.; for when it was otherwiſe, and the family was not entirely converted, the apoſtle alters his ſtyle, and ſaith only, Salute them which are of Ariſtobulus's houſehold, and of the houſehold of Narciſſus in the Lord, Rom. 16. 10. 11. Salute Aſyncritus, Phlegon, &c. and the brethren that are with them, ver. 14. 15.; The ſaints that are with them; they of the houſe of Cæſar ſalute you, Col. 4. 22.

Ver. 21. [k] Τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ, with my own hand.] He writing by an amanuenſis, Rom. 16. 22. ſtill cloſed his epiſtle with his own hand, as a token that it came from him, 2 Theſſ. 3. 17.

Ver. 22. [l] Ἀνάθεμα Μάραν-ἀθά.] That Maran-atha is a Syriac word, and ſignifies the Lord comes (i), moſt of the ancient interpreters inform us. Buxtorf gives us the full ſenſe of it, ſaying, "It is a Syrian "word, by which they ſignified the utmoſt anathe- "ma, by which a man being excluded from all hu- "man ſociety, and obnoxious to greater puniſh- "ments than man could inflict, was committed to "the ſevereſt judgment of the divine anathema, "and to eternal deſtruction. As if thoſe pious men "of old would have ſaid, Let the Lord come and "ſmite him with eternal perdition, let him be "reſerved to the coming of the Judge of the "whole world, that he may periſh by his everla- "ſting curſe."

CONCERNING THE

Imputation of CHRIST's perfect righteouſneſs, or obedience to the law, to us, for righteouſneſs, or juſtification.

IN WHICH

I. The opinion of the neceſſity of this imputation is delivered, in the words of the Rev. Bp Beveridge.

II. It is proved, that this opinion hath no foundation in the holy ſcripture. And,

III. It is proved to be fully and expreſsly contrary both to ſcripture and to reaſon.

To the READER.

I Do not think it an inſult upon the ſacred character of this great and good man, that I make bold to examine one article of his private thoughts, which, in my ſettled judgment, is of evil conſequence to the ſouls of men. For though he died a Biſhop, yet, ſaith the preface, the following ſheets were written by him in his younger years, upon his firſt entrance into holy orders; and this article is conſidered by one who hath already paſſed the age of man. I could have reflected upon twenty other paſſages which, in my judgment, might have kept theſe thoughts ſtill private, as the good Biſhop in his lifetime did. But what I have ſaid upon this article will, I hope, be ſufficient to ſhew they are not ſo perfect and correct as to be deemed a ſtandard of the truth of doctrines, though his pious reſolutions are very proper to produce in us that holineſs of life which will hereafter be of more value to us than the moſt refined notions. Though therefore I cannot comply with him in his private thoughts, to imitate him in his pious reſolutions is the deſire of,

Thy friend and ſervant,

SECTION I.

THE imputation of Chriſt's active and perfect obedience to us being, in my judgment, a very falſe and pernicious doctrine, and yet being of late propounded by an eminent and good Biſhop, as a thing abſolutely neceſſary to our juſtification, and to obtain a title to eternal life, I ſhall,

1. Lay down this doctrine in the Biſhop's own words.

2. I ſhall endeavour to ſhew that it hath no foundation in the holy ſcripture; and that the good Biſhop hath produced nothing either from ſcripture, or from reaſon, which is ſufficient to confirm it. And,

3. That it is fully and directly contrary to ſcripture, and to reaſon.

And, 1. The Biſhop, in the 8th article concerning his private thoughts of religion, delivers this doctrine in theſe words, p. 89. "He (viz. the Son "of God) being in and of himſelf perfectly co-"equal, co-eſſential, and co-eternal with the Fa-"ther, was in no ſort bound to do more than "the Father himſelf did, and ſo whatſoever he "ſhould do, which the Father did not, might juſtly "be

" be accounted a work of supererogation, N. B. " which, without any violation of divine justice, " might be set on the account of some other per- " sons, even of such as he pleased to do it for. " And hereupon, out of mercy and compassion to " fallen man, he covenanted with his Father, that " if it pleased his Majesty to accept it, he would " take upon him the suffering those punishments " which were due from him to man, and the per- " formance of those duties which were due from " man to him; N. B. so that whatsoever he should " thus humble himself to do, or suffer, should whol- " ly be on the account of man; himself being not " any wise bound to do, or suffer more in time " than he had from eternity.

" This motion the Father, out of the riches of " his grace and mercy, was pleased to consent unto; " and hereupon the Son assuming our nature into " his Deity, N. B. becomes subject and obedient " both to the moral and ceremonial laws of his Fa- " ther, and at last to death itself, even the death of " the cross; in the one he paid an active, in the " other a passive obedience, and so did not only ful- " fil the will of his Father, in obeying what he " had commanded, but satisfied his justice in suffer- " ing the punishment due to us for the transgressing " of it. His active obedience, as it was infinitely " pure and perfect, did, without doubt, infinitely " transcend all the obedience of the sons of men, " even of Adam too in his primitive state, p. 88. for " the obedience of Adam, make the best of it, was " but the obedience of a finite creature, whereas " the obedience of Christ was the obedience of one " who was infinite God as well as man. By which " means the laws of God had higher obedience per- " formed to them than themselves in their primi- " tive institution required; for being made only to " finite creatures, they would command no more " than the obedience of finite creatures; whereas " the obedience of Christ was the obedience of one " who was the infinite Creator as well as a finite " creature.

" Now, this obedience being more than Christ " was bound to, and only performed on the account " of those whose nature he had assumed, as we by " faith lay hold upon it; so God, through grace, " N. B. imputes it to us as if it had been perform- " ed by us in our own persons. And hence it is, " that as in one place Christ is said to be made sin " for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21. so in another place he is " said to be made our righteousness, 1 Cor. 1. 30. " and in the forecited place, 2 Cor. 5. 21. as he is " said to be made sin for us, so are we said to be " made righteousness in him; but what righteous- " ness? our own? Now the righteousness of God " radically his, but imputatively ours; and this is " the only way whereby we are said to be made " the righteousness of God, even by the righteous- " ness of Christ being made ours, by which we are " accounted and reputed as righteous before God. " These things considered, I very much wonder how " any man can presume to exclude the active obe- " dience of Christ from our justification before God, " as if what Christ did in the flesh was only of duty, " not at all of merit, or as if it was for himself, and " not for us; especially when I consider that suffer- " ing the penalty is not what the law primarily re- " quired, for the law of God requires perfect obedi- " ence, the penalty being only threatened to, not " properly required of the breakers of it; for let " a man suffer the penalty of the law in never so " high a manner, he is not therefore accounted obe- " dient to it, his punishment speaks not his inno- " cence, but rather his transgression of the law. " Hence it is that I cannot look upon Christ as ha- " ving made full satisfaction to God's justice for me, " unless he had performed the obedience I owe to " God's laws, as well as borne the punishment that is " due for my sins: for though he should have borne " my sins, I cannot see how that could denominate " me righteous or obedient to the law, so as to in- " title me to eternal life, according to the tenor of " the old law, p. 89. Do this and live; N. B. which " old covenant is not disannulled or abrogated by " the covenant of grace, but rather established, " Rom. 3. 31. especially as to the obedience it re- " quires of us in order to the life it promiseth, o- " therwise the laws of God would be mutable, N. B. " and so come short of the laws of the very Medes " and Persians which altered not. Obedience there- " fore is as strictly required under the New, as it " was under the Old Testament, but with this dif- " ference, there obedience was required in our own " persons as absolutely necessary, here obedience " in our surety is accepted as completely sufficient: " but now if we have no such obedience in our " surety (as we cannot have if he did not live, as " well as die for us) let any man tell me what title " he hath, or can have to eternal life? I suppose " he will tell me, he hath none in himself, because " he hath not performed perfect obedience to the " law, N. B. and I tell him, he hath none in Christ, " unless Christ hath performed that obedience for " him, which none can say he did, who doth not " believe his active as well as his passive obedience " to be wholly upon our account." Now, these words contain these several propositions.

1st, " That the Son of God covenanted with his " Father, that he would take upon him that obedi- " ence which was due from man to him, p. 86. so " that whatever he should do, should be on the ac- " count of man, and that to this motion the Fa-

" ther, of his rich grace and mercy, was pleaſed to " conſent.

2*dly*, " That he, in purſuance of this covenant, " became obedient and ſubject both to the moral " and ceremonial laws of his Father, and ſo, by " his active obedience to thoſe laws, fulfilled the " will of his Father, in obeying what he had com- " manded.

3*dly*, p. 86. 87. " That this obedience of Chriſt " was perfect, and did infinitely tranſcend all the " obedience of the ſons of men, even of Adam in " his primitive ſtate; and ſo Chriſt performed higher " obedience to the laws of God than was required " of man in the primitive inſtitution.

4*thly*, " That this obedience being more than " Chriſt was bound to, and being only perform- " ed on the account of thoſe whoſe nature he had " aſſumed, p. 87. it is by virtue of our faith im- " puted to us, as if it had been performed by us in " our own perſons.

5*thly*, " That we are to be intitled to eternal " life according to the tenor of the old law, Lev. " 8. 15. that old covenant being not diſannulled, " p. 89. and abrogated by the covenant of grace, " but rather eſtabliſhed, Rom. 3. 31. eſpecially as " to the obedience it requires from us in order to " the life it promiſeth. And,

" 6*thly*, ibid. " That therefore obedience is as " ſtrictly required under the New, as it was under " the Old Teſtament, but with this difference, there " obedience in our own perſons was required as abſo- " lutely neceſſary, here obedience in our ſurety is " accepted as completely ſufficient.

7*thly*, " That no man hath, or can have a title " to eternal life, unleſs Chriſt hath paid perfect obe- " dience to the law for him, and ſo Chriſt could not " have made full ſatisfaction to God's juſtice for us, " unleſs he had performed the obedience due to " God's laws, as well as borne the puniſhment due " to our ſins.

8*thly*, " That therefore the only way whereby we " are ſaid to be made righteous with the righteouſ- " neſs of God, is by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt " being made ours, by which we are reputed and " accounted righteous before God."

Having thus given you the ſtate of the queſtion in the Biſhop's own words, I ſhall proceed briefly to conſider what he hath laid down as the foundation of this doctrine, and then to make ſome brief reflec- tions upon theſe ſeveral propoſitions.

Now, the foundation of this doctrine is laid down in theſe words: " He (i. e. the Son of God) being " co-equal, co-eternal, and co-eſſential with the Fa- " ther, (and ſo depending not upon him either for his " exiſtence or actions, p. 83.), was in no ſort bound " to do more than the Father himſelf did, and ſo " whatſoever he ſhould do, which the Father did " not, might juſtly be accounted as a work of ſu- " pererogation, which, without any violation of di- " vine juſtice, might be ſet upon the account of " ſome other perſons, even of ſuch as he pleaſed to " do it for." Now, this is ſuch a ſcheme of new divinity as cannot eaſily be matched.

For, 1. Here is a God co-equal and co-eſſential with the Father, and who depends not on him either for his exiſtence or his actions, and therefore not God of God, but plainly another God, exiſting and acting independently on the Father; and ſo the Father cannot be, as ſaith Dr Bull (k), all the fathers with- out fear pronounced him, principium, cauſa, ἀρχὴ, αἰτία, auctor Filii, et αἴτιον τῦ ὄντος.

2. We have this God independent in exiſtence (which is the ſame with eſſence) and actions on the Father bound to do ſo much as the Father. Now, all obligation ariſing from a law to which the perſon bound is ſubject, by whoſe law muſt this co-equal perſon be bound to do ſo much?

3. This independent God is ſaid to ſupererogate, by doing more than he was bound to do. Now, ſu- pererogation ſuppoſes the perſon ſupererogating un- der a command, and exceeding the virtuous action commanded; but how can he who is independent on any, both as to exiſtence and actions, be ſubject to the commands of another? Moreover, ſeeing the Father was not bound to create the world, or ſend his Son to be the Saviour of it, or to do any other thing which it was not neceſſary from the perfection of his nature to perform, why muſt not he in all theſe ac- tions ſupererogate as well as his co-equal, indepen- dent Son?

2*dly*, That which merits from God muſt be ſome- thing from which he receives ſome benefit or advan- tage; but the Father is incapable of receiving any advantage from this ſuppoſed ſupererogation of his Son. And,

3*dly*, That which merits for another muſt oblige the perſon of whom he merits, in juſtice to accept his action for another; now God the Father cannot be obliged to accept this action of his Son for us, becauſe it was not done by us; and ſo if he doth ac- cept it as if it had been done by us, this muſt be perfectly of his free grace, or, as the Biſhop ſaith, p. 86. out of the riches of his grace and mercy. For the obedience of man to the laws of God was cer- tainly a perſonal due, it being that which God re- quired of him in perſon, and therefore the obedience of another to the law given to him, and not to ano- ther, can do nothing to acquit him from the performance of what God personally required of him, and not of another, but by a pure act of grace. Nor can the action of another be reckoned as done by him, but by a false imputation; for such must that be which imputes that as done by me, which indeed was not done by me, but by another. As therefore, to speak exactly, God doth not impute Christ's passive obedience to us, or account that we have suffered, because he did, but only doth exempt us from suffering, because he hath suffered in our stead; so neither can he impute the obedience of another to us, or account that we have obeyed, because another hath done it upon our account, but only exempt us from obedience in person upon that account.

Lastly, Here is a rich fund for the Pope's treasury of meritorious supererogating actions; that which the Papists have imagined to fill up this treasury, being only the merits of finite men; whereas, saith the good Bishop, p. 87. the obedience of Christ was the obedience of one that was infinite God as well as man, the obedience of one who was the infinite Creator as well as a finite creature. Yea, if any thing could be meritorious in respect to God, this doctrine would render every good action of a believer meritorious, or an act of supererogation; for if, as the Bishop saith, p. 89. under the new covenant obedience in our surety is accepted as completely sufficient, and Christ hath performed that obedience for us by which we have a title to life eternal, all believers who have by faith laid hold on Christ, and so have his obedience imputed to them as if performed by them in person, must be entirely exempted from any obligation to perform personal obedience, and so all the obedience they perform must be so many acts of supererogation.

To proceed now to the consideration of the propositions plainly collected from his words; of which the first is this;

"That Christ covenanted with the Father that he "would take upon him the obedience which was due "from man to him; so that whatever he should do "should wholly be on the account of man, and "that to this motion the Father was pleased to "consent."

This proposition is founded on a chimerical covenant betwixt God the Father and the Son, of which there is not the least item in the holy scripture; and so the whole scheme of this doctrine, being built upon this vain imagination, must be also vain.

2. This covenant is also, both in the nature of the thing impossible, and in the immediate consequences of it irreligious. It is in the nature of the thing impossible, that Christ should covenant to perform the obedience due from man to God's law, for him, or in his stead, and that God the Father should accept and repute what he thus did for him, as if performed by man personally, because the moral law, the law ingraven on the heart of man, is indispensable, it being absolutely necessary that man should be obliged, personally, to obey the moral law, and that God should require him in person so to do; and so no promise of another to perform it for him can avail any thing to exempt him from the obligation he was, is, and ever will be under, to perform it personally. This is apparent from those words of Christ, in which he gives us the abridgment of the law and the prophets, viz. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy soul; and thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself (l); from the personal observance of which laws, who ever thought he was, or he could be, exempted by any thing which Christ had done for him? It therefore is profane and irreligious to say, that either the holy Jesus made such a covenant, or that the righteous God ever consented to such a motion, or that the obedience of our surety to the moral law should be accepted in the new covenant, as completely sufficient to give us a title to eternal life; this being, in effect, to say, that Christ, by his obedience to the moral law, hath freed every one that believes in him from his whole duty to God, his neighbour, and himself; and that God the Father hath consented, that all such persons should be free from any obligation, personally to live righteously, soberly, and godly, in this present world; because what hath already been performed by their surety, p. 88. 89. is completely sufficient to denominate them righteous or obedient to the law, so as to intitle them to eternal life; and so they cannot be obliged to a personal performance of those duties in order to that end, though the apostle plainly saith they are, Tit. 2. 12. 13.

2*dly*, When he saith, in the second proposition, that Christ, by his active obedience to God's moral and ceremonial laws, fulfilled the will of his Father, in obeying what he had commanded, doth he mean what the Father had personally commanded him? If so, Christ himself must lie under a personal obligation to fulfil both the moral and the ceremonial law; and so, in doing this, he could do only what he himself was commanded to do, and could not merit for another; and so the only reason why the Bishop wonders at them, who say, that what Christ did in the flesh was only of duty, must be this, because, as he observes, p. 88. that would exclude Christ's active obedience from our justification before God. If he mean what the Father had not commanded him,

but only had required us to obey, then can he not be properly ſaid to have herein obeyed at all; obedience, of neceſſity, importing a relation to a command laid upon him who is obedient, and much leſs could he fulfil that command which was never given to him, and ſo the Father might ſay to him, in the words of the prophet Who hath required this at thy hand (m)? He himſelf declares, he had received a commandment from his Father to lay down his life for his ſheep (n); and in purſuance of it, he became obedient to the death, even the death of the croſs (o). And he who ſaith Chriſt alſo did perform his active obedience on our account, and by that fulfilled the will of his Father, in obeying what he had commanded for us, muſt produce a like command of the Father requiring him thus to obey for us; which is, 1ſt, needleſs, we being ſtill of neceſſity under as ſtrong an obligation of perſonal obedience to the moral law, as a rule of duty, as we were before Chriſt performed that obedience in his human nature. 2dly, It alſo neceſſarily infers a perſonal exemption of all believers from any obligation to obey the moral law, the pernicious conſequences of which doctrine have been already ſhewn. 3dly, It is contrary to the words of the Biſhop himſelf; for he affirms, p. 89. that under the Old Teſtament obedience was required in our own perſons, as abſolutely neceſſary; and that this old covenant was not diſannulled, but rather eſtabliſhed by the covenant of grace, eſpecially as to the obedience it requires in order to the life it promiſeth. The obedience then required under the old law, as abſolutely neceſſary, in order to the life it promiſeth, being obedience to be performed in our own perſons, to uſe the Biſhop's words, p. 88. who can ſee how the obedience of Chriſt, that is, of another in our ſtead, could denominate us righteous, or obedient to the law, ſo as to intitle us to eternal life, according to the tenor of the old law, Do this in your own perſons and live? In a word, we neither are nor can be exempted from obedience to the moral law as a rule of duty, but we are exempted from obedience to it as a means of juſtification; or, we are not exempted from an obligation to perform the righteouſneſs of the law, but only from the curſe of the law pronounced againſt them who continue not in all things written in the book of the law to do them (p). And from this curſe we are delivered, ſaith the apoſtle, not by Chriſt's active and perfect obedience to the law imputed to us, but by his ſufferings on the croſs for us.

3dly, Of the third propoſition, That the obedience of Chriſt did infinitely tranſcend all the obedience of the ſons of men, as being the obedience of an infinite God, I ſhall only obſerve at preſent, that though the obedience of an infinite God, and infinite Creator, be abſurd expreſſions, (as importing a ſubjection of this infinite God and Creator to the laws of ſome ſuperior, or paying infinite obedience to his infinite ſelf), yet was it neceſſary to be aſſerted, that Chriſt's active obedience might ſuffice, by reaſon of this ſuppoſed infinite excellency, to be imputed to all men; ſince otherwiſe it being only that which every individual man was perſonally obliged to perform, it could only have anſwered the obedience required of one ſingle perſon.

4thly, To the fourth propoſition, That the obedience of Chriſt being more than he was bound to, it is by virtue of our faith imputed to us, as if it had been performed by us in our own perſons: I anſwer,

1. That it being certain, that the obedience which God requires by law from us muſt be perſonal, (for where there is no law requiring perſonal obedience, there can be no perſonal tranſgreſſion), hence it is evident, that there can be no performance of perſonal obedience by a ſurety, and therefore no true imputation of his obedience to us, but only an exemption from any obligation to that obedience which hath been performed for us by our ſurety.

2. When he ſaith, that this obedience was more than Chriſt was bound to do, if he means this of the obedience of the divine nature; this, if it be not that which was condemned in the Arian hereſy, is a great abſurdity in the ſuppoſition, that he who is abſolutely ſupreme ſhould be obedient, i. e. ſubject to the law of a ſuperior; if of Chriſt's human nature, in that he was certainly obliged to fulfil all righteouſneſs, i. e. all things required of all men by the moral law; this alſo was abſolutely neceſſary to the diſcharge of his prieſtly office, viz. that he ſhould be perfectly righteous, and without ſin in his own perſon; for ſuch an high prieſt became us as was holy, ὅσιος, free from evil, undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners, who had no need to offer firſt for his own ſins (q), ſince otherwiſe he muſt have died not for our ſins, but his own ſins: now, the perſonal righteouſneſs which was abſolutely neceſſary to render him a fit high prieſt to offer a true expiatory ſacrifice for our ſins, could not be more than he was bound to do, as our high prieſt.

5thly, That his fifth propoſition, which affirms, that we are intitled to eternal life by the tenor of the old law, Do this and live, &c. is a flat contradiction to the doctrine of St Paul in his epiſtles to the Romans, to the Galatians, and to the Hebrews, will be hereafter fully manifeſted.

6thly, The difference betwixt the juſtification and obedience required by the old and the new covenant, doth not conſiſt, as the Biſhop ſaith it is, in this, that in the first, obedience in our own persons was required as absolutely necessary; in the second, obedience in our Surety is accepted as completely sufficient: but in this, that whereas the old law required perfect obedience, in order to our justification, allowing no pardon for sins committed, but leaving all under the curse who continued not in all things written in the law to do them, Gal. 3. 10. The new covenant requires only faith in the blood of Christ, for the remission of our past sins, as will be fully proved hereafter. And though the new covenant doth not exempt us from the moral law as a rule of duty, it being a contradiction to say, that God permits us to omit our duty, or transgress his law, (since that permission would render duty no duty, and transgression no transgression), yet doth it accept of sincere obedience, pardoning the sins of ignorance and infirmity which still cleave to our duties in this imperfect state, not for the active, but passive obedience of the blessed Jesus, according to these words of St John, If ye walk in the light, as God is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ N. B. cleanseth you from all sin (r). And again, If we sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins (s).

7thly, The seventh proposition will be proved false in every branch of it in the third section.

8thly, The eighth to be a gross mistake of the true sense of the apostle's words, 2 Cor. 5. 21. section the second.

SECTION II.

HAving, in the foregoing section, sufficiently declared what is the doctrine I reject, viz. that which asserts that Christ's active and perfect obedience must be imputed to us to eternal life, or to justification; I proceed,

2*dly*, To show, that this doctrine hath not the least foundation in the holy scriptures. Now this I shall make evident by a particular consideration of the texts of scripture produced by the good Bishop, and other patrons of this doctrine in favour of it. And,

1. Whereas the Bishop saith, p. 87. that as Christ is said to be made sin for us, so are we said to be made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. 5. 21. and thence concludes, that the only way whereby we are said to be made the righteousness of God is by the righteousness of Christ being made ours, by which we are accounted and reputed as righteous before God: I am sorry to find he was so unacquainted with the true import of either of these phrases, or so regardless of the context. For,

1*st*, This phrase, The righteousness of God, doth never signify the active obedience, or righteousness by Christ, performed unto the law, but always hath relation to the righteousness of faith, in opposition to the law, or that righteousness which is procured by faith in the blood of Christ, and accepted by God, to our justification; thus, Rom. 1. 17. ἡ δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ ἐκ πίστεως, the righteousness of God through faith, is revealed in the gospel, to beget faith in us, as it is written, The just shall live by faith: now, these very words the apostle useth to prove, That no man is justified by obedience to the law, before God; for, saith the scripture, The just shall live by faith; but the law is not of faith; but, in opposition to it, saith, Lev. 18. 5. The man that doth these things shall live by them; which are the very words the Bishop useth to prove against St Paul, That we must be denominated righteous, or obedient to the law, so as to have a title to eternal life, according to the tenor of the old law, p. 88. 89. Do this and live, Lev. 18. 5. So again, chap. 3. 21. ἡ δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, The righteousness of God, without the law, is manifested, being testified by the law and the prophets, to wit, the righteousness of God, communicated to all believers, by faith in Christ's blood, ver. 22.; we being justified freely by the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, ver. 23. in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the remission of sins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. God having set him forth for a propitiation, through faith in his blood; p. 11. so evident is it that the righteousness of God, twice mentioned, is that justification God vouchsafes to us, through faith in Christ's blood, shed for the remission of our sins. Again, Rom. 10. 3. The Jews not knowing τὴν δικαιοσύνην τοῦ Θεοῦ, the righteousness of God, but seeking to establish their own righteousness, which was by the works of the law, have not submitted τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, to the righteousness of God, which is the righteousness to be obtained by faith in Christ. Now, this righteousness of the law, which the Jews seeking after, submitted not to the righteousness of God, is, saith the apostle, that which Moses mentions, Lev. 18. 5. which saith, The man that doth these things shall live by them; so grossly doth the Bishop mistake, in saying, p. 89. that this very righteousness was established by the covenant of grace. What is the righteousness of faith the apostles preached in opposition to it? even a belief that God hath raised Christ from the dead, Rom. 10. 9. he dying for our sins, and rising again for our justification, chap. 4. 25. Can then any thing be more clear from the apostle's words, than that the righteousness of God through faith

ſtands in direct oppoſition to the righteouſneſs of the law, which ſaith, Do this and live, and therefore cannot conſiſt in Chriſt's perfect obedience to the law imputed to us, as our righteouſneſs. And, laſtly, Philip. 3. 9. ἡ ἐκ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνη, the righteouſneſs of God through faith in Jeſus Chriſt ſtands directly oppoſite to the righteouſneſs of the law, or to that righteouſneſs which the Jews ſought for, by obedience to the law.

2*dly*, The phraſe, He was made ſin for us, is only capable of theſe two ſenſes: 1. He was made guilty of our ſins by imputation, which, I fear, is the Biſhop's ſenſe; partly, becauſe the oppoſite imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to us, as if perſonally performed by us, is by him ſaid to be meant by our being made the righteouſneſs of God in him; partly, becauſe he plainly ſeems to own it in theſe words, p. 72. His righteouſneſs being as really by faith imputed to me, as my ſins were laid upon him; and then, as his righteouſneſs is imputed to me, as if it had been perſonally performed by me; ſo my ſins muſt be imputed to him, as if they had been performed by him, and ſo he muſt be, by God's own imputation, guilty of doing murther, idolatry, adultery, and all the other ſins committed by mankind; which blaſphemy will be more fully rebuked in the following ſection; or, 2*dly*, He was made ἁμαρτία, a ſin-offering, or expiatory ſacrifice for us, which is the frequent ſenſe of the word ἁμαρτία in the Levitical law, concerning ſacrifices; and is here put upon the words, by all the commentators I have ſeen. Now, this interpretation of the phraſe, relating to the death of Chriſt, as an expiatory ſacrifice, the proper and immediate effect of it, cannot be the imputation of the obedience of Chriſt's life unto us, but our freedom from condemnation, on the account of ſin, in which our juſtification is ſtill placed by the apoſtle; for ſuch an effect muſt, of neceſſity, be ſignified by theſe words, We are made the righteouſneſs of God in him, which ſuits with the cauſe of it, viz. the death of Chriſt as an expiatory ſacrifice for the remiſſion of ſin; now, the proper and direct effect of ſuch a ſacrifice, is deliverance from the guilt and punihment of ſin, and not the imputation of Chriſt's active obedience unto men: for Chriſt offered this expiatory ſacrifice, not that men might be made righteous by the righteouſneſs of his life, but that ſinners might be juſtified by his blood, ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, and reconciled to God by the death of his Son, Rom. 5. 9. 10. This therefore muſt be the true import of our being made the righteouſneſs of God in him. And,

3*dly*, This is farther evident from the context; for God was in Chriſt, ſaith the apoſtle, reconciling the world unto himſelf: How hath Chriſt done this? He hath, ſaith the apoſtle, reconciled us to God in the body of his fleſh by death, Col. 1. 21. He adds, That God was thus reconciling the world to himſelf, by not imputing to them their treſpaſſes: Why did he not impute them? Becauſe Chriſt, by his death, had made an expiatory ſacrifice for the remiſſion of them: for he ſaith, He made him a ſacrifice for ſin, who knew no ſin; whence it muſt follow, that we are made the righteouſneſs of God in him, by the reconciliation purchaſed for us by his death, and the non-imputation of ſin to us, as the conſequent of that death.

And it may farther be obſerved, That every branch of this expoſition is confirmed, and the ſenſe impoſed on theſe words by the Biſhop, is plainly confuted by the deſcants of the ancient commentators on this place. For,

1*ſt*, They plainly ſay, that by the word ἁμαρτίαν ſin (t), we are to underſtand τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν θῦμα, a ſacrifice for ſin; non immerito peccatum factus dicitur, quia et hoſtia in lege quæ pro peccatis offerebatur, peccatum nuncupabatur, "the ſacrifice offered in the "law for ſin, being ſo called (u)."

2*dly*, They add, that to be made the righteouſneſs of God in Chriſt, is διὰ συγχωρήσεως δικαιοῦσθαι δι' αὐτοῦ, to be juſtified by a gracious pardon through him (x): that this is the righteouſneſs of God, ὅταν τις χάριτι δικαιωθῇ ὅθεν πᾶσα ἁμαρτία ἀφάνισται, when a man is ſo juſtified by grace, that all his ſin is made to vaniſh away (y).

3*dly*, They add, that we are then righteous with the righteouſneſs of God, when we are juſtified, μὴ ἐξ ἔργων νόμου, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, not by the works of the law, but by the grace of God.

Ἐκείνη γὰρ ἡ περὶ ἔργα νόμου καὶ ἔργων δικαιοσύνη, αὕτη δὲ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνη, the firſt, ſaith Chryſoſtom, is juſtification by the law; this, that of God. I conclude then in the words of Gataker againſt Gomarus, producing this very text for the ſame purpoſe as the Biſhop doth, Quid fere clarius contra ſe producere poterat quam illud, 2 Cor. 5. 21.?

The ſecond text produced by the Biſhop, contains theſe words, Of him are you in Chriſt Jeſus, who is made unto us of God, wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption.

Anſ. From theſe words it is evident, that Chriſt is in no other ſenſe ſaid to be made unto us righteouſneſs, than he is ſaid to be made to us, wiſdom, ſanctification, and redemption. Hence therefore, I retort the argument thus: Chriſt is not here ſaid to be made unto us of God, wiſdom, ſanctification, and redemption, by his wiſdom, ſanctification, and redemption imputed to us; therefore he is not here

ſaid to be made our righteouſneſs by his righteouſneſs, or active obedience imputed to us. The conſequence is evident; for they who hence ſay, that Chriſt is made our righteouſneſs by his righteouſneſs imputed to us, have the ſame reaſon to ſay from this text, that he is made our wiſdom by his wiſdom, and our ſanctification by his holineſs, and our redemption by his redemption imputed to us. The antecedent is alſo evident; for,

1*ſt*, It is evidently abſurd to ſay, we are made wiſe by the ſame wiſdom with which Chriſt was imputed to us.

And, 2*dly*, If we are made ſanctification by the holineſs of Chriſt imputed to us, there can be no neceſſity, that we ourſelves ſhould have our fruit unto holineſs, that the end may be eternal life, Rom. 6. 22.; nor can it be true, that without perſonal ſanctification, no man ſhall ſee the Lord, Heb. 12. 14.; nor could it be neceſſary, that he ſhould give up himſelf to the death for his church, that he might ſanctify her, Eph. 5. 25. 26. 27.; he having done this completely by the holineſs of his life imputed to her.

And, 3*dly*, The redemption here mentioned being diſtinguiſhed from, and following juſtification and ſanctification, it muſt import the redemption of the body from corruption; now, is it not abſurd to ſay, that the redemption of Chriſt's body from corruption is imputed to us? And will it not hence follow, that we are not to expect any perſonal redemption of our own bodies from corruption? It remains then that we ſay, with the ancient commentators (z), that Chriſt is made to us wiſdom, by being αἴτιος τῆς σοφίας, the author of our ſpiritual wiſdom; of our juſtification, τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τὴν ἄφεσιν δωρησάμενος, by procuring for us by his death, that remiſſion of ſins (a), in which conſiſteth our juſtification; our ſanctification, τὸ πνεῦμα χαριζόμενος, by giving us the Spirit of ſanctification; and our redemption, by procuring for us τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως, the redemption of life, or of our bodies from corruption, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, Rom. 8. 21. 23.

3*dly*, Whereas the Biſhop argues, That the old covenant, which ſaith, Do this and live, Lev. 18. 5. is not diſannulled, or abrogated by the covenant of grace, eſpecially as to the obedience it requires from us in order to the life it promiſeth; becauſe the apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 3. 21. Do we then make void the law through faith? nay, we eſtabliſh the law, and becauſe otherwiſe, the laws of God would be mutable: One would wonder how he could fall into ſo plain a contradiction to the expreſs words of the apoſtle, in his plea for juſtification by faith, and not by the works of the law; in his frequent declarations, not only of the freedom of Chriſtians from the yoke of the law; but alſo of the neceſſity of the change of the law; and much more how he could do it from thoſe words, which, conſidered with the context, are a full confutation of his doctrine. For,

1*ſt*, The apoſtle ſaith twice expreſsly, that the righteouſneſs of the law, which he diſputes againſt, and by which no man can be juſtified before God, is that very righteouſneſs, which ſaith, Lev. 18. 5. The man that doth theſe things, ſhall live in and by them. See Rom. 10. 5. Gal. 3. 12.

2*dly*, St Paul having declared, that the law was only given till the promiſed ſeed ſhould come, Gal. 3. 19. and that he being come, we were no longer under the pædagogy of the law; that Chriſtians were dead to the law, through the body of Chriſt, Rom. 7. 4.; that it was evacuated, 2 Cor. 3. 11.; and they were looſed from the law, that being dead wherein they were held, Rom. 7. 6.; that they were redeemed from it by Chriſt, Gal. 4. 5.; and ought no more to be ſubject to the yoke of bondage, or return to thoſe beggarly elements, ver. 9. chap. 5. 1.; that it was only to continue to the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 10.; that the prieſthood being changed, there was a neceſſity of the change of the law, chap. 7. 12.; and that there was a diſannulling of the commandment going before, becauſe of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it, ver. 18.; and that God by ſpeaking of a new covenant, πεπαλαίωκε, had pronounced the firſt old; and that that which decayeth and waxeth old, was ready to vaniſh away, chap. 8. 13.; and laſtly, that there was to be a removal of thoſe things which were ſhaken, i. e. of the law given with the ſhaking of the earth, chap. 12. 25. 26. 27.; with many things of a like nature: that, after all this, the Biſhop ſhould ſo poſitively ſay, That the covenant of grace had not diſannulled, but eſtabliſhed this old law, and ſpeak of it as an abſurdity, that thoſe laws of his ſhould be mutable, which he himſelf declared were only to continue till the promiſed ſeed ſhould come, and till the time of reformation, is matter of juſt admiration. And,

3*dly*, This is ſtill the infelicity of the aſſertors of this doctrine, that the texts they produce for it, conſidered with relation to the context, are the fulleſt confutation of it. For the apoſtle is proving from ver. 20. of this chapter, to the end of the 31ſt, that no fleſh can be juſtified by the works of the law, ver. 20.; and that the juſtification, which is of God, is manifeſted to be by faith, without the works of the law; and he concludes the argument of this chapter thus, λογιζόμεθα οὖν, we reckon therefore, from the premiſſes, that a man is juſtified by faith, without the works of the law, ver. 28. Now, can he who is only juſtified by the works of the law accounted as if performed by himſelf, be juſtified by faith alone,

without the works of the law? The ancient commentators here say,

1*st*, That the apostle, by the word ἱστῶμεν, we establish, or make the law to stand (b), shews it to be, κειμένον, σαλευόμενον, καθαιρούμενον, fallen, shaken, and dissolved; and that non evacuat legem cum illam cessare debere jam docet (c); and that "he doth not "make void the law, by teaching that it must now "cease."

2*dly*, They give two senses of these words: 1*st*, That he established the law, by establishing the work of the law, which was, δίκαιον ποιῆσαι τὸν ἄνθρωπον, to make man righteous; for the law being not able to do this through the infirmity of the flesh, Rom. 8. 3. subjecting all men to sin, faith hath performed it, ὁμοῦ γὰρ τις ἐπίστευσε καὶ ἐδικαιώθη; for as soon as a man believes, he is justified. So Chrysostom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact.

2*dly*, We establish the law by faith, saith Theodoret, because the law and the prophets have given in their testimony to the justification by faith, Rom. 3. 21. 22.; the law by giving us the knowledge of sin, ver. 20.; the prophets, by saying, Hab. 2. 4. The just shall live by faith; and so becoming our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, who is the end of the law εἰς δικαιοσύνην, for justification, Rom. 10. 4. Gal. 4. 24.; διχόμενοι τοίνυν τὴν πίστιν βεβαιοῦμεν τὸν νόμον, so that by embracing faith, we establish the law, saith Theodoret. And this I conceive to be the truest interpretation of the text.

4*thly*, The Bishop argues from the title of surety given to Christ, Heb. 7. 22. "For," saith he, p. 90. "a surety is bound to pay our debt, in case we are "insolvent. Now, there are two things we owe to "God, 1. Obedience to his laws, as he is our Creator and Governor: and, 2. and by consequence, "the punishment that is annexed to the breach of "those laws, of which we are guilty. Now, though "Christ should pay the latter part of our debt for us, "by bearing the punishment that is due unto us; "yet, if he did not pay the former, and principal "part of it too, i. e. perform the obedience which "we owe to God, he would not fully have performed the office of suretyship, which he undertook for "us, and so would be but an half Mediator, and half "Saviour." Now, here it may deserve to be observed,

1*st*, That the Bishop cites this passage to prove our obligation to perform obedience to the old law, from a chapter which expressly teacheth, that the priesthood being changed, there was a necessity of the change of the law, ver. 12.; and that there was a disannulling of the commandment, by reason of the weakness and unprofitableness of it, ver. 18.; and that the law made nothing perfect, ver. 19.

2*dly*, This passage is produced to prove, that Christ was our surety for the performance of the old covenant; whereas the text saith expressly, he was the surety of a better covenant, which introduced a better hope, ver. 19.; and was established upon better promises, chap. 8. 6.; even a new covenant opposed to the old, as to that which was ready to vanish away; and which, through his death, procured the remission of sins, committed under the old covenant, chap. 9. 15.

3*dly*, Ἔγγυος, a sponsor, say the civilians, is only one that promiseth for another, and so he is obliged to do no more for him than he promised: and I have shewed already, that neither could Christ promise to yield perfect obedience to the law for us, nor could the Father consent that we should be accounted as obedient to it upon such a promise. And, lastly, his fancy, that we can stand bound to yield perfect obedience to the law, so as never to offend; and yet to undergo the punishment due to all our transgressions; and that without doing both, no satisfaction can be made to justice, and no title to eternal life can be procured, will be proved false in the ensuing section; at present, therefore, I shall only add, that it seems to me as ridiculous, as to say, a thief cannot satisfy the law by being hanged, unless he also did yield perfect obedience to the law, which faith, Thou shalt not steal.

This is all that the Bishop hath produced to confirm this doctrine; others produce some other arguments from scripture, which shall here briefly be considered, as v. g.

1. That the apostle teacheth, That as by one man's (Adam's) disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous (d); but men were made sinners by the disobedience of Adam imputed to them; therefore by the active obedience, or righteousness of Christ imputed to us, we must be made righteous.

Ans. This is the only text of scripture which speaks of the obedience of Christ, and of our being justified, or made righteous by it, and so hath any true appearance of an argument; and yet that it is only an appearance, is evident from this one consideration, that the apostle, in that whole chapter, speaketh not one word of the antecedent obedience of Christ's life, but only of his passive obedience, i. e. his obedience to the death.

For the apostle having said, chap. 4. 24. That Christ was delivered to death for our sins, and raised again for our justification; he adds, chap. 5. 1. That being justified by this faith in Christ's death, we have peace with God; he dying for sinners, and for the ungodly, ver. 6. 8.; and we being justified by his blood, (b) Chrys. Oecum. Theoph. (c) Hilar. Diac. (d) Rom. 5. 19.

and reconciled to God by his death, ver. 9. 10.; and then follows this compariſon, with a διὰ τοῦτο, intimating, that it was made upon the account of our Lord's ſalutary paſſion, and ran thus: That as death, the puniſhment of ſin, paſſed upon all men, by reaſon of one ſin of one man; ſo through one righteouſneſs of one Jeſus Chriſt, the free gift came upon all men to juſtification of life, ver. 18.; and this juſtification is, ſaith the apoſtle, ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων, from many tranſgreſſions, and what can juſtification from offences ſignify, but freedom from the condemnation due unto us for them? now, that can never be obtained for ſinners by Chriſt's active obedience, for could we, after many offences committed, perform as perfect obedience as Chriſt did, we only could thereby perform our duty for the future, but could do nothing to procure the pardon of our paſt offences. 3*dly*, The diſobedience by which many were made ſinners, is plainly declared by the apoſtle to be one ſingle act of diſobedience in Adam, and therefore the obedience oppoſed to it cannot, in reaſon, be the active obedience of Chriſt's whole life, but that obedience to the death which the apoſtle mentions, Philip. 2. 8.; now, by this paſſive obedience, we cannot be made formally righteous, but only metonymically, by being made partakers of that freedom from the guilt and puniſhment of ſin, and of that reconciliation which Chriſt hath purchaſed by his meritorious death and paſſion.

2*dly*, I anſwer, That it was not by Adam's active diſobedience imputed to us, that death or condemnation to it paſſed upon all men, but by the puniſhment he ſuffered for that diſobedience, as will be fully proved hereafter; for he being by that diſobedience made mortal and obnoxious to death, γεγόναμεν ἐξ ἐκείνου πάντες θνητοί, all that were begotten of him became mortal, ſay all the Greek commentators here; and ſo by the obedience of Chriſt to the death in their ſtead, who were thus obnoxious to death, or by his ſuffering that death which was the puniſhment of ſin, we became juſtified, i. e. exempted from that puniſhment.

Object. 2. 2*dly*, Whereas it is ſaid, Rom. 8. 3. 4. That Chriſt by being made ſin for us, i. e. a ſacrifice for ſin, condemned ſin in the fleſh, that the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, &c. Hence ſome conclude, that Chriſt's active obedience muſt be imputed to us; for, ſay they, the righteouſneſs of the law can in no ſenſe be ſaid to be fulfilled in, or by us, but only by Chriſt's perfect obedience to the law imputed to us.

Anſ. The text by no means will admit of this interpretation. For,

1*ſt*, The righteouſneſs here mentioned is not to be fulfilled ἐν Χριστῷ, in or by Chriſt, but ἐν ἡμῖν, by us perſonally.

2*dly*, It is not to be fulfilled by the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to us, but by our walking in the Spirit, for to be ſpiritually minded is life, ver. 6.; and if through the Spirit we do mortify the deeds of the fleſh, we ſhall live, ver. 13.; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God, ver. 14.; and being ſons are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, and to be glorified with him, ver. 17. Whence it is exceeding evident, that the righteouſneſs here mentioned is to be fulfilled not by the imputation of the righteouſneſs of another to us, but by our own obedience performed by the aſſiſtance of God's Holy Spirit.

SECTION III.

I Hope I have returned a ſufficient anſwer to the texts alledged to prove the neceſſity of the imputation of Chriſt's active and perfect obedience to the law to us for righteouſneſs.

It remains now that I ſhould propound thoſe arguments, which, in my judgment, ſeem fully to confute that doctrine, and they are theſe.

Arg. 1. 1*ſt*, This doctrine is contrary to all thoſe ſcriptures which expreſsly ſay, That faith is imputed to us for righteouſneſs, and which prove this from the example of Abraham the father of the faithful: for they inform us, that Abraham believed in God, and it (i. e. this faith of his) was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 3.; and ver. 5. that to him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifies the ungodly (that is, in God the Father, for it is God that juſtifieth, Rom. 8. 33.), his faith is imputed to him for juſtification; and, ver. 9. We ſay then that faith was imputed to Abraham εἰς δικαιοσύνην, for juſtification; and, ver. 20. 22. He was ſtrong in faith giving glory to God; wherefore it (i. e. this faith) was imputed to him for juſtification. Whence the apoſtle makes this general concluſion, That what the ſcripture ſaith of Abraham, viz. that his faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, was not written for his ſake alone, but for us alſo to whom it (that is, the like faith) ſhall be imputed (for righteouſneſs), if we believe on him who raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, (that is, on God the Father.) In the 3d chapter of the epiſtle to the Galatians, he repeats the ſame example of the faith of Abraham, ſaying, Abraham believed in God, and it (i. e. his faith in God) was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, ver. 6.; and thence he makes this inference, Know therefore that they who are (the children) of faith, are the ſons of Abraham; and, ver. 9. that they who are of faith are bleſſed with faithful Abraham; and, ver. 24. he adds, that the law was our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, that we might might be juſtified by faith, the ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the Gentiles through faith. Now hence,

1*ſt*, It is evident, that the doctrine of juſtification by the very act of faith is expreſsly and frequently delivered in the holy ſcriptures; whereas it hath been proved already, that the doctrine of the imputation of Chriſt's active righteouſneſs to us for juſtification, hath no ground in ſcripture.

2*dly*, What interpretation of the apoſtle's words can be more uncouth and unſound than this, Faith is imputed to us for righteouſneſs, i. e. it is not faith, but Chriſt's active righteouſneſs, which is imputed to us for righteouſneſs? Is not this evidently to convert the apoſtle's affirmative into a negative, to deny conſtantly what he as conſtantly aſſerts, and to make him always mean what in relation to juſtification he doth never ſay? To him that believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith, ſaith the apoſtle, is imputed; it is not his faith, ſaith this interpretation, but Chriſt's righteouſneſs which is thus imputed. And how then doth God juſtify the ungodly, if he only juſtifies them who have as true a title to Chriſt's perfect obedience as if they had perſonally performed it, and upon that account alone are juſtified? can they be ſtyled the ungodly, who are and muſt be as righteous as Chriſt was, before they can be juſtified?

3*dly*, This interpretation cannot poſſibly agree to the faith of Abraham; for it is not only ſaid, that he believed in God, not in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, but that his faith was in that God who quickens the dead, and calleth the things that are not, as if they were, ver. 17.; that he was ſtrong in faith, being fully perſuaded, that what God had promiſed, he was able to perform. It therefore is evident, that it was faith in God's promiſe, and in his power to perform it, by which Abraham was juſtified. Now, what affinity hath this faith with Chriſt's obedience to the law not yet given, as the apoſtle argues, Gal. 3. 17. though it hath an evident affinity with God's promiſe of juſtifying him that believeth in Jeſus, and who believeth in that God who hath raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, Rom. 4. 24.?

Arg. 2. 2*dly*, This will be farther evident from all thoſe places which ſhew, that our juſtification conſiſts entirely in the remiſſion of ſin; and that to be juſtified, and to be freed from condemnation, or to have the guilt and puniſhment of our ſins remitted, are phraſes of the ſame import. This we may learn,

1. From thoſe arguments by which the apoſtle proves, that Jew and Gentile are to be juſtified by faith without the works of the law, viz. 1. Becauſe both Jew and Gentile lay under ſin, Rom. 3. 9. and ſo both needed to be juſtified by faith, or by an act of grace, pardoning their ſins through faith in Chriſt, ver. 24.; that therefore by the law no fleſh can be juſtified; becauſe by the law is the knowledge of ſin, rendering us obnoxious to condemnation; where then there remains the guilt of ſin, there can be no juſtification; where therefore there is a remiſſion of the guilt of ſin by God, there is juſtification. Again, All have ſinned, ſaith he, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God, therefore abſolution from this ſin muſt be ſufficient to make us obtain this glory of God. We who have thus ſinned are juſtified, ſaith he, freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Chriſt Jeſus, ver. 24. Now, what is this redemption? It is, ſaith the apoſtle twice, remiſſion of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. To the ſame effect, he ſaith, Gal. 3. 21. 22. that juſtification cannot be by the law, becauſe the law cannot give life; and this it cannot do, becauſe the ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, and ſo hath ſhut out that way of being juſtified. Our freedom therefore from the guilt of ſin muſt be ſufficient for our juſtification to life. In his 4th chapter to the Romans he deſcribes that juſtification, in which faith is accounted to us for righteouſneſs, by the non-imputation and forgiveneſs of ſin, and proves this from the words of David, ſaying, Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquity is forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered; bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no ſin, from ver. 4. to ver. 8. Since then the bleſſedneſs of which the apoſtle there diſcourſeth, is that of juſtification of the ungodly by faith; and ſince this bleſſedneſs is ſaid to conſiſt in the remiſſion, the covering, the not imputing his ſin to him, it cannot reaſonably be denied, that the bleſſedneſs of a juſtified perſon is here deſcribed by the bleſſedneſs of a pardoned perſon, as being one and the ſame thing.

2. This will be farther evident from the conſideration of the phraſes the apoſtle uſeth as equivalent to juſtification, and interpretative of it. As,

1*ſt*, Reconciliation to God. That this is the ſame with juſtification, appears by theſe words, Much more being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath by him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life, Rom. 5. 9. 10.; where being juſtified by his blood, and being reconciled by his death, ſeem plainly the ſame thing; now, that reconciliation is effected by the remiſſion of ſins, is evident from theſe words, 2 Cor. 5. 19. God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes to them; and therefore juſtification muſt be ſo obtained.

2*dly*, Juſtification ſtands directly oppoſed to condemnation in theſe words, Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect, τις ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ, who ſhall object a crime againſt them? It is God that juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth them, Rom. 8. 33. 34.?

And again, If the miniſtration of condemnation, i. e. the law which renders us obnoxious to condemnation, was glorious, much more the miniſtration τῆς δικαιοσύνης, of juſtification, exceeds in glory? Now, what is it that mankind is accuſed of, or charged with by the law, but ſin? What do they ſtand condemned for at God's bar, but the tranſgreſſion of his law? Juſtification therefore, which ſtands oppoſed to it, muſt be a clearing and diſcharging them from the guilt, or the condemning power of ſin.

3*dly*, Juſtification is ſaid to be from ſin: By him all that believe are juſtified ἐκ πάντων, from all thoſe ſins from which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, Acts 13. 39.; and again, The judgment was from one ſin to condemnation, but the free gift to juſtification, ἐκ πολλῶν παραπτωμάτων, from many ſins, Rom. 5. 16. Now, what can juſtification from ſin ſignify beſides our abſolution from the guilt of ſin?

4*thly*, The juſtifying the believer, and the remiſſion of his ſins, are only different expreſſions of the ſame thing; as is apparent from theſe words, God hath juſtified us freely by his grace, having ſet forth Chriſt to be the propitiation for our ſins, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs in the remiſſion of ſins to thoſe who have this faith, Rom. 23. 24. 25. i. e. to manifeſt the way of juſtification by faith, which he alone admits of for the remiſſion of ſins.

5*thly*, We are juſtified, ſaith the apoſtle, through the redemption that is in Jeſus, through faith in his blood, Rom. 3. 24. 25.; through his blood, Rom. 5. 9. Now, what doth this blood procure for us? Remiſſion of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14.; it being ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, Matth. 26. 28. What benefit have believers by it? He hath loved them, and waſhed them from their ſins in his own blood, Rev. 1. 5.; he hath made peace for them by the blood of the croſs, Col. 1. 20. with a God only angry for ſin; he hath obtained eternal redemption from tranſgreſſions by it, Heb. 9. 12. 15.: by all which equivalent expreſſions it appears, that God's juſtifying the ſinner, in St Paul's ſenſe of the expreſſion, is his abſolving him from the guilt of his paſt ſins, from puniſhment and condemnation by the law for them, by an act of grace and free pardon of them through the blood of Jeſus, his being as fully reconciled to us as if we never had offended againſt the former covenant we were all under, till that new covenant was eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus, which promiſes God would be merciful to our iniquities, and would remember our ſins no more, Heb. 8. 12.

Now, this obſervation perfectly deſtroys the imputation of Chriſt's active obedience to us for righteouſneſs, ſince they who contend for that doctrine do make remiſſion of ſins but one half of juſtification, and Chriſt's active obedience imputed to us ſtill neceſſary to procure us a title to eternal life; and that by the firſt, p. 72. God only looks upon us as perfectly innocent, and therefore not fit to be caſt down to hell; whereas by the other he looks upon us as perfectly righteous, and therefore fit to be brought up to heaven. 2*dly*, Theſe two things are plainly needleſs and inconſiſtent: for he that is diſcharged from the guilt of all his ſins, muſt alſo be diſcharged from that penal death which is the wages of ſin, and ſo muſt, by that freedom, have a title to life; for between freedom from condemnation and abſolution, freedom from the death due to ſin, and the gift of life in ſubjects capable of either, there is no medium (e). Moreover, either this want of righteouſneſs is our ſin, or it is not; if it be not, then as it is not our duty to be thus righteous in order to our juſtification before God: ſo neither can we be under that covenant which ſaith, Do this and live; nor can Chriſt's active obedience be neceſſary on that account; if it be our ſin, then muſt the want of it be forgiven by the remiſſion of all our ſins; whereas if God requires that Chriſt's perfect obedience ſhould be imputed to us, the want of it neither is, nor can be forgiven, ſince then God muſt impute that as ſin to us. And hence ariſeth a third argument againſt the imputation of Chriſt's active and perfect obedience to us for juſtification, viz.

Arg. 3. 3*dly*, That it renders the death of Chriſt to procure the remiſſion of our ſins vain, and that upon many accounts.

1*ſt*, Becauſe the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to us, doth render his death unneceſſary to procure any farther righteouſneſs or juſtification in our behalf: for if, by virtue of this imputation, we be as righteous as Chriſt was in his life, there can be no more need that Chriſt ſhould die for us, than that he ſhould die for himſelf, or any other ſhould die for him; yea, then Chriſt dying only for the benefit of believers, could not have died for the unjuſt, but only for the juſt, i. e. for them for whom there could be no neceſſity that he ſhould die, but only that he ſhould live for them; ſeeing faith in him as a Mediator, performing perfect obedience to the law for them, muſt make them perſons for whom there could be no neceſſity that he ſhould die, but only that he ſhould live for them; ſeeing faith in him as a Mediator, performing perfect obedience to the law for them, muſt make them for whom he thus obeyed perfectly obedient, and therefore muſt have given them a full title to the promiſe, Do this and live. Add to this, that perfect obedience is unſinning obedience; and ſure there can be no neceſſity, that Chriſt ſhould die for the ſins of them who by his life had performed unſinning obedience. To ſtrengthen this argument, conſider, that Chriſt performed his active obedience to the law, entirely before he ſuffered for our ſins; and ſo this righteouſneſs being firſt performed and purchaſed for us, ſhould be firſt imputed and made over to us; and might, for any thing I can perceive to the contrary, have been imputed to all that believed in him before he actually ſuffered; yea, to all ſuch perſons, though he had returned to heaven without dying. For ſeeing nothing more can be required to a perfect juſtification from the condemnation of the law, than a perfect righteouſneſs, i. e. a perfect fulfilling of the law; there could be no need of ſatisfaction made to divine juſtice, for any violations of it, ſince that muſt neceſſarily ſuppoſe that law not perfectly fulfilled by Chriſt upon their account.

2*dly*, According to this doctrine, there remains no place for the remiſſion of ſins to believers; for God neither did, nor could forgive any ſin in Chriſt, becauſe he was perfectly righteous, and in him was no ſin; if then believers be righteous with the ſame righteouſneſs imputed to them, with which Chriſt was righteous, they muſt be as completely righteous as Chriſt was, and ſo have no more ſin to be pardoned than he had, and ſo no more need to be pardoned than he had; whereas the apoſtle ſaith, That if we Chriſtians ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins. Thus doth that doctrine deſtroy Chriſt's interceſſion for us, according to the words now cited (f); and alſo the neceſſity of his ſalutary paſſion, according to thoſe words of St Paul, If righteouſneſs, i. e. juſtification, come by the law, then Chriſt is dead in vain; for if righteouſneſs cannot come by the law, it cannot come by Chriſt's perfect obedience to the law; but if it can, then the apoſtle's inference is plainly this, that Chriſt is dead in vain, i. e. there could be no neceſſity of his dying upon this account, that we had perſonally tranſgreſſed the law, ſince he who hath a righteouſneſs or an obedience to the law imputed to him, as perfect as was that of Chriſt, can be no more condemned for tranſgreſſing the law, than Chriſt himſelf.

3*dly*, According to this doctrine, God can ſee no ſin in believers; for certain it is, he ſaw no ſin in Chriſt: if then believers be righteous, with a righteouſneſs as perfect as Chriſt's was imputed to them, he can ſee no more ſin in them than he beheld in Chriſt.

4*thly*, This doctrine renders it unneceſſary for a believer to repent, at leaſt, of ſins committed after he truly hath believed: for our repentance muſt ſuppoſe an antecedent failure, ſince that time, in our obedience; whereas, there being no ſuch failure in the active obedience of Chriſt, if that, by imputation, be made as much and truly the obedience of believers, as if they perſonally had performed it, there can be no failure in the obedience of a believer, and ſo no place for his repentance. The perfect obedience which Chriſt performed to the law, was the reaſon why he needed no repentance; if then, through faith, it be as much theirs by imputation, as if they perſonally had performed it, muſt it not be equally a reaſon, why they need no repentance? Laſtly, The aſſertors of this doctrine ſay, Chriſt's perfect obedience muſt be imputed to believers, that they may have a juſt title to eternal life, by virtue of this precept, Do this and live: this title he who is a ſinner, i. e. a violator of the law, requiring perfect obedience, can never have; and therefore he who needs repentance cannot have it, that being only needful for the remiſſion of ſins, and that we may live and not die.

Arg. 4. 4*thly*, This doctrine renders it unneceſſary to have any perſonal inherent righteouſneſs; for as Chriſt's paſſive obedience ſuſtained in our ſtead, makes it unneceſſary, if not unjuſt, that we ſhould perſonally ſuffer any puniſhment for the remiſſion of thoſe ſins which render us obnoxious to death; ſo, in like manner, muſt Chriſt's active and perfect obedience to the law imputed to us render it as unneceſſary, that we ſhould perſonally be righteous by doing righteouſneſs, that we may live; for if we can be as righteous as Chriſt was without doing righteouſneſs, ſurely we need not be more than ſo; yea, then we may have a title to life eternal without any inherent righteouſneſs; and ſo there can be no need of having our fruit unto holineſs, that the end may be eternal life.

The good Biſhop ſaw the abſurdity of a conſequence ſo obſtructive of all practical Chriſtianity, and ſo plainly excuſing all men from any neceſſity of living righteouſly, ſoberly, and godly, in this preſent world: he therefore ſaith, p. 89. "I believe "the active obedience of Chriſt will ſtand me in no "ſtead, unleſs I endeavour after ſincere obedience "in my perſon; his active as well as his paſſive obe- "dience being imputed to none, but only to them "who apply it to themſelves by faith, which faith "will certainly put ſuch as are poſſeſſed with it, "upon obedience." Where the Biſhop did well to deny the concluſion, ſeeing the conſequence was ſo evident from his own words, that he could not formally deny it: for if, as he ſaith, p. 86. Chriſt covenanted to perform thoſe duties which were due from man to God, provided what he thus did, ſhould wholly be put on the account of man; and the Father was pleased to consent to this motion; can the Father, after this consent, require that man himself should perform all, or any of those duties to God which Christ already had performed on his account? If, as he saith, p. 87. Christ performed that obedience, only on the account of those whose nature he had assumed, as they by faith lay hold upon it; and God, by grace, imputes this obedience to them, as if it had been performed by them in their own persons: can God require, that after Christ's performance of it perfectly, they should imperfectly perform the same again? Or, after the imputation of Christ's perfect obedience to them, as fully as if they had performed it personally, require that they should perform it personally? When Christ, by his obedience imputed to them, hath intitled them to eternal life; as he saith, p. 88. can it be still necessary, that they should have their fruit unto holiness, that the end may be eternal life, Rom. 6. 22.? when, as he saith, p. 89. under the new covenant, obedience in our surety is accepted as completely sufficient; can personal obedience be required of us by the same covenant?

To say, that faith will put the person that is possessed of it, upon obedience to God, is nothing to the purpose; for the question is not, what faith will do, but what he is obliged to do, who by this faith is as much intitled to Christ's perfect obedience, as if it had been personally performed by him? And what God, after this perfect obedience imputed to him, can require him to do in order to that eternal life, which this perfect obedience imputed hath given him a certain title to, whether it be necessary for him, after this, by patient continuance in well-doing, to seek for glory and immortality, that he may have eternal life (g), and through the Spirit, to mortify the deeds of the flesh, that he may live (h); and to live righteously, soberly, and godly, in this present world, that he may comfortably expect the blessed hope (i); I conclude then in the words of the beloved apostle, Good Christians, let no man deceive you, not he who applies Christ's active righteousness to himself, though he never did it, but he that doth righteousness is righteous, even as he (i. e. Christ) is righteous (k).

Arg. 5. 5thly, It is a thing impossible, that by the obedience of another imputed to us, we can obtain a title to the life promised by that law, which saith, Do this and live.

1st, Because the law requires personal obedience, that we may live, by saying, The man that doth these things, shall live by (doing) them: and this the Bishop grants, by saying, p. 89. The obedience the old covenant required as absolutely necessary, was that of our own persons; whereas the obedience of another cannot be our personal obedience, nor can it be imputed to us but by the relaxation of the law, which requires of us personal obedience; and so our personal obedience, which is the only thing required by the law, must be remitted, that we may be made righteous with the righteousness of another. To make this farther evident, let it be noted, that men do generally mistake, when they say, Christ, by his sufferings in our stead, made satisfaction to the law, which said, In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death: this he could not possibly do, because the law expressly saith, The soul that sinneth he shall die; and only threateneth death to the person that violates the law. He indeed made a satisfaction to divine justice, by suffering in our stead, that death which justice might have personally inflicted upon us; but then this admission of another to suffer in our stead, is a full relaxation of that law which required us personally to suffer, and an entire remission of the punishment the law required of us personally; and so it is also in this case.

3dly, Because the law requires unsinning obedience, saying, Cursed is the man that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them (l), not promising any pardon to the sinner; so that unless Christ's righteousness imputed to us, can make us never to have been sinners, and so never to have needed forgiveness of sin, it cannot afford us a legal righteousness. Hence the apostle saith, Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, not by his continuance in all things written in the law to do them, but by suffering the punishment which the law threatened to offenders, to wit, by being hanged on the tree.

Arg. 6. 6thly, This doctrine partly answers, and partly confutes all the arguments which the apostle useth in his epistles to the Romans and the Galatians to prove that justification must be by faith only, and not at all by the works of the law. For, 1st, This doctrine destroys that argument of St Paul, by which he proves, that no man can be justified by the works of the law, because all men have sinned, and therefore stand condemned by the law of works, affording a full answer to it, by saying, that though we could not be thus justified by our own personal obedience, we might be justified by Christ's active obedience imputed to us, that being perfect obedience to the law.

2dly, Whereas neither the apostle nor the holy scripture saith that Christ was righteous or obedient to the law for us, or that by his obedience to the law imputed to us we are made legally righteous, but absolutely denies that righteousness could have been by the law, because the law could not give life; for, saith St Paul, Gal. 3. 21. Had there been a law which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs, i. e. juſtification to life, ſhould have been by the law. This doctrine plainly contradicts thoſe words of the apoſtle, by introducing a neceſſity of perfect obedience to the law, that we may live; and contending that we muſt be intitled to eternal life according to the tenor of that law, which ſaith, Do this and live, p. 88. 89.

3*dly*, Whereas this doctrine makes it neceſſary that the reward ſhould be of works as well as of grace, yea, of the works of that law which ſaith, Do this and live, St Paul puts theſe things in an abſolute oppoſition to each other, and repreſents the one as entirely deſtructive of the other: for, ſaith he, to him that worketh, a reward is not reckoned κατὰ χάριν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ ὀφείλημα, of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifies the ungodly, his faith (without works) is imputed for righteouſneſs; even as David ſpeaketh of the bleſſedneſs of the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteouſneſs χωρὶς ἔργων, without works, Rom. 4. 4. 5. 6.; whereas God cannot impute juſtification or righteouſneſs to any without works, if he impute it to them only to whom Chriſt's perfect works of righteouſneſs belong; nor can this righteouſneſs be of grace, through faith, and not of debt, if it belongs to them only who are debtors to fulfil the whole law, ſince the apoſtle ſaith expreſsly, that they who are thus debtors to fulfil the law, or ſought for juſtification by fulfilling of it, are fallen from grace, Gal. 5. 4.; nor can it be here ſaid that they were not indeed debtors to fulfil it perſonally, but only to have that obedience by which Chriſt fulfilled it, imputed to them; for the apoſtle ſaith, in the immediate preceding words, Chriſt is become of none effect to you, whoſoever of you are ſeeking to be juſtified by the law, whereas he could not be of none effect to them, who was the only perſon by whom they were enabled to perform that law to their juſtification. Again, the apoſtle puts this plain difference betwixt that righteouſneſs which is by faith and by the works of the law, that the firſt requires only believing from the heart to ſalvation, the ſecond requires works excluding grace, by ſaying, He that doth theſe things ſhall live by (doing) them, Rom. 10. 5. 9. 10.; whence he argues thus, that if juſtification be of grace, it is not of works, otherwiſe grace is no more grace; and if it be of works, it is not of grace, otherwiſe work is no more work, Rom. 11. 6.

4*thly*, This doctrine flatly contradicts all the places in which the apoſtle poſitively aſſerts, that by the works of the law can no man be juſtified, but by faith only, or by faith without the works of the law, Rom. 3. 20. 22. 24.; for if a man be juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, he muſt be juſtified by the works of the law, becauſe the active obedience of Chriſt conſiſts as truly in the performance of thoſe works as our own perſonal righteouſneſs would have done. Moreover, if the righteouſneſs of God conſiſted in the imputation of Chriſt's legal righteouſneſs, it could not be manifeſted, as the apoſtle ſaith it is, without the works of the law, becauſe to ſuch a righteouſneſs the works of the law are plainly neceſſary.

So again, when he ſaith, Gal. 2. 16. Knowing that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, even we ourſelves have believed in Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and not by the works of the law; doth not this doctrine contradict theſe words, by teaching, that we are to be juſtified by the works of the law performed by Chriſt, and imputed to us, as if we perſonally had performed them? for Chriſt's performance of them alters not the nature and property of the works, they being ſtill the works of the law, whoſoever doth them; and ſo he that is juſtified by them done by another in his ſtead, muſt be ſtill juſtified by the works of the law.

Note alſo here, that the apoſtle doth not ſay, a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, but by the works of Jeſus Chriſt, or not by the works of the law as performed by us, but only as performed by Chriſt; but on the contrary ſaith, We have believed, that we might be juſtified by faith in Chriſt, and not by the works of the law, excluding the works of the law from juſtification by faith in Chriſt; whereas this doctrine makes faith intitle us to the works of the law performed by Chriſt, and made over to us for our juſtification.

3. When the apoſtle argues thus, that no man is juſtified by the works of the law, is manifeſt, becauſe the ſcripture ſaith, The juſt ſhall live by faith, but the law is not of faith, i. e. it ſpeaks nothing of, and promiſeth no juſtification to any man by faith, but only ſaith, The man that doth theſe things which are required of him by the law ſhall live by doing them, Gal. 3. 11. 12. doth not that doctrine fully contradict theſe words, which ſaith, The man that is juſtified by faith muſt do the things required by the law, that he may live, and muſt have a true title to a perfect obſervance of the law in order to that end?

4. When the apoſtle ſaith, If they who are obſervers of the law be heirs with faithful Abraham, who was juſtified by faith, faith is made void, as being inſufficient to juſtify us without the obſervation of the law, Rom. 4. 14. doth not this doctrine ſay alſo that faith is inſufficient to juſtify us without the obſervation of the law, and ſo as plainly make void juſtification by faith? Doth it not alſo make them heirs who are obſervers of the law, as having life by virtue of a legal righteouſneſs imputed to them, as fully as if it had been personally performed by them?

And though these things are so clear that they need no farther confirmation, yet may it here be noted, that whereas not one of these scriptures can be wrested from the plain sense they literally bear, or from asserting that no justification can be had by the works of the law, but by this distinction, that true indeed it is, that no justification can be had by the works of the law personally performed by us, but it may be had by the perfect obedience of Christ imputed to us. The apostle, throughout this whole discourse against justification by the works of the law, never gives the least hint of this distinction: and whereas the Bishop places the better half of justification, viz. that which gives us a title to eternal life, in this perfect righteousness of Christ imputed to us by faith, the apostle mentions not one word of this in either of his epistles, but in both sums up the matter so, as plainly to demonstrate that he meant no such thing: for in his epistle to the Romans (m), he thus concludes, τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν, what is it then that we say? even this, That Israel following after the law of righteousness hath not attained to the law of righteousness, because they sought it not by faith, but as if it were to be obtained by the works of the law. Now, might they not, according to this doctrine, that the works of the law performed by Christ, are upon our faith imputed to us for righteousness as truly as if they had been personally performed by us, have sought it both by faith and by the works of the law? In his epistle to the Galatians (n), he concludes thus, Stand fast therefore in the liberty from the observance of the law to justification in which Christ hath made you free, and be not again intangled in the yoke of bondage; behold, I testify to you, that if you be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing; mark the reason, ver. 3. For every one that is circumcised, is a debtor to do the whole law. Whence the argument runs thus, Him that is a debtor to do the whole law, Christ will profit nothing; but, saith the Bishop, every Christian is a debtor to perform the whole law, for what else can be the import of these words, p. 89. The old covenant which saith, Do this and live, Lev. 18. 5. is not disannulled, but rather established by the covenant of grace, especially as to the obedience it requires from us in order to the life it promiseth; therefore, according to the apostle, Christ can profit him nothing? Now, how could the apostle have made this inference, had he believed, as the Bishop did, that even faith itself could profit us nothing without intitling us to that obedience which the law requires from us, as performed by Christ our surety? Surely this doctrine saith, in full contradiction to St Paul, that nothing but Christ's active obedience can profit us as to the life which the law promiseth, and that for this very reason, that we are still debtors to perform the whole law. In fine, the great indignation of the Jews against the apostle for teaching the doctrine of justification by faith was this, that by it he made void the law as to justification; but had he only sought it in the sense of the Bishop, he had, as the Bishop contends, not disannulled, but rather had established the law, even as to justification of life, and so must rather have ingratiated himself with, than so incensed the Jews against him. Since then he must have said what would have been highly acceptable to them, viz. that their law was still of a perpetual and necessary obligation even in order to justification, and that Christ himself had so established it, as to enable both us and them to yield perfect obedience to it, in order to that life it promised.

Arg. 7. 7thly, The apostle saith expressly, Rom. 3. 24. that we are justified freely by God's grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, i. e. through the remission of sins purchased by his blood, for we have redemption through his blood, even the remission of sins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. and ver. 25. that God hath set forth Christ as a propitiation through faith in his blood, that he might be the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus; and chap. 5. 9. that we are justified by his blood, and reconciled to God by his death; ver. 10. that Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, by suffering that death the law pronounced accursed, Gal. 3. 11.; that Christ entering once into the holy places by his blood, hath purchased eternal redemption for us, Heb. 9. 12.; and that through Christ's will to suffer for us, we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Christ, Heb. 10. 10. ascribing our justification, our reconciliation to God, our propitiation, our redemption from the curse of the law, our eternal redemption, our sanctification in the sacrifical sense, i. e. our freedom from the guilt of sin, for which alone we can be condemned to die, to the death and blood of Christ. Now, all this, saith the Bishop, p. 90. makes him but an half Mediator, or half Saviour; this indeed, says he, frees us from death, but gives us no title to eternal life. Hence is it, saith he, that I cannot look upon Christ as having made full satisfaction to God's justice for me, unless he had performed the obedience I owe to God's laws, as well as borne the punishment that is due to my sins, &c. p. 88.; so that, according to the Bishop, Christ cannot have redeemed us from the curse of the law by his death for us, or by his blood have obtained eternal redemp- tion for us, that being certainly redemption from dying for ever, or ἀπολύτρωσις τῆς περιποιήσεως, redemption of life, Eph. 2. 14. And if our Saviour's blood and passion gives to believers no title to eternal life, why doth the apostle say, that we have freedom to enter into heaven by the blood of Jesus, Heb. 10. 19. and that by his death, undergone for the redemption of transgressions, we receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, chap. 9. 15.? Moreover, when God justifies from the guilt of sin, i. e. from transgressing the law, what charge can the law lay against us, as having not performed what it required? Can God be propitious, and fully reconciled to us by the blood shed for us, and yet exclude us from his blissful presence? Can Christ have brought us nigh to God, and made him at peace with us through the blood of the cross, Eph. 2. 13. 15. and yet exclude us from the glory of God, who having peace with him, rejoice in the glory of God, Rom. 5. 1. 2.?

Arg. 8. 8*thly*, This doctrine renders it impossible that God should make a covenant of grace with man, and consequently asserts that Christians must be under the same obligations as ever to perform the covenant of works; and this the Bishop, p. 89. not only asserts, but contends for. For how can a man be more under the law, and under the covenant of works, than by being under an obligation to do all that the covenant of works requires, and to yield perfect obedience to the law, that he may be accounted righteous before God? whereas the apostle saith expressly, we are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. 6. 1. that δικαιοσύνη, justification is by faith, that it might be of grace; Rom. 4. 16. that we are justified freely by the grace of God, not through the active obedience, but through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, i. e. through the remission of sins procured by his blood, that by grace we are saved through faith, not of works, Eph. 2. 8.; and in fine, that if justification be by grace, then is it not of works, Rom. 11. 6.

And this is still more evident from this consideration, that this doctrine plainly makes both the two covenants the same; for where the parties covenanting are the same, the thing covenanted for is the same; if the conditions of the covenants be the same, the covenants must be the same. Now here it is certain that the persons covenanting, viz. God and man, are the same; the thing covenanted for, life and acceptance with God are the same; if then the condition of both, Do this and live, be the same, which is the thing asserted, p. 89. the covenants themselves must be the same.

Nor is it material to answer here in the Bishop's words, that the condition of the first covenant was this, Do this in your own persons and live, the condition of the new only, Do this by yourself, or by your surety, and live; for even this disjunctive was also contained in the first covenant, or it was not; if it was, then the condition of the first covenant could be only that which is said to have been the condition of the second also, i. e. Do this by thyself, or by another, and live; if it were not, then the doing this by another could not make us legally righteous, because the law required this obedience in our own persons, saith the Bishop, p. 89. as absolutely necessary, and so Christ's obedience to the law imputed to us, but not performed by us, could not fulfil that law, which only saith, Do this in your own persons and live. And evident it is that the allowing another to do that duty for me, or in my stead, which I owe personally to God, is as truly an exempting me from doing that duty in my own person as the allowing another to suffer the punishment due to my sins in my stead is an exempting me from suffering that punishment in my own person. And had the Bishop attended to his own words he would have seen this consequence; for his argument, p. 82. "That one man can merit by that which another "performs is a plain contradiction; for in that he "merits, it is as necessarily implied that he himself acts that by which he is said to merit; but in "that he depends upon another's action, it is as "necessarily implied that he himself doth not do "that by which he is said to merit," by changing the word merit into obey, runs thus, That one person can obey the law by the obedience which another performs, is a plain contradiction; for in that he obeys, it is necessarily supposed that he himself doth that by which he is said to obey; but in that he depends on the obedience of another for the performing that which the law requires of him, it is as necessarily supposed that he himself doth not do that by which he is said to obey the law.

Arg. 9. 9*thly*, As the foundation of this imputation is precarious, there being no evidence in scripture of such a covenant as is here mentioned, p. 86. but only a command laid upon Christ, that he should lay down his life for his sheep, so is there in the scripture no such notion of imputation as is here supposed. For,

1*st*, Wheresoever this phrase occurs affirmatively, that such a thing was imputed to such a person, it is some personal action or thing which is thus said to be imputed; as when it is said, Rom. 2. 26. If the uncircumcision, i. e. the uncircumcised person, keep the righteousness of the law, his uncircumcision εἰς περιτομὴν λογισθήσεται, shall be accounted for circumcision, i. e. he shall be as well accepted as if he were circumcised. So Rom. 4. 3. Abraham believed God, and it, i. e. his faith, was imputed to him for righteousness; for so it is explained, ver. 5. in these words, To him that worketh not, but believeth, his faith faith is imputed to him to him for righteouſneſs; and ver. 9. we ſay that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteouſneſs. So alſo, Gal. 3. 6. James 2. 23.; and of our faith in him who raiſed Chriſt from the dead, it is ſaid, Rom. 4. 24. it ſhall be imputed to us for righteouſneſs.

I alſo add, that the righteouſneſs of one cannot be truly thus imputed to another, by him who ſpeaks of things as they truly are. God indeed may and often doth good to one, eſpecially in temporals, for the righteouſneſs of another, as he did to the Jews for the ſake of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and at the prayer of Moſes and Aaron, in which ſenſe, ſaith St James, the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, chap. 5. 16.; he alſo ſheweth mercy to the poſterity of them that fear him, for their parents ſake: but he neither doth, nor truly can λογίζεσθαι, reckon or repute them righteous becauſe Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, or their parents were ſo; becauſe as ſin, ſo righteouſneſs is a perſonal action, or an habit inherent in the ſubject that doth it. And therefore to remove the common inſtances which are uſually produced with relation to this matter, I add, as the concluſion of what I ſhall offer on this ſubject, Laſtly, That in the holy ſcripture there is no mention of the imputation of any man's ſin or righteouſneſs to another, but only of the imputation of his own good deeds for righteouſneſs, or of his evil deeds for puniſhment. And therefore I ſay,

1. That it cannot truly be affirmed that we all ſinned in Adam, and by his diſobedience were made ſinners; becauſe his ſin and diſobedience was imputed to us: for I have ſhewed already that the ſcripture no where maketh the leaſt mention of any thing of any other's imputed to us, but only of ſome perſonal thing or action of our own accounted to us for reward or puniſhment. Moreover, this imputation either makes the ſin of Adam truly ours, or it doth not; if it doth not, how can we be made ſinners by it? if it doth, then death came upon us for our own ſin, and ſo not for the ſin of one, but for the ſin of all; whereas the apoſtle ſaith expreſsly, that death came upon us τῷ τοῦ ἑνὸς παραπτώματι, by the ſin of one, Rom. 5. 15. 17. διὰ ἑνὸς ἁμαρτήσαντος, by one man ſinning, ver. 16. and διὰ ἑνὸς παραπτώματος, by one offence of that one man, ver. 18. 3. I aſk whether this imputation made the poſterity of Adam ſinners, or whether it found them ſo before? If it found them ſo before, it muſt be plainly needleſs, ſeeing then they might have been condemned to death without it; if it made them ſo, then ſince this imputation is the act of God and not of man, it plainly follows, that God muſt be the author of that ſin, becauſe this imputation flows immediately from him, without the intervention of any action on the part of any of thoſe men to whom it is imputed. Moreover, then the imputation muſt be falſe, as charging them with ſin, whom he did not find ſinners, but only by his arbitrary imputation made them ſo. Now, far be it from any Chriſtian to aſſert that God ſhould falſely impute ſin to any man: in a word, λογίζεσθαι, imputare, is to reckon, or account any thing to any man, to charge him with it, or lay the charge of it to him; this therefore on God's part muſt ſuppoſe, in the very nature of it, ſome action done by the poſterity of Adam which is blame-worthy, and may be juſtly charged upon them before there can be any ground for imputation of it; and this ſhews that it is impoſſible that this imputation ſhould be the very thing that renders them blame-worthy, or perſons worthy to be charged with guilt; and yet if the ſin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it muſt be ours only becauſe it is by God imputed to us, and not imputed becauſe it is ours; that is, God by this imputation muſt make us ſinners, and not find us ſuch, for this imputation is the action of the judge, and not of the ſuppoſed criminal; remove, or take away this action, and no crime can be charged upon him. In fine, if the ſin of Adam becomes ours only by imputation, it deſerves condemnation only by the ſame imputation, that is, by the action of God; that therefore we deſerve condemnation for it, is to be aſcribed directly to the action of God, and only by accident to the action of Adam. Whence therefore is our deſtruction, according to this opinion, but of God, who makes us worthy of condemnation, by imputing to us that ſin which by his imputation only we ſtand guilty of?

2. It cannot truly be affirmed that our ſins were ſo imputed to Chriſt when he became our ſurety, as that he became partaker of the guilt of them, but only ſo as that he ſuffered the puniſhment which was due unto us for them, it being abſolutely neceſſary, not only in the caſe of Chriſt, but of all vicarial puniſhments, to ſeparate the puniſhment from the guilt: for though a man may become obnoxious to the puniſhment or ſufferings of another by an innocent conſent, he can never partake of the guilt of another's action, but by a criminal conſent unto it, and ſo far as he ſuffers for that action of him, he becomes guilty by this criminal conſent, he ſuffers for his own ſin, becauſe that conſent made the ſin his own; whence in ſuch caſes he ſuffers not as a ſubſtitute, but as a party. Seeing then our bleſſed Lord could not be guilty of any criminal conſent to any of our actions, it is impoſſible that he ſhould contract the guilt of ſin by his conſent to ſuffer for us. When therefore the prophet ſaith, that God laid on him the iniquity of us all (o), we are to understand this only of the punishment, or the chastisement of our sin; and to extend this farther, and say with some, that, by his consent thus to suffer, he suffered for those sins which he had truly made his own, is not only false, for the forementioned reason, but is contrary to the whole tenor of the scripture, which saith negatively, that he was such an high priest, who was holy, undefiled, separate from sinners, and who needed not to offer up sacrifices for his own sins; that he was in all things like to us, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, sin only excepted; that we are redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot or blemish; that he did no sin, that he knew no sin, that he suffered the just for the unjust (p); and affirmatively, that he died not for his own, but for our sins; that he suffered for our sins according to the scriptures (q); he suffered for the sins of the unjust; he was the propitiation for our sins, and made reconciliation for the sins of the people. In a word, this assertion borders upon blasphemy; for if Christ made all our iniquities his own, he made himself as guilty, and as great a sinner as were all the sinners for whose sake he suffered. Nor is it any refuge here to say, he was the greatest sinner only by imputation of sin to him, not by commission of sin personally: for as the righteous God cannot impute sin to him who did no sin, and gave no criminal consent to the sin of others; or whom he doth not first look upon as a sinner, and a guilty person; so is it not consistent with the virtue, the intent, and nature of our Saviour's sufferings, that God should look upon him as a sinner, and a guilty person; for then he must have looked upon him as one who had deserved to die for his own sin, or as one guilty of death, and then his death could have made no satisfaction for the sin of others; yea, then he must have suffered death, not for our sins, as they were ours, but as they were his own by imputation; whereas the scripture always saith, he suffered death for our sins, but never for his own by imputation or inhesion. I conclude therefore, in the words of Bishop Davenant (r), and Doctor Outram (s), "That Christ was willing so far to take "our sin upon him, non ut inde peccator, sed hostia "pro peccato constitueretur; not as to be made a "sinner, but only a sacrifice for sin by and for "them."

THE PREFACE TO THE Second EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

THAT this epiſtle was writ a year after the firſt, is probably collected from theſe words, chap. 9. 2. Achaia was ready a year ago; for he having given inſtructions for that collection, he in theſe words refers to only at the cloſe of his firſt epiſtle, they could not have the forwardneſs there mentioned before that time. Now, that the firſt epiſtle was written early in the year fifty-five or fifty ſeven, appears from theſe words in it, I will ſtay at Epheſus till Pentecoſt, chap. 16. 8. for he ſtaid ſome conſiderable time in Aſia, after his purpoſe to leave Epheſus and go to Macedonia, Acts 19. 21. 22. and yet making here his apology for not wintering at Corinth, as he thought to do, 1 Cor. 16. 6. this epiſtle muſt be writ after winter, and ſo when a new year was begun. It therefore ſeems to be written after his ſecond coming to Macedonia, mentioned, Acts 20. 3. For, 1. it was written after he had been at Troas, and had left that place to return to Macedonia: now, that was at his ſecond going thither; ſee note on chap. 2. 12. 2. It was written when Timothy was with him: now, when he left Epheſus to go into Macedonia, Timothy went not with him, but was ſent before him, Acts 19. 22. but at his ſecond going through Macedonia, Timothy was with him, Acts 20. 4. 3. He ſpeaks of ſome Macedonians that were like to come with him, chap. 9. 4.: now, at his ſecond going from Macedonia, there accompanied him Ariſtarchus, Secundus, and Gaius of Theſſalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia, Acts 20. 4. And, 4. The poſtſcript ſaith, this epiſtle was written from Philippi, as we find it in Theodoret and Oecumenius, where St Paul was till the days of unleavened bread, Acts 20. 6. It therefore ſeems to be ſent from thence to them by Titus, and ſome other perſon, not long before Paul's coming to them, which he ſpeaks of as inſtant, chap. 13. 1. and that which he was now ready to do, chap. 12. 14. and did, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, in his journey from Philippi to Troas, he ſailing about from Philippi to Corinth, to make good his promiſe, whilſt the reſt that were with him, Acts 20. 4. went directly the next cut to Troas, and there waited for him.

Second EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. PAUL an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, and [a] Timothy our brother, to the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the ſaints which are in all Achaia: (ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 1.)

2. [b] Grace be (given) to you, and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

3. Bleſſed be God, even (our God and) [b] the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4. Who comforteth us in all our tribulations (by that inward peace and earneſt of the Spirit he gives under them); that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourſelves are comforted of God; (God's ſervants never wanting his comforts under all their ſufferings.)

5. For as the [c] ſufferings of Chriſt abound in us, ſo [d] our conſolation alſo aboundeth by Chriſt.

6. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, which is effectual (Gr. wrought) in (or by) the enduring the ſame ſufferings which we alſo ſuffer, (and which by our example you are encouraged to endure); or whether we be comforted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, (which is accompliſhed by your patient perſeverance under all your ſufferings, to which patience you are animated, by the experience of that conſolation God affords his ſervants under all their ſufferings, Matth. 5. 12. and 24. 13. 2 Cor. 4. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12. James 1. 12.)

7. And our hope of you is ſtedfaſt, knowing, that as you are partakers of the ſufferings (we endure, 1 Cor. 10. 13.), ſo ſhall ye be alſo of the conſolation (we enjoy in all our ſufferings):

8. (Our ſufferings, I ſay), for we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Aſia, that we were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength, inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life.

9. But we (therefore) had the ſentence of death in ourſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in ourſelves, but in God that raiſeth the dead.

10. Who (then) delivered us [e] from ſo great a death, and (daily) doth deliver (us), in whom we truſt that he will yet deliver us.

11. [f] You alſo helping together by prayer for us; that for [g] the gift beſtowed upon us, (or the favour conferred on us), by the means of many perſons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

12. For (in all our afflictions) our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity, not with fleſhly wiſdom, but [h] by the grace of God, we have had our converſation in the world, and more abundantly to you-wards.

13. (And of the truth of this you may reſt aſſured); for we write no other things unto you (of it) than what you read, (Gr. know, remember), or [i] acknowledge; and I truſt you ſhall acknowledge even to the end.

14. As alſo you have acknowledged us in part; (i. e. as to the founder part of the church; ſee note on chap. 2. 5. though ſome have repreſented us as walking according to the fleſh, chap. 10. 2.), that we are (juſt matter of) your rejoicing, even as ye alſo are (at preſent, and much more will be) ours in the day of the Lord Jeſus.

15. And in this confidence (of you) I was minded to come to you before (this time), that you might have [k] a ſecond benefit, (or grace.)

16. [l] And to paſs by you (though not ſo as to ſee you in that paſſage, 1 Cor. 16. 7.) into Macedonia, and to come again (Gr. again to come) out of Macedonia to you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judea.

17. When I therefore was thus minded, (or reſolved thus), did I (afterwards) uſe lightneſs (in changing this reſolution)? or the things that I purpoſe, do I purpoſe (them) [m] according to the fleſh, (or carnal intereſts), that with me there ſhould be yea, yea; and (again) nay, nay; (i. e. inconſtancy and mutability to ſerve my carnal intereſts, ſo that you ſhould hence gather, that in preaching the goſpel of Chriſt, I walk according to the fleſh, chap. 10. 2.)

18. (No ſurely); but [n] as (ſure as) God is true, our word towards you [o] was not yea and nay, (i. e. our preaching was not variable, we now ſaying one thing, anon another)

19. [p] For the Son of God, Jeſus Chriſt, who was preached among you by us, (even) by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea.

20. [q] For all the promiſes of God in him are yea, and in him amen, (i. e. are true and certain through him), to the glory of God, (demonſtrated in the confirmation of them) by us.

21. Now he that eſtabliſhed us with you in (the doctrine of) Chriſt, and (who) hath anointed us (with the Holy Ghoſt), is God;

22 [r] Who hath alſo (thus) ſealed us (up to the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30.), and given the earneſt of the Spirit (to be the pledge and aſſurance of it, 2 Cor. 5. 5. Eph. 1. 13. 14.) in our hearts. (See note on 1 Cor. 1. 5. 6. 7. 8.)

23. Moreover, (it was not therefore out of lightneſs, but) [s] I call God for a record upon my ſoul, that (it was merely) to ſpare you (that) I came not as yet unto Corinth.

24. (Yet this I ſay), not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy, [t] for by faith you ſtand, (τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε, for ye have ſtood in the faith.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [u] Καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφὸς, and Timotheus a brother.] I have obſerved in the epiſtle to the Hebrews, that it is uſual with St Paul to call Timothy his brother, Col. 1. 1. 1 Theſſ. 3. 2. Philem. 1. Heb. 13. 23. and this he probably did, that he might not be deſpiſed for his youth, as he intimates he might be, 1 Tim. 4. 12. eight years after the writing this epiſtle, this being written A. D. 57. that to Timothy, A. D. 65.

Ver. 2. [a] Χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη, Grace and peace.] May that grace and favour of God, on which your ſalvation and happineſs depends, Tit. 1. 1. and that peace which paſſeth underſtanding, Philip. 4. 7. and is the effect of the divine favour, be continually with you, and derived from God the Father, the fountain of all bleſſings, and from Jeſus Chriſt the procurer and diſpenſer of them, 1 Cor. 1. 4. Eph. 1. 3. on you.

And from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] See note on 1 Cor. 1. 3.

Ibid. Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.] Dr Mills ſaith, theſe words are inſerted into this place from other epiſtles; whereas Origen in Matth. p. 500. Cod. Alex. all the Greek commentators, and all the ancient verſions own them. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 3. [b] Καὶ Πατὴρ, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Why, ſaith Schlictingius, ſhould God be ſtyled thus, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, if Chriſt be God equally with the Father, ſeeing, by being thus diſtinguiſhed from, he ſeems to be denied to be God?

I anſwer. He is by theſe words denied to be God the Father, ſince that would render him Father to himſelf; but his being thus diſtinguiſhed from God the Father, hinders not his being God of God the Father, who, by way of eminency, is ſometimes abſolutely ſtyled God, becauſe he is the fountain of the Deity. For as the words, our Lord, aſcribed here to Chriſt, do not exclude the Father from being our Lord; ſo the word God, aſcribed to God the Father, excludes not Chriſt from being what St Thomas ſtyles him, our Lord, and our God, John 20. 28. And as God was under the Old Teſtament ſtyled the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to confirm the faith of the Jews in the promiſes made to them and their ſeed, ſo is he uſually in the New Teſtament ſtyled the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to confirm to us his love in Chriſt Jeſus, his beloved Son in whom he is well pleaſed; and to aſſure us that he is, as here it follows, the Father of mercies, in the plural, to ſignify, according to the Hebrew way of ſpeaking, ſpeaking, the greatneſs and multitude of his mercies; and the God of all conſolation, as being the giver of that Paraclete, or Holy Spirit, whence all our comforts are derived.

Ver. 5. ᾽ Τὰ παθήματα τῦ Χριστῦ, the ſufferings of Chriſt.] The ſufferings of Chriſt's members for his ſake are ſtyled his ſufferings, becauſe they are evils inflicted on his members out of enmity to him, and by reaſon of their myſtical union to him, and becauſe of the ſympathy he has with them in their ſufferings, Luke 10. 16. Acts 9. 4. Iſ. 63. 9. Hence is he ſaid συμπάσχειν, to ſuffer with us in our infirmities, Heb. 4. 15. But when the Greek fathers add here (a), that Chriſt ſuffered more in his members than he did in his own perſon, this ſounds harſh in the ears of moſt divines, and ſhews they had not thoſe thoughts of our Lord's ſufferings and ſatisfaction which we have.

Ibid. ᾽ Ἡ παράκλησις ἡμῶν, our conſolation,] abounds by Chriſt, becauſe, as he promiſed, ſo he conferred the Spirit of conſolation on thoſe who ſuffered for his ſake; ſo that though they received the word with much affliction, they did it alſo with joy in the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6. having the Spirit of faith, 2 Cor. 4. 13. of glory, and of God reſting on them, 2 Tim. 1. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 14. See here ver. 21. 22.

Ver. 10. ᾽ Ἐκ τηλικύτυ θανάτυ, from ſo great a death.] Moſt interpreters refer what is ſaid in theſe three laſt verſes to the commotion raiſed againſt Paul by Demetrius at Epheſus, Acts 19. from ver. 26. to the end of that chapter. But we read not that in that commotion any hands were laid upon St Paul, or that he ſuffered any thing. He therefore had no occaſion from it to ſay, that he was preſſed above meaſure, and above ſtrength, ſo as to deſpair of life; that he had the ſentence of death within him; and, that he was delivered from ſo great a death, and as it were raiſed from the dead: theſe high expreſſions rather ſeem to ſignify that he indeed was put to fight with beaſts at Epheſus, as he ſpeaks, 1 Cor. 15. 32.; ſee the note there; and was by God delivered from them.

Ver. 11. ᾽ Συνυπεργόντων καὶ ὑμῶν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῇ δεήσει, you alſo helping together by prayer for us.] Hence note, that the more public prayers are, the more prevailing they will be; and alſo, that God will be more glorified by the thankſgivings rendered for the ſucceſs of them. But whereas Eſthius hence pleads for prayers to the ſouls of ſaints departed, the practice of the apoſtle here and elſewhere is a ſtrong argument againſt them: for he paſſionately intreats the Chriſtians living at Rome to ſtrive together with with him in their prayers to God, Rom. 15. 30.; the Corinthians, to help together with him in prayer, 2 Cor. 1. 11.; the Epheſians, to pray for him with all perſeverance, Eph. 6. 18. 19.; the Coloſſians, to continue in prayer for him, Col. 4. 1. 2. 3.; the Theſſalonians, to pray for him, that the word of the Lord might have free courſe and be glorified, 1 Theſſ. 5. 25. and that he may be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked men, 2 Theſſ. 3. 1. 2.; and the believing Jews, to pray for him that he might ſooner be reſtored to them, Heb. 13. 18. 19. But in all his epiſtles we have not one petition of like nature directed to any ſaint departed; whereas, had he thought them capable of hearing him, and their addreſſes more effectual for the ſame ends, we may reaſonably think his zeal would have prompted him to put up his requeſts to them, and leave us ſome examples of this nature.

Ibid. ᾽ Τὸ εἰς ἡμᾶς χάρισμα, the gift beſtowed upon us.] The word χάρισμα in the New Teſtament always importing a ſpiritual gift, muſt be interpreted here of the gifts beſtowed on St Paul for the diſcharge of his apoſtolical function; and if the right reading here be ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, on our behalf, the ſenſe of this verſe may run thus, "We truſt that he will deliver "us for the furtherance of the goſpel, through the "aſſiſtance of your prayers, that ſo the gift being "exerciſed by us through the joint ſuffrage of many "perſons for the benefit of many, thanks may be "returned by many for us." If ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, on your behalf, as other copies have it, be the right reading, the ſenſe runs thus: "I hope to be ſtill preſerved "by your prayers for the benefit of the church, "that ſo the gift beſtowed upon us, being made uſe"ful to the benefit of others by the prayers of "ſo many, thanks may be given to God by many "on your behalf." Whichſoever be the true reading, that he ſpeaks of the ſpiritual gift conferred upon him, will be evident from the following words, ver. 12.

Ibid. or, 2*dly*, Τὸ εἰς ὑμᾶς χάρισμα, may ſignify that wonderful deliverance vouchſafed to them from ſo great danger, by the prayers of many perſons.

Ver. 12. ᾽ Ἐν χάριτι Θεῦ, in the grace of God.] Τυτέστι, σημείοις καὶ τεράσιν ἅτινα χαρίσματα ἦν Θεῦ, i. e. by ſigns and miracles (b); that is, according to the wiſdom of the Spirit, and the miraculous power given us by the grace of God for the propagation of the goſpel. So St Chryſoſtom. Which expoſition, ſaith he, is confirmed from theſe words, And more abundantly to you-ward; for the apoſtle's ſincerity and care to walk according to the rules of the goſpel was every where the ſame, but the powerful operations and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt ſeem to have been more abundantly exerciſed by him in, and vouchſafed by him to, that church in which he ſtaid ſo long, and of which he had ſo particular a promiſe, that Chriſt would be with him in his preaching to them, Acts 18. 10. 11. The connection of this with the former verſe ſeems rather to be thus: And there is good reaſon, why you ſhould thus pray for us, who have acted with the ſame ſincerity towards you, and ſo much to your advantage.

Ver. 13. [i] Ἀναγινώσκετε.] Ἃ αὐτοὶ ὑμεῖς οἴδατε, which you yourſelves know, Chryſ. Τυτέστιν ὑπομιμνήσκεσθε, which you remember, Oecum. Theophylact.

Ver. 15. [k] Δευτέραν χάριν, a ſecond benefit or grace.] I coming to eſtabliſh you, Rom. 1. 11.; and to promote your joy, ver. 24.; hence it appears, that the apoſtle had been only once with them when he writ this.

Ver. 16. [l] Καὶ δι' ὑμῶν διελθεῖν εἰς Μακεδονίαν, and to paſs by you into Macedonia.] Interpreters, ancient and modern, are much troubled how to reconcile theſe words with what the apoſtle had ſaid in his former epiſtle, I will come unto you when I have paſſed through Macedonia, 1 Cor. 16. 5.; for there he expreſsly declares, his purpoſe was to go firſt into Macedonia, and then to come to Corinth from thence. Here, ſay they, he declares he purpoſed firſt to come to Corinth, and then to Macedonia, and return again from Macedonia to Corinth; but the apoſtle ſeems to ſay no more here, than he did there. There he declares, that he would firſt go to Macedonia; but he adds alſo, that he would go from Epheſus, paſſing by them into Macedonia; ſaying alſo that he would not then ſee them ἐν παρόδῳ, in his paſſage by them, ver. 7.; and here he only ſaith, he purpoſed διελθεῖν, to paſs by them into Macedonia; but ſaith not, that he would call upon them in that paſſage, but only when he came again from Macedonia, and intended to go to Syria; which he did not, partly by reaſon of Titus's abſence, who was not yet returned to him to give an account of their affairs, but went again from Troas to Macedonia, 2 Cor. 2. 12.; where he met Titus, chap. 7. 5. 6.; and partly by reaſon of the Jews, who waylaid him in his paſſage to Syria, Acts 20. 3.: and for this delay and non-performance of his purpoſe, that he came not from Macedonia the firſt time he went thither, to winter with them, he makes this apology. See the preface to this epiſtle.

Ver. 17. [m] Κατὰ σάρκα, according to the fleſh.] Perhaps the Judaizers might object this, becauſe being in Greece, Acts 20. 2. and ſo near to Corinth, and having paſſed through Macedonia, he came not to go by them into Syria, becauſe the Jews laid wait for him by the way, but returned back to Macedonia without ſeeing them, ver. 3.; this, I ſay, they might interpret a conſulting of his carnal intereſts.

Ver. 18. [n] Πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, but as God is true.] The phraſe πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς, God is faithful, is uſed where there is no oath intended; as 1 Cor. 1. 9. God is faithful, by whom we are called; and chap. 10. 13. πιστὸς ὁ Θεὸς, But God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above what you are able. But here the phraſe being uſed abſolutely, ſeems rather to be a form of ſwearing. And then πιστὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς, will ſignify, Dei fidem teſtor, i. e. I ſwear by the faith of God; ſo Dominus vivit, i. e. I ſwear by the life of God; or, as the Lord liveth, Jer. 12. 16. 44. 26.; Hoſ. 4. 15. compared with Jer. 38. 16.; Judg. 8. 19.; Ruth 3. 13.; 1 Sam. 14. 39. 46. 19. 6. 20. 3.: ſo to ſwear, As thy ſoul liveth, is to ſwear by the life of another.

Ibid. [o] Οὐκ ἐγένετο ναὶ καὶ οὔ, was not yea, and nay.] i. e. It was not with any variance, but by his aſſiſtance we all ſaid ſtill the ſame thing, and promiſed the ſame advantages to thoſe that ſhould believe in Chriſt; or it was not the preaching of what was uncertain, but fully confirmed to you by the power received from him. That this is the true import of this phraſe, Yea, yea, nay, nay, we learn from the Jews from whom it is taken; for they ſay (c), There is a yea which is as nay, and a nay which is as yea, viz. when a man aſſerts or denies a thing ironically; but (d) the juſt man's yea is yea, and his nay is nay; that is, whatever he affirms or denies is true and certain. When a man gives a bill of divorce to his wife, we try him, ſay they, three times (e) whether his nay be nay, and his yea, yea; that is, whether he continue firm in his reſolution to divorce her. And whereas the Hebrew ſaith, when Elijah ſaid to the Jews, How long will you halt betwixt two opinions? If God be God, follow him; if Baal, follow him; the people anſwered him not a word, 1 Kings 18. 21.; the Jewiſh gloſs runs thus, "They would not ſay unto "him, yea or nay, becauſe they were doubtful." And whereas, Exod. 20. 1. we read thus, And God ſpake all theſe words, ſaying, R. Solomon notes, that this word, לאמר, teacheth, that they anſwered to every yea, yea, and to every no, no; that is, they engaged to do the affirmative, and not to do the negative precepts.

Ver. 19. [p] Ὁ γὰρ τοῦ Θεοῦ υἱὸς ---- δι' ἡμῶν κηρυχθείς, for the Son of God Jeſus Chriſt preached by us.] Here Theodoret well notes, that Chriſt preached, is put ἀντὶ κηρύγματος, inſtead of the preaching concerning him; the ſenſe of theſe words being this, ὁ περὶ τοῦ ἡμῖν τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγος, the word concerning the Son of God preached by me, Timothy and Silvanus, was ſtill the ſame without any variance from one another; we all ſaying the ſame things of him, and confirming them by the like miracles.

Ver. 20. [q] Or, all the promiſes of God made to you are true and certain, through Chriſt the author of the new covenant, eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, to the glory of that God who made them by us.

Ver. 22. [r] Ὁ καὶ σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς, who hath ſealed us.] Sealing was uſed not only as a mark of diſtinction of what belongs to us, from what is others, but alſo for confirmation; as when we ſet our ſeal to a bond, indenture, will, covenant, or ordinance; to a covenant, Neh. 9. 38.; to an evidence, Jer. 32. 10.; to an ordinance, that it may not be reverſed, 1 Kings 21. 8. Eſth. 8. 8. Iſ. 8. 16.; in which ſenſe the circumciſion of Abraham is ſtyled, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, Rom 4. 11. and the Corinthians, the ſeal of St Paul's apoſtleſhip: for preſervation and ſecurity, as when we ſeal up our treaſures, Deut. 32. 34.; ſo the ſervants of God were ſealed in their foreheads, Rev. 7. 3. and 9. 4.; ſo the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth who are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19.; and ſo the Jews made the ſepulchre ſecure, ſealing the ſtone, Matth. 27. 66. In all which ſenſes was the Holy Spirit given to believers, as a mark that they belonged to Chriſt, Rom. 8. 9.; and were the ſons of God, Gal. 4. 6.; as a confirmation of the covenant God had made with them, and of the bleſſings promiſed, he being the earneſt and pledge of them, and ſo a ſecurity to them againſt doubting of them; and alſo a preſerver of them in the faith againſt all temptations, 2 Tim. 1. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 14.

Ver. 23. [s] Μάρτυρα τὸν Θεὸν ἐπικαλοῦμαι ἐπὶ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχήν, I call God to record upon my ſoul.] The apoſtle uſeth this form of ſpeech ſo oft in this epiſtle, that I think it not amiſs to give an account of the reaſon of his doing ſo; which may be beſt done from the conſideration of the occaſion, the reaſon, and the end of aſſertory oaths, which are the only oaths he uſeth.

1*ſt*, Then, there muſt be ſome ἀντιλογία, i. e. ſome doubting of, or contradiction to the thing aſſerted, which muſt give an occaſion to an aſſertory oath, Heb. 6. 16. there being no need to confirm, in this ſolemn manner, what no body doubts of. Now, in the church of Corinth, the authority and the ſincerity of the apoſtle was much doubted of, he being acknowledged of them but in part, ver. 14.; ſome ſeeking ſtill a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking by him, chap. 13. 3.; and others looking on him as one that walked after the fleſh, chap. 10. 2. This therefore gave occaſion to the aſſertory oaths ſo frequent in this epiſtle.

2*dly*, The end of an oath is εἰς βεβαίωσιν, for confirmation of the thing aſſerted, Heb. 6. 16.; and if oaths were allowed, and thought neceſſary in civil matters for this end, they muſt be more allowable in ſacred and ſpiritual matters, which concerned the truth of the goſpel, and the ſalvation of ſouls for the ſame end, which manifeſtly was here the caſe.

3*dly*, The matter thus confirmed by an oath, muſt be ſuch, as could not be ſufficiently confirmed by other witneſſes of the fact, he being only privy to them who doth thus confirm them; for where ſufficient teſtimonies of the matter of fact can be produced, an oath ſeems the leſs needful in the caſe. And that this was ſo, in all the inſtances in which the apoſtle thus confirms his ſayings, will be eaſily diſcerned from the peruſal of the places, in which the apoſtle thus aſſerts the truth of what he had affirmed, viz. chap. 1. 18. 23. and 11. 10. 11. 31. and 12. 19.

Ver. 24. [t] Τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε, for you have ſtood in the faith.] Τῆς μὲν πίστεως ἕνεκεν οὐδαμῶς ὑμῖν ἐπιμέμφομαι, τὴν γὰρ ταύτης ὑγίειαν περίκειθε, Theodoret; that is, I do not by this threat challenge to myſelf a power to exerciſe any dominion over you on the account of your faith, as I did upon Hymenæus and Alexander, 1 Tim. 1. 12.; and intend to do upon ſome of your falſe teachers, when your obedience is fulfilled, chap. 10. 6.; for I acknowledge you have generally ſtood firm in the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, (though ſome among you once queſtioned the great article of the reſurrection of the body, 1 Cor. 15. 12.); but I deſign by it to excite you to cure your diviſions and contentions, and reform your groſs miſcarriages, chap. 12. 20. 21. that ſo I might not be found towards you ſuch as you would not, nor create to you any farther trouble, but may be a promoter of that joy, which you will find in ſuch a reformation of yourſelves.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. (And indeed a helper of your joy I would gladly be), but I determined this with myſelf, that I would not come again to you in heavineſs, (i. e. ſo as to make you ſad, if poſſibly I could avoid it.)

2. For if I (be conſtrained by your diſorders to) make you ſorry, [a] who is he then that maketh me glad, but the ſame that is made ſorry by me? (i. e. What can make me glad but the reformation, and ſo the joy of the ſame perſons, the apoſtle's chiefeſt joy being in the welfare of his converts? chap. 1. 14. Phil. 2. 2. 16. and 4. 1. 1 Theſſ. 2. 19. 20.)

3. And I wrote the ſame to you, (or this very thing have I written to you before my coming, to excite cite you to this reformation), leſt when I came, I ſhould have ſorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice, having confidence in you all, that (you ſtand ſo affected to me, that) my joy is the joy of you all.

4. (I ſay, leſt I ſhould have ſorrow); for out [b] of much affliction and anguiſh of heart, I wrote unto you (my former epiſtle) with many tears, (which yet I ſay), not that you ſhould be grieved (or made ſorry), but that you might know the love which I have more abundantly to you.

5. But if any hath cauſed grief, (as the inceſtuous perſon hath already done), he hath not grieved me (only), [c] but in part; that I may not overcharge (or be too heavy upon him) you all.

6. Sufficient to ſuch a man is [d] this puniſhment, which was inflicted by many.

7. [e] So that contrariwiſe, you ought rather (now) to forgive him, and comfort him, (by receiving him again into the church, which is the proper conſolation to one caſt out, than continue your averſation to him), [f] leſt perhaps ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with overmuch ſorrow, (and ſo fall into deſpair.)

8. Wherefore I (who commanded the inflicting this cenſure on him, do now) beſeech you, that you would confirm your love towards him, (by readmitting him thus penitent to your ſociety; for the church ought, after the example of God, to do ſo.)

9. For to this end alſo did I write (ἔγραψα, have I written this), that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient (to me) in all things.

10. (And be aſſured of this, that) to whom you forgive any thing, I forgive (it) alſo; for if I forgive any thing, (Gr. have forgiven heretofore), to whom I forgive it, for your ſakes I forgave it, (though I did it) [g] in the perſon (i. e. by the authority) of Chriſt.

11. [h] (And this forgiveneſs of the inceſtuous perſon I therefore preſs), leſt Satan ſhould get an advantage of us (by hurrying him into deſpair, or repreſenting the church-diſcipline as that which tendeth to men's ruin, and ſo tempting him to apoſtaſy); for we are not ignorant of his devices.

12. Furthermore, (that ye may know my great concernment for you) [i] when I came to Troas to preach Chriſt's goſpel, and a door was opened to me of the Lord (for the propagation of it there),

13. I had (notwithſtanding) no reſt in my ſpirit, becauſe I found not Titus my brother, (whom I had ſent to know the ſtate of your affairs, returned); but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia (hoping to find him there, where he arrived, and gave me a very comfortable account of you.)

14. Now thanks (therefore) be to God, who always cauſeth us to triumph in (and through) Chriſt, and maketh manifeſt the ſavour of his knowledge by us in every place (where we come.)

15. For we are unto God a ſweet ſavour (in our preaching) of Chriſt, (both) in them that are ſaved, and in them that periſh.

16. To the one (viz. to them that periſh for rejecting Chriſt preached to them) we are [k] the ſavour of death unto death; and to the other (who believe in him), the ſavour of life unto life: and who is ſufficient for theſe (great and weighty) things?

17. (We are, I ſay, very acceptable to God in this work); for we are not as many, [l] who corrupt the word of God; but (act) as (men) of ſincerity, but as (commiſſionated) of God, (and as) in the ſight of God ſpeak we (in preaching) Chriſt (unto you.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Ver. 2. [a] Καὶ τίς ἐστιν, who is it then?] The Hebrew Vau, rendered by καὶ, is very often in our tranſlation, then. See Gen. 13. 16. and 24. 41. and 28. 21. and 31. 8. and 42. 34. 38.; Exod. 6. 1. and 7. 9. 11.; Lev. 4. 3. 14. 23. 28. and 5. 5. and 6. 4.; Numb. 5. 15. 21.; Deut. 6. 21. and 8. 10.; Joſh. 1. 15. and 24. 12.; 1 Sam. 1. 11. and 6. 9.: and thus alſo is καὶ tranſlated by us in the New Teſtament, Matth. 23. 32. Mark 7. 1. 10. 26. Matth. 25. 27. John 4. 35. and 7. 33. and 14. 9. Acts 26. 20. Rom. 8. 17. and 11. 5. 1 Cor. 15. 29. James 2. 4. Rev. 22. 9.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἐκ πολλῆς θλίψεως, with much affliction, &c.] As the apoſtle's zeal for the good of ſouls made him rejoice at their welfare, ver. 2. ſo alſo did it cauſe him to weep for their miſcarriages, Acts 20. 19. 31. 2 Cor. 12. 21. Phil. 3. 18.

Ver. 5. [c] Ἀπὸ μέρους, in part.] This phraſe is commonly uſed by St Paul for the diſtinction of one ſort of perſons from another. So Rom. 11. 25. Blindneſs hath happened to Iſrael, ἀπὸ μέρους, in part, as to the unbelieving part of them; Rom. 15. 15. I have written the more boldly to you in part, ἀπὸ μέρους, i. e. as to that part of you who are Gentiles, declaring, that I was called by Jeſus Chriſt to be the apoſtle of the Gentiles; 2 Cor. 1. 14. You have acknowledged me ἀπὸ μέρους, in part, i. e. as to the ſound part of you, and according to this uſe of the phraſe, the words may be paraphraſed thus, He hath not only grieved me, but as to the ſound part, you all; for there were ſome among them who grieved not for this crime, but were puffed up, 1 Cor. 5. 2. I therefore ſay in part, that I may not too much load that miſerable perſon.

Ver. 6. [d] Ἡ ἐπιτιμία αὕτη ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, this puniſhment, &c.] Some learned perſons, who exclude the laity from having any ſhare in the excommunication or abſolution of public offenders, tell us, this puniſhment was inflicted only by the clergy, or the preſbytery preſbytery of Corinth in the preſence of the laity. But it ſeems clear in both theſe epiſtles, that the apoſtle writes to the church of Corinth in the general: for when he commands that the inceſtuous perſon ſhould be excluded from their ſociety, and be delivered up to Satan, he ſpeaks to all that were to aſſemble together, 1 Cor. 5. 4.; to all that ought to have mourned for that fact, ver. 2.; to all that were obliged to abſtain from eating with him, ver. 11.; and aſſerts the power they had of judging thoſe that were within the church, ver. 12.: and here ſpeaking of the execution of that ſentence, he ſaith, It was ἐπιτιμία, a puniſhment inflicted, not πρὸ, before, only, but ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, by the community: hence he exhorts them all to forgive and comfort him, ver. 8.; adding, ver. 10. To whomſoever you forgive any thing, I forgive alſo: but there is not in this whole affair the leaſt mention of any of the clergy ſeparately from the church, either executing, or relaxing this cenſure. Indeed St Paul here carries the matter ſo high, that he alone, by his apoſtolical authority, paſſeth the ſentence, ſaying, ἤδη κέκρικα, I have already judged him, 1 Cor. 5. 3. and alſo that of abſolution, ſaying here, ver. 10. ἐγὼ κεχάρισμαι, I have forgiven him, committing only the execution of each ſentence to them: ſo that this inſtance gives no colour to the pretences of the Independents and other ſectaries, eſpecially if we add, what is highly probable, that the Corinthian church had then no ordinary or ſettled governors or paſtors, but all their offices were performed by prophets, or men enabled to perform them by the gift of prophecy. See note on 1 Cor. 14. 29. And if ſo, it cannot be expected that the ſame practice ſhould continue when theſe extraordinary prophets ceaſed, and biſhops and paſtors were every where appointed to rule over their reſpective flocks. In the primitive church, when any perſon was to be excommunicated, the laity were firſt conſulted about the fact, the guilty perſon pleaded in their preſence; they judged of the matter of fact, as do our juries in criminal cauſes, and by their ſuffrage they conſented to his condemnation, as St Cyprian doth often inform us (f); but then he ſtill aſſerts, that neither they, nor the inferior clergy, could paſs the ſentence of excommunication without the biſhop (g), who, as the preſident of the aſſembly, ſtill pronounced the ſentence. They alſo conſented to the readmiſſion of them into favour, and to the communion of the church; but then their actual admiſſion was performed by the impoſition of the hands of the biſhop and clergy (h), the power of the keys, ſaith he, being given to them by Chriſt, ſaying, Thou art Peter, &c.

Ver. 7. [a] Note, Hence it appears, that in notorious crimes, which give great cauſe of ſcandal to the church, and to Chriſtianity, the conſolation of the offender depends not only on his inward grief, and repentance towards God, but alſo on the relaxation of his cenſures by the church; for it is certain that the apoſtle is here ſpeaking, not as Grotius thinks, of the taking off the diſeaſe which Satan had inflicted on the inceſtuous perſon, but of reſtoring him to communion by relaxation of the church's cenſures: for, 1. The word ἐπιτιμία, puniſhment, ver. 6. refers to the canonical cenſures of the church. 2. He commands them not only χαρίζεσθαι, to forgive, ver. 7. 10. but alſo to confirm their love to him; both which expreſſions plainly ſeem to intimate that he would have him reſtored to communion, and this he would have performed according to the diſcipline now mentioned from St Cyprian, with the conſent of the pious laity.

Ibid. [b] Leſt ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up of ſorrow.] Hence alſo St Chryſoſtom obſerves, that, in preſcribing the meaſures of penance, regard is to be had, not only to the nature of the ſin, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς διάνοιαν, καὶ ἕξιν τῶν ἁμαρτανόντων, but alſo to the mind and temper of the ſinner

Ver. 10. [c] Ἐν προσώπῳ Χριστοῦ, in the perſon of Chriſt.] That is, ſaith Theodoret, Chriſt beholding and approving what was done; for as he delivered the inceſtuous perſon to Satan in the name of the Lord Chriſt, 1 Cor. 5. 4. ſo in his perſon, and by his authority, he relaxes the ſentence. This place teaches us, ſaith Schlictingius, "That the providence of "Chriſt reacheth to, and inſpecteth not only our "actions, but even our minds and thoughts." Hence then I argue for his Godhead, God alone being the ſearcher of the heart, and of the ſecrets of it, 1 Kings 8. 39.

Ver. 11. [d] Note, Vain here is all the diſcourſe of Eſthius concerning indulgences, or the remiſſion of the ſatisfaction required by the church; for the apoſtle here ſpeaks only of the remiſſion of his excommunication, and hath not one word of any ſatisfaction the inceſtuous perſon had voluntarily undertaken on the account of his offence, or any thing impoſed on him to do on that account, but only of a delivery of him to Satan, and an excluſion of him from the church, in both which he was paſſive.

Ver. 12. [1] Ἐλθὼν δὲ εἰς τὴν Τρωάδα, but coming to Troas.] That this was not the firſt time of St Paul's coming to Troas, is plain, ſeeing we find him there long before, Acts 16. 8. though then he ſeems to have ſtaid there but a night; it was not the time mentioned, Acts 20. 6. for then he came from Macedonia to Troas, here he goes from Troas to Macedonia. It remains then that it was ſome intermediate time which all interpreters I meet with, think was in his way from Epheſus to Macedonia, Acts 20. 1. but at his firſt journey from Epheſus to Macedonia, he ſailed not by Troas, but by Corinth, though not touching there. See note on chap. 1. 16. It was then after, paſſing through thoſe parts he came by Troas into Greece; and if ſo, this epiſtle could not be written till after St Paul's coming the ſecond time to Macedonia. See the preface.

Ver. 16. [k] Ὀσμὴ ζωῆς, καὶ θανάτου, a ſavour of life and death.] Here is a continual alluſion to the phraſeology of the Jews, who ſpeak from the prophets of, סם מות (i) a mortal ſavour, or as the Chaldee ſaith, רמת׳א סמא, Eſth. 1. 21. Jer. 11. 19.; and of סם החיים, a ſavour of life, or a vital unguent, and ſaying of the law, that it is to Iſrael a ſavour of life, but to the nations of the world, a ſavour of death; of which the apoſtle ſeemeth here to give the reverſe, ſaying, the goſpel was to them, as being the rejecters of it, the ſavour of death, but to the Gentiles, who embraced it, the ſavour of life.

Ibid. Καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα τίς ἱκανὸς;] Here the vulgar ridiculouſly reads, et ad hæc quis tam idoneus, i. e. quam ego? and this reading is defended by Dr Mills, againſt all the Greek ſcholia, the Syriac and Arabic verſions, Cod. Alex. and Hilary D. and that by ſurmiſes little better than that verſion. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 17. [l] Καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον, who corrupt the word.] Here is an alluſion to thoſe huckſters of whom the prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks, ſaying, οἱ κάπηλοί σου μίσγουσι τὸν οἶνον ὕδατι, Thy vintners mix wine with water, Iſ. 1. 22.; and ſo the meaning of the words is this, We do not adulterate the ſincerity of the word, as your falſe apoſtles do. So Theodoret here.

Who theſe corrupters of the word of God were, we learn from chap. 11. 22. where it is evident that they were not Samaritans, but Jews; not pretenders to be the Chriſt, or miniſters of Simon Magus, but miniſters of Chriſt, or ſuch as owned our Jeſus, not Simon Magus or Doſitheus, to be Chriſt. Notwithſtanding a Reverend perſon aſſerts, that they were Gnoſtics; and to this opinion he is inclined by two paſſages in the epiſtles of Ignatius: the firſt is in the epiſtle to the Magneſians, where, ſaith he, ſpeaking of the Gnoſtic Judaizers, as enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, whoſe God is their belly, who mind earthly things, Phil. 3. 18. 19.; who were lovers of pleaſure, and not lovers of God, having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power of it; he adds, That they were οἱ χριστέμποροι, τὸν λόγον καπηλεύοντες, καὶ τὸν Ἰησοῦν πωλοῦντες, merchants of Chriſt, huckſtering the word, ſelling Jeſus. But,

1. The Gnoſticks were ſo far from being Judaizers, that they denied the God of the Jews, declared that he was not the ſupreme God; and taught men to deſpiſe the law and the prophets. See note on Col. 2. 12.

2. All theſe epithets or characteriſtics agree perfectly to the Jewiſh falſe teachers; they were the men of whom the apoſtle ſaith, Their God is their belly, &c. as both St Chryſoſtom and Theodoret inform us (k). They were the men who were lovers of pleaſure, more than lovers of God, and who had a form of godlineſs, which the impure Gnoſtics had not. See note on 2 Tim. 3. 5. The Jews alſo were the perſons who bought Chriſt for thirty pieces of ſilver; they corrupted the word here, by mixing the law and their traditions with the goſpel, and they made a gain of Chriſt. See note on 1 Tim. 6. 5. So that what is here cited from the ninth ſection of this epiſtle, agrees exactly to them.

3. It chiefly is to be obſerved, That theſe words are not in the true Ignatius, but are the additions of his interpolator. And, 2. There is not a word in this place to ſhew that they belonged to the Gnoſtics, or to any other perſons, who owning the profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith, corrupted it; but are expreſsly ſaid to belong to ſuch enemies of Chriſt as denied him (l). Whereas the true Ignatius is plainly in this place ſpeaking of the Jews (m), of whom we interpret this; and the ſame is alſo evident from the interpolator.

The ſecond paſſage is cited from the epiſtle ad Trallianos, where he ſaith, There are ſome vain

ſpeakers

ſpeakers and impoſtors, not Chriſtians, but merchants of Chriſt, Ἀπάτῃ περιφέροντες τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον τῆς ἰνδαϊσμοῦ, carrying the name of Chriſt for deceit, and huckſtering the word of the goſpel. "And who theſe were, he ſpecifies in the proceſs of "the epiſtle, viz. Simon the firſt-born of Satan, "Menander, Baſilides, the unclean Nicolaitans, "τοὺς ψευδωνύμους, thoſe that are falſely named, that is, "the Gnoſtics." But here again.

1. We have not the true Ignatius, but his interpolator impoſed upon us.

2. This interpolator doth not ſay, thoſe perſons falſely named, were the Gnoſtics: no, that is the Doctor's interpretation, againſt the true ſenſe of the Greek; and the manifeſt words of the old interpreter, who ſays, they were the Nicolaitans (n), ſo called, becauſe they falſely bore his name, he being no ſuch perſon as they repreſented him: and indeed this is the common epithet of the Nicolaitans (o); he himſelf, by Clemens Alexandrinus and others (p), being declared free from the doctrines theſe heretics vented in his name. And,

3. This interpolator plainly inſinuates, that in the ſection cited by the Doctor, he meant the Judaizers (q), as uſing the ſame words which he had uſed in the epiſtle to the Magneſians concerning them.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. DO we (by ſpeaking thus of our ſincerity, chap. 2. 17.), begin again to commend ourſelves? or [a] need we, as ſome others (have), [b] epiſtles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you (to others?)

2. Ye are our epiſtle [c] written in our hearts, (you being always in our minds, and evidently appearing to us ſo to be, and) known and read of all men (who have heard the fame of your converſion.)

3. Foraſmuch as ye are (by this converſion) manifeſtly declared to be [d] the epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtered (or penned) by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of ſtone (as were the ten commandments), but in the fleſhly tables of the heart.

4. And ſuch (confidence or) truſt have we through (the grace and favour of) Chriſt to God-ward, (viz. that he will ſtill thus efficaciouſly aſſiſt our miniſtry.)

5. Not (having any confidence in ourſelves) that we are ſufficient of ourſelves [e] to think any thing as of ourſelves, (to bring men to the faith of Chriſt by our own reaſonings, without the power and aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God); but our ſufficiency (as to this matter) is of God (alone.)

6. Who alſo hath made us able miniſters of the New Teſtament, (promiſed in oppoſition to the Old, Jer. 31. 33. and ſo) not of the letter (only, as was that of Moſes), but of the Spirit (promiſed, Ezek. 36. 27.); for [f] the letter (of the law condemns the diſobedient, and ſo) killeth, but the Spirit (miniſtered by the goſpel) giveth life: (for if the Spirit of him that raiſed Jeſus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you, Rom. 8. 11.)

7. [g] But (then) if (that law which is) the miniſtration of death, (and was) written and engraven in ſtone, was glorious (in the miniſter of it), ſo that the children of Iſrael could not ſtedfaſtly behold the face of Moſes, for the glory of his countenance, which glory (yet was only ſuch as) was to be done away, (or vaniſh as the law was to do;)

8. How ſhall not (that goſpel which is) the miniſtration of the Spirit, be rather glorious (both in itſelf and its ambaſſadors?)

9. For if (that law which was) the miniſtration of condemnation, (by pronouncing the ſentence of death upon all that did not perfectly obey it), be (or was attended with) glory, much more doth (the goſpel, which is) the miniſtration of righteouſneſs (or of juſtification to life, Rom. 5. 18.) exceed in glory.

10. For even that (law) which was made glorious (at the firſt adminiſtration of it, may be ſaid to have) had no glory in this reſpect, by reaſon of the glory (of the goſpel) which excelleth (and ſo eclipſeth it.)

11. For if that which is (now) done away (and aboliſhed) were glorious, much more that which remaineth (for ever) is (to be) glorious (in the powerful operations of the Spirit of God aſſiſting the diſpenſers of it.)

12. Seeing then that we have ſuch hope (of the glorious efficacy of our miniſtry, and of the power of God ſo illuſtriouſly ſhining forth in it), we uſe great [h] plainneſs of ſpeech.

(n) Fugit quoque illos immundiſſimos falſi nominis Nicolaitas, amatores libidinis, malos calumniatores, nec enim talis fuit apoſtolorum miniſter Nicolaus. § 11.

(q) Ita et Judaizantes χριστιανίζειν, idem interpolator in epiſtola ad Magneſianos nominaverat, et τὸν λόγον καπηλεύοντας. Uſher. ib. n. 26.

13. And (act) not as Moſes (the miniſter of the law), who put a veil over his face, (even that of types and ſhadows, ſo) that the children of Iſrael could [i] not ſtedfaſtly look to the end (or the accompliſhment) of that which is (now) aboliſhed.

14. But (that which hinders them from ſeeing through this veil, is this, that) their minds were (then, and ſtill are) blinded; for until this day remaineth the ſame veil untaken away, in the reading of the Old Teſtament; which veil is (only) done away (by faith) in Chriſt.

15. But (or whereas they not believing in him) even to this day, when Moſes is read, the veil is (ſtill) upon their heart.

16. Nevertheleſs (as when Moſes turned to the Lord, the veil was taken from his face, Exod. 34. 34. ſo) when [k] it (the Jewiſh nation) ſhall turn to the Lord (Jeſus), the veil ſhall be taken away (from them.)

17. [l] Now the Lord is (the giver of) that Spirit (which is received by the goſpel, and by which it is confirmed); and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty, (and ſo the law which is as a yoke of bondage, Acts 15. 10. Gal. 5. 1. is taken away, and we obtain our Chriſtian liberty.)

18. [m] (And it is not with us as it was with the Jews, for they only ſaw the face of Moſes ſhining through the veil, but received no impreſſion from, or derivation of his glory upon themſelves); but we all (under the goſpel) with open (and unveiled) face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord (Jeſus), are changed into the ſame image (with him), from (his) glory to glory (derived on us), as by the Spirit of the Lord, (or, as receiving it from the Lord and giver of the Spirit.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Ver. 1. [a] Εἰ μὴ χρήζομεν, do we need?] Theſe particles εἰ μὴ often ſignify num, in the Old Teſtament; εἰ μὴ ἔφαγες, haſt thou eaten of the tree? Gen. 3. 11. See Gen. 4. 9. and 18. 4. 17. 23. 27. 38. and 30. 15. and 31. 14. and 41. 38. and 43. 7. So μὴ alſo ſignifies, 1 Cor. 9. 4. μὴ ὐκ ἐξουσίαν ἔχομεν, have we not power? And ver. 8.

Ibid. [b] Συστατικῶν ἐπιστολῶν, letters of commendation.] That commendatory epiſtles were ancient in the church, we learn from Tertullian (r), and St Cyprian (s). And that they had their riſe from the teſſeræ hoſpitalitatis among the Heathens, is the opinion of the Reverend Dr Hammond on the place. But others think theſe letters were derived from the Jews, among whom that they were in uſe, as their writings ſo this very place ſhews; for the perſons here mentioned were the Judaizers.

Ver. 2. [c] Ἐγγεγραμμένη ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ἡμῶν, written in our hearts.] This is a frequent phraſe in the Old Teſtament, and among the Jewiſh Doctors, importing, 1. the clearneſs and perſpicuity of what is ſaid to be thus in our hearts, Deut. 30. 11. 14. 15. Rom. 10. 8. 9.; and, 2. our care to have it continually in our minds, and upon our ſpirits, Deut. 6. 6. Prov. 3. 3. and 7. 2. See this proved, note on Heb. 8. 10.

And thus the phraſe is commonly uſed in profane authors, both Greek and Latin. Thus Antiſthenes ſaith to one who had loſt his regiſter or note-book, "Thou ſhouldſt ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ αὐτὰ, καὶ μὴ ἐν ταῖς χάρταις "γράφειν, write theſe things in thy ſoul, and not in "thy papers (t)." So Seneca ſaith of Portius Latro, who made uſe of no books or notes, Aiebat ſe ſcribere animo, "He ſaid he wrote all things in his "mind (u)." So Terence (x), Scripta illa dicta ſunt in animo Chryſidis; which in Pindar (y) is, πάντα φρενὸς ἐμᾶς γέγραπται, it is written in my mind.

So that theſe words may be thus paraphraſed: "We need no letters of commendation to you; for "we well know, and have continually in remem- "brance, how powerfully God wrought with us for "your converſion, ſo that the ſeal of our apoſtleſhip "are you in the Lord, 1 Cor. 9. 2.; the ſigns of an "apoſtle being wrought among you in all patience, in "ſigns, wonders, and in mighty deeds, 2 Cor. 12. "12.; ſo that you are our beſt letters commenda- "tory to yourſelves. Nor need we letters of com- "mendation from you to others, the fame of your "converſion by us, and of the gifts we, with the "goſpel, have imparted to you, being ſpread "throughout the world."

Ver. 3. [d] Ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ, the epiſtle of Chriſt.] His commendatory epiſtle, declaring and commending his power in your converſion, by ſuch ſigns and gifts of the Holy Spirit imparted to you, and exerciſed by us among you, as he enabled us to do: and this epiſtle is written in the fleſhly tables of your hearts, i. e. in your hearts made ſoft, pliable, and ready to obey the word by the operation of the Holy Spirit, according to the promiſe, I will take away the ſtony heart from you, and give you an heart of fleſh, Ezek. 11. 19. and 36. 26.

Ver. 5. [e] Λογίζεσθαί τι, to reaſon any thing as of ourſelves.] The apoſtle, in the ſecond chapter of his firſt epiſtle, contends, that there was a neceſſity of a divine revelation, to enable them to make known to us the truths contained in the goſpel, becauſe human reaſon, without it, was not able to know, or to diſcern them; and therefore here alſo he diſclaims this ſufficiency as of themſelves, without divine aſſiſtance for this work; that is, without thoſe illuminations and powerful operations of the Holy Spirit, which made them able miniſters of the New Teſtament. This text, therefore, is impertinently cited, to ſhew that no man is ſufficient of himſelf to think a good thought, and might as well have been produced to prove him not ſufficient of himſelf to think at all.

Ver. 6. [f] Γράμμα ἀποκτέινει, the letter killeth.] From the expoſition of theſe words given in the paraphraſe, it appears how vain are the imaginations of thoſe men, who, by the killing letter, underſtand not the law condemning to death, but the literal and hiſtorical ſenſe of the ſcriptures in general; and by the life-giving Spirit, the myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe of them. Vain alſo are they who by the letter underſtand the law, as it was underſtood by the Jewiſh doctors in a literal or grammatical ſenſe, by the Spirit, the mind of the lawgiver; it being evident from the whole chapter, that by the letter the apoſtle underſtands the law engraved in ſtones, ver. 3. 7. the law as delivered by Moſes, and as at firſt adminiſtered with an appearance of the glory of the Lord; and by the Spirit, the Spirit of Chriſt, ver. 17. or the Holy Spirit given to the apoſtles to enable them to preach the goſpel, and conferred on thoſe that believed it.

Ver. 7.—11. [g] That the alluſion here from ver. 7. to the 11th may be the better underſtood, let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That the glory of God, or of the Lord, in the Old Teſtament, imports a bright light, or flame included in a cloud, ſtyled the cloud of glory; and becauſe this, whenever it appeared, was a ſymbol of God's glorious preſence, it is ſtyled by the Jews (z), Shechinah, the habitation. So Exod. 16. 7. In the morning ye ſhall ſee the glory of God; and ver. 10. The glory of God abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it ſix days, and the light of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire; chap. 40. 34. A cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, המשכן the habitation of God. This glory, ſaith the author of Coſri (a), is the divine light which God vouchſafeth to his people. By the Shechinah, ſaith Elias, we underſtand the Holy Spirit, as it is evident they do in theſe ſayings, "The Shechinah will not dwell "with ſorrowful or melancholy men. The Shechi- "nah will only dwell with a ſtrong, rich, wiſe, "and humble man. The Shechinah dwells with "the meek. When ten ſit, and ſtudy the law, the "Shechinah dwells among them." See many other inſtances in Buxtorf's lexicon, p. 2396. &c.

2*dly*, Obſerve, That after the covenant made with God at Mount Sinai was broken, Exod. 24. 7. 8. and the law given from Mount Sinai violated by the idolatry of the Jews in making and worſhipping the golden calf, chap. 33. Moſes is again called up into Mount Sinai to renew it, Exod. 34. 27. and God there deſcends to him again in the cloud of glory, ver. 5. and then was it that the ſkin of his face ſhone, to the terror of thoſe that ſaw him, ſo that he was forced to put a veil over his face, ver. 29. 30. And the alluſion here is chiefly to this glory, or ſhining brightneſs of the face of Moſes, when he received the law the ſecond time, as is evident from ver. 7. and from the words here uſed by St Paul, οὐ δεδόξασται τὸ δεδοξασμένον, that which was made glorious was not glorious; for they are the very words uſed by the Septuagint concerning the ſhining of the face of Moſes, Διὸ δεδόξασαι ἡ ὄψις τῷ χρώματι προσώπου αὐτοῦ, Exod. 34. 29. ᾧ ἦν δεδοξασμένη ἡ ὄψις, ver. 30.

3*dly*, Obſerve, that as the glory of the Lord deſcended on the mount, at the delivery of the law, ſo to enable the apoſtles to be able miniſters of the New Teſtament, the Spirit of God deſcended on the apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt in the likeneſs of cloven tongues, or tongues of fire, ſitting upon them, Acts 2. 3.; and as the tabernacle and temple were filled with the glory of God, ſo were they all filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 4.; and as the ſhining of the face of Moſes ſignified the glory of that law which he delivered to the Jews, ſo the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt ſhining forth in theſe ambaſſadors of Chriſt ſignified the glory of the goſpel. Now, ſaith the apoſtle, this glory is more excellent than that which attended the law given by Moſes.

1. Becauſe the glory appearing on Mount Sinai, made the people afraid of death, ſaying, Let not God ſpeak to us any more leſt we die, Exod. 20. 19. neither let us ſee this great fire any more, that we die not, Deut. 18. 16. And when the face of Moſes ſhone, the people were afraid to come nigh him, Exod. 34. 30.; for the law being the miniſtration of death and condemnation, even the glory of it ſtruck a terror into their hearts, and left a fear of death upon their ſpirits, and thus received they the ſpirit of bondage unto fear, Rom. 8. 15. whilſt we have given to us the Spirit of power and love, 2 Tim. 1. 7. and the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father; and to this difference the author to the Hebrews alludes, chap. 12. 18.—24.

2. Moſes with all his glory was only the miniſter

of the law, written in tables of ſtone; the apoſtles, of the goſpel, written in the hearts of believers: he only gave to the Jews the killing letter of the law, they with the goſpel gave the quickening Spirit.

3. The glory which Moſes received at the giving of the law did more and more diminiſh, becauſe his law was to vaniſh away; but the glory which they received from Chriſt, did increaſe from glory to glory, ver. 18. the doctrine they delivered by it being to remain for ever.

Ver. 12. [h] Παῤῥησίᾳ.] This word ſeems to import openneſs and plainneſs of ſpeech. So, he ſpake this, ſaying παῤῥησίᾳ, openly, Mark 8. 32. If thou art the Chriſt, tell us παῤῥησίᾳ, plainly, John 10. 24. Having ſpoiled principalities and powers, he triumphed over them ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, openly, Col. 2. 15. See John 7. 4. 13. and 11. 14. and 16. 25. 29. and 18. 20. And to this ſenſe the oppoſition in theſe words, We uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech, and do not put a veil before our face, as Moſes did, ſeems to lead.

Ver. 13. [i] Εἰς τὸ τέλος τοῦ καταργουμένου, to the end of that which was to be aboliſhed,] i. e. either to Chriſt and his goſpel, as the body veiled under theſe types and ſhadows, Col. 2. 16. 17. or they could not look unto that Chriſt, who is the end of the law for juſtification, Rom. 10. 4. that being only our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, Gal. 3. 24. 25. And here is the Fourth excellency of the goſpel above the law, that whereas that was veiled under types and ſhadows, the goſpel was delivered with great perſpicuity and plainneſs of ſpeech, which is a confirmation of the perſpicuity of the New Teſtament in all things neceſſary.

Ver. 16. [k] Ἡνίκα δ' ἂν ἐπιστρέψῃ πρὸς Κύριον, when it ſhall turn to the Lord.] The apoſtle diſcourſing, ver. 13. of the ſons of Iſrael, of thoſe to whom belonged the old covenant, and to whom the law of Moſes was read, ver. 14. 15. muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak here of the ſame perſons; and then the apoſtle here plainly taketh it for granted that there will come a time when the Jewiſh nation ſhall turn unto the Lord, or be converted to the Chriſtian faith; and ſo looking on Chriſt as the end of the law, and being enlightened by his Spirit, ſhall clearly diſcern the ſpiritual ſenſe of the law, and the true meaning of their own prophecies concerning the Meſſiah. Nor is it any objection againſt this expoſition that the word is ἐπιστρέψῃ, in the ſingular; for as that anſwers well to Iſrael, or the Jewiſh nation, ſo is it a known rule (b), that in the Hebrew tongue a verb of the ſingular number is joined to a noun or a participle plural.

Ver. 17. [l] Ὁ δὲ Κύριος τὸ πνεῦμα ἐστιν, now the Lord is that ſpirit.] The Æthiopian verſion reads not ὁ δὲ, but ὃ δὲ Κύριος, where the Lord is, there is the ſpirit, which makes the ſenſe of theſe words clear; but this reading hath no authority from any ancient copy, or Chriſtian writer. Origen (c) cites the words according to the common reading thrice; nor is it ſuitable to the Greek, which ſhould have been, according to that reading, ὃ δὲ Κύριος ἐκεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα. I therefore prefer the other interpretation, which ſaith, The Lord is the Spirit, as he is the way, the life, John 14. 6. the reſurrection and the life, chap. 11. 15. as being the author and the giver of them: he it is who baptizeth with the Spirit and fire, Matth. 3. 11.; who giveth this good Spirit to all believers, and ſends him to them from the Father, John 7. 38. 39. and 15. 26. and 16. 7.: he is ὁ Κύριος, the Lord, who miniſters to his church all the gifts and operations of the Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 5. Eph. 4. 8. And this interpretation is favoured by the laſt words of the chapter, ἀπὸ Κυρίου πνεύματος, from the Lord of the Spirit; for, through the New Teſtament, where-ever the Spirit of the Lord is mentioned, τὸ πνεῦμα is put before, but never follows the word Κύριος, as according to the common interpretation here it doth. See alſo Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 18. Here are two farther excellencies of the glory of the goſpel above that of the law, viz.

5. That the Jews only ſaw the ſhining of the face of Moſes through a veil, but we behold the glory of the goſpel of Chriſt in the perſon of Chriſt our lawgiver with open face.

6. They ſaw it through a veil, which hindered the reflection or ſhining of it upon them, and ſo this glory ſhone only on the face of Moſes, but not at all upon them; whereas the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhines as in a glaſs, which reflects the image upon us Chriſtians, ſo that we all are tranſformed into the ſame image, deriving the glorious gifts and graces of the Spirit, with the goſpel, from Chriſt the Lord and great diſtributor of them, 1 Cor. 12. 5. and ſo the glory which the Father gave to him, he hath given to us, John 17. 22. It is therefore rather with us as it was with Moſes himſelf, concerning whom God ſpeaketh thus, To whom will I ſpeak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches, and the ſimilitude, τὴν δόξαν Κυρίου, the glory of the Lord ſhall he behold, Numb. 12. 8.: for as he ſaw the glory of God apparently, ſo we with open face behold the glory of the Lord: as he by ſeeing of this glory was changed into the likeneſs of it, and his face ſhone, or was δεδοξασμένη, made glorious: ſo we beholding the glory of God in the face of Jeſus

(c) Contr. Celſum, l. 5. p. 271. in Matth. ed. Huet. p. 219. & p. 253.

Chriſt,

Chriſt, chap. 4. 6. are changed into the ſame glory. But then though this may in ſome meaſure be enlarged to the church in general, in which theſe gifts were exerciſed, I think it chiefly, and more eminently, refers to the apoſtles, mentioned ver. 12. and chap. 4. 1.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. THerefore ſeeing we have this (glorious) miniſtry, as we have received mercy (from God in committing it to us, 1 Tim. 11. 12. ſo) we [a] faint not (under the preſſures to which it doth expoſe us.)

2. But have renounced [b] the hidden things of diſhoneſty, (or ſhame), not walking in craftineſs (and guile), nor handling the word of God deceitfully, (as do your falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers, 2 Cor. 11. 13.), but by manifeſtation of the truth, commending ourſelves to every man's conſcience, (as perſons acting) in the ſight of God.

3. [c] But if (notwithſtanding this manifeſtation of the truth) our goſpel be hid (from any to whom it is preached), it is hid (only) to them that are loſt.

4. In (or among) whom [d] the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, who is the [e] image of God, ſhould ſhine into them.

5. (I ſay the goſpel of Chriſt); for we preach not ourſelves, (as aiming at our own glory or profit in this work), but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, and ourſelves your ſervants for Jeſus ſake.

6. (And this goſpel I ſtyle the goſpel of the glory of Chriſt); for God, who (by ſaying, Let there be light, and there was light) commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, [f] hath (alſo) ſhined in our hearts, to give (us) [g] the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face (or perſon) of Jeſus Chriſt; (or into the hearts of us apoſtles, to give us, and enable us to give to others, the light of the knowledge of God through Chriſt, whoſe ambaſſadors we are. See ver. 7.)

7. But we have this (glorious) treaſure in earthen veſſels, (i. e. in bodies ſubject to be broken with continual preſſures), that the excellency of the power (which preſerves ſuch frail creatures under them, and enables them to do ſuch great things in them), may (appear to) be of God and not of us.

8. (For though) we are troubled (and griped) on every ſide, yet (are we) not (ſo) diſtreſſed (as to be brought unto extremities); we are perplexed, but not (brought) in (to) deſpair (of help from God.)

9. (We are) perſecuted, (or purſued), but not forſaken, (or caſt behind ſo as to loſe the crown we run for); caſt down, but not deſtroyed, (or killed by the fall. See theſe agoniſtical terms explained by Dr Hammond.)

10. Always bearing about in the body (a reſemblance to) the dying of the Lord Jeſus, that [h] the life alſo of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our body.

11. For we who (yet) live, are always delivered up to death for Jeſus ſake, (dying daily, or ſtanding in jeopardy of it every hour, whilſt we are miniſtering the goſpel to you, 1 Cor. 15. 30. 31.), that the life alſo of Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our mortal fleſh, (ſtill expoſed to death by our enemies, but ſtill preſerved in life by the power of Chriſt.)

12. So then (the) death (of Chriſt) worketh (Gr. wrought) in us, (who fill up that which is behind of the ſufferings of Chriſt in our fleſh, Col. 1. 24.), but (the) life (of Chriſt only) [i] in you.

13. (Yet) we having the ſame Spirit of faith, (i. e. the ſame faith wrought by the Spirit), according as it is written (in the pſalms, viz.) [k] I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken; we alſo believe, and therefore (continue ſtill under all theſe ſufferings to) ſpeak (and preach the goſpel of Chriſt.)

14. Knowing that [l] he who raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe up us alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you, (to enjoy his heavenly kingdom together.)

15. For (or and) all (theſe) things (we preach and ſuffer) are for your ſakes, that the abundant grace (conferred upon you by our miniſtry) might, through the thankſgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.

16. For which cauſe we faint not (under the tribulations we thus ſuffer); but though our outward man periſh, yet the [m] inward man is renewed (with vigour and alacrity in the performance of our duty) day by day.

17. For (we know that) our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal [n] weight of glory.

18. (We faint not, I ſay), [o] while we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen; for the things which are ſeen are temporal, but the things which are not ſeen are eternal.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Μὴ ἐκκακεῖν,] is not to ſlacken in, or ceaſe from the performance of an enterpriſe, Luke 18. 1. Gal. 6. 9. 2 Theſſ. 3. 13. particularly μὴ ἐκκακεῖν ἐν θλίψεσι, not to faint under tribulations, Eph. 3. 13. and here, ver. 16. And this ſenſe is confirmed by the words following from ver. 7. to 16.

Ver. 2. [b] Τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχύνης, the hidden things of ſhame.] The apoſtle often ſpeaks of ſome deceivers crept into the church, whoſe glory was in their ſhame, Philip. 3. 19.; whoſe exhortation was attended with uncleanneſs, deceit, and guile, 1 Theſſ. 2. 3. and here, who did the hidden things of ſhame. Now theſe, ſay all the Greek ſcholiaſts, were the falſe apoſtles, τῇ τῦ νόμυ ἐπιμιξία τὸ Θεῖον κήρυγμα διαφθείροντες, who corrupted the goſpel by mixing it with the law; as is apparent from the apoſtle's words; for ſpeaking of theſe falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers, chap. 11. 13. he ſaith, ver. 20. Are they Hebrews? ſo am I: Are they Iſraelites? ſo am I: Are they the ſeed of Abraham? ſo am I. And that the Jewiſh doctors were prone to fornication, uncleanneſs, and adultery, we learn from the apoſtle's queſtion, Thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? Rom. 2. 22. and from the teſtimony of their Joſephus concerning their zealots who profeſſed great ſanctity, but were indeed guilty of theft, treachery, adultery, the hidden things of ſin (d); from the exhortation of St Paul to them to look diligently, leſt there be among them any fornicator, or profane perſon, Heb. 12. 16.; and again, Let marriage be honourable among all, and the bed undefiled; for whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, Heb. 13. 4.; ſee the note there. But this is ſtill more evident from theſe epiſtles to the Corinthians, among whom theſe deceivers had taught, that fornication was a thing lawful, 1 Cor. 6. 12. and ſo had taught them to corrupt the temple of God, 1 Cor. 3. 16. 17.; whence he ſays to them, Let no man deceive you, ver. 18. and demonſtrates to them by many arguments, that fornication was a ſin inconſiſtent with the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, 1 Cor. 6. 13.—20. that it excluded perſons from the kingdom of God, ver. 9. 10. and ſhould exclude them from the ſociety of Chriſtians, chap. 5. 11. Upon all which accounts he ſaith, Neither let us commit fornication, as ſome of the Jews did, 1 Cor. 10. 8. And in his ſecond epiſtle and 12th chapter, he expreſſes his fears, leſt when he came among them he ſhould find many, who, through the ſeduction of thoſe men, had ſinned, and had not repented of the uncleanneſs, fornication, and laſciviouſneſs, which they had committed. That theſe men might be followers of Cerinthus, or of the Ebionites, ſee note on chap. 11. 22. But theſe things do more plainly agree to the ſect of Nicholas, one of the ſeven deacons reſident at Jeruſalem, Acts 6. 5. they being, ſaith St Peter, men walking after the fleſh, in the luſts of the fleſh, 2 Pet. 2. 10. and alluring others through the luſts of the fleſh, ver. 18.; and ſaith St Jude, Men walking after their own luſts, and foaming out their own ſhame, ver. 13. That theſe men were at Pergamus, teaching men to commit fornication, we learn from Rev. 2. 14. 15.; that they were alſo at Epheſus, and ſo near to Corinth, from Rev. 2. 6. and ſo might probably be the perſons noted by St Paul, ſaying, Eph. 5. 11. 12. It is a ſhame to ſpeak of τὰ κρυφῇ γινόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν, the things done by them in ſecret, and that they were at Corinth. See note on 1 Cor. 6. 13. 14. 15.

Ver. 3. [c] Εἰ δὲ ἐστι κεκαλυμμένον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν, if our goſpel be hid.] Hence we learn that the apoſtles delivered the goſpel, in all things neceſſary to be believed or done, with ſufficient plainneſs and perſpicuity; for otherwiſe they could not truly be ſaid to have manifeſted the truth to every man's conſcience. The apoſtle alſo, by declaring, that if this goſpel was hid from any to whom it was preached, it was only hid to them whoſe minds the god of this world had blinded, leſt the light of the glorious goſpel ſhould ſhine in upon them, doth plainly teach, that the goſpel was not hid from them for want of clearneſs on the part of them who preached it, but only by reaſon of that blindneſs which Satan had wrought in them that heard it; ſo that if it were not manifeſt to all, "the fault is not in us, or in the obſcurity of "the goſpel, but in their own blindneſs, for we "hide nothing from them (e):" ſo the fathers.

But here, ſaith Eſthius, the apoſtle ſpeaks not of the ſcriptures to be read, or underſtood by us, but of the goſpel preached by him.

Anſ. To this I anſwer, that the ſcriptures writ and read to them, contain the ſame goſpel of Chriſt which they preached; and as the reading of the law of Moſes is ſtyled the preaching Moſes every Sabbath-day, Acts 15. 21. ſo is the public reading the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament, the preaching Chriſt and his goſpel. What reaſon then can be aſſigned

why they, who confeſſedly preached the goſpel plainly, ſhould write the ſame things to the ſame perſons obſcurely; eſpecially if we conſider that they did τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν, write the ſame things to them for their ſafety, Philip. 3. 1. to put them in remembrance of thoſe things which they knew, and in which they were eſtabliſhed by their preaching, 2 Pet. 1. 13. 14. and to ſtir up their pure minds by way of remembrance, that they might be mindful of the commandments of the apoſtles of our Lord, chap. 3. 1. 2. that by reading them they might underſtand their knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt, Eph. 3. 4.? And were theſe ends beſt proſecuted, or to be obtained by writing that obſcurely which they had plainly preached to them? Moreover, whatſoever things were written aforetime, ſaith the apoſtle, were written for our learning, Rom. 15. 4. and ſurely they who writ after by the ſame Spirit, writ to the ſame end, that they to whom they wrote might be wiſe to that which is good, Rom. 16. 19. that they might underſtand what the will of the Lord is, Eph. 5. 17. or might prove what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God, Rom. 12. 2. And if they writ for our learning and inſtruction in theſe things, to be ſure they writ plainly and clearly as to them, ſince otherwiſe they writ not ſo as to inſtruct and teach, but to confound the reader. Seeing therefore the great end of writing the ſcripture, was to inſtruct the world in the will and mind of God, and the great things of the Chriſtian faith, either we muſt ſay that both the writers of the ſcripture, and the Holy Ghoſt that inſpired them, were defective in ſkill, or in care, ſo to write as to obtain this end; or that their writings are an effectual means to obtain it, which yet they cannot be, unleſs they are plain and clear as to the great things of religion.

In ſhort, every wiſe agent purſues his end by the moſt proper and effectual means: now ſurely, to write plainly, and not obſcurely, is the moſt proper means to inſtruct men by writing; and ſo the apoſtles muſt have uſed this means of inſtructing in their writings, or elſe they cannot be eſteemed wiſe agents.

Ver. 4. [a] Ὁ θεὸς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, the god of this world, &c.] Here obſerve, 1. An hyperbaton, the true ſenſe and poſition of the words being thus, Among whom are the unbelievers, whoſe eyes the god of this world hath blinded, &c. Note, 2. That Satan here is called by St Paul the god of this world, and Eph. 6. 12. the ruler of the darkneſs of this world, agreeably both to the Jewiſh and Chriſtian notion; the firſt aſcribing to him the dominion over all that were not of the religion of the Jews, and introducing God ſpeaking to the angel of death or Satan thus, "Though I have made thee κοσμοκράτορα, a ru-"ler among the creatures of the nations, thou ſhalt "have nothing to do with this people, becauſe they "are my ſons (f);" where alſo it preſently follows, "This is the angel of death, which is called Dark-"neſs." And the Chriſtians allowing him to be ruler over all that were not converted to Chriſtianity, and ſpeaking of that as of the diſpenſation which delivered them from the power of darkneſs into the kingdom of Chriſt, Col. 1. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 9. and turned them from Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. and of the Gentile world, as walking before according to the prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit that worketh in the children of diſobedience, Eph. 2. 2. which had the fathers conſidered, they would not have contended ſo ſtiffly againſt the Marcionites and Manichees, that the god of this world here mentioned was the true God, as both Irenæus (g), and Tertullian (h), Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Photius, Theophylact, and as St Auſtin (i) teſtifies, almoſt all the ancients did; whereas indeed the true God is never repreſented in ſcripture as the God of this world, but as the God of them who are called out of the world; nor is it the deſign of God, but of the devil, to hide the glorious light of the goſpel from the world.

Ibid. [c] Ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ, who is the image of God.] Chriſt ſeems here to be ſtyled the image of God, not in the ſenſe of Theodoret, as being God of God, but rather, as the text inſinuates, with relation to the goſpel, and his mediatory office, in which he hath given us many glorious demonſtrations of the power, wiſdom, the holineſs, purity and juſtice, the mercy, goodneſs and philanthropy of God, Tit. 3. 4.

Ver. 6. [f] Ὅς ἔλαμψε.] Ὅς here ſeems put for ὅτι Θεὸς, he; ſo 1 Cor. 7. 7. ὃς μὲν οὕτως, ὃς δὲ οὕτως, is quidem ſic, ille autem ſic; and chap. 11. 21. ὃς μὲν πεινᾷ, is quidem eſtit, ὃς μὲν μεθύει, ille autem inebriatur.

Ibid. [g] Πρὸς φωτισμὸν τῆς γνώσεως τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God.] Here ſeems to be an alluſion to the ſhining of the face of Moſes, after he had obtained his deſire of ſeeing the glory of God, Exod. 33. 16. 19. upon which δεδόξασται ἡ ὄψις, his face was made glorious, Exod. 34. 29. 30. by reaſon of the glory of God that he had ſeen. This now, ſaith St Paul, belongs to us apoſtles, the glory of God ſhining more glorioufly in the face or perſon of Jeſus Chriſt than ever it did in Moſes, and we beholding with open face the glory of the Lord, chap. 3. 20. whereas the children of Iſrael could not ſtedfaſtly behold the glory of the face of Moſes. Note alſo, that ἐν προσώπῳ is the conſtant reading of the Greek ſcholiaſts.

Ver. 10. [h] Ἵνα καὶ ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, that the life of Jeſus might be made manifeſt.] It being a certain demonſtration that Chriſt is riſen, and ſtill lives, that we who perſuade others to believe this, are enabled to do ſuch mighty wonders in his name, and patiently and conſtantly to ſuffer ſuch fiery trials by his grace.

Ver. 12. [i] Ἐν ὑμῖν, in you.] As being made partakers of the vital efficacy of Chriſt and his ſpiritual gifts, and of an aſſimilation to his reſurrection by a life of holineſs, but not of the like ſufferings with us, 1 Cor. 4. 8. 10.

Ver. 13. [k] Ἐπίστευσα, διὸ ἐλάλησα, I believed, therefore have I ſpoken.] Theſe words of David were ſpoken when the ſorrows of death compaſſed him round about, and the pangs of Sheol caught hold upon him, and yet he believed he ſhould walk before God in the land of the living, Pſal. 116. 3. 9. 10. and therefore are applied by the apoſtle, in the ſpiritual ſenſe of them, to the reſurrection, thus, that as David, notwithſtanding all the perſecutions which he ſuffered from the hands of Saul, firmly believed he ſhould be preſerved, and raiſed to a temporal kingdom; ſo we apoſtles believe that, after all our ſufferings for the goſpel, we ſhall be raiſed and advanced to an heavenly kingdom.

Ver. 14. [l] Ὁ ἐγείρας τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, he that raiſed up the Lord Jeſus.] Here Schlictingius obſerves two things: 1. That our Lord Jeſus did not raiſe up himſelf, but was raiſed from the dead by the Father. 2. That though Chriſt Jeſus ſhall raiſe us up, yet ſhall he do this, not by his own power, but by the power received from the Father. Now here, 1ſt, I acknowledge, that the reſurrection of our Lord is frequently aſcribed in ſcripture to God the Father, Acts 3. 26. and 13. 32. and 17. 31. Rom. 4. 24. and 10. 9. 1 Cor. 6. 14. and 15. 15. Gal. 1. 1. Eph. 1. 20. Col. 2. 12. 1 Theſſ. 1. 9. 10. Heb. 13. 20. 1 Pet. 1. 3. 21.; and the reaſon of the Chriſtian diſpenſation requires it ſhould be ſo, this being a demonſtration that God the Father was ſatisfied with his performances and ſufferings for us, and that he owned him as a true Prophet, and his beloved Son, in that he raiſed him from the dead. But then this is not ſo to be underſtood, as to exclude Chriſt wholly from the ſame action; for he himſelf promiſed to do this, when he ſaid of the temple of his body, Deſtroy this temple, and in three days I will raiſe it up, John 2. 19. 22. And that he did ſo, we learn from this, that after his reſurrection the diſciples believed the word which Jeſus ſpake; whereas, had he not raiſed up himſelf, they could not have believed his word.

Let it then be noted, that our Lord was quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18. even by the Spirit by which he offered up himſelf, Heb. 9. 15. Since then this Spirit of God dwelt in Chriſt, and is by him communicated to all believers, it is eaſy to be underſtood how Chriſt raiſed up himſelf, and yet was raiſed up by the power of God, as the Holy Ghoſt is ſtyled, Luke 1. 35. Thus alſo the reſurrection of the juſt is aſcribed to God the Father, Acts 26. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 14. Heb. 11. 19. 2 Pet. 1. 3. and yet the ſame reſurrection is frequently aſcribed to Chriſt, John 5. 28. and 6. 39. 40. and 11. 27. 1 Cor. 15. 21. 22. 25. 26. Rom. 14. 19. Rev. 3. 18. And this he will effect by the power he hath in himſelf, John 5. 26. by himſelf, John 6. 47. 54. I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; by his word, the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God and live, John 5. 28. by the power by which he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf, Philip. 3. 21. Now, to raiſe the dead being a thing proper to God himſelf, Rom. 4. 7. Acts 26. 8. an inſtance of the power of God, Matth. 22. 29. and the belief of it being faith in God, Heb. 11. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 3. whoſoever hath the power of raiſing all men from the dead muſt have the power of God; the Godhead, the energy of the power of the might of God, Eph. 1. 19. and the whole fulneſs of the Godhead dwelling in him: and if Chriſt did receive this power from the Father, he muſt receive it from him by the communication of the Godhead to him.

Ver. 16. [m] Ὁ ἔσω ἄνθρωπος, the inward man.] Hence we learn, that the diſtinction betwixt the outward and inward man is not of the ſame import with that of the old and the new man, Rom. 6. 6. which is renewed after the image of God in righteouſneſs and holineſs, Eph. 4. 22. Col. 3. 9. 10. but the outward man that periſheth ſignifies only the body; the inward, is only the mind or ſpirit which is in man: ſo that when the apoſtle ſaith in the perſon of a man under the law, I delight in the law of God after the inward man, Rom. 7. 22. he ſaith nothing which intimates that the perſon ſpeaking was renewed in the ſpirit of his mind, but only that his mind was inclined to obey the law of God, though, through the law in his members warring againſt it, he was led captive to the law of ſin.

Ver. 17. [n] Βάρος δόξης, weight of glory.] The Hebrew word כבד which anſwers to βάρος, weight, ſignifies not only multitude, but greatneſs, and in the Rabbins, as well as ſcripture, honourable; ſo Gen. 18. 20. Their ſin was כבדה מאד, very great; ſee Gen. 50. 11. Exod. 9. 3.; honourable; ſo Exod. 20. 12. כבד, Honour thy father and thy mother. See Deut. 28. 58. So that this word may ſignify the magnificence, cence, the abundance, and the honour of the future glory which is prepared for the Chriſtian ſufferer.

Ver. 18. [a] Note hence, that it is not only lawful, but even laudable, after the example of the apoſtles, in our actions and ſufferings, to have reſpect to the recompenſe of reward, that being, by the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt, propounded as our encouragement to do and ſuffer theſe things.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. FOr we know, that if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved, we have (provided for us at the reſtoring of it), [a] a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2. For in this (tabernacle) we groan earneſtly, deſiring [b] to be clothed upon with our houſe which is from heaven.

3. (We are, I ſay, deſirous of this), [c] if ſo be that (or ſeeing that, at the reſurrection) being clothed, we ſhall not be found [d] naked, (i. e. ſince then we ſhall not be found naked, as the wicked, but clothed with a body not ſubject to death.)

4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened, not for that (through impatience under our ſufferings) we would be unclothed, (by putting off the body, but (as deſiring, ver. 2. to be) clothed upon (with our celeſtial body), that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life.

5. Now [e] he that hath wrought us for the ſelf-ſame thing, (i. e. hath wrought in us this earneſt deſire), is God, who hath alſo given to us the earneſt of the Spirit, (whereby we are ſealed up to the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30. and wait for the redemption of the body, Rom. 8. 23.)

6. Therefore (having this earneſt of the Spirit) we are always confident, knowing (Gr. being therefore always confident, and knowing) that whilſt we are at home in the body, we are abſent from the Lord.

7. For (whilſt it is thus with us) we walk by faith (only), not by ſight.

8. [f] We are confident, I ſay, and willing, (we in this confidence are willing), rather to be abſent from (or travel out of) the body, and to be preſent with the Lord, (or at home with him.)

9. Wherefore we labour, that whether (we be) preſent (in) or abſent (from the body), we may be accepted of him (at his appearance.)

10. For we muſt all appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may (then) receive the things done [g] in his body, (or by the body), according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſuade men (to believe we act in all ſincerity and truth, when we propound theſe things to them); but (in this) we are made manifeſt to God, and I truſt alſo (we) are made manifeſt in your conſciences, (and have given you good aſſurance that we act ſincerely.)

12. For we commend not ourſelves again unto you, (as if we doubted of your good opinion of us), but (we ſay theſe things to) give you occaſion to glory on our behalf, that you may have ſomewhat to anſwer them which glory in appearance, and not in heart, (or truth and ſincerity, but either of other mens labours, 2 Cor. 10. 15. or of things not really done by them, 2 Cor. 11. 12.—21.)

13. For whether we be beſide ourſelves, (tranſported in ſpeaking of our raptures, ecſtaſies, and viſions), it is to (do ſervice to) God; or whether we be ſober (in our diſcourſes, not deſiring that others ſhould think of us above what they ſee in us, 2 Cor. 12. 6.), it is for your ſakes.

14. For the love of Chriſt conſtraineth us (thus to promote his glory, and to ſeek your good), becauſe we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; (i. e. obnoxi us to death, and condemned to it for ſin.):

15. And that [h] he died for all, that they who live (by his death), ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him that died for them, (i. e. for their ſins), and roſe again (for their juſtification, Rom. 4. 24. 25.)

16. Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the fleſh, (i. e. according to carnal intereſts, the riches, honours, pleaſures, and advantages of this world, 2 Cor. 1. 17. and 10. 2.); yea, though we have known Chriſt after the fleſh, (expecting him as a temporal king, and hoping for great advancements in his kingdom, as being his diſciples), yet now henceforth [i] know we him (ſo) no more.

17. (And ſo it is with all his ſincere votaries); therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is (become) a new creature, old things are paſſed away, (his affection to all temporal and carnal things); behold [k] all things are become new (in him.)

18. And all (theſe) things (belonging to the new creation, this change of our affections, this conſtraining love), are of God, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt, and hath given (or committed) to us the miniſtry of reconciliation.

19. To wit, that God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf, (and) not imputing their (former) treſpaſſes unto them, and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation.

20. Now then we are ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us, we pray you, in Chriſt's ſtead, be ye [1] reconciled to God.

21. For he hath [m] made him to be (a) ſin-(offering) for us, who (himſelf) knew no ſin, that we might be made (righteous with) the righteouſneſs of God in him.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. [a] Ὀικοδομὴν τῶ Θεῶ ἔχομεν, we have a building of God.] It was the doctrine of the Platoniſts (k), That the ſoul was a kind of being which could not well ſubſiſt or act without a body, and therefore, after her ſeparation from the body, wanted ſome vehicle or clothing, by which ſhe might ſubſiſt and act; and this notion was embraced by Origen, and this text was accordingly interpreted by him: ſee the note on 1 Cor. 15. 44. 45. And according to this notion, good Chriſtians, as ſoon as they depart this life, are not found naked, but clothed with their houſe from heaven, which, at the reſurrection, ſhall be the ἐπενδύμα, or cloathing of their raiſed bodies, which renders them immortal. But the apoſtle cannot here be ſuppoſed to mean, that as ſoon as ever good Chriſtians die, they ſhall be clothed upon with this houſe which is from heaven, but only that they ſhall be ſo at the reſurrection. For, 1. We Chriſtians, ſaith he, groan earneſtly, deſiring to be clothed upon with this houſe, ver. 2. Now, ſaith the ſame apoſtle, we ourſelves groan within ourſelves, waiting for the adoption, that is, the redemption of the body, Rom. 8. 23. 2. They groaned to be clothed upon, that mortality might be ſwallowed up of life, ver. 4. Now, when this corruptible ſhall have put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality, then only ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory, 1 Cor. 15. 54.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἐπενδύσασθαι, to be clothed upon.] By putting over this mortal body an incorruptible and eternal houſe, the Jews ſay, that Adam in his firſt creation being made ἐπ' ἀφθαρσία, for incorruption, Wiſd. 1. 23. his body was covered from corruption veſte onychina, with a clothing like in colour to the nail of the hand. Accordingly the apoſtle repreſents the future bodies raiſed incorruptible, as clothed with an immortal covering, 1 Cor. 15. 53. 54.

Ver. 3. [c] Εἴγε καὶ, if ſo be.] That theſe words may be alſo rendered ſince, and ſeeing that, is evident from ſcripture, and good authors. Thus here, ver. 4. εἰ ſignifies quandoquidem, ſo εἴγε ἠκούσατε, ſeeing ye have heard, Eph. 3. 2.: ſee the note there: and again, Eph. 4. 1.: or elſe, retaining our own verſion, we may give this ſenſe to the words, If ſo be that (then) we ſhall be found clothed (with our celeſtial bodies, and ſo fitted for a bleſſed immortality), and not (as the wicked) naked, (and without this heavenly building.)

Ibid. [d] Γυμνοὶ, naked,] i. e. not clothed upon with another body. So 1 Cor. 15. 37. Thou ſoweſt γυμὸν κόκκον, naked grain, not covered with a blade, or cover of chaff, as when it riſeth up out of the earth it is, or with a cod, as in beans, peaſe, and lentiles. And accordingly, the Rabbins (l) introduce a Samaritan or Gentile inquiring of R. Meir, Whether the dead riſe naked or clothed? and him anſwering thus, That peaſe which are ſown naked, ariſe clothed, or covered with a cod, and much more the dead. But then they ſeem to reſtrain this to the juſt, ſaying, That the juſt ſhall riſe clothed.

Ver. 5. [e] Ὁ κατεργασάμενος ἡμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, he that hath wrought us for the ſelf-ſame thing.] Hence it appears, there is no ground for that dangerous opinion that the apoſtle here ſpeaks as one that believed the general reſurrection and advent of our Lord to judgment would be ſuddenly; for this perſuaſion being falſe, the apoſtle could not, in this ſenſe ſay, We know, that if this earthly tabernacle were diſſolved, we have (immediately) a building of God, i. e. an heavenly body to put on. God could not work them up to this deſire, that they might not be unclothed, i. e. not die, but live to the reſurrection, to be then clothed upon; nor could the apoſtle, conſiſtently with this perſuaſion, introduce the ſame Chriſtians willing to be abſent from the body, that they might be preſent with the Lord. Moreover, in the preceding chapter, ver. 14. he plainly ſays, that they expected to be raiſed up by Jeſus from the dead, and therefore muſt expect to die. See the note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 15.

Ver. 8. [f] Θαῤῥοῦντες δὲ, we are confident,] i. e. we have not only confidence at his appearance, John 2. 28. but always, even in death itſelf, that though it renders us abſent from the body, it will bring us home to Chriſt, and to a nearer fruition of him. Only here note, that, according to the doctrine of all the ancients, the ſouls of pious men are not aſſumed into the higheſt heavens, or the immediate preſence of God and Chriſt inſtantly upon their departure parture hence; for thus only we ſhall be ever preſent with the Lord, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. 17. when by the power of God, at the laſt trump, we ſhall be raiſed up to meet him in the air; this promiſe being made at his ſecond coming to receive his diſciples to himſelf, that where he is, they may be alſo, John 14. 3. But yet, according to all antiquity, the ſouls of pious men, in the mean time, are in the place appointed for them, παρὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ, with the Lord, that is, with him in Paradiſe, where they enjoy the ſight and converſation of their Saviour by way of viſion. "For "Paul and the reſt of the apoſtles," ſaith Polycarp (m), "are in the place appointed for them "with the Lord." "Not only in heaven," ſaith Irenæus (n), "but in paradiſe alſo our Saviour ſhall "be ſeen, as men are worthy to behold him." And this doth Pſeudo Juſtin (o) gather from this very place, "That the ſouls of the juſt go to paradiſe, and "converſe there with Chriſt by viſion."

Ver. 9. I confeſs it is difficult to give the clear ſenſe of the apoſtle's words, from ver. 1. to ver. 9. To do my endeavour farther towards it, obſerve,

1*ſt*, That it cannot be proved from any thing ſaid here, or in any other place of St Paul's epiſtles, that the apoſtle himſelf either thought, or taught others to think, that the coming of Chriſt was not far off, as I have fully proved in the note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. And indeed this doctrine being found by experience to be falſe, had he himſelf aſſerted, or taught others to expect, that the coming of our Lord to judgment was at hand; ſeeing in that he muſt have been miſtaken, and miſled others, what certainty can we have that he was not miſtaken, or did not miſlead others in what elſe he taught in his epiſtles? Thus, ver. 9. if when he ſaid, 1 Cor. 7. 29. 31. Brethren, the time is ſhort, and the ſcheme of the world paſſeth away; he thus dogmatically ſpake not of the time of human life, and the relation we had to the world, and the world to us, but of Chriſt's coming to judgment, and the deſtruction of the world, he certainly taught falſe doctrine. If when he ſaith, chap. 10. 11. That upon them the end of the ages was come, he meant not the laſt, that is, the Jewiſh, concurring with the goſpel age, but the end of the world, he then taught falſe doctrine. If, when he ſaith, Heb. 10. 37. Yet a little while, and he that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry, he meant this not of Chriſt's coming to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the Jewiſh ſtate and nation, but of his coming to the final judgment, he again taught falſe doctrine, and endeavoured to ſupport them with falſe hopes, which ſure muſt be ſufficient to impair his credit in other matters, taught in his epiſtles. Laſtly, That there is no ground for this opinion, is proved, note on ver. 5.: they indeed who had the firſt-fruits of the Spirit in them might wait for his coming, as all good Chriſtians do, but they could not by virtue of his words expect it ſuddenly.

2*dly*, Obſerve, that the apoſtle here cannot intend to aſſert, that good Chriſtians, as ſoon as they die, ſhall inſtantly be clothed upon with their houſe from heaven, but only that they ſhall be ſo at the reſurrection; for, ſaith he, we deſire to be thus clothed upon, that mortality may be ſwallowed up in life; now this he had told us, 1 Cor. 15. 54. was only to be expected at the reſurrection; for when this corruptible ſhall have put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality, then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory.

3*dly*, Obſerve, that the time of the reſurrection of the juſt, being declared to be the time of their recompenſe, their being crowned and like to the angels, and being ever with the Lord, as hath been fully proved in the note on 2 Tim. 4. 5. they had good reaſon to be groaning after the redemption of the body, and that crown of glory which God would give them at that day. But then, ſay they, we do not groan through impatience, under our preſent afflictions; nor, as ſome philoſophers, from an opinion, that the body is the priſon of the ſoul, and hinderance to the knowledge of the truth; and therefore counting it an happineſs to be diveſted of it, but from a vehement deſire of that glorious reſurrection of it, which ſhall complete the happineſs both of ſoul and body, and place us for ever with the Lord.

Laſtly, Obſerve, that at the reſurrection there ſhall not be only an ἔνδυμα, or clothing of the ſoul with its former naked body; but an ἐπένδυμα, a clothing of the body raiſed, with a covering that ſhall preſerve it from corruption; and this is plainly the apoſtle's meaning in the ſimilitude of grain riſing not naked, as it was ſown, but clothed upon, as is proved, note on ver. 3. here, and on 1 Cor. 15. 37. And this, I think, is the meaning of thoſe words, ver. 3. If ſo be, or ſeeing we ſhall be, ἐνδυσάμενοι, clothed upon, as the bodies of the juſt will be, and not γυμνοὶ, naked, as the bodies of the wicked ſhall be. For that the wicked ſhall have immortal bodies at the reſurrection, I no where find clearly delivered in the holy ſcripture, but only that the deſtruction of their bodies, as well as the torment of their ſouls, will be

Ver. 10. [g] Τὰ διὰ τῦ σώμαλος, the things done by the body.] Some manuſcripts read τὰ ἴδια τῦ σώμαλος, propria corporis, the things proper to the body; ſo the vulgar Latin. Both readings do ſufficiently confute the doctrine of the Roman purgatory, and their prayers for the dead, as teaching men ſhall receive hereafter, not according to the prayers of others for them, when they are out of the body, but according to what they themſelves have done in the body. Now, it is ſure, that what the living do of this kind for them after death, they themſelves do not in the body, and ſo no account will be had of it in the great day. And why ſhould they ſuffer before ſuch dreadful pains in purgatory, who afterwards muſt receive rewards or puniſhments, according, not to what they have ſuffered there, but according to what they had done in the fleſh? The fathers here do farther note,

1*ſt*, That the ſame body which was diſſolved, ſhall be raiſed again, and not another; it being abſurd to think that one body ſhould ſin, and yet another ſhould be puniſhed for it; one body ſuffer, another ſhould be crowned for it. So Methodius, Chryſoſtom, and Theophylact.

2*dly*, That the ſoul is to receive its retributions with the body, and not without it, according to Methodius (p), Theodoret (q), and Hilary the Deacon (r), who paſſeth under the name of St Ambroſe.

Ver. 15. [h] Καὶ ὑπὶς πάντων ἀπέθανεν, and he died for all.] Here obſerve,

1*ſt*, That Chriſt died for all, all that were dead, all who are by his death engaged to live to him; as all to whom the knowledge of the goſpel is vouchſafed, are.

2*dly*, That they do certainly miſtake the meaning of theſe words, Then were all dead, who thus interpret them, Then were all obliged to be dead to ſin (s): For, 1. in theſe two verſes, the word ἀπέθανον, dead, is four times uſed, once before, and twice after theſe words, Then were all dead; and both before and after, it undeniably ſignifies death in the proper acceptation of the word: who then can think that the ſecond time in the ſame ſentence, it ſhould import only an obligation to die to ſin, or to ourſelves? Whenſoever in the ſcripture it bears a metaphorical ſenſe, ſome other word is joined to it, which doth inforce that ſenſe; as when we are ſaid to die to ſin, Rom. 6. 2.; to die with Chriſt, Rom. 6. 8. Col. 2. 20.; to die to the law, Gal. 2. 19.; to die to the world, Gal. 6. 14. Col. 3. 3. Here therefore nothing being added to it to inforce that ſenſe, it muſt be deemed alien from the text. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 16. [i] Οὐκ ἔτι γινώσκομεν, we know him ſo no more.] It is manifeſt that the diſciples, whilſt Chriſt was with them, were much addicted to thoſe temporal intereſts, ſtill ſtriving and contending, who among them ſhould be the greateſt in Chriſt's kingdom, Luke 9. 46. and 22. 24. aſking to ſit one at his right hand, the other on his left hand in his kingdom, Mark 10. 37. and ſaying, We have left all, and followed thee, what ſhall we have therefore? Matth. 19. 27. and preſently after his reſurrection inquiring, Wilt thou now, Lord, reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael? Acts 1. 6.; theſe expectations, ſaith the apoſtle, we have now laid aſide, and ſerve Chriſt only for ſpiritual and eternal advantages. Or we may interpret theſe words thus: We know (i. e. reſpect) no man according to the fleſh, (i. e. according to his circumciſion, or his nation), as being an Iſraelite, or of the ſtock of Abraham, as knowing that in Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, — but a new creature, Gal. 6. 15.; and though we Jews at firſt knew Chriſt according to the fleſh, adhering to circumciſion and the law, even after faith in Chriſt, yet now do we not ſo; but all theſe old things are now paſſed away, we being dead to the law, that we might live to God, Gal. 2. 20.; and ſerving him now in newneſs of ſpirit, not in the oldneſs of the letter, Rom. 7. 5.

Ver. 17. [k] Καινὰ πάντα, all things ſhall become new], Καὶ ψυχὴ καινὴ, καὶ σῶμα καινὸν, καὶ λατρεία καινὴ, the ſoul ſhall be renewed in the mind, will, and affections, the body new in its actions, as being made an inſtrument of righteouſneſs, Rom. 6. 13.; the worſhip new, Rom. 7. 6. Philip. 3. 3.; the whole life new, Rom. 6. 4. ſo Chryſoſtom. See this reading vindicated, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 20. [l] Διάμεθα ὑπὶς Χριςῦ καλαλλάγηθι τῷ Θεῷ, be ye reconciled to God.] Here is obſervable againſt the Socinians, a double reconciliation: 1. A reconciliation of God to us; for God was in Chriſt reconciling the world to himſelf through him; and that not by renewing our natures, but by not imputing our treſpaſſes to us. This reconciliation was effected, ſaith the next verſe, by making Chriſt a ſin-offering for us, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him; and this reconciliation is followed with an exhortation on our parts to be reconciled to God.

Object. But Crellius objects, That the reconciliation here mentioned, is aſcribed to God, and ſo it cannot be the appeaſing of his anger by making any ſatisfaction to him; for can it be ſuppoſed, ſaith he, that God being angry, ſhould appeaſe himſelf, and that by making ſatisfaction by another to himſelf?

cannot

Anſ. I anſwer, That the text doth not barely ſay, God reconciled us to himſelf, but that he was reconciling the world to himſelf in Chriſt, that is, by Chriſt, as the means of our reconciliation, or as the ſin-offering by which this reconciliation was procured. It therefore is not neceſſary that theſe words ſhould import, that God being angry, ſhould appeaſe himſelf, but only that he ſhould declare himſelf ſo far appeaſed by Chriſt's ſufferings for us, and ſo well ſatisfied with his blood ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins, that he would not impute thoſe ſins to any that believed in him: the blood of Chriſt made a ſin-offering, making atonement for us, as the blood of the ſin-offering under the law made atonement for the ſinner, and procured the forgiveneſs of his ſins: and if under the law ſatisfaction was made by the ſinner to God, by a beaſt of his own appointing, why may it not be made under the goſpel by a Saviour of his own ſending?

Ver. 21. [m] Ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἁμαρτίαν ἐποίησεν, he made him ſin for us.] The words here being ſacrifical, muſt be explained by their uſe in the old law, when applied to legal ſacrifices. Now, the word ἁμαρτία, which we render ſin, is uſed there cuſtomarily for a ſin-offering, and is well expounded by Oecumenius, τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν θῦμα. So αἴγες, ἔριφος, μόσχος ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτίας, Ezek. 43. 22. 25. 44. 29. 45. 22. 23. 25. So the law of the ſin-offering is ὁ νόμος τῆς ἁμαρτίας, Lev. 6. 25.; the bullock appointed for a ſin-offering is τὸ μοσχάριον τὸ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ὁ μόσχος ὁ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, the bullock of ſin, Exod. 29. 36. Lev. 4. 8. 20.: the goat to be ſacrificed for ſin, is ὁ χίμαιρα ἡ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, the goat of ſin, Lev. 4. 29.: to make ſuch a beaſt a ſin-offering for the people, is, in the ſacrifical phraſe, ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν, ποιεῖν τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, to make it ſin, Lev. 4. 20. and 9. 7. and 14. 18. and 15. 19. Numb. 6. 11. 16. and 8. 12. It cannot therefore be doubted, but that ποιεῖν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἁμαρτίαν τὸν Χριστὸν, doth ſignify here to make Chriſt a ſin-offering, or ſacrifice for ſin for us. The end for which he was thus made a ſacrifice, is this, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him; i. e. that we might be juſtified by God, or might obtain forgiveneſs of ſins, through faith in the blood of this ſin-offering. For δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, the righteouſneſs, or the juſtification of God, in St Paul's ſtyle, ſtill ſignifies the righteouſneſs of faith in Chriſt dying, or ſhedding his blood for us; as in theſe words, δικαιοσύνη γὰρ Θεοῦ, for the righteouſneſs of God in him is revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The juſt ſhall live by his faith, Rom. 1. 17. Again, δικαιοσύνη Θεοῦ, the righteouſneſs of God without the law is manifeſt — to wit, the righteouſneſs of God through faith of Jeſus Chriſt, Rom. 3. 20. 21.; and chap. 10. 3. 4. For they not knowing τὴν δικαιοσύνην τοῦ Θεοῦ, the righteouſneſs of God, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, to the righteouſneſs of God. For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, that is, juſtification, to every one that believeth; Philip. 3. 9. That I may be found in him, not having my own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, but that which is by the faith of Chriſt, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, the righteouſneſs of God by faith. The interpretation therefore given in the paraphraſe is very agreeable to ſcripture; whereas the gloſs of the Socinians puts a continual force upon the words; for where in ſcripture doth ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν ſignify, to treat an innocent perſon as a ſinner? Where is it that, to be made the righteouſneſs of God in Chriſt, doth ſignify our being made new creatures, or our being ſanctified? Where doth God's reconciling us by Jeſus Chriſt, import his converting the world to himſelf by Chriſt, as his ambaſſador? Why is God ſaid not to impute to men their treſpaſſes by the preaching of Chriſt, who preached only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, rather than by the preaching of the apoſtles to the whole Gentile world? How was he made ſin more than they, if he were only treated as a ſinner on the account of the ſame doctrine, which they equally preached, and ſuffered for? And why may not men be ſaid to be made the righteouſneſs of God in the apoſtles, as well as in Chriſt, if this only imports our being converted, and ſo made righteous by the doctrine they, as well as he, delivered?

CHAP. VI.

15. And what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16. And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? (you therefore muſt have none with them), for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath ſaid, I will dwell in them, and walk in (i. e. among) them; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people.

17. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive and (accept) you,

18. And [i] I will be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my ſons and daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Ver. 1. [a] Χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the grace of God.] The grace of God in the Old Teſtament imports his favour and kind affection to us; and in this ſenſe it is ſaid in general, A good man obtaineth ratzon, χάριν παρὰ Κυρίῳ, favour of the Lord, Prov. 3. 34. and 12. 2. or in particular, that ſuch a pious man found, חן, χάριν, grace in the ſight of God, 2 Sam. 15. 25. Gen. 6. 8.; for as when it is ſaid, Gen. 39. 4. 43. 14. and 47. 25. Exod. 3. 21. and 11. 3. and 12. 36. that Joſeph found grace in his maſter's ſight, the meaning is, his maſter ſhewed favour to him; and when it is added, that the Egyptians found grace in the ſight of Joſeph, the meaning is, he was inclined to ſhew favour to them, and grant them corn for their ſubſiſtence: ſo when the ſcripture ſaith, that pious perſons found grace in the ſight of God, the phraſe muſt ſignify God's inclination to ſhew mercy, and bear a kind affection to them. The grace of God in the New Teſtament, when it is not uſed to ſignify the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, bears generally the ſame ſenſe; as when the angel ſaith to Mary, Thou haſt found grace with God, Luke 1. 30.; St Stephen of King David, That he found grace with God, Acts 7. 46.; St Luke, That Jeſus increaſed χάριτι, in grace with God and man, Luke 2. 52.; when Paul and Silas are ſaid to be commended to the grace of God for the work of the miniſtry, Acts 13. 3. and 14. 26. and 15. 40.; this being done by their prayers to God for his favour and aſſiſtance in that work. When men are ſaid to be juſtified by the grace of God, Acts 15. 11. Rom. 3. 24. Eph. 1. 7. and ſo have forgiveneſs of their ſins, according to the riches of his grace, it muſt import the ſame; for juſtification and forgiveneſs of ſin are acts of God's free grace and favour to the ſinner. When it is ſaid, That we are ſaved by the grace of our Lord Jeſus, Acts 15. 11. by grace ye are ſaved, not of works, by grace we are ſaved through faith, Eph. 2. 8. 9.: ſeeing this is ſpoken to men yet alive, and ſo obliged to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling, it cannot mean they were actually ſaved, but only that they were called to a ſtate of ſalvation, enjoyed the means, and were put in the way way of ſalvation by grace, according to thoſe words of the ſame apoſtle, He hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but the grace given us in Chriſt Jeſus, 2 Tim. 1. 9.; and to be thus ſaved by grace, is to be ſaved by the mercy and favour of God to us, according to thoſe words of the apoſtle, When the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour to man appeared, not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but by his mercy he ſaved us, Tit. 3. 4. 5.; it being purely of the mercy and the grace of God, that any nation is called to the knowledge of ſalvation by Chriſt. When the grace of God is ſaid to have abounded towards us, Rom. 5. 15. 20. and 15. 16. that grace is ſtyled the free gift of God. When St Paul ſaith, By the grace of God I am what I am, 1 Cor. 15. 10.; that he was called by his grace, Gal. 1. 15; and that the grace of God was abundant to him, 1 Tim. 1. 13. 14.; he himſelf interprets this of God's great mercy to ſo great a ſinner. When he ſaith, I do not fruſtrate the grace of God, Gal. 2. 21. this he interprets to be God's favour to mankind, in ſending his Son to die for us. The exceeding riches of his grace, Eph. 2. 7. is God's great kindneſs to us in Chriſt Jeſus; and by the grace of God it is that Chriſt taſted death for every man, 2 Tim. 1. 9. Heb. 2. 9.: hence is this goſpel ſtyled, the grace of God which brings ſalvation, Tit. 2. 11.; the grace of God which is able to build us up, and procure us an inheritance among them that are ſanctified, Acts 20. 32.: this alſo muſt be the import of the word, when the apoſtles exhort their converts to continue in the grace of God, Acts 13. 43.; and when they inform us, that God confirmed the word of his grace by doing ſigns and wonders, Acts 14. 3.; and that the law came by Moſes, but grace by Jeſus Chriſt, John 1. 17. See the notes on Heb. 12. 28. and 13. 9. James 4. 6.

Ibid. [b] Μὴ εἰς κένον τὴν χάριν δέξασθαι, not to receive this grace in vain.] This we do, 1. When we do not obtain the end for which it was deſigned, viz. to teach us, denying all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, to live righteouſly, ſoberly, and godly in this preſent world. Thus thoſe oblations which are not acceptable to God, are ſtyled vain oblations, Iſ. 1. 13. and the worſhip which is not according to his will, vain worſhip, Matth. 15. 9. becauſe this worſhip, and theſe oblations, though deſigned to procure God's favour, will not do it. 2. When we receive no benefit by the grace received, and it conveys no pardon or ſalvation to us; ſo upon ſuppoſition, that there will be no reſurrection, your faith is in vain, 1 Cor. 15. 17. and if you retain it not, ye have believed in vain, ver. 2. So to labour in vain, and run in vain, Gal. 2. 2. and 4. 11. is to do theſe things without profit to them for whoſe ſakes they are done: and thoſe are called vain queſtions, and vain words, Tit. 3. 9. and Matth. 12. 36. which are unprofitable.

Ver. 2. [c] Καιρῷ δεκτῷ ἐπήκουσά σε, I have heard thee in a time acceptable.] Theſe are the words of God the Father to Chriſt, ſignifying, that he had accepted his interceſſion for the converſion of the Gentiles, and declaring that he had given him εἰς διαθήκην τῶν ἐθνῶν, for a covenant to the nations, a light to the Gentiles, and his ſalvation to the ends of the earth, Iſ. 49. 6. 8.; and ſo the Jews interpret them (t). That ſalvation, either in the prophet ſpeaking of Chriſt as the ſalvation of the ends of the earth, or in the apoſtle ſpeaking of the day of ſalvation, ſhould mean the deliverance of the Chriſtians from the perſecuting Jews, is very improbable in itſelf, and is confuted by thoſe words, Now is the day of ſalvation; for Chriſtians then groaned under perſecution both from Jew and Gentile; and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which is ſuppoſed to have brought this deliverance to the Chriſtians from the perſecuting Jews, was fourteen years after the writing this epiſtle.

Ver. 4. [d] Θλίψεις,] ſay ſome, imports afflictions in the general; ἀνάγκαι, more grievous troubles; στενοχωρίαι, ſuch preſſures as reduce us to the greateſt ſtraits. See chap. 4. 8. 9. ver. 7. 11. 13.

Ver. 7. [e] Διξιῶν, καὶ ἀριστερῶν, on the right hand, and on the left.] All the Greek ſcholiaſts here underſtand by δεξιὰ, τὰ εὐθυμήσιμα, things proſperous and grateful; by τὰ ἀριστερὰ, τὰ λυπηρὰ πάντα, all things which are grievous or afflictive; inſtructing us, that both theſe things have their temptations, againſt which we are to arm ourſelves; and to ſuch things I have referred them in the paraphraſe. But the ſcholiaſt upon Sophocles informs us (u), that ἀριστερὰ οἱ παλαιοὶ τὰ μωρὰ ἐκάλεν, δέξια δὲ τὰ συνετὰ, that the ancients ſtyled fooliſh things left-handed, but wiſe things dexterous. And in Ariſtophanes (x), μανθάνειν δέξια, is to learn wiſe things; and ſo this armour may be to protect them againſt the follies of the vulgar, and the wiſdom of the philoſophers and wiſe men of the world.

Ver. 11. [f] Τὸ στόμα ἡμῶν ἀνέῳγε πρὸς ὑμᾶς, our mouth is opened to you,] That is, ſay the Greek interpreters, we are ſo full of affection, that we cannot σιγᾶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, be ſilent, or abſtain from declaring our affection to you, and our boaſting of you, 2 Cor. 7. 14. 9. 2. 3.

Ver. 13. [g] Τὴν αὐτὴν δὲ ἀντιμισθίαν ὡς τέκνοις λέγω.] The ſenſe of theſe words ſeems to run thus, λέγω δὲ ὑμῖν ὡς τέκνοις; and I ſay unto you as children, τὴν αὐτὴν δὲ ἀντιμισθίαν ἀναδιξαντες τὴν ἰσότητα τῆς φιλίας ἔχοντες, ſhewing the ſame affection by way of recompenſe, πλατύνθητε καὶ ὑμεῖς, let your hearts and affections be enlarged towards us, as ours are towards you, ver. 11. So Oecumenius and Theophylact.

(t) Pug. fid. part. 2. c. 11. § 21. (u) In Ajace, F. 6. A. (x) Buxt. lex. p. 403.

Ver. 14. Μὴ γινεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις, be not unequally yoked with unbelievers.] Here note, that theſe words cannot be duly brought to prove, that Chriſtians muſt not communicate with vitious perſons at the table of the Lord, though they be Chriſtians in profeſſion, ſince the apoſtle only ſpeaks of unbelievers. 2. The apoſtle here uſeth the very words by which the prophet Iſaiah, chap. 52. 11. exhorts the Jews to preſerve themſelves in Babylon from the contagion of their idolatry, and by which St John exhorts all Chriſtians not to partake of the ſins, or the ſpiritual whoredoms of the beaſt, Rev. 18. 4. He therefore cannot be ſuppoſed to forbid all Chriſtians all converſe even with the unbeliever; for he permits the believing huſband to live with the unbelieving wife, and will not ſuffer the believing wife to depart from her unbelieving huſband, 1 Cor. 7. 12. 13.; he therefore only doth forbid communion with them in actions proper to them as Heathens, and alien from the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, viz. their feaſtings and ſacrifices in the idol-temples, 1 Cor. 8. 10. and 10. 21.: and by analogy, he alſo may be ſuppoſed to forbid Chriſtians to marry with an unbeliever; for this was always held unlawful for the Jews to marry with an Heathen (y), till they became proſelytes to their religion: for, they looking upon themſelves as the pure ſervants of God, Neh. 2. 20. ſee note on 1 Cor. 7. 14. thought it a corruption of the holy ſeed to marry with the people of the earth; and hence, when this was done, Ezra complains, παρέχθη σπέρμα ἅγιον ἐν τοῖς λαοῖς τῶν γῆς, the holy ſeed was mixed with the people of the earth, Ezra 9. 9.; now, the Chriſtians being made an holy nation, a peculiar people, the holy temple in which God by his Spirit dwelt, it ſeemeth as unfit that they ſhould marry with Heatheniſh idolaters; and therefore to ſuch of them as were free the apoſtle ſpeaks thus, Let them marry only in the Lord, 1 Cor. 7. 39. i. e. to one of their own religion: the marriage with an infidel being the cloſeſt conjunction with them, ſubjecting them many times to a neceſſary abſtinence from Chriſtian aſſemblies, and to continual temptations to apoſtaſy, or compliance with their evil manners.

Ver. 18. Ἔσομαι ὑμῖν εἰς πατέρα, I will be to you a father.] Theſe words are not to be found in Jer. 31. 9. but they are the words of God to Solomon the ruler of his people, δικαστὴν ὑμῶν τοῦ εἶναι ἐν υἱοῖς καὶ θυγατράσιν, a judge over his ſons and daughters, Wiſd. 9. 7.; and they begin thus, τὸ δὲ λέγει Κύριος παντοκράτωρ, thus ſaith the Lord almighty, 2 Sam. 7. 8. and ver. 14. ἐγὼ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται μοι εἰς υἱόν, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son, which words are by the apoſtle aſcribed to Chriſt, Heb. 1. 4. 5. and here to all Chriſtians, as being members of his body, and joint-heirs with him. Moreover, the Jews boaſted, that the Divine Majeſty dwelt among them (z). After the days of Jacob, ſaith the book Coſri, holy men increaſed into a great aſſembly, and the Schechinah, or Divine Majeſty, reſted upon them by love, to be their God (a). This favour God here promiſes to pious Chriſtians, as being the true Iſraelites. Again, they alſo thought that purity from uncleanneſs was a neceſſary requiſite to obtain this preſence of God: For God (b), ſay they, doth not appropriate his name to Iſrael to be called their God, but when their camps are holy; but at that very moment that they are ſo, he makes his preſence to dwell among them, and becomes their God; and theſe things the apoſtle, according to the ſcripture-language, here applies to the ſociety of Chriſtians. And, oh! what a powerful argument do they miniſter to all Chriſtians, to cleanſe themſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God, as they deſire this almighty Lord and Protector to be ſtill preſent with them, and would not be obnoxious to the dreadful woe which will certainly follow upon his departure, Hoſ. 9. 12.; as they would have this God to be their God, which is a ſtate of preſent bliſs; for bleſſed are the people who have the Lord for their God; as they would have him related to them as an heavenly Father, which relation ſecures the enjoyment of all bleſſings to them which they daily aſk, Matth. 7. 12.; laſtly, as they deſire to be his ſons and daughters, and by that glorious relation to be made heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. and to have the Spirit of his Son in their hearts, crying, Abba, Father, Gal. 4. 6.?

See the appendix to this chapter, at the end of this epiſtle.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. HAving therefore theſe promiſes (dearly beloved) (of a God thus related to, and dwelling with us), let us cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of the fleſh (all uncleanneſs and intemperance) and ſpirit, (all idolatry), perfecting (or ſtill making progreſs in) holineſs in the fear of (that holy) God (who dwelleth in, and ſtands ſo near related to us.)

2. (And) receive us (into your kind affections; for) we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man (from the truth), we have defrauded no man (as your falſe apoſtles have done, 2 Cor. 11. 3. 20.)

3. I ſpeak not this (with an evil mind) to condemn you (as ſuſpecting ſuch things of us); for I have ſaid before, that you are in our hearts, (chap. 3. 2. ſo that we are ready) to die and live with you, (i. e. we love you ſo affectionately, that we could even die for the promotion of your welfare.)

4. (And therefore) great is my boldneſs (or freedom) of ſpeech towards you, great (alſo) is my glorying of you; I am filled with comfort (for your obedience, ver. 14. and your liberality, 2 Cor. 9. 2.), I am exceeding joyful (on that account) [b] in all our tribulations.

5. (I ſay our tribulations); for when we were come into Macedonia, our fleſh had no reſt (from them), but we were troubled (and preſſed) on every ſide; without were fightings (with the oppoſers of the goſpel), within were fears (leſt the falſe apoſtles ſhould have perverted you from the ſimplicity which is in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 3.)

6. Nevertheleſs, (that) God that comforteth thoſe that are caſt down, comforted us (alſo) by the coming of Titus (with good tidings from you, ver. 13.):

7. And not by his coming only, but by the conſolation wherewith he was comforted in you, (which he diſcovered to us), when he told us your earneſt deſire (to rectify what was amiſs in the matter of the inceſtuous perſon), your mourning (for your miſcarriage in it), your fervent mind towards me, (and zeal againſt my adverſaries); ſo that I rejoiced the more (for his conſolation, than for his coming.)

8. For (therefore) though I made you ſorry with a letter, [c] I do not repent (Gr. I am not ſorry), though I did repent (Gr. though I was ſorry, viz. that I was forced to make you ſo, chap. 2. 4.); for I perceive that the ſame epiſtle made you ſorry, though it were but for a (little) ſeaſon.

9. Now I rejoice, not (barely) that ye were made ſorry, but that ye ſorrowed to repentance; for ye were made ſorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10. For godly ſorrow worketh repentance to ſalvation [d] not to be repented of (Gr. not repented of); but the ſorrow of the world worketh death.

11. For behold, this ſelf-ſame thing that ye ſorrowed after a godly ſort, what carefulneſs it wrought in you (of obeying my directions, ver. 15.), yea, what clearing of yourſelves (from guilt, by inflicting cenſures on the guilty perſon, and putting away evil from among you, 1 Cor. 15. 13.), yea, what indignation (againſt him who had ſo diſhonoured his profeſſion, and defiled the church), yea, what fear (of my diſpleaſure, or the rod I threatened, 1 Cor. 4. 21.), yea, what vehement deſire (to rectify what was amiſs in this matter, ver. 7.), yea, what zeal (for me), yea, what revenge (in puniſhing the delinquent; ſo that) in all things (by this deportment) you have approved yourſelves [e] to be clear (from guilt) in this matter.

12. Wherefore though I wrote (ſo ſeverely) to you, I did it not for his cauſe that had done the wrong, (as delighting in his puniſhment), nor for his cauſe that ſuffered wrong, (i. e. out of particular kindneſs to the father of the inceſtuous perſon), but (chiefly) that our care for you in the ſight of God might appear to you.

13. Therefore we are comforted in your comfort, (i. e. in the comfort we received from your deportment in this matter); yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus (in you), becauſe his ſpirit was refreſhed by you all.

14. For (now) if I have boaſted any thing to him of you, I am not aſhamed; but as we ſpeak all things to you in truth (and ſincerity), even ſo our boaſting which I have made before Titus is found a truth.

15. And his inward affection (Gr. his bowels) is more abundant towards you, whilſt he remembereth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling you received him, (leſt there ſhould be any thing found in you that might offend him, or require my rod.)

16. I rejoice therefore that I (can) have (this) confidence in you in all things.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VII.

Ver. 1. [a] Ἀπὸ παντὸς μολυσμοῦ, from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit.] The ſins of the Corinthians being uncleanneſs and idolatry. See the preface to the firſt epiſtle, and the notes on chap 10. they ſeem to be here more eſpecially intended.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει ἡμῶν, under all our tribulations.] As ἐπὶ ſignifies, Mark 2. 26. Luke 3. 2. and 4. 17. Acts 11. 28. 1 Cor. 6. 1. 6.; or amidſt them, as Luke 12. 14.; or, after them, as Philip. 2. 27. Heb. 9. 15.

Ver. 8. [c] Οὐ μεταμέλομαι, I do not repent.] It ſeems incongruous that the apoſtle ſhould repent of what he writ by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, and to this very end to ſtir up a godly ſorrow in them; and therefore it ſeems better to render the original, οὐ μεταμέλομαι εἰ καὶ μετεμελόμην, with Grotius and others, Non doleo quanquam doluit mihi, "I am not ſorry "now, though I was ſorry when I writ this epiſtle," doing it with many tears, chap. 2. 4.; or thus, "I "do not repent, though I ſhould have repented," viz. if it had not found this good effect upon you.

Ver. 10. [d] Ἀμεταμέλητον, not repented of.] That is, ſuch a change from the ſervice of ſin to the ſervice of God, as we do not revoke, or repent of, by relapſing again into the ſins once left off. Note alſo, That godly ſorrow is not itſelf repentance, but that which tends to work it in us, by preſerving us from relapſing into that offence which created ſo much bitterneſs and anguiſh to us. The ſorrow of the world worketh death, it dries up the moiſture of the body, Prov. 17. 22. and hath killed many, Ecclus 30. 23.

Ver. 11. [e] Ἁγνὸς εἶναι, to be clear.] Note here, that true repentance from ſin clears us from the guilt of it, not only in the ſight of God, but man; ſo that it is both uncharitable and unchriſtian, to ſtigmatize or reproach any perſon for the ſin, we know or believe, he hath truly repented of.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. MOreover, brethren, we do you to wit of (Gr. we make known to you) [a] the grace of God beſtowed on the churches of Macedonia, (Philippi, Theſſalonica, Berea, &c.):

2. How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy (in the Holy Ghoſt appeared, 1 Theſſ. 1. 6.), and their deep poverty abounded [b] to the riches of their liberality, (or how they being very poor, and much afflicted, Acts 16. 20. and 17. 5. 13. did notwithſtanding, with great chearfulneſs and joy, make a rich contribution towards the relief of their poor brethren in Judea.)

3. For to their power (I bear record), yea, and [c] beyond their power (or abilities) they (unſolicited by us) were willing of themſelves (to contribute to the neceſſities of the poor ſaints of Judea):

4. (Not being intreated by us, but) praying us with much intreaty, that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowſhip of miniſtering to the ſaints, (or be one of thoſe who ſhould take care for the adminiſtration and conveyance of it to them, ver. 19. 20. 21. chap. 9. 12. 13. 1 Cor. 16. 4. Acts 24. 17.)

5. And this they did, [d] not as we hoped (or thought the event would be, who could expect only a ſmall collection from men ſo poor and ſo exhauſted), but firſt (they) gave themſelves unto the Lord, (i. e. to his ſervice in it), and unto us (to be employed in the promotion of this charity, or the diſtribution of it to others), by the will of God (moving them ſo to do, or according to his will, 2 Cor. 9. 4.)

6. Inſomuch that (ſeeing this forwardneſs in others) we deſired Titus, that as he had (in his laſt viſit of you) begun, ſo he would (now) finiſh in you the ſame grace (or charity) alſo, (and ſee that ye be not defective in it.)

7. Therefore (Gr. ἀλλ', but) as ye abound in every (other) thing (or gift), in faith, in utterance, and knowledge, (1 Cor. 1. 5.), and in all diligence (to amend what I had blamed you for, 2 Cor. 7. 11.), and in your love to us, (ibid, ver. 7.; ſo) ſee that ye abound (or I pray that ye would abound) in this grace alſo.

8. I ſpeak [e] not (this) by (way of) commandment, but (of advice only, ver. 10.), by occaſion of the forwardneſs of others, and to prove the ſincerity of (c) your love (to Chriſt and his ſaints.)

9. (And command you I need not); for ye know the grace (or kindneſs) of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that [f] though he was rich, (Gr. that being rich), yet for your ſakes he became poor, that (ὑμεῖς) ye through his poverty might be rich; (or as Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius read, that (ἡμεῖς) we through his poverty might be rich; which is the ſame in ſenſe with the other reading.)

10. And herein I give my advice; for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, [g] not only to do, but alſo to be forward [h] a year ago.

11. Now therefore perform (or complete) the doing of it, that as there was a readineſs to will, ſo there may be a performance (of that will) alſo, out of that which ye have.

12. For if there be firſt a willing mind, (whatſoever is given), it is accepted according to that a man hath, [i] and not (expected he ſhould give) according to that he hath not.

13. For I mean not that other men be eaſed, (or by your charity ſhould live at eaſe), and you (in the mean time) burdened (with want.)

14. But (that Chriſtian charity ſhould be managed) by [k] an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a ſupply for their want, that (another time) their abundance alſo may be a ſupply for your want, that there may be equality.

15. (That in your peregrination it may be), as it is written (of the Jews travelling into the wilderneſs, where) he that had gathered much (manna) had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack, (Exod. 16. 18.)

16. But thanks be to God, which put the ſame earneſt care into the heart of Titus for you.

17. For indeed he (not only) accepted the exhortation (I made to him concerning this employment), but being more forward (than I thought to find him), [l] of his own accord he went unto you.

18. And we have ſent with him the brother,

(c) All the Greek ſcholiaſts here read ὑμετέρας.

whoſe

[a] whoſe praiſe is in the goſpel throughout all the churches.

19. And not that (or ſo) only, but who was alſo choſen of the churches to travel with us with this grace (or charity), which is adminiſtered (or diſpenſed) by us to the glory of the ſame Lord, and (to the) declaration of your ready mind (to relieve your poor brethren, or of our ready mind to perform this charitable office; Theodoret and Oecumenius read ἡμῶν.)

20. (We by taking ſuch faithful companions with us) avoiding (or taking care of) this, that no man ſhould blame us (or charge us with inſincerity) in this abundance (of your liberality), which is adminiſtered by us;

21. (And ſo) providing for honeſt (Gr. creditable) things, not only in the ſight of the Lord, but alſo in the ſight of men.

22. And we have ſent with them [a] our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent (in this employment) upon the great confidence that I have in you.

23. Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner, and fellow-helper concerning you (in promoting your welfare and reformation, 2 Cor. 2. 13. and 7. 6. 7.); or (whether) our brethren be inquired of, they are the meſſengers of the churches, and (the promoters of) the glory of Chriſt.

24. Wherefore ſhew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love (to me), and of our boaſting on your behalf, (i. e. that we did not vainly boaſt of your readineſs to perform ſuch works of charity.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VIII.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὴν χάριν Θεοῦ τὴν δεδομένην ἐν, the grace of God beſtowed on,] or the charitable contribution given in the churches of Macedonia, to which they were excited by God's rich grace towards them; for that χάρις ſignifies liberality, appears from ver. 6. I exhorted Titus to finiſh in you χάριν ταύτην, this charitable contribution; and, ver. 7. that ye alſo may abound ἐν τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ, in this liberal contribution; and, ver. 19. who was choſen of the churches to travel with us, σὺν τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ, with this charity to be diſpenſed by us. So chap. 9. 8. God is able to make πᾶσαν χάριν, all liberality abound among you; and 1 Cor. 16. 3. to bring τὴν χάριν, your liberality to the poor Chriſtians. Hence χάριν is by Heſychius and Phavorinus interpreted a gift, as it is here by the apoſtle, ſaying of this abounding charity, Thanks be to God for this unſpeakable gift, chap. 9. 14. 15. This charity is ſtyled the grace of God, either for its exceeding greatneſs, as the cedars of God, and mountains of God, ſignify great mountains and cedars, Pſal. 36. 7. and 80. 11.; ſee note on Acts 7. 20. Gen. 23. 6. and 30. 5. John 4. 3.; or rather as proceeding from God as the giver of this diſpoſition, and the motive to this charity, as the zeal of God, 2 Cor. 11. 2.; the love of God, 2 Cor. 5. 14.; the grace of God, Tit. 2. 11.

Ver. 2. [b] Εἰς τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς ἁπλότητος αὐτῶν, to the riches of their liberality.] So the word ἁπλότης uſually ſignifies both in the Old and New Teſtament. So Prov. 11. 25. ψυχὴ ἁπλῆ, the liberal ſoul ſhall be made fat; Rom. 12. 8. He that giveth, let him do it ἐν ἁπλότητι, with liberality; 2 Cor. 9. 11. being enriched in all things εἰς πᾶσαν ἁπλότητα, to all liberality; and again, ver. 13. James 1. 5. If any man lack wiſdom, let him aſk it of God, who giveth ἁπλῶς, liberally.

Ver. 3. [c] Ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, beyond their power.] Thus Philo (d) notes it as the excellency of a ſervant to engage in his maſter's ſervice, not only readily and laboriouſly, but even ὑπὲρ δύναμιν, beyond his ſtrength.

Ver. 5. [d] Οὐ καθὼς ἠλπίσαμεν, not as we hoped.] The word ἐλπίσας, hoping, is uſed by the Attics (e), ſay grammarians, not only touching good things, but ſimply touching the event of what is future. The word hath two ſenſes which well agree to this place, viz. 1. προσδοκᾶν, to expect; and ſo it is rendered by Heſychius and Phavorinus. 2. To conjecture; ſo Euſtachius ſays, ἀντὶ τοῦ στοχάζεσθαι κέεται τὸ ἔλπεσθαι, the word ſignifies to conjecture. See Ariſtotle ad Nichom. l. 9. c. 4.

Ver. 8. [e] Οὐ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν, not by the way of commandment, or injunction;] i. e. the apoſtle commands not how much they ſhould confer, much leſs that they ſhould give all their ſubſtance, and live upon a common ſtock, leaving nothing to themſelves which they could call their own; for where no man hath any thing of his own, there is no place for liberality.

Ver. 9. [f] Δι' ὑμᾶς ἐπτώχευσε πλούσιος ὤν, being rich, he became poor for you.] Theſe words the Socinians interpret thus, That Chriſt being the only Son of God, conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and endued with the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and being one to whoſe power all things in the earth did yield, was therefore ſtyled rich; and that he became poor when he was bound, led away, expoſed to contempt, ſpit upon, ſmitten on the face, whipped, crucified. But this interpretation ſeems not well conſiſtent with the words of the apoſtle. For,

1. All theſe ſufferings are indeed proper indications of infamy caſt upon him, and ſeeming infirmity in him, but not of poverty, ſeeing the richeſt man may be expoſed to all, or any of theſe things.

2. The words ſeem to imply ſome change in the perſon of whom it is here ſaid, that being rich, he became poor; whereas Chriſt was not leſs the Son of God, or leſs endued with power when he thus ſuffered, as appears by the great miracles he then did. Others of them ſay, that he became poor by leading a poor life on earth. But, 1. It is not by his poverty on earth that we are made rich, but by the humiliation of himſelf. And, 2. He was thus poor from his birth and cradle, even before the Holy Spirit deſcended on him at his baptiſm. How much more naturally therefore are theſe words interpreted by that of the ſame apoſtle, that being in the form of God, and thinking it no robbery to be equal with God, he emptied himſelf of all his glory, when he came to take our nature on him, taking together with it the form of a ſervant, and humbling himſelf to the death, even the death of the croſs? Philip. 2. 7. 8.; ſee the note there: which death, ſaith Irenæus, he could only ſuffer, ἡσυχάσαντος τοῦ λόγου, the divine nature being then quieſcent, and not active in him. This is that glory which he had with the Father before the world was, and which he, after his aſcenſion, reaſſumed, John 17. 5. Now, if Chriſt thus emptied himſelf of his glory, that we might be ſpiritually rich, it becomes us, in imitation of his great example, to part with our temporals to ſupply the exigencies of his needy and afflicted members.

Ver. 10. [g] Οὐ μόνον τὸ ποιῆσαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ θέλειν, not only to do, but to be willing or forward.] It is known that the will goes before the deed, and therefore τὸ θέλειν here cannot barely ſignify to will, but either to do it μετὰ προθυμίας, with readineſs and zeal, as the following verſe interprets it, or with delight, as the word often ſignifies; ſo 1 Sam. 18. 22. θέλει ἐν σοὶ βασιλεὺς, the king delights in thee; ſee 2 Sam. 15. 26. Pſal. 5. 4. and 21. 8. and 40. 12. Eſther 6. 6. 7. and 8. 11. Mal. 3. 1. Matth. 27. 43. in all which places it anſwers to the Hebrew word Chaphetz.

Ibid. [h] Ἀπὸ πέρυσι, a year ago.] The apoſtle had exhorted them, in his epiſtle writ a year ago, to this contribution, 1 Cor. 16. 2. and they, in obedience to his directions, had begun to lay up in ſtore willingly; this charity he now exhorts them to conſummate; and this he ſays, to ſhew they were not only moved to it by the example of the Macedonians, but rather were examples to them, chap. 9. 2.

Ver. 12. [i] Οὐ καθὸ ἂν ἔχει, not according to what he hath not.] What is due to another, either by debt or duty, of making proviſion for thoſe of his own family, cannot be charitably given, as being not our own.

Ver. 14. [k] Ἰσότης, an equality.] So far Chriſtianity ſeems to require this equality, as that we ſhould not ſuffer others to lack the neceſſities of this preſent life, whilſt we abound in them.

Ver. 17. [l] Αὐθαίρετος, of his own accord.] Here we ſee the ſweet harmony there is betwixt the gifts of God and our perſuaſion and free-will. Titus was moved to this work by St Paul's exhortation, and was alſo willing of his own accord; and yet God, ſaith the apoſtle, put this earneſt care into his heart.

Ver. 18. [m] Οὗ ὁ ἔπαινος ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ, διὰ πασῶν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, whoſe praiſe is in the goſpel.] Who this brother was, is much conteſted. Antiquity hath carried it for St Luke, worthy of praiſe in all churches for the goſpel he writ. The authority of this aſſertion ſeems to reſt upon the words of Origen (f), the interpolated Ignatius (g), and St Jerom (h). And this difficulty lies againſt it, that this brother is ſent before St Paul to Corinth with Titus, whereas St Luke went with him to Troas, and from thence to Corinth, Acts 20. 4. 6. ſo Dr Lightfoot. To which it may be anſwered, that it is not certain that St Paul went from Troas to Corinth; perhaps he rather went from Philippi to Corinth, and ſo to Troas. See the preface. And ſo this perſon being choſen by the churches to travel with this charity, ver. 19. might be both ſent before to prepare it, and being returned to give notice to St Paul that it was ready, might go back with him to receive it.

Ver. 22. [n] Τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν, our brother.] Apollos, ſay ſome of the ancients, viz. Theodoret and Oecumenius, who before doubted of them, and ſo was not diſpoſed to come to them, 1 Cor. 16. 12.; but now, upon St Paul's confidence of their readineſs to obey his precepts, was prevailed upon to come.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. (TO me, I ſay, and to thoſe meſſengers of the church); for as touching the miniſtering to the ſaints (in Judea), it is ſuperfluous for me to write to you (again).

2. For I know the [a] forwardneſs of your minds (in that affair), for which I boaſt of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago, and (the fame and example of) your zeal hath provoked very many.

3. Yet have I ſent the brethren, (mentioned, chap. 8. 17. 18.), leſt our boaſting of you ſhould be in vain in this behalf, that, as I ſaid, (chap. 8. 11.), you may be (found) ready.

4. Leſt haply if they of Macedonia (who gave themſelves up to us, chap. 8. 5.) come with me, and find you unprepared, we, that we ſay not you, ſhould be aſhamed in this ſame confident boaſting.

5. Therefore I thought it neceſſary to exhort the (aforeſaid) brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand [b] your bounty, whereof you had notice before, that the ſame might be ready as a matter of (free) bounty, and not (extorted from you with difficulty), as [c] (a matter) of covetouſneſs.

6. But (to preſerve you from this temper) this I ſay, he who ſoweth ſparingly, ſhall reap alſo ſparingly; and he who ſoweth bountifully, ſhall reap alſo bountifully (from God again, Prov. 11. 24. 25.)

7. Every man (then), according as he purpoſeth in his heart, ſo let him give, not grudgingly, or (as) [d] of neceſſity, (to avoid ſhame, or only to comply with the example or importunity of others), for God loveth a chearful giver.

8. And (to this end conſider, that) [e] God is able to make all grace abound towards you, that ye always, having all ſufficiency in all things, may abound in every good (and charitable) work.

9. (According) as it is written, (Pſal. 112. 9.), He hath diſperſed abroad, he hath given to the poor; [f] his righteouſneſs (i. e. his liberality) remaineth for ever (in remembrance before God.)

10. Now (may) he that miniſtereth ſeed to the ſower, both miniſter bread for your food, and multiply your ſeed ſown, and increaſe the fruits of your [g] righteouſneſs.

11. (That you may ſtill make progreſs in them), being enriched in every thing to all bountifulneſs, which cauſeth through us (who diſpenſe it) thankſgiving to God.

12. For the adminiſtration of this ſervice, not only ſupplieth the want of the ſaints, but is abundant alſo by many thankſgivings to (the glory of) God.

13. Whilſt by the experiment of this miniſtration, they (who receive the benefit of it) glorify God for your [h] profeſſed ſubjection to the goſpel of Chriſt, and for your liberal diſtribution to them, and to all men.

14. And (you alſo will receive advantage) by their prayers for you, which long after you, (and earneſtly deſire your welfare), for the exceeding grace of God (they ſee) in you.

15. Thanks be to God for his unſpeakable gift, (i. e. this admirable charity, by which God is ſo much glorified, the goſpel receives ſuch credit, others are ſo much benefited, and you will be ſo plentifully by God rewarded.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IX.

Verſe 2. [a] Τὴν προθυμίαν ὑμῶν, your forwardneſs.] Some tell us that St Paul preached the goſpel at Corinth freely for two reaſons: 1. Becauſe he obſerved in them ſuch a ſaving temper as would hinder the progreſs of the goſpel, if it ſhould prove matter of charge to them. But this cannot be a true account of the matter: 1*ſt*, Becauſe he doth the ſame at Theſſalonica, the metropolis of Macedonian, labouring night and day, becauſe he would not become chargeable to any of them, 1 Theſſ. 2. 6. 9. 2 Theſſ. 3. 8. and throughout all Aſia, ſaying thus to them, You know that theſe hands have miniſtered to my neceſſities, and to thoſe that are with me, Acts 20. 33. And it ſeems plain from his own words, that no church communicated any thing to him but that of Philippi, Philip. 4. 15. 16. 2. Becauſe he commends them for their readineſs and willing mind here, and chap. 8. 11. 19. and mentions the liberality of their contribution, and their unſpeakable gift, with thanks to God, ver. 13. 14. 15. in this chapter in which he doth exhort them to complete it. 3. Becauſe they contributed to others who were falſe apoſtles, and ſuffered them to take of them; ſo he inſinuates in theſe words, If others are partakers of this power over you, are not we much more? This he ſpeaks, ſay Chryſoſtom and the Greek ſcholiaſts, not of Peter, or the other apoſtles, for then he would not have ſaid, Are not we much more partakers of this power than they? ἀλλ' ἑτέρων τινῶν νόθων, but of ſome falſe apoſtles, and corrupters of them, of whom he ſaith, 2 Cor. 11. 20. You ſuffer if a man devour you, if he take of you; which alſo is a confutation of the ſecond pretended reaſon of this abſtinence, that the apoſtle did this to diſappoint the arts of theſe falſe teachers, who preached the goſpel freely, and gloried in ſo doing. See the note on 2 Cor. 11. 12. 13. The apoſtle himſelf gives another reaſon of the doing this, both here and elſewhere, viz. not becauſe we have not power, but to make ourſelves an example to you to follow us, 2 Theſſ. 3. 9. And again, Acts 20. 34. I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo doing you ought to ſupport the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is better to give than to receive.

Ver. 5. [b] Τὴν εὐλογίαν ὑμῶν, your gift,] or preſent to the churches in Judea; for as the Hebrew Beracha, ſo the Greek εὐλογία oft ſignifies a gift, or preſent; as when Jacob ſaith to Eſau, λάβε τὰς εὐλογίας μου, receive my preſent, Gen. 33. 11. and Abigail to David, λάβε τὴν εὐλογίαν ταύτην, receive this gift, 1 Sam. 25. 27. and Naaman to Eliſha, λάβε τὴν εὐλογίαν, receive a gift from thy ſervant, 2 Kings 5 15. See alſo Judg. 1. 15. 1 Sam. 30. 26.

Ibid. [c] Καὶ μὴ ὥσπερ πλεονεξίαν, and not as a matter of covetouſneſs.] The Corinthians abounded, ſaith St Chryſoſtom (i), περὶ τῶν ἄλλων πάντων τῇ τῶν χρημάτων περιουσίᾳ, in wealth above all other cities, as being a very famous mart, and ſo the apoſtle is concerned to ſtir them up to an abundant charity, as he did, ver. 14.; and becauſe riches begat covetouſneſs, he here arms them againſt that vice. Note alſo, that to give alms out of ſhame, or to ſatisfy the importunity of others, rather than out of love and good-will, is a ſymptom of a covetous temper.

Ver. 7. [d] Μὴ ἐξ ἀνάγκης, not of neceſſity.] Note, that neceſſity in ſcripture ſtands oppoſed not to coaction, but to the free election of the will. See the note on Philem. 14. and on 1 Pet. 5. 2.

Ver. 8. [e] Δυνατὸς ὁ Θεὸς, God is able.] Here note, that not only the promiſe, but the power of that God, who is good to all, is a motive to expect his grace and favour. See the note on Rom. 11. 23. Heb. 2. 18. Note, 2. that περισσεύσαι here ſignifies to make, or cauſe to abound; ſo Matth. 13. 22. and 25. 29. Whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given, καὶ περισσευθήσεται, and he ſhall be made to abound; 1 Theſſ. 3. 12. The Lord make you to increaſe, καὶ περισσεύσαι, and to abound in love.

Ver. 9. [f] Ἡ δικαιοσύνη αὐτοῦ, his righteouſneſs,] that is, his liberality, as the word often ſignifies in the Septuagint; ſo Gen. 19. 19. Thou haſt magnified τὴν δικαιοσύνην σου, thy mercy, or kindneſs to me; chap. 13. ταύτλω τὴν δικαιοσύνην, This kindneſs thou ſhalt ſhew me; chap. 24. 27. He hath not left τὴν δικαιοσύνην αὐτοῦ, his kindneſs to Abraham; ſee ver. 49. chap. 32. 10. Exod. 15. 13. and 34. 7. Prov. 20. 28. and 31. 21. Iſ. 63. 7. Hence צדקה is ten times by the Septuagint rendered ἐλεημοσύνη, alms.

Ver. 10. [g] Note that all the Greek ſcholia read δικαιοσύνης, not διακονίας, miniſtry.

Ver. 13. [h] Ἐπὶ τῇ ὑποταγῇ τῆς ὁμολογίας.] Ὁμολογία in the New Teſtament ſtill ſignifies the confeſſion of faith, 1 Tim. 6. 12. 13. Heb. 3. 1. and 4. 14 and 10. 23. ὑποταγὴ, ſubjection to the precepts of that faith. So the apoſtle ſignifies, that men ſeeing in them, by this charity, the ſincerity of their love, chap. 8. 8. and ſo of their obedience to the goſpel, will be induced to glorify God, and own the excellency of that religion which produceth ſuch fruits of righteouſneſs.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. NOw I Paul myſelf (who would not deal ſeverely with you) beſeech you by the meekneſs and gentleneſs of Chriſt, (which I deſire to imitate, even I), who in (or, as to my) preſence am (eſteemed) baſe among you, but being abſent, am (accounted) bold towards you, (ver. 10.)

2. But (whatſoever you eſteem me), I beſeech you that I may not (find reaſon to) be bold when I am preſent, with that confidence wherewith I think (meet) to be bold againſt ſome who think of us as if we walked according to the fleſh, (now ſaying one thing, and then another, according to our carnal intereſts, 2 Cor. 1. 17.)

3. For though we walk in the fleſh, we do not war after the fleſh, (exerciſing our authority in weakneſs.)

4. For [a] the weapons of our warfare are not (weak, If. 31. 3. and) carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of (the) ſtrong holds (of the Gentiles.)

5. Caſting down (their) imaginations (and reaſonings), and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and [b] bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of (the goſpel of) Chriſt; (i. e. making the Gentiles obedient to it, in word and deed, by mighty ſigns and wonders, and by the power of the Spirit of God, Rom. 15. 18. 19.)

6. And having in a readineſs to revenge all (the) diſobedience (of your diſſolute members, chap. 12. 20. 21. and of theſe deceitful workers, by puniſhing them with our ſpiritual rod, 1 Cor. 4. 21.), [c] when your obedience is (or ſhall have been) fulfilled.

7. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance,

(i) Præfatio in epiſt. prim.

pearance, (judging of me from my outward perſon, and the infirmities of my body, ver. 1. 2. and not from the power of Chriſt reſting upon me, 2 Cor. 12. 9. and working by me)? If any man (on account of his gifts) truſt to himſelf that he is Chriſt's (a miniſter of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 23. an apoſtle of Chriſt, ver. 13.), let him of himſelf think (or conclude) this again, that as he is Chriſt's, even ſo are we Chriſt's; (for the proofs of Chriſt ſpeaking in me are not weak, but mighty, 2 Cor. 13. 3. and in nothing are we behind the very chiefeſt apoſtles, chap. 12. 11.)

8. For though I ſhould boaſt ſomewhat more (than I do, or they can do) [a] of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for (your) deſtruction, I ſhould not be aſhamed, (or put to ſhame.)

9. (And this I ſay), that I may not ſeem as if I would terrify you by letters, (as you ſay I do.)

10. [a] For his letters, ſay they, are weighty and powerful, but his [c] bodily preſence is weak, and his ſpeech contemptible.

11. (But) let ſuch an one think (or conclude) this, that ſuch as we are in word by letters, when we are abſent, ſuch will we be alſo in deed, when we are preſent; (for if I come again, I will not ſpare, chap. 13. 2. but puniſh all diſobedience.)

12. (This I ſay only), for we dare not make ourſelves of the number, or compare ourſelves with ſome (among you) who commend themſelves (for their own performances above meaſure, not conſidering how much they fall ſhort of the performances of them they vilify): but they (thus) meaſuring themſelves (only) by themſelves, and comparing themſelves (only) among themſelves, (one falſe apoſtle with another), are not wiſe.

13. [c] But we will not boaſt (Gr. neither will we boaſt) of things without our meaſure, (or the commiſſion given us by Chriſt to go to the Gentiles, Rom. 15. 16. Gal. 2. 7. 9.), but according to the meaſure of the rule, which God hath diſtributed to us, a meaſure to reach even to you (Gentiles, we having preached through all the interjacent provinces from Judea to you of Corinth, Rom. 15. 19.)

14. For we ſtretch not ourſelves beyond our meaſure, as though we reached not to you; for we are come (before any others) as far as to you alſo, in preaching the goſpel of Chriſt:

15. Not boaſting of things without our meaſure, that is, of other mens labours; but having hope, when your faith is increaſed, that we ſhall be enlarged by you (giving teſtimony to our labours) according to our rule (Gr. in reſpect of our line) abundantly,

16. To preach the goſpel in the regions beyond you, and not to boaſt, in another man's line, of things made ready to our hand.

17. But he (of us) that glorieth (of his apoſtleſhip, or miniſtry), let him glory in the (power or aſſiſtance the) Lord (affordeth to render it ſucceſsful.)

18. For not he who commendeth himſelf is (an) approved (miniſter or apoſtle of Chriſt), but (he) whom the Lord commendeth (by his gifts vouchſafed to, and by the power of Chriſt attending on him in that miniſtry.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. X.

Verſe 4. [a] Τὰ ὅπλα τῆς στρατείας ἡμῶν, the weapons of our warfare.] That theſe include the cenſures of the apoſtolical authority, is certain; but that they are to be reſtrained to them, I do not think, but rather that they chiefly do refer to the miraculous powers God hath given them for the converſion of the Gentiles to the Chriſtian faith. Moreover, the apoſtolical rod ſeems not to relate to the power of excommunication, but of inflicting corporal diſeaſes on perſons refractory and diſorderly, and ſeemeth not to have been continued after the death of the apoſtles.

Ver. 5. [b] Αἰχμαλωτίζοντες πᾶν νόημα, captivating every thought.] The apoſtle ſpeaks not here of captivating the reaſon of a Chriſtian to the articles of faith, by his belief of any thing propoſed as ſuch, though never ſo abſurd or contrary to the reaſon of all mankind, as ſome Popiſh doctors lewdly talk; but of captivating the reaſons of Jew and Gentile againſt the Chriſtian faith, by the demonſtration of the Spirit and power, 1 Cor. 2. 4. Captivat intellectum, dum contradicentem ratione vincit, Ambr.

Ver. 6. [c] Ὅταν πληρωθῇ ὑμῶν ἡ ὑπακοὴ, when your obedience is fulfilled.] His love to the Corinthians whom he deſired to ſpare, and the infirm ſtate of their church at preſent, made him chuſe to defer the puniſhment of theſe offenders, till he had wrought off the affections of the Corinthians from their falſe apoſtles, and made them more unanimous in their regards to him; and this is the beſt excuſe that can be made for the neglect of Chriſtian diſcipline in any church, viz. "That there is no place for ſevere "remedies when the diſeaſe hath infected the whole "church (k);" the apoſtle being here forced to yield (k) Neque enim duris remediis locus eſt, ubi tota eccleſia in morbo cubat. Grot. Neque poteſt eſſe ſalutaris correptio, niſi cum ille corripitur qui non habet ſociam multitudinem. to this neceſſity, becauſe the offenders in the church of Corinth being many, they could not eaſily be puniſhed. Accordingly the primitive church relaxed the ſeverity of its diſcipline, when great multitudes were concerned, or ſuch as were like to draw great multitudes after them.

Ver. 8. [a] Περὶ τῆς ἐξουσίας ἡμῶν, of our authority.] The apoſtle ſeems to refer to the authority peculiar to the apoſtles, of inflicting corporal puniſhments on refractory perſons, and delivering them up to Satan; ſee note on 1 Cor. 4. 21. and 5. 5.; which power none of theſe falſe teachers could pretend to, 1 Cor. 4. 19. 20. And this, ſaith he, the Lord hath given me for edification, and not for deſtruction, it being deſigned for revenging mens diſobedience, ver. 6. for the ſaving of the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 5. 5. and to teach men, by what they ſuffer, not to blaſpheme the truth, 1 Tim. 1. 20.

Ver. 10. [c] Ἐπιστολαὶ, letters.] It cannot be hence concluded that St Paul writ more than one epiſtle to them, for nothing is more common than this enallage of number. So Polycarp, writing to the Philippians, ſaith, That St Paul being abſent, ἔγραψεν ὑμῖν ἐπιστολὰς, writ epiſtles to you. See Cotelerius there.

Ibid. [f] Παρουσία τῷ σώματι ἀσθενὴς, his bodily preſence is mean,] ſeems plainly to refer to that which Chryſoſtom (l), Nicephorus, and Lucian relate of St Paul, "that his ſtature was low, his body crooked, and his "head bald," and ſo he was literally κατὰ πρόσωπον ταπεινὸς, low in perſon, ver. 1. When it is added, that his ſpeech was contemptible, this cannot be underſtood as if it were ſo for want of eloquence, or the floridneſs of the Greek, for that was as much wanting in his letters as his ſpeech or ſermons; it therefore ſeemeth to refer to ſome infirmity of his ſpeech in teaching. See note on chap. 12. 7.

Ver. 13. &c. [g]] In theſe four verſes the apoſtle ſeems to advance himſelf above the falſe apoſtles in theſe things: 1. That whereas they could ſhew no commiſſion to preach to the Corinthians, no meaſure by which God had diſtributed the Corinthians to them as their province, he could do ſo, ver. 13. 2. That whereas they went out of their line, leaping from one church to another, he went on orderly in converſion of churches to the faith, from Judea, through all the interjacent provinces till he came to Corinth. 3. Whereas they only came to, and perverted thoſe churches where the faith had been already preached, and ſo could only boaſt of things made ready to their hands, ver. 16. he had ſtill ſtriven to preach the goſpel where Chriſt was not named, leſt he ſhould build upon another man's foundation, Rom. 15. 20.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. WOuld to God you could bear with me a little in (this) [a] my (ſeeming) folly, (in boaſting of my own performances); and indeed bear with me.

2. For (I therefore do it, becauſe) I am jealous over you with a godly jealouſy; for I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, (and deſire) that I may preſent you as [b] a chaſte virgin unto Chriſt (your huſband.)

3. But I fear, leſt by any means, as the ſerpent beguiled [c] Eve through his ſubtilty, ſo your minds ſhould (by the ſubtilty of deceitful workers) be corrupted from the ſimplicity (of the faith) that is in Chriſt; (by mixing the obſervation of the law with the goſpel, as theſe Judaizers did, and ſo returning, as it were, to your former huſband. See note on Rom. 7. 3.)

4. I ſay, I am jealous of you, leſt you be corrupted by theſe falſe apoſtles); for if he that cometh (after me) preacheth another Jeſus (i. e. hath another Saviour to propound to you) whom we have not preached; or if ye receive (from him) another ſpirit (affording ſuch ſpiritual gifts) which ye have not received (from us), or another goſpel which ye have not accepted (or received already), ye might well bear with him (in his pretenſions to exceed us; but this cannot be ſaid.)

5. For I ſuppoſe (in theſe things) I was not a whit behind the very chiefeſt apoſtles, (Peter, James, and John, from whom theſe falſe teachers from Judea may pretend to come, 1 Cor. 1. 12.)

6. (But) though I be [d] rude in ſpeech, yet (am I) not (ſo) in knowledge (of Chriſt and his goſpel); but we have been thoroughly made manifeſt among you in all things (of this nature, chap. 12. 11. 12.)

7. Have I committed an offence in abaſing myſelf (ſo far as to labour with mine own hands), [e] that you might be exalted (by the ſpiritual riches and advantages of the goſpel, and in having an apoſtle more regardful of you than of other churches), becauſe (being chargeable to ſome of them) I have preached to you the goſpel of God freely?

8. [f] I robbed (i. e. made naked) other churches, taking wages (or a ſtipend) of them, to do you ſervice.

9. And when I was preſent with you, and wanted, [g] I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from (Philippi, Philip. 4. 15. 16. in) Macedonia ſupplied; and in all things I have kept myſelf from being burdenſome to you, and ſo will I keep myſelf.

(l) Ὁ τρίπαχυς ἄνθρωπος. Chryſ. tom. 5. p. 972. lin. 40.

10. As the truth of Chriſt is in me, no man ſhall ſtop me of this boaſting in the regions of Achaia.

11. (And) wherefore (do I thus reſolve? Is it) becauſe I love you not? God knows (the contrary.)

12. But what I do (of this kind), that I will (ſtill) do, that I may cut off occaſion (of boaſting) from them which deſire occaſion, [b] that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13. For ſuch are (your) falſe apoſtles, deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt, (ſeeming to do as we do, or deſiring to be thought equal to us in all things.)

14. And no marvel; for Satan himſelf is (ſometimes) transformed into an angel of light, (pretending to do their work, and be a miniſtering ſpirit to them whom he intendeth to deſtroy.)

15. Therefore it is no great thing if his miniſters alſo be transformed as the miniſters of righteouſneſs; whoſe end ſhall be according (not to their ſpecious and hypocritical pretences, but) to their works, (Phil. 3. 18.

16. I ſay again, Let no man think me a fool (in boaſting thus of myſelf); if otherwiſe, yet as a fool receive (i. e. ſuffer) me, that I may boaſt myſelf a little.

17. That which I ſpeak (thus), I ſpeak it not after the Lord, (as commanded by him ſo to ſpeak), but as it were fooliſhly, in this confidence of boaſting, (though the falſe apoſtles have made it neceſſary, and ſo a part of Chriſtian wiſdom, ſo to do, chap. 12. 11. to vindicate my apoſtleſhip, and to confirm you in the truth.)

18. Seeing that many glory after the fleſh, (as being the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh), I will glory (as to that) alſo.

19. (Nor can my ſeeming folly offend you, if you be indeed what you pretend); for you (will) ſuffer fools gladly, ſeeing you yourſelves are wiſe (in your own conceits; or being wiſe you muſt ſuffer fools gladly.)

20. (And ſure I am you can bear with greater matters); for ye ſuffer if a man bring you into bondage to the Jewiſh rites, Gal. 4. 9. and 5. 1.); if a man devour you, (as did the Phariſees widows houſes, living deliciouſly upon your ſubſtance); if a man take of you, (if he take away what is yours); [c] if a man exalt himſelf (above you); if a man ſmite you on the face, (or uſe you contemelioufly.)

21. (That which I ſaid of ſmiting you upon the face), I ſpeak as concerning (the) reproach (they caſt upon you as profane, uncircumciſed, whereas they are all an holy nation), [d] as though we had been weak, (i. e. inferior to them in theſe things, not able to aſcribe to ourſelves theſe advantages as well as they): howbeit, wherein ſoever any is bold (in this kind), I ſpeak fooliſhly, I am bold alſo.

22. (For) [e] are they Hebrews (ſpeaking the Jewiſh language, Philip. 3. 5.)? ſo am I. Are they Iſraelites, (deſcended from beloved Jacob, Mal. 1. 2. not from Eſau)? ſo am I. Are they the ſeed of Abraham, (and not proſelytes)? ſo am I.

23. [f] Are they miniſters of Chriſt? I ſpeak as a fool, I am more (ſo): in labours more abundant (than any of them); in ſtripes above meaſure, (Acts 16. 22. 23.); in priſons more frequent, (ver. 24.); in deaths oft, (1 Cor. 15. 31. 2 Cor. 4. 11.)

24. Of the Jews five times received I forty ſtripes [g] ſave one.

25. Thrice (by the Gentiles) was I beaten with rods, (Acts 16. 23.); once was I ſtoned, (Acts 14. 19.); thrice I ſuffered ſhipwreck; a night and a day I have been [h] in the deep:

26. In journeying often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by my own countrymen, (Acts 20. 3.), in perils by the Heathen, in perils in the city (Damaſcus, Jeruſalem, Epheſus,) in perils in the wilderneſs, in perils in the ſea, in perils among falſe brethren;

27. In wearineſs and painfulneſs, in watchings often, (2 Theſſ. 3. 8.), in hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often, in cold and nakedneſs, (1 Cor. 4. 11. 2 Cor. 6. 5.

28. (And) beſides thoſe things which are without, that which cometh upon me daily (is) the care of all the churches (planted by me, 2 Cor. 7. 5. or by others among the Gentiles, Col. 2. 1.)

29. (For) who (of them) is weak, and I am not (as) weak (in compaſſionating them, and complying with their weakneſs, 1 Cor. 9. 22.)? who is offended, (or ready to fall from his profeſſion), and I burn not (with zeal to recover him?)

30. If I needs muſt glory, I will glory of the things which concern my infirmities, (i. e. rather in my ſufferings for Chriſt than in the great things he hath done by me.]

31. The God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which is bleſſed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not (in any thing I have now ſaid of my ſufferings.)

32. In Damaſcus, the governor under Aretas the king, kept the city of the Damaſcenes with a garriſon, deſirous to apprehend me (in compliance with the Jews:)

33. And through a window in a baſket was I let down by the wall, [i] and eſcaped his hands.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XI.

Verſe 1. [a] ΤΗΣ ἀφροσύνης μου, my folly.] Though the neceſſity which lay on the apoſtle thus to commend himſelf for vindication of his apoſtleſhip, made him free from folly in this matter; yet becauſe ſelf-commendation uſually proceeds from vanity and folly, and they who know not the neceſſity which lay upon him ſo to ſpeak, would be apt to impute this to him, he uſeth this word here, though ſaying, ver. 16. Let no man think me a fool in this my boaſting; and chap. 12. 6. Though I did glory, I ſhould not be a fool.

Ver. 2. [b] Παρθένον ἁγνὴν, a chaſte virgin.] Here is thought to be an alluſion to the ἁρμόσυνοι of the Lacedæmonians, who formed the lives and manners of the virgins, and made them regular, and ſo prepared them for their huſbands. But the Greek commentators agree with our tranſlation, rendering the word ἡρμοσάμην by ἐμνηστευσάμην, I have eſpouſed you. So Phavorinus (m) doth interpret theſe very words. And ſo the word is uſed frequently by Herodotus (n), and it bears the ſame ſenſe in the Septuagint, παρὰ Κυρίῳ ἁρμόζεται γυνὴ ἀνδρί, the wife is eſpouſed to the huſband of the Lord, Prov. 19. 14. As therefore the Jews ſay, that Moſes (o) eſpouſed Iſrael to God in Mount Sinai, when he made them enter into covenant with him; ſo ſaith the apoſtle here, By converting you to the Chriſtian faith, I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, even Chriſt.

Ver. 3. [c] Εὔαν, Eve.] He mentions Eve, not Adam, becauſe ſhe was only perſonally deceived by the ſerpent, and was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, 1 Tim. 2. 14. And he calls this deceit φθόρα, in alluſion to the metaphor of virginity.

Ver. 6. [d] Ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, rude in ſpeech.] This cannot refer to his want of eloquence, or rhetorical artifice in his compoſitions, for this ſeems equally wanting in the epiſtles of St Peter and St James; it therefore muſt refer to ſome imperfection in his ſpeech, which they had not.

Ver. 7. [e] Ἵνα ὑμεῖς ὑψωθῆτε, that you might be exalted.] So St James uſeth the word, ſaying, Let the brother of low degree rejoice ἐν τῷ ὕψει αὐτοῦ, in his exaltation to the riches and privileges of the Chriſtian faith, chap. 1. 9. So the ſong of the virgin mother ſaith, that God, by ſending the Meſſiah, ὕψωσε ταπεινούς, hath exalted them that were low, Luke 1. 52. And Capernaum is ſaid to be ὑψωθῆσα, exalted to heaven, by our Saviour's frequent preaching to them, Luke 10. 15.

Ver. 8. [f] Ἐσύλησα, I robbed.] Συλᾶν, γυμνοῦν, the word ſignifies to make naked, ſaith Phavorinus; to ſpoil, ſay others: for the church of Macedonia, from whom he received his gifts, being poorer than that of Corinth, 2 Cor. 8. 2. might comparatively ſeem by this to be ſpoiled of what was neceſſary for them.

Ver. 9. [g] Οὐ κατενάρκησα ὑμῶν, I ſtunned no body with complaints;] I importuned none of them to ſupply my wants.

Ver. 12. [h] Ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καυχῶνται, that in what they glory.] This moſt interpreters thus gloſs, That whereas the falſe apoſtles glory in preaching the goſpel freely, they may be found even in that to do only what we have ſtill done among you. And true it is, that the Jewiſh writers tell us, that their wiſe men of old would not be nouriſhed ſo from the church, but rather choſe to get their living by their own labour; and therefore uſed to ſay, "It is better "to ſkin dead beaſts, than to ſay to the people, I "am a wiſe man, or a prieſt, therefore nouriſh me;" and that the moſt excellent and perfect of them clave wood, and carried timber, and drew water, and wrought in iron and coals, and neither aſked, nor would receive any thing of the church: and therefore, to make himſelf equal with the beſt of theſe wiſe men of the Jews, St Paul might refuſe maintenance from the churches of Achaia. See Campegius Vitringa de ſynag. vet. l. 3. part. 1. c. 18. p. 884. 885. But this expoſition is liable to this great objection, That the apoſtle ſpeaking to the Corinthians of the ſame perſons, ſaith, Ye ſuffer if a man devour you, if a man take of you, ver. 20. and 1 Cor. 9. 12. If others are partakers of this power, are not we much more? and elſewhere where he repreſents theſe Jewiſh teachers, as counting gain godlineſs, and doing all things for filthy lucre, Philip. 3. 19. 1 Tim. 6. 5. 2 Tim. 3. 2. Tit. 1. 11. Others therefore interpret the words thus: This I will do, that I may cut off occaſion of glory from them who ſeek occaſion, that they might be found even as us. In which thing they would glory; but now they cannot do it, becauſe they are known to receive of you.

Ver. 20. [i] Εἴ τις λαμβάνει.] Supple ἀφ' ὑμῶν, if a man take away what is yours; for this word is uſed, ſaith Phavorinus, when we take that which the owner is not willing to part with. So the word ſignifies, in Chriſt's exhortation to the church of Philadelphia,

(n) Ἄρμοσαι τῶν Μιλησίων θυγατέρα Δημοκήδης γυναῖκα. Herod. l. 3. c. 138. Ἁρμοσάμενος Τέλλου θυγατέρα. 5. 47. Παυσανίης ἡρμόσατο θυγατέρα. Ibid.

to retain what ſhe had, ἵνα μηδὶς λάβῃ τὸν στέφανόν σου, that none may take away thy crown, Rev. 3. 11.; and when it was given to the angel, λαβεῖν τὴν εἰρήνην ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς, to take away peace from the earth. So P. Gregory interprets theſe words (p), Si quis rapit, accipere enim aliquando dicimus auferre. So the Hebrew word Lakac is rendered by the Septuagint, ἀπολαμβάνω, ἁρπάζειν, αἴρειν, ἀφαιρεῖν. Others render the words thus, If a man makes a gain of you. So Budæus ſaith, λαμβάνειν is κερδαίνειν, to gain. So 2 Cor. 12. 16. δόλῳ ὑμᾶς ἔλαβον; did I take you by guile? is interpreted by ἐπλεονέκτησα ὑμᾶς; did I make a gain of you? ver. 17. 18. And for this ſenſe our Gataker pleads in his Adverſaria, giving many inſtances, where not only λῆμμα and λῆψις nouns derived from λαμβάνειν, but alſo where τὸ λαβεῖν bears this ſenſe. Adverſar. c. 27. p. 293.

Ibid. [ᵏ Εἴ τις ἐπαίρεται, if a man exalts himſelf.] The Jews had a very high opinion of themſelves, as being the ſeed of Abraham, and ſo of noble birth; ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 26.; the people of God, and ſo holy and beloved of him; his firſt-born and only begotten, for whom the world was made, 2 Eſd. 6. 59. 60. Hence in their prayers to God they ſay, Populus tuus ſumus fœderati tui; progenies Abrahami, amici tui, cui ſacramento fidem tuam obſtrinxiſti in monte Moriæ; ſemen Iſaachi dilecti tui, qui ligatus fuit ſuper altari tuo; cœtus Jacobi filii tui, primogeniti tui, &c. And they had as mean and deſpicable thoughts of all other men, whom therefore they inſulted over, calling them the people of the earth, the profane (q); yea, likening them to dogs, ſee note on Philip. 3. 2. and ſpittle, 2 Eſd. 6. 56. 57. And from this opinion, That the world was made for them, ſee note on 1 Cor. 3. 22. they might eaſily conclude, that it was lawful for them to take it away from others, as being uſurpers of it. Hence Buxtorf cites this paſſage from the Talmud (r), "That all the poſſeſſions "of the Gentiles are as common; he that firſt ſeizes "on them is lord of them."

Ver. 21. [ˡ Ὡς ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἠδυνήσαμεν, as if we were weak.] To be weak in this epiſtle, chap. 13. is to be unable to exerciſe the apoſtolical rod, or the power that Chriſt had given them to inflict cenſures and diſeaſes on the refractory, ver. 3. 4. 9. Τολμᾶν, to be bold, is to exerciſe theſe cenſures on the diſobedient, chap. 10. 2. where the apoſtle argues for this boldneſs, ver. 7. as here, Are they Chriſt's miniſters? ſo are we; and adds, as here, ver. 8. that he could glory of the power Chriſt had given him for edification, and not for deſtruction: ſo that the import of theſe words ſeems to be this. "You ſuffer patiently from theſe "falſe prophets, as if their power over you was to be "dreaded, (though indeed there was nothing in it "beſides big words, 1 Cor. 4. 19. ſee note on chap. "5. 3.), but we to be deſpiſed as weak, and having "no power you need to dread; whereas we ſhall be "as bold as they, if you do not reform, as being "much more the miniſters of Chriſt, and having "ſuffered more to ſhew our fidelity to him; and "therefore having greater reaſon to expect his "powerful aſſiſtance than they have."

Ver. 22. [ᵐ Ἑβραῖοί εἰσι; Ἰσραηλῖταί εἰσι; Are they Hebrews? are they Iſraelites?] Here is a certain indication that theſe falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers were not originally Samaritans, as Simon Magus, Doſitheus, and their followers were, but of the Jewiſh extract. 2*dly*, That they were Jews converted to, and ſtill owning, and preaching up the faith of Chriſt, as is evident from the words following, Are they miniſters of Chriſt? ſo am I; as alſo from chap. 10. 7. It therefore ſeems that they muſt be of the ſect of Cerinthus (s), that great ſtickler againſt St Paul for the neceſſity of circumciſing the Gentiles, and for their obſervation of the law of Moſes; or the Nazarenes, or Ebionites: for theſe are not the names of perſons who were the authors of any ſects, but of the Jews which believed in Jeſus (t), and yet were zealous obſervers of the law of Moſes. Now, theſe Jews, before they believed, were of two ſorts; ſuch as admitted other nations to live quietly among them, and even to embrace their religion without circumciſion; and ſuch as by no means would permit them ſo to do. Thus when Izates, the ſon of Helen Queen of Adiabene, embraced the Jewiſh religion, Ananias declared he might do it without circumciſion (u); but Eleazar maintained, that it was ἀσέβεια; great impiety to remain uncircumciſed (x). And when two eminent perſons of Traconites fled to Joſephus, the zealots among the Jews were urgent for their circumciſion, if they would abide with them (y); but Joſephus perſuaded the multitude againſt it.

And

And this controverſy continued after they embraced Chriſtianity, ſome allowing them to embrace Chriſtianity without ſubmitting to circumciſion and the Jewiſh law, others contending that without circumciſion, and the obſervance of the law, they could not be ſaved. And theſe were the falſe apoſtles which troubled the churches of Corinth, Galatia, Philippi, and were great enemies to St Paul, who taught the contrary. So Epiphanius informs us of the Cerinthians (z); adding alſo of the Nazarens, that they in all things accorded with the doctrines of the Cerinthians. And certain it is, that ſuch perſons went from Judea, and gave great diſturbance to all Chriſtian churches, eſpecially to thoſe which had been planted by St Paul; for in the firſt epiſtle to Timothy, and that to Titus, we have mention of thoſe of the circumciſion who were vain talkers and deceivers, Tit. 1. 10. 11. 1 Tim. 1. 4. 6. chap. 6. 4. 5. See Gal. 4. 9. 10. and 6. 12. 13. Philip. 3. 2. Col. 2. 16. 20.

Ver. 23. [a] Note here, that the apoſtle proves the truth of his miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, not, as elſewhere, from the miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, which accompanied his preaching; but from his ſufferings, as being the things theſe falſe apoſtles could not pretend to, Gal. 5. 11. and 6. 12.; and ſo could not glory that they were like unto him in them, ver. 13.

Ver. 24. [b] Παρὰ μίαν, ſave one.] The law aſſigned forty ſtripes to them that were worthy to be beaten, but forbade them to exceed that number, Deut. 25. 3.; but it being their cuſtom to beat them with a whip that had three cords, and ſo every ſtroke with it going for three, they could only give them thirty-nine, or forty-two, which would have exceeded the number appointed by the law; and therefore Joſephus ſays (a), "He that did contrary to the law, "received by a public whip forty ſtripes ſave "one."

Ver. 25. [c] Ἐν τῷ βυθῷ, in the deep.] This cannot well be underſtood of the priſon at Cyzicum; for we never read that St Paul preached there; nor of the ſhipwreck mentioned, Acts 27. for that happened after the writing of this epiſtle; but probably of ſome of the other ſhipwrecks mentioned here, in which he might be ſo long toſſed to and fro in the ſea, upon ſome broken piece of a ſhip, before he got to land, as Joſephus ſaith he was (b). Theodoret ſaith he was put into a priſon, ſo called at Lyſtra; but of this we read nothing in the Acts of the apoſtles, chap. 14. where St Luke gives an account of his treatment there.

Ver. 33. [d] Ἐξέφυγον. Of ſuch a flight as only is deſigned to preſerve us ſtill in a capacity of preaching the goſpel, eſpecially where our charge is not any ſettled church, but the church in general, or as St Paul's was, the whole Gentile world; St Auſtin ſpeaks well thus (c), "Quicunque iſto modo fugit, ut eccle-"ſiæ neceſſarium miniſterium, eo fugiente, non de-"ſit, facit quod Dominus præcepit, ſive permiſit; "qui autem ſic fugit, ut gregi Chriſti ea, quibus "ſpiritualiter vivit, alimenta ſubtrahantur: merce-"narius ille eſt, qui vidit lupum venientem et fu-"git, quoniam non eſt ei cura de ovibus."

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. [a] IT is not expedient for me doubtleſs to glory; (but ſince it may be ſo to you), I will come to viſions and revelations of the Lord.

2. I knew a man in Chriſt above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth); (I ſay, I knew) ſuch an one caught up to the third heaven, (the habitation of the bleſſed angels, and of the Majeſty of God.)

3. And (again) I knew ſuch a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth),

4. How that he was (at another time) [b] caught up into paradiſe, and (there) heard unſpeakable words, which it is not lawful (or poſſible) for a man to utter.

5. Of ſuch a one (thus rapt out of himſelf) will I glory: yet (or but) of myſelf (as I appear to you in my own perſon) I will not glory (willingly), but in mine infirmities.

6. (Not that I really eſteem it a folly ſo to do, though in compliance with you I do ſtyle it fooliſhneſs, 2 Cor. 11. 1. 16. 17. and 12. 11.); for though I ſhould deſire to glory (of theſe things), I ſhall not be a fool; for I will (ſhall only) ſay the truth: but now I forbear (even to ſpeak of that), leſt any man ſhould think of me above that which he ſees me to be, or hear-

eth of me (above what my conſtant words and actions teſtify of me.)

7. And leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure through the abundance of the revelations (vouchſafed to me), there was given to me a thorn in the fleſh, [c] the meſſenger of Satan to buffet me, (or, that a meſſenger of Satan might buffet me), leſt I ſhould be exalted above meaſure.

8. For this thing [d] I beſought the Lord (Chriſt, ver. 9.) thrice, that it might depart from me, (i. e. that I might be delivered from this thorn in my fleſh.)

9. And he ſaid unto me, My grace (or favour) is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect (and ſhewed more illuſtriouſly) in (this thy) weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may (more conſpicuouſly appear to) reſt upon me.

10. Therefore I take pleaſure in (theſe) infirmities (of the fleſh), in (the) reproaches (I ſuffer upon that account), in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake: for when I am (thus) weak (in myſelf), then am I ſtrong (in the power of Chriſt. This latter clauſe is in all the Greek ſcholiaſts.)

11. I am become (as) a fool in glorying (thus, but) ye have compelled me (to it); for I ought (rather) to have been commended of you: for in nothing am I behind the very chieſeſt apoſtles, though I be nothing (of myſelf, but through the grace of God I am what I am, 1 Cor. 15. 10.)

12. Truly the ſigns of an apoſtle were wrought among you (by me) in all patience, in ſigns, and wonders, and (in) mighty deeds. (See the note on Heb. 2. 4.)

13. For what is it wherein you were inferior to other churches, except (it were in this) that I myſelf was not burdenſome to you? forgive me this wrong.

14. Behold, the third [e] time I am ready to come to you; and I will (ſtill continue) not (to) be burdenſome to you; for I ſeek not yours, but you: [f] for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15. And I (like a good ſpiritual father) will very gladly ſpend (my ſpiritual treaſures on you), and be ſpent (myſelf) for you, though the more abundantly I love you, the leſs I be loved.

16. But be it ſo, I did not burden you (myſelf): nevertheleſs (it may be ſuggeſted by ſome, that), being crafty, I caught you with guile, (getting much from you by the means of others.)

17. (I aſk therefore), Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I ſent unto you?

18. I deſired Titus (to go to you), and with him I ſent a brother: Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the ſame ſpirit? walked we not in the ſame ſteps?

19. Again, think you that we excuſe ourſelves unto you (by ſpecious pretences, when we ſay that we deferred our coming, that we might ſpare you, and be helpers of your joy, 2 Cor. 2. 23. 24.)? we ſpeak (as) before God in Chriſt, (calling him again to record that we uſe no ſuch arts); but we do all things, dearly beloved, (as we did that), for your edifying.

20. (And too much reaſon had we ſo to do); for (yet) I fear, leſt when I come, I ſhall not find you ſuch as I would, and that I ſhall be found unto you (by inflicting neceſſary cenſures and puniſhments upon you) ſuch as you would not; leſt there be debates, envyings, wraths, ſtrifes, backbitings, whiſperings, ſwellings, tumults, (the uſual and almoſt neceſſary conſequence of ſchiſms and factions in a church):

21. And leſt when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and that I ſhall (find reaſon to) bewail many who have ſinned already, [g] and have not repented of the uncleanneſs, and fornication, and laſciviouſneſs which they have committed, (after the example, and by the inſtigation of their falſe teachers, who themſelves practiſe the hidden things of ſhame, 2 Cor. 4. 2. and whoſe exhortation is of uncleanneſs, 1 Theſſ. 2. 3.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XII.

Verſe 1. [a] Καυχᾶσθαι δὴ ὐ συμφέρει.] All the Greek ſcholiaſts own our reading of theſe words, which may from the Greek be rendered, Surely it profiteth (or it advantageth) not me to glory, for I ſhall come to viſions; and then the ſenſe may be ſupplied thus, But it may be ſo to you; for I ſhall come to viſions and revelations of the Lord, in which I ſhall give ſuch an evidence of the favour of Chriſt to me, ſuch a teſtimony of my miſſion from heaven, as none of theſe falſe apoſtles or deceitful workers can pretend to.

Ibid. Καυχᾶσθαι δὴ ὐ συμφέρει μοι, it becomes not me to glory.] St Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, all agree in this reading, making no mention of the other, οὐ καυχᾶσθαι δεῖ, which therefore is to be rejected.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἁρπαγέντα.] Here, 1. it is inquired, Whether St Paul was either, as to ſoul only, or as to ſoul and body jointly, rapt into heaven or paradiſe, as the Spirit ἥρπασεν, caught up Philip, Acts 8. 39.; or whether he only had a viſion of theſe things on earth, as the Spirit took up Ezekiel in a viſion, Ezek. 11. 24. and as St John was carried away into the wilderneſs? I incline to the opinion that this was a real rapture, as being moſt agreeable, 1ſt, to the words, ἁρπάγη ἕως, he was ſnatched up as far as to the third heaven, heaven, and ἡρπάγη εἰς παράδεισον, he was ſnatched up into paradiſe; for theſe words do not well agree to a viſion, or to an ecſtaſy. As for the ſeeming raptures of Ezekiel and St John, the text plainly informs us, that they were not real, by ſaying, The Spirit took me up, and brought me in a viſion by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, Ezek. 11. 24.; and again, The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the Spirit of the Lord, and ſet me down in the midſt of the valley that was full of bones, chap. 37. 1.: and of St John, He carried me away in the Spirit into the wilderneſs, Rev. 17. 3.; and chap. 21. 10. He carried me in the Spirit to a great and high mountain. In theſe two inſtances all is expreſsly ſaid to be done ἐν πνεύματι, in the Spirit; but nothing of this nature is intimated in St Paul's rapture. If you ſay he owns that this was done ἐν ὁπτασίᾳ, in a viſion; I anſwer, He ſeems not to ſay ſo, but only that in this rapture he had a viſion of the Lord. 2*dly*, He ſays, He cannot tell whether he was then in the body, or out of the body; whereas in all imaginary viſions the ſoul continues in the body. 3*dly*, He adds, That he heard there unſpeakable words, which intimates that he was really in Paradiſe.

Q. 2. A ſecond inquiry is, Whether St Paul here ſpeaks of one viſion or rapture only, or of more? I anſwer, The opinion of all the ancients ſeems to have been this, that he was rapt at ſeveral times, into ſeveral places, and conſequently that he ſpeaks of more raptures than one. Irenæus ſaith, "That he "was caught up into the third heaven, and again "was carried into Paradiſe (d)." So alſo ſay Tertullian and Pſeud-Ambroſius (e). Epiphanius ſpeaks thus, "Who can hear the opinion of Origen, which "placed Paradiſe in the third heaven (f)?" And this appears highly probable: 1. From theſe words, I will proceed to viſions and revelations of the Lord; which intimates that he would ſpeak of more than one: and from ver. 7. Leſt he ſhould be exalted τῇ ὑπερβολῇ τῶν ἀποκαλύψεων, with this multitude of revelations. 2*dly*, Methodius of old did well infer this, from the repetition of thoſe words, Whether in the body, &c. for ſuch a repetition muſt have been needleſs concerning one and the ſame viſion. "For "hence," ſaith he, "he intimates, that he had ſeen "two great viſions, being twice aſſumed, firſt into "the third heaven, and then into Paradiſe (g)." Hence therefore it doth not follow that Paradiſe is in the third heaven, as later writers have hence gathered, againſt the opinion of all the ancient Chriſtians: and therefore Epiphanius anſwers to this text produced by Origen, "by ſaying he was rapt up into "the third heaven, and after adding into Paradiſe, "he ſhews heaven to be in one place, and Paradiſe "in another (h)." Though therefore the third heaven here, according to the language and diſtinction of the Jews, doth ſignify the angelic heaven; it doth not follow hence, that Paradiſe, into which the apoſtle was caught up, at another time, and in another viſion, muſt ſignify the third heaven.

3*dly*, Hence we may ſtrongly argue for the diſtinction of the ſoul from the body, and its capacity to receive and underſtand celeſtial things in ſeparation from the body; for if the ſoul be not diſtinguiſhed from the body, nor is capable of any viſion or revelation when out of the body, there remains no foundation for the apoſtle's doubt, whether he had theſe viſions in the body, or out of the body, there being a neceſſity, upon that ſuppoſition, to have them in the body, or not at all.

Ver. 7. Ἄγγελος Σατᾶν.] They who interpret this meſſenger of Satan, and thorn in the fleſh, of the motions of concupiſcence, and the ſuggeſtions of luſt ariſing in Paul, are guilty of a great miſtake: for this thorn in the fleſh was given him of God, who raiſeth in us no impure luſtings, James 1. 13. 14. 15. and never cures one ſin by another; nor would St Paul have wiſhed that all men ſhould have been as he, if he had felt theſe burnings, nor would he have refuſed that remedy againſt them he preſcribed to others, 1 Cor. 7. 7. 9. nor could he have gloried, much leſs took pleaſure in theſe infirmities, as here, ver. 9. 10. he doth in this thorn in the fleſh. In a word, by confeſſing ſuch impure motions lodged in his breaſt, he would not have defended his reputation againſt his adverſaries, but rather given them freſh occaſion to reproach him, and would have rendered his threats againſt the unclean, chap. 12. 21. leſs prevalent. Let it be then obſerved,

1*ſt*, That this thorn in the fleſh was ſurely ſome infirmity in the fleſh or body of St Paul. So doth St Paul himſelf inform us, by ſaying, τὸν πειρασμὸν μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου, ὐκ ἐξουθενήσατε, οὐδὲ ἐξεπτύσατε, you did not count me as nothing, nor ſpit upon me, becauſe of my temptation which was in my fleſh, Gal. 4. 14. but received me (notwithſtanding) as an angel or meſſenger of God. Whence two things are obſervable, 1. That this thorn, or this temptation, was in his fleſh, or in his his body. And, 2. That it was ſuch as rendered him in his preaching obnoxious to great contempt, and made him deſpicable in the eyes of others.

2*dly*, It is highly probable that this infirmity in the fleſh happened to him after theſe viſions and revelations of which he here ſpeaks; for he ſaith, it was ſent to, or befel him, that he might not be exalted through the multitude of his revelations; and therefore muſt be given him after he had that temptation they afforded to exalt himſelf.

3*dly*, It is certain that it was ſome infirmity of the fleſh which naturally tended to obſtruct the efficacy of his preaching, and rendered his miniſtry leſs grateful and acceptable to others, and made him ſubject to reproach and to contempt in the diſcharge of this his function. This is extremely evident from the place cited from Gal. 4. 14. where, ſaith Theodoret, καίτοι πολλὴν ἔφερον ἐπὶ τῷ σώματι ἀτιμίαν, though I brought with me great ignominy in my body, you did not reject me; and alſo from Chriſt's anſwer to him, That his power was perfected in St Paul's weakneſs, i. e. The greater is thy infirmity in preaching the goſpel, the greater is my power in rendering it efficacious when preached by one ſubject to ſo great infirmity.

4*thly*, It is alſo certain, that this was objected by the Corinthians and the falſe apoſtles, to the diſparagement of St Paul, and rendered him contemptible in their eyes, that he was ἰδιώτης τῷ λόγῳ, rude in ſpeech, 2 Cor. 10. 10. (which, as I have obſerved upon that place, cannot refer to his want of eloquence, that being as much wanting in his epiſtles, which they allowed to be powerful and weighty, as in his ſermons to them); that in preſence he was baſe among them, ibid. ver. 1. that the preſence of his body was weak and mean, ὁ δὲ λόγος ἐξουθενημένος, his ſpeech ſuch as rendered him contemptible, where the apoſtle uſeth that very word which he had applied to the infirmity of his fleſh, Gal. 4. 14.

5*thly*, It cannot be denied but that an ἰσχνοφωνία, a ſtammering in ſpeech, or a ſqueaking ſhrilneſs in the voice, joined with a low deformed ſtature, do naturally tend to render a man contemptible in his preaching; and therefore Moſes declines the meſſage God ſent him upon to Pharaoh, becauſe he was ſlow of ſpeech, and of a ſtammering tongue, Exod. 4. 10. ἰσχνόφωνος, καὶ βραδύγλωσσος.

6*thly*, Theſe words, A thorn in the fleſh, a meſſenger of Satan, being here put by way of apoſition, muſt ſignify the ſame thing, and ſo he muſt be buffetted by Satan, when by theſe falſe apoſtles and miniſters of Satan, 2 Cor. 11. 15. he was contemned, and made the ſubject of their ſcorn and laughter, for his infirmity in his ſpeech. But it is obſervable, that theſe words may be rendered thus, There was given me a thorn in the fleſh, ἄγγελος Σατᾶ ἵνα με κολαφίζῃ, that the angel of Satan might buffet me. Since then he calls the falſe apoſtles miniſters of Satan, it is not to be wondered that he here ſtyles them, or the chief of them, who thus reviled and contemned him for this infirmity, and therefore laboured to take off the affections of the Corinthians from him, an angel of Satan buffetting him. See Oecumenius on the place.

Ver. 8. ᵈ Παρεκάλεσα. I beſought the Lord.] "Here," ſaith Schlictingius, "is an inſtance of prayer directed to Chriſt;" ergo, ſay I, here is an inſtance of his divinity; prayer made to Chriſt by all Chriſtians, in all times and places, and for all things, being an evidence of his omniſcience, omnipotence, and omnipreſence.

Note alſo, That though this thorn in the fleſh was not removed upon the prayer of the apoſtle, yet was that granted for which he deſired that it might be removed, viz. that he ſhould preach the goſpel more effectually, and to the honour of his Lord; and therefore he not only reſts ſatisfied under this infirmity, but even glories in it on this account, that it tended to demonſtrate the power of Chriſt reſiding in him. Thus doth God truly anſwer our requeſts, when he gives, not what we would, but what he ſees to be more for his glory and our good.

Ver. 14. ᵉ Τρίτον, the third time.] Moſt interpreters ſay, that St Paul had made two reſolutions before to come to them, for proof of which they cite 1 Cor. 16. 5. 2 Cor. 1. 16.; but both the texts ſeem plainly to refer to one and the ſame reſolution, and the laſt to be only an apology for non-performance of the firſt: his meaning therefore may be this; I have once actually been with you, I was ready once more to come, though your diſorders unreformed hindered the performing that intended journey, 2 Cor. 1. 23. and I am now ready the third time.

Ibid. ᶠ For the children ought not to lay up for the fathers, but, &c.] i. e. If fathers of the fleſh, they ought to lay up for them temporals; if ſpiritual fathers, as St Paul was, 1 Cor. 4. 15. to provide ſpirituals for them, good inſtructions, and advice for the welfare of their ſouls.

Ver. 24. ᵍ Μετανοησάντων.] Hence it is evident, againſt Novatian, that the Chriſtian diſpenſation admits ſinners to repentance, though they have after baptiſm committed great offences, and lapſed into the ſins of the fleſh, mentioned Gal. 5. 19. 20. 21.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. [a] THIS is the third time I am coming to you; [a] in the mouth of two or three witneſſes ſhall every word be eſtabliſhed.

2. I told you before (in my firſt epiſtle, chap. 4. 19. 20. 21. being then abſent in body, but preſent in ſpirit, chap. 5. 3.), and (I ſtill continue in my reſolution), foretel-(ling) you as if I were preſent the ſecond time, (or, I foretel you as preſent in ſpirit the ſecond time), and being abſent (in body), I now write to them which heretofore have ſinned (and have not repented, chap. 12. 21.), and to all others (who ſhall fall into the like ſins), that if I come again, (which I now am fully reſolved upon), I will not ſpare (you:)

3. Since ye ſeek a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in (and by) me, (even that Chriſt) who to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty [b] in (and among) you, (you ſhall find it in the exerting the power he hath given us to chaſtiſe ſuch offenders.)

4. For though he was crucified through (the) weakneſs (of that human nature which he took upon him, and in that appeared to others as weak), yet he liveth (and diſcovers efficaciouſly that he doth ſo), by the power of God (ſo glorioufly attending the invocation of his name, and faith in him); [c] for we alſo (Gr. and ſo we alſo) are (as yet in your apprehenſions) weak in him, but we ſhall (appear to) live with him by the power of God (exerting itſelf by us) towards you.

5. (And for a farther evidence that Chriſt preached by me hath not been weak, but mighty towards you), examine yourſelves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own ſelves: know ye not (of) your own ſelves, (by the miracles done among you, and the variety of gifts conferred upon you), how that Jeſus [d] Chriſt is in (among) you, [e] except ye be reprobates, (i. e. diſapproved by God, and ſo he hath withdrawn theſe gifts from you?)

6. But (however it may be with you) I truſt that you ſhall know we are not reprobates, (i. e. not diſapproved of, but owned by God and Chriſt.)

7. Now I pray to God that ye do no evil (which may force us to exerciſe and ſhew our power among you; as deſiring) not that we ſhould appear approved (by our power in puniſhing your offences), but (rather) that you ſhould do that which is honeſt, though we be (in ſhew) [f] as reprobates, (i. e. as deſtitute of the power of Chriſt in your eyes.)

8. (And then you will be ſecure from our chaſtiſements); for we can do nothing againſt the truth, but (only) for the truth; (having our power given for edification only, and not for deſtruction, ver. 10.)

9. (Nor have we any deſire to uſe our power thus), for we are (rather) glad when we are weak, (as having no occaſion to manifeſt our power), and ye are ſtrong (in faith and good works); and this alſo we wiſh, even your perfection (in them.)

10. (And) therefore I write theſe things being abſent (to warn and reform you), leſt being preſent I ſhould (be conſtrained to) uſe ſharpneſs (towards the unreformed among you), according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to deſtruction.

11. Finally, brethren, farewell; be perfect-(ly knit together), be of good comfort (under all calamities), be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace ſhall be with you.

12. Greet one another with [g] an holy kiſs.

13. All the ſaints (here) ſalute you.

14. [h] The grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God (the Father), and the communion of the Holy Ghoſt, be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIII.

Ver. 1. [a] Τρίτον τοῦτο, this is the third time.] Of his coming the third time, ſee note on chap. 12. 14. Theſe witneſſes, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, were Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, ſent to aſſure them of his coming; ſay others, his own reiterated teſtimony to them by letters, that if theſe admonitions did not prevail on them who had ſinned to reform, he would not ſpare them.

Ibid. [a] At the mouth of two or three witneſſes.] Though theſe words ſeem to be cited from Deut. 19. 15. rather than from Matth. 18. 16. it being rare to find this apoſtle citing any thing from the New Teſtament, without calling it an ordinance of the Lord; yet it is probable, that the apoſtle here alludes to the practice there preſcribed, for the reclaiming of offenders, and then his firſt epiſtle being written with this introduction, Paul an apoſtle, and Soſthenes; his ſecond thus, Paul, and Timotheus; may paſs for two or three witneſſes; and his preſence the third time in perſon, to exerciſe his cenſures on theſe offenders, before the body of the church, may bear a fair reſemblance to the preſcription relating to the church.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἐν ὑμῖν, among you.] Chriſt ſhewed his power among them, by enabling St Paul to preach the goſpel to them in demonſtration of the Spirit and power, ſo efficaciouſly, as to convert them to the faith, 1 Cor. 2. 4.; in that variety of gifts conferred on them, together with the goſpel, by which their teſtimony teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed, 1 Cor. 1. 6.; by his power, conſpicuous in ſeconding St Paul's delivery of the inceſtuous perſon up to Satan, 1 Cor. 5. 4. 5.; by the chaſtiſements they ſuffered for communicating in the Lord's ſupper unworthily.

Ver. 4. [c] Καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς, and ſo we alſo.] Theſe particles ſignify atque ita, even ſo and ſo, and in like manner; and accordingly are rendered by Paſor, ſic et nos, as in this paraphraſe. Again, It is evident from ſcripture, that though Chriſt appeared to the world, as weak and unable to eſcape his ſufferings, by permitting himſelf to be taken and carried bound before the high prieſt and Pilate, and at laſt to be lifted up upon the croſs, and there die, yet was he only in appearance then weak; for he permitted not himſelf to be taken, till he had with a word ſtruck them to the ground who came to apprehend him, John 18. 6. and had declared that he was able to deliver himſelf out of their hands, Matth. 26. 53. Even ſo, ſaith the apoſtle, we ſeem weak to you Corinthians, becauſe we do not exerciſe that power among you which God hath given us, 2 Cor. 10. 10. and 11. 21. and here, ver. 9.; but we ſhall ſhew ourſelves to live by the power of God exerciſed upon the offenders in your church.

Ver. 5. [d] Ὅτι Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐστιν, that Chriſt is in you;] i. e. with or among you. So σὺ ἐν ἡμῖν εἶ Κύριε, thou, Lord, art with us, Jer. 14. 9. οὐχὶ Κύριος ἐν ὑμῖν; is not the Lord among us? See Gen. 23. 6. Pſal. 124. 1. The words ſeem to allude to thoſe ſpoken by the tempting contumacious Iſraelites, who, after all the ſigns and wonders God had ſhewed to them, remained ſtill doubtful of his preſence with them, inquiring, εἰ Κύριος ἐν ἡμῖν; is the Lord among us, or not? Exod. 17. 7.: ſo, ſaith the apoſtle, ſeeing after all the miracles done among you, and the miraculous gifts received by you, you ſtill ſeek a proof of Chriſt ſpeaking in or by me; aſk your own ſelves: know ye not by the gifts exerciſed among you, except ye be rejected of God, that his Spirit, conveyed by my miniſtry, is ſtill among you? But then let it be noted here, that this place ſpeaks not of their being in Chriſt, but of Chriſt's being in them; not of his being in, but among them; not of his being in them, by their faith in him, but his miraculous preſence with them; not of his being in any private perſon, but in the church of Corinth in general.

Ibid. [e] Εἰ μήτι ἀδόκιμοί ἐστε, if ye be not reprobates:] i. e. Chriſtians in name only, and not in deeds, ſo Grotius; ſtupid and hardened, Dr Hammond; wicked and unfit for the faith, Vorſtius; unworthy of the name of Chriſtians, Dickſon; deprived of faith, light, grace, and knowledge, Menochius; unleſs you by your crimes have caſt off Chriſt, Calvin.

Ver. 7. [f] Ὡς ἀδόκιμοι, as reprobates.] It is to be obſerved, that the word ἀδόκιμος, which we render reprobate, hath no relation in ſcripture to any decree of God, either abſolutely excluding men from a capacity of ſalvation, or doing it conditionally on the account of the ſin of Adam; but only doth denote ſuch men as have made themſelves unworthy, by the corruption of their faith or manners, to be approved and owned by God. Thus they who, when they knew God, did not glorify him as God, neither were thankful, but changed the truth of God into a lie, and worſhipped the creature more than the Creator, and liked not to retain God in their hearts, Rom. 1. from ver. 21. to 28. are the men given up by God εἰς νοῦν ἀδόκιμον, to a reprobate mind, which prompted them to do thoſe things God could not approve of, but abhor; and they who reſiſted the truth, through the corruption of their minds, are ſtyled ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν, i. e. reprobates concerning the faith, 2 Tim. 3. 8. i. e. men whoſe faith cannot be owned, or approved of. They alſo are in ſcripture, as to their manners, ſtyled reprobates, whoſe mind and conſcience is defiled; ſo that though in words they profeſs to know God, yet in works they deny him, being abominable, diſobedient, and to every good work ἀδόκιμοι, reprobate; i. e. void, not of judgment only to diſcern, but of affection to approve of it. Thus, that earth is ſtyled ἀδόκιμος, reprobate, or rejected, which, after all the ſhowers which fall upon it, brings forth only thorns and briers, Heb. 6. 8. and that ſilver, ἀργύριον ἀδόκιμον, reprobate ſilver, which, being falſe ſtamped, or coined, will not be received, but rejected, Prov. 25. 4. Iſ. 1. 22.; and in this ſenſe St Paul ſaith, he kept under his body, leſt whilſt he preached to others, he himſelf ſhould be ἀδόκιμος, diſowned and rejected by God, 1 Cor. 9. 27.

Ibid. And though ἀδόκιμοι here ſeems to ſignify one that cannot give a proof of his power, as when it relates to the apoſtle, ver. 6. 7. yet ſeeing the apoſtle, pretending that the Lord had given him this power, muſt be ἀδόκιμος, one fit to be rejected as a falſe pretender, if he had it not; and though, when it relates to the Corinthians, ver. 5. it ſignifies perſons who could not give a proof, that they belonged to Chriſt, or had his preſence with them; yet ſeeing the want of this proof ſhewed, they were to be rejected as perſons not approved by Chriſt, this differs not much from the ſenſe aſſigned of that word.

Ver. 12. [g] Ἐν ἁγίῳ φιλήματι, with an holy kiſs.] As brethren; for this ſeems to be the Jews oſculum propinquitatis, of which ſee Buxtorf's lexicon, p. 1404. 1405.

Ver. 14. [h] Note, that here plainly, as in the form of baptiſm, Matth. 28. 19. we have the names of the Sacred Trinity; and the Father and Son in both places being mentioned as diſtinct perſons, we have no reaſon to doubt of the perſonality of the Holy Ghoſt thus mentioned with them.

AN

Sixth Chapter of the Second EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS.

MOnſieur le Clerc hath obſerved in his Ars Critica, part 1. c. 8. p. 110. "That, ſince "the time of St Auſtin, ſcarce any word "hath been uſed more frequently in ſpeaking con- "cerning the converſion of a ſinner, than is that "of grace; and yet if you aſk them that uſe it "what they mean by it, they can give you no clear "anſwer: ſo that a Jeſuit ſaid, not unpleaſantly, "That it was nothing but a neſcio quid, and that "the grace of God in ſcripture doth always ſignify "not any ſecret afflatus, but his mercy and his kind- "neſs to us." Now, that I may not ſeem, with his witty Jeſuit, to ridicule, or with the Pelagians to deny that grace, becauſe my note in this chapter partly accordeth with his critics, I ſhall here briefly ſhew two things:

1. That it ſeems neceſſary to aſſert that God vouchſafes to men, not only the outward diſpenſations of his word to be the ordinary means of their converſion and ſanctification, but alſo ſome inward aſſiſtances and operations of his Holy Spirit.

2. I ſhall endeavour to ſhew that theſe aſſiſtances may be ſo explained, as to be no more unintelligible than are all the influences of God upon the ſoul, or the temptations of the evil ſpirit.

Firſt, That it is neceſſary to aſſert that God vouchſafes to men ſome inward operations or aſſiſtances of his Holy Spirit, to incline them to what is good, convert and ſanctify them. For,

1. Why elſe is it expreſsly ſaid, That God works in us both to will and to do of his good pleaſure, Philip. 2. 13. and doth within us what is acceptable in his ſight, Heb. 13. 21.; for ſure he cannot properly be ſaid ἐνεργεῖν, ϗ ποιεῖν ἐν ἡμῖν, to act and work within us, who does and worketh nothing in us? yea, how doth the word of God itſelf, when heard or read, work on us but by making impreſſions on our minds? and ſhall that be denied to God himſelf which we allow to his word? or ſhall he not be believed, when he ſaith, He doth work in us both to will and to do; He doth in us what is acceptable in his ſight?

Again, Does it not ſeem unreaſonable to deny that influence to God and the good Spirit, to excite men to goodneſs; which generally is, and muſt, according to the ſcripture, be allowed to the evil ſpirit tempting men to wickedneſs? Now, though this evil ſpirit cannot lay us under a neceſſity of doing wickedly, yet is he frequently in ſcripture repreſented as a tempter to ſin; which he can only be immediately, by raiſing ſome ideas in our brain which do excite, diſpoſe, and move us, as our own thoughts or inward ſentiments, at other times, were wont to do, to what is evil. He alſo is in ſcripture ſtyled that ſpirit which ἐνεργεῖ, works inwardly in the children of diſobedience, Eph. 2. 2. and leads them captive εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα, to do his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26.; which words ſeem plainly to import ſome inward energy of Satan, to excite them to this diſobedience to the will of God, and this compliance with his own will: ſince then ſtronger is he that is in us, than he that is in the world, 1 John 4. 4. i. e. that good Spirit which dwells in pious men, is more powerful in them than Satan is in wicked men; we muſt allow this good Spirit ἐνεργεῖν, to work in the children of obedience, as Satan is allowed to work in his own children.

Moreover, the evil ſpirit is repreſented as a lying ſpirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets, 1 Kings 22. 21.; he moved David to number the people, 1 Chron. 21. 1.; he entered into Judas, Luke 22. 3.; he filled the heart of Ananias to lie to the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 5. 3.: all which expreſſions can never be accounted for, without allowing him ſome power to work upon the ſpirits of theſe perſons, ſo as to raiſe within them ſome ſuch ideas as would excite and ſtir them up to the performance of thoſe actions. Nor can we otherwiſe give any rational account of the ſnares, methods, wiles, and devices of Satan, mentioned 2 Cor. 2. 11. Eph. 6. 11.; or tell how he comes and takes away the word out of the heart, Luke 8. 12.; or how how he takes advantage over us when we are overwhelmed with grief, 2 Cor. 2. 10.

When therefore, on the other hand, God is said to put his fear and his law in our hearts, Jer. 32. 40. Heb. 8. 10. and his Spirit within us, Ezek. 36. 27. to create in us a clean heart, and renew in us a right spirit, ibid. to give us a new heart, Ezek. 11. 19. to circumcise and to convert the heart, Deut. 30. 6. Jer. 31. 18.; if he by his good Spirit raiseth no good motions, or ideas in us, which may dispose us to his fear, and by attention to them may convert and cleanse our hearts; if he vouchsafes unto us no inward illuminations, by attending to which we may discern the wondrous things of this law; what can these words or metaphors import? Or why is his Spirit put within us, if he hath nothing to do there? Yea, why are we said to be strengthened with might through the Spirit in the inward man to do his will? Eph. 3. 16. to be enabled through the Spirit to mortify the deeds of the flesh? Rom. 8. 13. Why is the Spirit said to help our infirmities, ver. 26. to purify our hearts, 1 Pet. 1. 22. to be unto us a Spirit of sanctification, 1 Cor. 6. 11. the Comforter, the Spirit of power, love, and of a sound mind, 2 Tim. 1. 7.? For how is it possible he should be all, or any of these things to us, or should do all, or any of these things for us, by doing nothing in us? And seeing consolation ariseth only from the inward testimony of the conscience; seeing sanctification consists in the renewing of the inward man, and hath the soul for its subject; seeing the heart is purified by an inward change and temper, which renders it averse from sin, and sets the affections, desires, and inclinations of the soul against it; seeing the deeds of the flesh are only mortified by such a renovation of the mind as makes us to discern the pernicious effects and dreadful consequences of living still according to our fleshly appetites, and so begetteth a dread and hatred of them, a resolution to forsake them, a vehement desire to be freed from them, a sincere endeavour to resist the motions of the flesh, and a care that we do not for the future yield obedience to it in the lustings of it; if there be no renovation wrought in us by the Spirit, no testimony of him with our spirits, that we are the sons of God, how can a man conceive that all this should be done by the Spirit without any energy in the mind, and the affections of a man, and by that consequently on the will?

Moreover, if the Holy Spirit hath no hand in producing and carrying on the new life, why is he styled Πνεῦμα ζωοποιὸν, a quickening, or life-giving Spirit? seeing all vital operations issue from a spirit acting in us, why are we said to live in the Spirit, Gal. 5. 15. and to walk in the Spirit, Rom. 8. 14. and ἄγεσθαι, to be led, or conducted by the Spirit of God? For as in natural and moral actions we cannot be said to live or walk, without an inward principle of life and motion, or to be led or guided in those actions but by the light of reason; so neither can we properly be said to live and walk in the Spirit, or to be guided by him, if he imparts no inward light to guide us in the ways of piety, no inward motions to excite us to walk in them, no inward strength or vital efficacy for the performance of them. And were it otherwise, why are all those inward habits and dispositions which adorn the soul, and make it meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, styled the fruits, not of the preaching of the word, or of our own consideration, but of the Holy Spirit? For how are they his fruits, if he doth nothing to produce them? Why are they still ascribed, according to this doctrine, never to that which only doth, but to that only which doth not produce them?

To say these things, and these expressions concern only the times in which the extraordinary gifts and operations of the Holy Spirit were vouchsafed, is to make future ages, since the ceasing of these gifts, despair of being quickened, sanctified, or comforted, or even enabled to purify the heart, or to mortify the deeds of the flesh, to live or walk in the Spirit; and consequently to despair of being now the sons of God, united to Christ Jesus, or having any of the fruits of the Spirit wrought within them. And were it only then that no man could be regenerate or born again without water and the Holy Ghost, by what are we now regenerated? why are we now baptized? or why is baptism administered still in the name of the Holy Ghost?

In fine, it seems not possible, according to this hypothesis, to explain how, or to what end the Holy Spirit is so often said to dwell, or to abide within us; how we are made an habitation of God through the Spirit; how we are made the temples of God through the Holy Ghost which is in us, or united to Christ by the Spirit, or to what end the Holy Ghost thus dwells or takes up his abode in them, in whom he acteth nothing, or rests upon those Christian sufferers whom he doth not inspire with inward courage? And yet this abode of the good Spirit with us is represented not only as the highest privilege, but as the inestimable advantage of the Christian. By this Christ doth encourage his disciples to demonstrate their love to him by keeping his commandments, that then the Father will love him, and we, saith he, will take up our abode with him, John 14. 23. By this, saith the apostle, God becomes our God, and we his people; he our Father, and we his sons and daughters, 2 Cor. 6. 16. 18. And from our union by this Spirit to our head Christ Jesus, such an ἐνέργεια, or inward working, is said to be diffused through every part of his mystical body as causeth the whole body to increase, and edify itself in love, Eph. 4. 16. Col. 2. 19. Now, what account can be offered of these things, things, without allowing ſome inward operations of the Holy Spirit, as the conſequence of this ſpiritual union, and this inhabitation of the Holy Spirit in us? Yea, who can tell what is the advantage of theſe promiſes, I will put my Spirit in you, or pour him upon you, Prov. 1. 23. Jer. 36. 27. and 37. 14. Zech. 12. 10. John 7. 37. 38. if we receive no influx from him thus put into our hearts? What, laſtly, is it for the Holy Spirit to depart, or to be taken from us? Or what can be the dreadful miſery and wo denounced upon us when he doth ſo? For if he did nothing in us whilſt he continued to be with us, what can we loſe by his departure? Or why did David ſo importunately beg God would not take his Holy Spirit from him, Pſal. 51. 12.?

To ſay here the Holy Spirit only dwelt in Chriſtians, whilſt the extraordinary gifts and afflatus of the Holy Spirit were continued to the church, and they lay under perſecution from the Heathen emperors, is not only to contradict the tenor of the ſcriptures, which declare, that all Chriſt's living members are thus united by the Spirit to their Head, 1 Cor. 12. 13.; and that if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt dwelling in him, he is none of his, Rom. 8. 9.; he cannot be the Son of God, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God, ver. 14.; he hath no right to call God Father, ver. 15. no intereſt in the adoption, and in the inheritance of ſons, ver. 17.; but it is alſo to enervate the virtue of the promiſes of Chriſt, and the conſolation of Chriſtians of all future ages under their ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt; yea, it is in effect to make the diſpenſation of the goſpel ceaſe, the difference betwixt that and the law being by the apoſtle placed in this, that the one is the miniſtration of the letter only, the other alſo of the Spirit. And if this were ſo only whilſt theſe extraordinary operations of the Holy Spirit laſted, then, from the time that they have ceaſed, the goſpel doth not in this differ from the law, or deſerve to be preferred above it on that account.

Arg. 2. This doctrine ſeems to take off from the energy of prayer in general, and from the virtue of prayer for the Holy Spirit in particular, and ſo to make men ſlight and neglect that duty of which the ſcripture ſpeaketh ſo magnificently, and to which it ſo frequently exhorts us; at leaſt, it ſeems not well conſiſtent with the tenor of thoſe inſpired prayers, or thoſe preſcriptions for it recorded in the holy ſcripture. For who can reconcile it with thoſe expreſſions, in which holy men of God ſo often beg God would incline their hearts unto him, ſince this he cannot do without ſome operation on their hearts; that he would draw them, that they might run after him; that he would open their eyes, and give them underſtanding to diſcern his law; that he would lead them in the right way, in the way everlaſting, and guide them by his eye? For if God by his Spirit hath no influence upon the heart or ſoul, how doth he incline, or draw it? If none upon the underſtanding, how doth he enlighten or inſtruct it? If this be done only by the word read, preached, and pondered in the heart, we may as well apply ourſelves to that work without, as with prayer, unleſs we in theſe caſes pray for ſome new external revelations, or for ſome motives not contained in ſcripture.

Moreover, according to this doctrine, it ſeems both fruitleſs and abſurd to pray for the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, or to expect we ſhould enjoy it; and ſo that paſſage of St Luke, Aſk, and ye ſhall receive; ſeek, and you ſhall find; knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. For if evil parents give good gifts to their children, how much more will your heavenly Father give his Holy Spirit to them that aſk him? Luke 11. 9. 13. muſt be of no uſe or virtue to us. For what in theſe expreſſions can we pray for, but the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit? And what aſſiſtance can he afford us, if he doth not operate at all upon our ſouls?

To ſay this promiſe is to be confined to the apoſtles days, ſeems not agreeable to reaſon; for why then do we hear of it in the ſermon on the mount, which certainly was ſpoken εἰς ἀκοὰς τῦ λαῦ, in the audience of the multitude? Why doth it run in words ſo general, πᾶς γὰρ, for every one that aſks, receives? Moreover, thoſe ſpiritual and ordinary effects for which the Holy Spirit was then given, thoſe fruits of the Spirit they produced in them, are as needful and as ſpiritually good for Chriſtians now, as when our Saviour ſpake theſe words; for as the Holy Spirit was needful then to ſtrengthen Chriſt's ſervants in the inward man to do his will, Eph. 3. 16. to comfort them in tribulations, and ſupport them under fiery trials, and to preſerve them from the ſubtleties of Satan, and the temptations of the wicked world, ſo is there the ſame need of his aſſiſtance now for all theſe gracious ends, and therefore the ſame reaſon to expect him ſtill to all theſe purpoſes. Moreover, the conditions of this promiſe may be performed by us now, as well as then; we may be now ſincerely deſirous to obey the holy will of God, and with true fervency and importunity may beg the Holy Spirit to this end; and if we may acceptably perform theſe duties to which this promiſe is annexed, why may we not as confidently expect the bleſſing promiſed from the God of truth? For the encouragement here given to expect the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit is this, that we aſk him of our heavenly Father; now, this moſt comfortable relation God bears to all his children of what age ſoever, he is the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever; and therefore there is now, and ever will be, the ſame benignity in God, the ſame good-will and readineſs in him to give his Holy Spirit now unto his children for all needful purpoſes, as in all former ages. If therefore, in like manner, we do aſk, we muſt have equal reaſon to expect we ſhould receive him. To proceed therefore,

2*dly*, To explain, as far as I am able, and think it needful ſo to do, how thoſe fruits of the Spirit, which the ſchools call graces, are wrought in us by the Spirit of God.

1. I aſſert, that the manner in which the Holy Spirit acts upon the minds and hearts of men, for the production of thoſe fruits or graces, and the preparatory diſpoſitions of the ſoul towards them, may reaſonably be conceived to be ſuch as is ſuitable to the reaſon and faculties of men, viz. the underſtanding and the will. Now, it is certain, that what naturally makes the underſtanding to perceive, is evidence propoſed and apprehended, conſidered or adverted to; for nothing farther can be requiſite to make me come to the knowledge of the truth, and underſtanding what the will of the Lord is, and ſo be wiſe unto ſalvation. Hence the apoſtle prays, that his Philippians might abound more and more in knowledge, and in all wiſdom, ἐν πάσῃ αἰσθήσει, in all perception, that ſo they may approve the things that are moſt excellent, Philip. 1. 9. 10. Hence he ſpeaks to the Romans thus, Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, that you may diſcern and approve what is according to the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God, Rom. 12. 2.; and ſaith to the Epheſians, Be ye not unwiſe, but underſtanding what the will of the Lord is, Eph. 5. 17. and ver. 8. 10. Walk as children of the light, approving what is acceptable to the Lord. Again, what makes the will chuſe, is ſomething approved by the underſtanding, and conſequently appearing to the ſoul as good; and whatſoever it refuſeth, is ſomething repreſented by the underſtanding, and ſo appearing to the will as evil; whence all that God requires of us is, and can be only this, to refuſe the evil, and to chuſe the good. Wherefore to ſay that evidence propoſed, apprehended, and conſidered, is not ſufficient to make the underſtanding to approve; or that the greateſt good propoſed, the greateſt evil threatened, when equally believed and reflected on, is not ſufficient to engage the will to chuſe that good, and to refuſe that evil, is in effect to ſay, that which alone doth move the will to chuſe, or to refuſe, is not ſufficient to engage it ſo to do; that which alone is requiſite to make me underſtand and approve, is not ſufficient ſo to do. Now, this being contradictory to itſelf, muſt of neceſſity be falſe.

Be it then that we have naturally an averſion to the truths propoſed to us in the goſpel, that only can make us indiſpoſed to attend to them, but cannot hinder our conviction when we apprehend them, and attend to them. Whence, for removal of it, the apoſtle only prays, that the eyes of our underſtanding may be enlightened, that we may know them, Eph. 1. 18. adding, that where the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in Chriſt Jeſus was revealed, if after this their goſpel was hid from any, it was only ſo, becauſe the god of this world had blinded the conceptions of their minds, that the light of the goſpel might not ſhine into them, 2 Cor. 4. 3. 4. Be it that there is in us a renitency to the good we are to chuſe, that only can indiſpoſe us to believe, and to approve it as our chiefeſt good: be it that we are prone to the evil which we ſhould decline, that only can render it the more difficult for us to believe it is the worſt of evils. But yet, what we do really conceive to be our chiefeſt good will ſtill be choſen, and what we apprehend to be the worſt of evils, will, whilſt we do continue under that conviction, be refuſed by us. It therefore can be only requiſite, in order to theſe ends, that the good Spirit ſhould ſo illuminate our underſtandings, that we attending to, and conſidering what lies before us, ſhould apprehend, and be convinced of our duty; and that the bleſſings of the goſpel ſhould be ſo propounded to us, as that we may diſcern them to be our chiefeſt good, and the miſeries it threatens, ſo as we may be convinced they are the worſt of evils, that we may chuſe the one and refuſe the other. Now, to conſider in order to approbation and conviction, to chuſe in order to our good, and refuſe that we may avoid miſery, muſt be the actions, not of God, but of man, though the light that doth convince, and the motives which engage him thus to chuſe and to refuſe, are certainly from God.

To illuſtrate this more familiarly by an inſtance taken from ourſelves, or our deportment towards others: When a man, in words plain and intelligible, ſpeaks to another, if he will hearken to what he ſays, he muſt underſtand his mind; for by that very impreſſion the words make upon his brain, he immediately perceives his meaning: and cannot the divine impreſſion on the brain, which is God's ſpeaking inwardly to man, do the ſame thing? This action is indeed ſo neceſſary, that as it is not virtuous or praiſe-worthy in any man to underſtand the mind of him who doth thus ſpeak to him, ſo neither ſeemeth it praiſe-worthy in us purely to underſtand the mind of God thus ſpeaking to us. Again, theſe words of man contain ſome exhortation to me to do what he deſires I would do, backed with encouragements to do ſo, taken from the propoſal of ſome advantage, the promiſe of ſome good I ſhall receive by complying with his exhortation; or they contain ſome dehortation from doing what he would not have me to do, becauſe it will be hurtful to me, or will be certainly attended with

ſome evil conſequences: is not this the method uſed by all the world in dealing with one another? And do they not all do this with hopes and expectation of ſucceſs? And is it not a great diſparagement to the word of God to think that his perſuations, admonitions, exhortations, promiſes, and threats, ſhould be all inſufficient to prevail with us to turn from our ſinful courſes, and turn to him, when all men who do uſe theſe methods towards their children, ſervants, friends, or relations, do it in hopes that they ſhall be ſucceſsful by theſe means? Moreover, if the perſon they addreſs to be ſlow of underſtanding, do they not hope to overcome that difficulty by the clearneſs of their diſcourſe, and by reiterating the ſame thing by ſuch variety of expreſſions as he is beſt able to perceive? If he be averſe from doing that which is deſired, do they not hope to overcome that averſion by repeated exhortations and vigorous impreſſions of thoſe encouragements they tender to prevail upon him to comply with their deſire? If he ſtrongly be inclined to that from which they vehemently dehort him, do they not endeavour to turn the bent and current of his inclinations by the like repeated exhortations, and lively repreſentations of the evils he will be certainly expoſed to by ſo doing? All men are therefore of this opinion in their practice, that acting with men by convincing reaſon, and by motives and perſuaſions, is acting with them ſuitably to their faculties; and is not God himſelf of the ſame mind? Hath he not revealed his will on purpoſe that we may know it? Hath he not directed his letters and epiſtles to us, that, by reading, we may underſtand in them, and know the things which belong to our peace? Did not our Saviour utter all his diſcourſes to the ſame end? Why elſe doth he inquire ſo oft, Why is it that you do not underſtand my ſpeech? John 8. 43. How is it that ye do not underſtand? Mark 8. 21. Why doth he preface them with this inſtruction, Hear and underſtand? Matth. 15. 10. Doth not God call upon us to conſider our ways, and lay to heart his ſayings and his diſpenſations? Hag. 1. 5. 7. Doth he not preſcribe this as the remedy for preventing his judgments, when he ſays, Oh conſider this ye that forget God! Pſal. 50. 21. and of being wiſe, by ſaying, Oh that they were wiſe, that they would conſider their latter end! Deut. 32. 29.? Doth he not repreſent this as the ſource of all the wickedneſs and idolatry of his own people, that they would not conſider in their hearts? Iſ. 1. 3. and 44. 19. Doth he not make converſion the effect of this conſideration, when he ſaith, Becauſe he conſidereth, and turneth away from all the tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, he ſhall ſurely live? Ezek. 18. 29. Pſal. 119. 59. Yea, doth he not repreſent this as a juſt ground of hope, that even the moſt ſtubborn ſinners may be reformed, when he ſaith to the prophet, Remove by day in their ſight, it may be they will conſider, though they be a rebellious people? Ezek. 12. 3. Does not the apoſtle pray, that his Coloſſians may be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wiſdom, that ſo they might walk worthy of the Lord to all well-pleaſing, being fruitful in every good work? Col. 1. 9. 10. that his Philippians might diſcern and approve the things that are moſt excellent, that they might be ſincere, and without offence, being filled with all the fruits of righteouſneſs? &c. Philip. 1. 10. 11. And muſt not then this knowledge and approbation of his will be a means of rendering us fruitful in all works of righteouſneſs? Does not God require his people to chuſe life, Deut. 30. 19. pronouncing a bleſſing on them that that chuſe the things that pleaſe him, Iſ. 56. 4. and threatening deſtruction to them that would not chuſe the fear of the Lord, Prov. 1. 20. but chuſe the things in which he delighted not? Iſ. 56. 4. Now, doth he any thing more to prevail with them who do not chuſe the fear of the Lord, do not the things that pleaſe him, to engage them ſo to do, or not to do the contrary, but teach them his ways, and perſuade them to walk in them? Muſt it not then be certain, that either he tranſacts with them, as men who might by theſe things be induced to chuſe to fear him, and do the things that pleaſe him, and abſtain from the contrary, or threatens to deſtroy them for doing what they could not help, and had no means ſufficient to avoid, and for not doing what it was impoſſible for them to do? Again, doth he not exhort men to be willing and obedient, promiſing a full pardon, and a bleſſing to them that do ſo? Iſ. 1. 18. 19. Doth not Chriſt reſolve the deſtruction of the Jews into this, You will not come unto me that you may have life? John 5. 40. declaring this to be the reaſon why they were not gathered, becauſe he often would have gathered them, but they would not be gathered, Luke 13. 34. becauſe, being ſo graciouſly invited to the marriage-feaſt, they would not come, Matth. 22. 34. Now, what did he to engage them to come unto him, to gather them, to prevail upon them to come unto the marriage-feaſt, but ſhew them the way of life, exhort and invite them to come unto the feaſt? Either then he tranſacted with them as one who knew this was ſufficient for theſe ends, and that theſe things might have prevailed upon them to be willing, or elſe he reſolved on their excluſion from the marriage-feaſt; and their not taſting his ſupper, for not doing what they could not do, and condemned them for not coming, when they could not, becauſe the Father did not draw them, or give them to him, John 6. 37. 44. and for not being gathered, when indeed he would not, whatever he ſaid to the contrary, ſeeing he would not do that for them without which they could not be gathered. Moreover, doth he not earneſtly earneſtly exhort and perſuade men to repent, and turn from the evil of their ways? Doth he not ſay, O that my people would have hearkened to me, that Iſrael would have walked in my ways! Pſal. 81. 13. O that they were wiſe, that they would underſtand this! Deut. 32. 29. O Jeruſalem, wilt thou not be made clean, when ſhall it once be! Jer. 13. 27. O that thou hadſt known in this thy day the things which belong unto thy peace! Luke 19. 42.? Now, either in theſe exhortations and perſuaſions he acts with men ſuitably to their faculties, exhorting them to do, and pathetically wiſhing they had done what they might have done, though they did it not; or called them to repent that they did not do what they never could do, that they did not avoid what it was impoſſible they ſhould avoid, and even to repent that God had not irreſiſtibly done this for them, and ſeriouſly wiſhed they themſelves would have done what, if it ever had been done, muſt have been done by himſelf, and therefore was not done, becauſe he would not irreſiſtibly work the change in them.

In fine, Doth not God encourage men to repent and believe, to be willing and obedient, by great and precious promiſes of the moſt excellent and laſting bleſſings? Hath he not threatened eternal damnation to them that do not believe? Mark 16. 15. 16.; hath not he ſaid, He will come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on all that obey not the goſpel? 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. And muſt not all theſe things ſufficiently convince us, that God acts with men as one who doth indeed ſuppoſe that men may hearken to his exhortations, and comply with his perſuaſions to believe and to obey his goſpel? may be prevailed on by his promiſes to the performance of their duty, and terrified by the conſideration of the judgments threatened from their diſobedience? Why elſe is it ſaid, that God hath given us theſe great and precious promiſes, that by them we may be made partakers of a divine nature? 2 Pet. 1. 2. Or why are we exhorted, having theſe promiſes, to cleanſe ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of God? 2 Cor. 7. 1. or why doth the apoſtle ſay, Knowing then the terrors of the Lord, we perſuade men? 2 Cor. 5. 11. If beyond all this there be ſome phyſical and irreſiſtible operation on God's part, neceſſary to make men know, and knowing, chuſe the good, and refuſe the evil, this being not wrought in them who are not born anew; why is the want of this new birth, and this ſpiritual regeneration, ſo oft imputed to their want of conſideration, and their not laying to heart the things propounded to them; to their not inclining their mind to wiſdom, and not applying their hearts to underſtanding; and their not framing their doings to turn unto the Lord? Prov. 1. 14.—30. Hoſ. 5. 4. If it be ſaid, This may be done becauſe they had grace and ſtrength ſufficient in their firſt parents ſo to do; I anſwer, Admit that vain imagination, that we had what we never indeed had, or could have, becauſe it was loſt long before we had a being, yea, what Adam never had, becauſe then we muſt have had power to repent after his fall, and then we muſt have it ſtill, for what power he had to repent after his fall, he could not loſe by his fall; I ſay, admit this ſuppoſition, what is it to the import of all the exhortations, perſuaſions, and motives contained in the goſpel, which are all directed to fallen man; and ſo, if God be ſerious in them, declare his great unwillingneſs that fallen man ſhould periſh, his paſſionate deſire that he ſhould be ſaved; and if he ſpeaketh in them ſuitably to the capacities and faculties of fallen man, plainly ſuppoſe him ſtill in a capacity, by theſe aſſiſtances and motives, to underſtand his duty, and to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evil?

Prop. 2. I add, "That this is not ordinarily, "and needs not at all to be done now, by propound-"ing to the underſtanding any truths, or to the "will any motives or inducements, which are not "contained in holy ſcripture." For if the word of God be a perſpicuous and perfect rule able to make us wiſe to ſalvation, and furniſhed for every good work, ſure the good Spirit may, by ſuggeſting the truths contained in it, and bringing them to our remembrance, and opening our underſtandings to perceive the ſcriptures, ſufficiently remove the darkneſs that is in our minds; if it be a light ſhining in darkneſs, 2 Pet. 1. 19. and πάντα τὰ ἐλεγχόμενα, all errors to be corrected, all vices to be reproved, are made manifeſt by the light, Eph. 5. 13. then muſt it be ſufficient to illuminate our underſtandings, and direct our paths, or lead our feet into the way of truth. Again, ſeeing the motives contained in the ſcripture, to engage us to turn from thoſe evil ways which tend to our diſquiet, torment, and miſery at preſent, and will hereafter ſubject us to eternal miſeries, muſt be ſufficient to turn us from the evil of our ways, or elſe the higheſt motives that can be offered muſt be inſufficient to that end; all other motives to deter us from any action, as pernicious and diſadvantageous to us, being as nothing, when compared to that, Depart from me ye wicked into eternal fire. All evils we can dread, or ſuffer from the hand of man, are little in reſpect of that we muſt have cauſe to fear from him who can deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell-fire. Since, on the other hand, the promiſe of everlaſting happineſs, recorded in the ſame ſcriptures, as the reſult of our ſincere obedience, muſt be ſufficient to engage us in a ſincere endeavour to yield that obedience to the good and holy will of God, or no inducements can be ſuffi-cient to that end; seeing this motive eminently contains all other motives in it, there being more in those two words, the enjoyment of God, and everlasting happiness, than kingdoms, thrones, and treasures, joy, pleasures, honours, and all that can express the good things of this world import; and therefore a more vehement constraining power in them, to the performance of our duty, than in the united strength of worldly greatness, honour, pleasures, and that which representeth to our hopes and our desires, that which incomparably excells all we can hope for, or desire besides. I say, this being so, the Holy Spirit, by making deep impressions on the mind, of the advantages and rewards promised to our conversion and sincere obedience, and of the dreadful evils threatened to the disobedient; and bringing these things oft to our remembrance, which, in the scripture-phrase, is putting these laws in our minds, and writing them upon our hearts; see note on Heb. 8. 10. must do what is sufficient to work in us conversion and sincere obedience. For what reason can be given why the Spirit of wisdom, having enlightened the eyes of our understanding to know what is the hope of our calling, and the glorious riches of the inheritance of the saints, Eph. 1. 18. and these things, being thus made present to our minds, should not have greater prevalence upon our wills to obedience, than any temporal concerns to yield obedience to the laws of man? It is certain, Satan can only tempt us, by suggesting some temporal allurements and advantages, or some temporal losses or affrightments to us: since then the scripture doth assure us, this is our victory over the world, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4. i. e. our expectation of things hoped for, our evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11. 1. these objects of our faith contained in the scriptures being presented to us, and impressed upon us by the Holy Spirit, must be sufficient to baffle all the temptations of sin, Satan, and the world. In fine, of this we may be sufficiently convinced from the experience of mankind: for since the apprehension of good or evil is the sole motive to make us undertake, or decline any action, the greater the good or evil is, the stronger motive it must be. Now, do not many millions in the world forego their present ease and pleasure, encounter difficulties, and venture upon dangers, and undergo most toilsome labours, in expectation of some finite temporal advantage, of which they cannot have assurance? Do they not oft abstain from what they passionately love, only for fear of dangers which possibly might not ensue upon the satisfaction of their appetites? Do they not sow and plant, and trade only in hopes of an increase? And should not then the hopes of infinite eternal happiness, and the dread of endless miseries, more powerfully engage us to obey God's precepts, and to resist all the temptations which flesh and blood suggests against them?

But then, because the blessings and miseries of another world are things invisible, and only are discerned by the eye of faith, they being only moral and spiritual motives, which only work upon us as they are present to our minds by actual consideration and reflection on them, and this they are not always, when the temptations of the world, the devil, and the flesh, by sensual objects, are thus present with us; it is therefore necessary that at all times, when they are not thus present with us, and therefore cannot operate upon us, the Holy Spirit should either, by representing to us from the scriptures those divine truths with which our understandings have not been sufficiently enlightened, instruct and guide us; or else by reviving, and impressing, i. e. inculcating on our spirits those motives and inducements to resist those temptations, and to perform those duties which are required at our hands, assist us so to do.

Prop. 3. I therefore humbly conceive this inward operation of the Holy Spirit to consist in these two things:

1st, In representing divine truths more clearly to our understandings, that we may have a fuller evidence, stronger conviction and assurance of them, which is in scripture styled the illumination of the mind.

2dly, In bringing these truths to our remembrance, that so they may be present with us, when this is requisite to enable us to resist temptations, and to encourage us to the performance of our duty. And upon supposition of these two things, that God acts with us suitably to the nature of our faculties; (on our understanding, by representing the light to it, and on our wills, by motives to chuse the good and refuse the evil; and that the highest motives and inducements possible, when firmly believed, and present to the mind, must be sufficient to produce their ends); it can be only requisite to our conversion and sincere obedience, that the good Spirit should assist us in this work, by that illumination which is sufficient to produce this strong conviction and plerophory of faith, and should present those motives to our memories, and make a deep impression of them there; which being present, will move our wills and our affections to prosecute the ends for which they are sufficient.

I am not ignorant that there be many who, beyond all this, require a physical and irresistible motion of the Holy Spirit, in which we are wholly passive, to the conversion of a sinner; and I shall not dispute with them, that controversy being so fully handled by Dr Claget, but shall endeavour briefly to compound and state the matter.

1*ſt*, Then, I ſay it muſt be granted, that in raiſing an idea in my brain by the Holy Spirit, and the impreſſion made upon it there, the action is properly phyſical.

2*dly*, That in theſe actions I am purely paſſive; that is, I myſelf do nothing formally to produce theſe ideas, but the good Spirit, without my operation, doth produce them in me. And,

3*dly*, That theſe operations muſt be irreſiſtible in their production, becauſe they are immediately produced in me without my knowledge of them, and without my will, and ſo without thoſe faculties by which I am enabled to act.

But then I add, That as far as they are ſo, they cannot be imputable to me, i. e. it cannot be praiſe-worthy in me, or rewardable, that I have ſuch ideas raiſed in me; but only that, when they are thus raiſed in me, I attend to them, comply with, and improve them to the ends for which they were deſigned by the Holy Spirit. To make this evident by an example: It is on all hands granted, that Satan can ſo work upon the brain, as to raiſe up in it impure and blaſphemous ideas; but then it is generally held, that the thoughts they immediately produce will never be imputed to us as our ſins, nor will God be diſpleaſed with us for them, if we do not after ſhew any good-liking of them, or conſent to them, but manfully reſiſt, and riſe up into deteſtation and abhorrence of them; and that, becauſe the raiſing theſe ideas is the devil's action, not our own; we are purely paſſive in them till we conſent to, or ſhew ſome liking of them: and they are alſo inevitable and irreſiſtible, it being in the power of no man to prevent or reſiſt them; i. e. to hinder them from being raiſed in his brain, or any wiſe to ſuppreſs them, till he doth firſt perceive them raiſed there. And therefore, for the ſame reaſons, thoſe ideas which are objectively good, being thus raiſed in us, cannot be imputed to us for reward, nor can God be well pleaſed with us for them, till we co-operate with them; becauſe the raiſing of them is properly God's, not our own action, and we are purely paſſive in it, nor is it in our power to prevent or to reſiſt them: but then, God having planted in us a principle of reaſon and diſcretion, we can attend to them being raiſed, and ſo improve them to the illumination of our underſtandings, and to the approbation of them in our minds. He alſo having given us a will to chuſe the good and refuſe the evil, we may conſent to the good ſuggeſtions, and purſue the good motions raiſed thus in us; for to what other ends can they be raiſed in us by the Holy Spirit? As therefore our attendance and conſent to the ſuggeſtions of the evil ſpirit being free, and what we may avoid, is culpable; ſo our attendance to, and compliance with theſe motions and ideas of the Holy Spirit, being things in which we are free and active, and that upon deliberation: and ſo in them we do perform the proper and free actions of a man, doing that which we might not do, and refuſing to do that we have both power and temptations to perform, therefore theſe things muſt be praiſe-worthy, and acceptable in the ſight of God.

I alſo add, that theſe ideas being thus raiſed up in us by God alone, and even the power of attending and conſenting to them, being, together with our nature, entirely derived from God, and all the inducements which we have to attend to them, and comply with them, being properly of divine external revelation, or ſuch divine internal operation, as if they had not intervened, we ſhould have had none of theſe good effects produced upon us; theſe effects are properly to be aſcribed to God, and all the praiſe and glory of them muſt be due to him alone, becauſe the principle of acting, and the inducement thus to act, is ſolely from him.

To conclude: The greateſt inſtance of powerful converſion I can call to mind, is that of perſecuting Saul. He is confounded by a light ſhining round about him brighter than the ſun; by this he is ſtruck down to the earth, and hears a dreadful voice from heaven, ſaying, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Now, in all this, he was purely paſſive, and the action done upon him was phyſical and irreſiſtible; and therefore, this action being wholly Chriſt's, not his, there could be nothing in it, on his part, praiſe-worthy, or rendering him a better man. But then, when he inquires of the holy Jeſus, Lord, what wouldſt thou have me to do? when he prays earneſtly for the forgiveneſs of his ſins, Acts 9. 11.; when he ſubmits to that baptiſm which was appointed by the holy Jeſus for that end, and for the dedication of himſelf to his ſervice; when, being told what grievous things he was to ſuffer for the name of Jeſus, he, notwithſtanding, was not diſobedient to the heavenly viſion, but went and preached up that faith which he had formerly oppoſed; theſe being actions of deliberation and free choice, proceeding from reflections on the heavenly viſion, and the conviction it had wrought upon him, muſt be praiſe-worthy and acceptable in the ſight of God; though, being the reſults of what our Lord had done upon him, he very properly aſcribeth the whole glory of them to the grace and favour of our Lord towards him. Hence, ſay St Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius, he doth ſo magnify the grace of God in this matter, as μὴ λυμήνασθαι τὸ αὐτεξούσιον, not to invalidate man's free-will. See note on 1 Tim. 1. 12. And that there is a perfect harmony betwixt the operation of God's grace, and the co-operation of our wills, we learn from two examples recorded in one chapter, viz. 2 Cor. 8. 1. 3. where the apoſtle advertiſeth the Corinthians, of the grace of God given to them of Macedonia: for, ſaith the apoſtle, they were according to their power, yea, and above their power αυθαιρετοι, of themſelves willing to contribute to neceſſities of the ſaints; viz. the contribution was an act of their own free wills, proceeding from their choice; but the grace and favour of God given to them, was the ſpring and motive of it. So again, v. 16. 17. Thanks be to God τῳ διδοντι, to him that gave this care in the heart of Titus, for he accepted the exhortation, and being more forward αυθαιρετος ἐξηλθε, he went to you of his own accord; i. e. the exhortation was from St Paul; that which gave the weight and vigour to it, and rendered them more forward in it, was the grace and favour of God to him; the reflection on both made this journey the matter of his own choice, and ſo he became willing of his own accord: yea, this is evident even from the very words, by ſome thought to aſſert the contrary, Phil. 2. 12. 13. Wherefore, beloved —— not only as in my preſence (when you had me to be your monitor), but much more now in my abſence, (which God, by the workings and inward teachings of his Spirit, ſupplies), work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling, ver. 13. For it is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of his own pleaſure; (i. e. ſometimes by outward, and ſometimes by inward means); for if beyond theſe inward ſuggeſtions and perſuaſions, ſome phyſical and irreſiſtible operations be required on God's part, which make it neceſſary for us, both to will and do, why are we then commanded to work out our own ſalvation; for can we act where we are truly paſſive? Or can that be a reaſon why we ourſelves ſhould work, that another will effectually do that very thing without our co-operation? Is it not rather a manifeſt reaſon why we ſhould neither will, nor work at all, ſince both is, and will be irreſiſtibly performed without us? Why, 2*dly*, are we ſaid to work out our ſalvation with fear and trembling; for can there be any cauſe of fear and trembling, leſt that ſalvation ſhould not be wrought out, which God works in us irreſiſtibly? Surely, if God works in us irreſiſtibly both to will and to do, there can be no poſſibility of miſcarrying, and ſo no ground for fear and trembling. Why, 3*dly*, are the Philippians exhorted to do this, much more in St Paul's abſence than in his preſence, if, when he was preſent, God wrought in them irreſiſtibly to will and do, and could do no more in his abſence? It is therefore evident from theſe conſiderations, that God works in us both to will and to do, by giving us our wills and faculties, and then ſtirring them up to put forth their own acts.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to the GALATIANS.

§ 1. THough in the pure and primitive ages of the church, I find no controverſy touching the nature of faith, or of juſtification, they ſaying nothing of juſtification, but as it is included in the article of remiſſion of ſins; yet ſeeing both this faith, and the juſtification which is aſcribed to it, have, in the latter ages, miniſtered occaſion to many queſtions and diſputes, canvaſſed with much contention, and proſecuted with the greateſt zeal, as being judged matters of very high importance, and the epiſtles to the Romans and Galatians are the epiſtles which treat chiefly of this ſubject, I therefore ſhall, by way of preface to this epiſtle, endeavour to ſhew,

1. What is the import of the word faith in ſcripture, eſpecially as it relates to the matter of juſtification, or what the ſcripture repreſenteth as true Chriſtian faith.

2. What it is to be juſtified in St Paul's acceptation of that word.

3. That this juſtification is by St Paul aſcribed to faith alone, in oppoſition to works of righteouſneſs, done either by the Jew or Gentile.

4. That it ſeems neceſſary from the nature of the thing, and the ſtate and condition of the perſons to whom the goſpel was then preached, that it ſhould be ſo.

5. That though this faith doth not include ſincere obedience, and much leſs perſeverance in it to the end, which yet are neceſſary and eſſential conditions, even of the new covenant; yet,

1*ſt*, It lays the higheſt obligations on us to perform them, under the penalty of forfeiting the bleſſings of it. And,

2*dly*, It tendereth ſufficient motives to this obedience; and, where it is ſincere and laſting, it will moſt certainly produce it.

§ 2. And, 1. as for the import of the word faith in ſcripture, I think ſcarce any thing is more evident throughout the whole New Teſtament, than that the faith there mentioned is only a cordial and firm belief that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Lord, the true Meſſiah, or Prophet, ſent from God to reveal his will to the world, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world. To make this manifeſt, Conſider, 1. That divine faith in general is only a firm aſſent to, or full perſuaſion of mind concerning the truth of what is teſtified, revealed, or reported by God himſelf, or perſons commiſſionated by God to reveal, or to bear record to it. For ſeeing human faith is only a perſuaſion of the truth of what is told us, or teſtified by man; divine faith muſt be a firm perſuaſion of the truth of what is teſtified, or revealed to us by God. And this deſcription of faith is clearly taught us by St John, 1 John 5. who having declared, ver. 4. 5. that the faith by which we overcome the world, is the belief that Jeſus is the Son of God, proceeds to ſhew we have great reaſon to believe this propoſition, That Jeſus is the Son of God: 1. Becauſe the Holy Spirit beareth witneſs to it, and he is the Spirit of truth, ver. 6. 2. Becauſe there are three that bear record in heaven to it, viz. the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 7. Now, ſaith he, if we receive the witneſs of men; if we rely upon their teſtimony in any courts of judicature; if by the mouth of two or three human witneſſes our weightieſt matters are determined, ſhall not the witneſs of God be greater? i. e. ſhall it not be of more validity for confirmation of our faith in this particular, that Jeſus is the Son of God? ver. 9. Surely we cannot diſbelieve this truth, but we muſt give the lie to him, ſaith the apoſtle, ver. 10. Becauſe we believe not the record which God hath given of his Son;

but,

but, if we do receive this teſtimony on his authority, we ſet to our ſeal that God is true, John 3. 33.

This being then the nature of divine faith in general, faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt muſt be a full aſſent to, or firm perſuaſion of mind, concerning the truth of what is teſtified, revealed, or reported by God himſelf, or by perſons commiſſionated by him to reveal his will, concerning our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Or briefly thus, it is a firm perſuaſion that he who ſuffered at Jeruſalem was the true Meſſiah, the Saviour of the world, the Prophet who was for to come, that perſon who was conſtituted Lord of all things; or, which amounts to the ſame thing, that he was Chriſt the Son of God. For explication of this propoſition, Conſider, 1. That the ſcripture mentions this as the great thing teſtified concerning him, by all the witneſſes of the Meſſiah, as, v. g.

1ſt, By St John the Baptiſt, who came for a witneſs to teſtify of the light, John 1. 7. and who ſaw, and bare record that this is the Son of God, ver. 34.: hence do St John's diſciples ſay, He to whom thou bareſt witneſs baptizeth, John 3. 25. And Chriſt ſpeaks thus to the Jews, You ſent to John, and he bare witneſs to the truth, John 5. 33.

2dly, God the Father bare him record, and teſtified by divers methods, that he was the Son of God; ſo do we read expreſsly, John 5. 32. There is another that beareth witneſs of me, and I know that the witneſs which he witneſſeth of me is true; the Father himſelf, who hath ſent me, beareth witneſs of me. And again, chap. 8. 17. 18. It is written in your law, that the teſtimony of two men is true; i. e. it is to be received as ſuch: I am one that bear witneſs of myſelf, and the Father, which ſent me, beareth witneſs of me. Now God the Father bore witneſs to his Son, 1. By a voice from heaven, ſaying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed, Mark 1. 11. This voice was perſonally directed to Chriſt himſelf, as being that commiſſion which was ſent him from heaven, to exerciſe the office of God's ſupreme miniſter, or legate in the world; but it was alſo prefaced with an ἰδὲ, behold, directing the people to attend to it, Matth. 3. 17. 2. By giving him the power of working miracles for confirmation of his doctrine, and his own teſtimony; and therefore he ſpeaks thus to the people, I have a greater teſtimony than that of John; the works which my Father hath given me to do, they bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me, John 5. 36.

3dly, The Holy Spirit beareth witneſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, 1 John 5. 6. and this he did not only by his deſcent upon our Saviour at his baptiſm, and by raiſing him from the dead, he being put to death in the fleſh, but quickened by the ſpirit, 1 Pet. 3. 18. but by enabling him to caſt out devils, and to perform ſuch works as never any other perſon did, or could do. Whence he thus argues, If by the Spirit of God I caſt out devils, then is the kingdom of God come unto you; i. e. then is it clear that I am the Meſſiah ſent from God, to preach the doctrine of his kingdom to you, Matth. 12. 28. Since my commiſſion is confirmed by theſe operations of his Spirit, and teſtified to by the finger of God, as the phraſe is varied, Luke 11. 20.; and this, after our Lord's aſcenſion, this Spirit was to do more fully: For when, ſaith Chriſt, the Comforter is come, even the Spirit of truth, he ſhall teſtify of me, John 15. 26. and this he actually did; whence Chriſt is ſaid to be juſtified by the Spirit, 1 Tim. 3. 16. i. e. freed by his teſtimony from the ſuſpicion of being an impoſtor, or falſe pretender, when he declared he was Chriſt the Son of God.

4thly, The apoſtles were men choſen for this very end: Ye ſhall bear witneſs of me, ſaith Chriſt, becauſe ye have been with me from the beginning, John 15. 27. Ye ſhall be witneſſes to me both in Jeruſalem and Judea, and in Samaria, and to the uttermoſt parts of the earth. Hence are they ſtyled witneſſes choſen of God, Acts 10. 41.; eye-witneſſes of what he did and ſuffered, Luke 1. 2.; eye-witneſſes of his glory, 2 Pet. 1. 16. That which we have heard, and ſeen, and looked upon, μαρτυρέομεν, we witneſs and declare unto you, ſaith St John, 1 John 1. 2.

5thly, Moſes alſo, and the prophets, are produced as his witneſſes, for unto him give all the prophets witneſs, Acts 10. 43. All the ſcriptures: Search the ſcriptures, ſaith Chriſt, for they are they which teſtify of me, John 5. 39. And Moſes in particular; for if you believed Moſes, you would believe me, for he wrote of me, ver. 46.

Conſider, 2. The things for which the witneſſes are produced, the evidence they give in concerning the Meſſiah, and that will teach us what is faith in Chriſt. Sometimes it is ſaid that they bear record that he is the Son of God, John 1. 34. 1 John 5. 5.—10. Sometimes they teſtify that he was the Chriſt. Thus St Paul confounded the Jews, teſtifying that he was the Chriſt, Acts 9. 20. 22. St Peter teſtifying to all the houſe of Iſrael, that God had made him Lord and Chriſt, Acts 2. 36. Sometimes they teſtify that he was the Saviour of the world. So 1 John 4. 14. We have ſeen, and do teſtify, that God hath ſent his Son to be the Saviour of the world; or that he was the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world, John 1. 29. that him God hath exalted to be a Saviour, to give repentance and remiſſion of ſins to them that believed in his name, Acts 5. 31. and 13. 38. Sometimes they teſtify that he is Lord of all things, Acts 10. 36.:

36.: and, as a conſequent of this, that he, by God's appointment, was to be judge of all men; for he commanded us, ſaith Peter, to preach to the people, and to teſtify, that it was he who was ordained to be the judge of the quick and the dead, Acts 10. 42. Sometimes they are ſaid to bear witneſs of his reſurrection, Acts 1. 22. ſaying, This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, whereof we are witneſſes, Acts 23. 2. for we have teſtified of God that he raiſed up Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15. 15.

3. Obſerve, that all theſe ſeveral teſtimonies, though they differ in expreſſions, they differ little in reality, and in effect do only ſignify that he is Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. For, 1. to ſay he is the Son of God, is in effect to ſay he is the Chriſt, that perſon by God anointed to be our prophet. St Matthew gives us the confeſſion of St Peter thus, Thou art the Chriſt, the Son of the living God, Matth. 16. 16. St Mark thus, Thou art the Chriſt, chap. 8. 29. St Luke, Thou art the Chriſt of God, chap. 9. 10. And when our Lord forbids them to divulge this to the world, he only ſaith, Tell no man that I am Jeſus the Chriſt, Matth. 16. 20. Art thou the Chriſt, the Son of God? ſaith the high prieſt to him, Matth. 26. 63. whereas St Luke relates the queſtion only thus, Art thou the Chriſt? chap. 22. 67. 2. To be the Son of God, is in effect to be the Lord of all things, the perſon to whom all power is given in heaven and earth; that every knee ſhould bow unto him, as their Sovereign Lord and King; and therefore, whereas Pilate is, in the other evangeliſts, ſaid only to aſk, Art thou the Chriſt the Son of God? St John relates the queſtion thus, Art thou the king of the Jews? 3. To be the Son of God, muſt alſo ſignify to be the Saviour of the world; the teſtimony of the apoſtles being this, that God had ſent his Son to be the Saviour of the world, 1 John 4. 14.: to teſtify that he was riſen from the dead was, in effect, to teſtify he was the Son of God; for he was declared to be the Son of God, with power, by the reſurrection from the dead, Rom. 1. 4. It was in effect to teſtify that he was made both Lord and Chriſt; and therefore Peter, having proved Chriſt's reſurrection and exaltation to the right hand of God, infers that we may all be hence aſſured, that God hath made him Lord, Acts 2. 36. and St Paul tells us, it was a demonſtration that God by him would judge the world, Acts 17. 31. And ſince his reſurrection was performed by the almighty power of God, it muſt be a ſufficient demonſtration of the truth of what Chriſt teſtified of himſelf, viz. that he was Chriſt the Saviour of the world, and that he ſhould hereafter ſit at the right hand of power, it being impoſſible that God ſhould have employed ſo great power in raiſing him from the dead, had he not been his well-beloved Son, or that Meſſiah he declared himſelf to be.

This being then the thing which all thoſe witneſſes were ſo concerned to atteſt, and to engage men to believe, we may be ſure this is, according to the tenor of the holy ſcripture, faith in Chriſt; and that by heartily believing that Chriſt is the Meſſiah, ſent into the world to inſtruct us in the will of God, the Saviour of the world, ſent to redeem us by his death from death and miſery, and give ſalvation to all his faithful ſervants; that he is our Lord and King, by whoſe laws we are to be governed, and by whoſe laws we ſhall be judged and rewarded at the laſt day: we truly do believe in Chriſt. Which yet will farther be apparent,

1*ſt*, From plain texts which ſeem expreſsly to aſſert the ſame. We find Nathaniel ſaying, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael, John 1. 49. and Chriſt thus anſwering to him, Becauſe I ſaw thee under the fig-tree, believeſt thou? Whence it is evident, that to acknowledge Jeſus to be the Son of God, the King of Iſrael, was to believe in him. This was the faith of the Samaritan woman, and her fellow-citizens, John 4. 26.; for to this woman our Saviour teſtifies he was the true Meſſiah, ſaying, I that ſpeak unto thee am he, ver. 29. Then the woman goes into the city, and ſaith to the men of it, Come, ſee a man that told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Chriſt? This being ſaid, many of the Samaritans believed on him, becauſe of the ſaying of the woman; and many more believed, becauſe of his own words, ver. 39.; that is, they were perſuaded, partly by what they heard her teſtify, partly by what they heard our Saviour ſpeak, to acknowledge he was the true Meſſiah, or the Saviour of the world; for ſo they do themſelves explain the meaning of believing on him, ſaying to the woman, Now we believe not becauſe of thy word, for we ourſelves have heard, and know, that this is verily the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world, ver. 42. This was the faith of Martha; for Jeſus having ſaid to her, I am the reſurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he live; believeſt thou this? ſhe anſwers, Yea, Lord, I believe thou art the Chriſt, the Son of God, who waſt to come into the world, John 11. 25. 26. To believe this, was therefore to believe in Chriſt, if Martha did ſo. We find St Paul opening and alledging that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered, and riſen again from the dead, Acts 17. 3. and that this Jeſus, whom he preached, was the Chriſt; and then it follows, that ſome of them believed, ver. 4. ἐπείσθησαν, they were perſuaded of the truth of what St Paul had teſtified. Again, it follows, that thoſe of Berea, ſearching the ſcriptures, and finding that theſe things were ſo, believed, ver. 11. i. e. they were perſuaded of the truth of what St Paul had taught, that Jeſus was the Chriſt; that he had ſuffered, and was riſen from the dead: this, therefore, muſt be to believe. Again, St Paul was preſſed in ſpirit, and teſtifies to the Jews that Jeſus was the Chriſt, Acts 18. 5. whereupon Criſpus, a chief ruler of the ſynagogue, and many of the Corinthians believed; i. e. they acknowledged the truth of St Paul's teſtimony, that Jeſus was the Chriſt. The word of faith which we preach, ſaith the ſame Paul, is this, that, if thou confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and in thy heart believeſt that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved, Rom. 10. 8. 9. And this he proves, becauſe the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not be aſhamed, ver. 10. To confeſs therefore, and acknowledge that Jeſus is the Lord, and that God raiſed him from the dead, is to believe on him. Laſtly, This, ſaith St John, is the victory over the world, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4. And then it follows, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God? To believe therefore that Jeſus is the Son of God is Chriſtian faith.

believed,

3*dly*, This was the faith which the apoſtles did require in order to baptiſm; and where there was a due appearance of it, their perſons were admitted into the number of believers. For inſtance, St Peter ſaith to the Jews, Let all the houſe of Iſrael know, that God hath made this Jeſus whom ye crucified Lord and Chriſt, Acts 2. 36.; this pricks them to the heart, and makes them to inquire, What ſhall we do? St Peter anſwers, Repent you, and believe every one of you in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, ver. 38.; and then it follows, That they who gladly received his word, were baptized; and there were added to the church three thouſand ſouls, ver. 41. and 47. The Lord daily added to the church τὺς σωζομένους, the ſaved, i. e. ſuch who were by this faith put into the way of ſalvation; and if they perſevered in it, would obtain it. Again, Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached to them Chriſt, Acts 8. 5.; and when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, ver. 12. i. e. when they did heartily aſſent to them, they were baptized, both men and women. And when the eunuch puts the queſtion to him, What hindereth me to be baptized? Philip returns this anſwer, If thou believeſt with all thy heart, thou mayſt, ver. 37.; and when the eunuch anſwered, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God, then was he inſtantly baptized; ſo that the faith required to baptiſm was only an hearty acknowledgment that Jeſus Chriſt was the Son of God.

§ 3. And becauſe there be many falſe, and, in my apprehenſion, dangerous deſcriptions of true faith, which have obtained in theſe latter ages, I will here briefly lay them down, and then proceed to other confirmations of the ſcripture-notion of true faith, by which we may abundantly diſcern the falſehood of them. Now they are ſuch as theſe, viz.

1. That (a) faith is a firm aſſent, by which every true believer is perſuaded, not only that remiſſion of ſins is promiſed in the general, but to him in particular. So Calvin; and after him the generality of the French and Dutch divines.

2. That faith conſiſts in (b) the application of Chriſt's merits to ourſelves, in caſting ourſelves upon the merits of Chriſt, in apprehending, relying, or laying hold upon Chriſt for ſalvation; or, as others ſay, it is a recumbency on Chriſt for ſalvation. Of all which notions of juſtifying, or true Chriſtian faith, this is a full confutation, that they are perfectly unſcriptural: for the firſt cannot be contained in ſcripture, it being certain to a demonſtration, that ſcripture no where ſaith, that Daniel, John, or Thomas, &c. have remiſſion of ſins. This therefore cannot be divine faith, or faith built immediately on a divine revelation or record, but reſts upon our own experience or knowledge of ourſelves; for the argument muſt run thus, He that repenteth and believeth, ſhall be ſaved. I Daniel and Thomas have done this; which may indeed be matter of their knowledge, but not of divine faith, as being not revealed in ſcripture.

3. Nor are the other opinions leſs unſcriptural; for we do not once read in ſcripture any command to apply Chriſt's merits to ourſelves, or to apprehend his merits, or to lean and roll ourſelves upon him for ſalvation; we find no exhortation in ſcripture ſo to do; no reprehenſion of any perſon for not reſting on, or not applying Chriſt's merits to themſelves;

no promiſe made to any upon the application of Chriſt's merits: in a word, the ſcripture is wholly unacquainted with theſe phraſes. And is that likely to be the duty on which our juſtification, adoption, and all our happineſs depends, which hath no precept, promiſe, or example in the holy ſcripture? But I ſhall add ſome farther confirmations of the ſcripture-notion of true faith, by which all theſe unſcriptural opinions will be at once confuted. And therefore,

4. The ſcripture frequently informs us, that the miracles done by Chriſt are propounded as the great motive to believe on him, and as the aggravation of their ſin who ſtill continued in their infidelity, and alſo that the conſideration of them cauſed many to believe. On this account he requires to be believed; If you believe not me, believe the works, John 10. 38. 14. 11. For the works that I do bear witneſs of me, that the Father hath ſent me, John 5. 36. and 10. 25. On this account he pronounces the infidelity of the Jews inexcuſable, ſaying, If I had not done among them the works that no other man did, they had not had ſin; but now they have no cloak for their ſin, John 15. 22. 24. It was this conſideration which induced many of them to believe; for many believed on his name, when they ſaw the miracles which he did, John 2. 23. and 7. 30. Now, what were all his miracles deſigned to produce in them, but a firm belief that he was Chriſt the Son of God? So doth St John expreſsly teach us, ſaying, There be many other miracles which Jeſus did, that are not written in this book; but theſe are written that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Son of God, John 20. 30. If you imagine that faith is a firm aſſent that Chriſt died for you in particular, and that you have remiſſion of ſins by him; that it is an application of Chriſt, or of his merits to yourſelves, or a rolling yourſelves upon him for ſalvation: how do his miracles convince you that you ſhould thus believe on him? but if you ſay, it is a firm perſuaſion that he is the Chriſt, the Son of God, nothing can be more proper to convince us of the truth of what he thus declared, than theſe miracles; then may you ſay with Nicodemus, We know thou art a teacher ſent from God; for no man can do ſuch miracles as thou doſt, except God were with him, John 3. 2.

5. This will be yet more evident from all thoſe places which aſcribe our juſtification and ſalvation to faith in God, or in him that ſent this Jeſus into the world. So doth our Lord himſelf in theſe words, Verily verily I ſay unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into condemnation; but is paſſed from death to life, John 5. 24. and 12. 44. The faith of Abraham is thus deſcribed, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 3. i. e. this faith in God was imputed to him for righteouſneſs: when therefore the apoſtle adds, That he is the father of them that believe, that righteouſneſs might be imputed to them alſo, ver. 9.; muſt it not be imputed upon their believing in God as he did? Doth not the apoſtle hence infer, That unto him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs, ver. 5.? Now, to believe in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, is certainly to believe in God the Father; for it is God that juſtifieth, Rom. 8. 33. To be juſtified by this faith, muſt therefore ſignify to be juſtified by faith in God the Father, according to thoſe words of St Peter, We through him believe in God, that our faith and hope might be in God, 1 Pet. 1. 21. Now, if faith be ſuppoſed to conſiſt in believing that our own ſins are pardoned, in application of Chriſt's merits to ourſelves, or in rolling ourſelves upon the perſon of Chriſt, what affinity or connection is there betwixt believing in God, believing the truth of his promiſes, as Abraham did, and was juſtified, and believing that our own ſins are pardoned, applying the merits of Chriſt to ourſelves, or rolling ourſelves upon him for ſalvation? But then if juſtifying faith doth primarily conſiſt in a firm perſuaſion that Jeſus is the Son of God, the Saviour of the world; the Prophet ſent of God to ſhew us the way of ſalvation, the Lord and King by whoſe laws we are to be governed if we would obtain it, then faith in Chriſt, and faith in God, are one thing: for God having teſtified all this concerning his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo promiſed that every one that hath ſeen the Son and believed on him, ſhall have eternal life, John 6. 40.; by thus believing, we receive his teſtimony, and ſet to our ſeal, that God is true.

6. This may be argued from all thoſe places which aſcribe our juſtification and ſalvation to the belief of the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, or of God's power exerciſed in raiſing him from the dead. Thus doth St Paul in that very chapter in which he profeſſedly diſputes of juſtification by faith; for he expreſſly declares, that to them that believe in him who raiſed Jeſus from the dead, that faith ſhall be imputed for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 24. as Abraham's faith in him that quickened the dead was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs. And again, If we believe with the heart, that God hath raiſed up the Lord Jeſus from the dead, we ſhall be ſaved; for with the heart man believeth to juſtification, Rom. 10. 9. Now, what agreement is there betwixt my believing my own ſins are pardoned, or my applying Chriſt's merits to myſelf, or rolling myſelf upon him, and Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead by the power of God? But then, if we ſay that faith is a firm perſuaſion that Jeſus was the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, the Prophet that was to come into the world, the Lord and Ruler over all; this, as he teſtified of himſelf whilſt living, and God the Father alſo teſtified, ſo was he declared to be the Son of God with power by this reſurrection from the dead, Rom. 1. 4.; by this all Iſrael might know that God had made him Lord and Chriſt, Acts 2. 24. to 36. and that God had exalted him to his right hand, to be a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins, Acts 5. 31. Hence the apoſtle teacheth, that Chriſt died for our ſins, and roſe again for our juſtification, Rom. 4. 25. and puts the queſtion, Who is he that condemneth us? It is Chriſt that died, yea rather, that is riſen again, chap. 8. 34.

7. This appears farther from this conſideration, that (c) in all the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament, there is not to be found one exhortation to any Chriſtian to believe in Chriſt, or to act faith on Chriſt. When the apoſtles preached to Jews or Gentiles, men not converted to the Chriſtian faith, they ſtill exhort them to believe that Jeſus was the Chriſt, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, or to believe in the Lord Jeſus. And this was neceſſary to be preached to them, to perſuade them to believe in, and to obey him; for till they did believe he was a perſon ſent from God, and that they ſhould receive ſome benefit by doing ſo, they could have no inducement to own, and no encouragement to obey him. It was therefore neceſſary that this ſhould be firſt preached to Jew and Gentile, that Chriſt was a perſon ſent from God to preach the doctrine which he taught, and that remiſſion of ſins and everlaſting life was to be obtained by his name, and by obedience to this teacher. But then, I ſay, the ſame apoſtles in their epiſtles directed to thoſe perſons who were already Chriſtians, and who had teſtified their faith by being baptized in the name of Jeſus, have not one exhortation to any of them to believe in Chriſt; but only to be ſtedfaſt in the faith, to increaſe and grow in faith, and to repent of what they had done contrary to the faith they had received. The exhortations of our Lord to the ſeven churches, and more particularly to that of Sardis, in which there were but very few who had not defiled themſelves, Rev. 3. 1. 2. 3.; and that of Laodicea which he threatened to ſpue out of his mouth for her lukewarmneſs, ver. 16. 18. is only to repent, and renew their firſt works, not to believe in him, or to apply his merits to themſelves. Now, what account can be given of this thing, by thoſe who are ſo zealous in their ſermons to exhort Chriſtians to believe in Chriſt, to roll themſelves upon him, and apply his merits to themſelves, and are ſo full of motives to perſuade them ſo to do? I ſay, what reaſon can they give why men, aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt, never exhorted any Chriſtian to believe, but only to ſhew forth their faith by their works, Jam. 2. 18. and to add unto their faith virtue, 2 Pet. 1. 5. 6. &c.? But then if Chriſtian faith be only a firm perſuaſion that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world, the reaſon is exceeding manifeſt why no Chriſtian ſhould be exhorted to believe, becauſe whoever is a Chriſtian, not only doth believe all this already, but hath profeſſed his belief of it by being baptized in the name of Jeſus. There therefore needs no exhortation to any Chriſtian to believe in Chriſt, but only to walk anſwerably to that faith, to be ſtedfaſt in it, and to add to his faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs, charity, 2 Pet. 1. 5. to 8. that they may not be ſlothful and unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Object. If it be here objected, that St John ſaith, Theſe things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, (ἵνα πιστεύητε) and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God, 1 John 5. 13. I anſwer,

1. That the Alexandrian and other Greek manuſcripts read not ἵνα πιστεύητε, but πιστεύοντες, that ye may know ye have eternal life who believe on the name of the Son of God. And this reading is confirmed by the vulgar, the Syriac, and Æthiopic verſions.

2. They who retain our verſion interpret the words thus, That ye may continue to believe in the name of the Son of God, or, that ye may more firmly and certainly believe (d). Nor will the words bear any other meaning, unleſs you will ſuppoſe St John ſhould ſeriouſly exhort believers to begin to do what he had told them in the immediate preceding words was ſo effectually done by them already, that they might know they had eternal life.

In a word, Either it is true before we actually believe it, that our ſins are pardoned, that we have a right to apply Chriſt's merits to us, and to roll ourſelves upon his perſon for ſalvation, or it is not: if it be true before we have believed, we muſt have faith before, ſince nothing can procure this pardon of our ſins, or give us any right to apply his merits to ourſelves, or depend on him for ſalvation, but faith in Chriſt: if it be not true, we muſt obtain the pardon of our ſins, and an intereſt in Chriſt's merits by believing a lie. And ſo much for the firſt particular. To the next inquiry;

(c) Concerning this paſſage, ſee an advertiſement to the reader at the end of this preface.

§ 4. 2dly, What is it be juſtified in St Paul's acceptation of the word? I anſwer,

1. That this juſtification which St Paul ſpeaks of, is an act of God terminated upon man. This the apoſtle expreſsly doth deliver in theſe words, Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? it is God that juſtifies, Rom. 8. 33.; and again, It is one God that juſtifies the circumciſion by faith, and the uncircumciſion through faith, Rom. 3. 30.; It is God that juſtifieth the ungodly, Rom. 4. 5.; He is juſt, and the juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus, Rom. 3. 26. Now, according to the clear tenor of the ſcripture,

2. God juſtifies the ſinner by abſolving him from the guilt of his paſt ſins by a free act of grace, in pardoning his iniquities, or not imputing his ſins to him, and ſo his juſtification muſt import his abſolution from the guilt of ſin, and, as a neceſſary and immediate conſequence of that, our being reconciled to God, and received into favour with him. This will be evident if we conſider,

1. What the Baptiſt teſtified concerning him, that all men might believe, viz. that he was the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world, John 1. 29. and what Chriſt teſtified of himſelf, viz. that he that believeth in him ſhould not come into condemnation, John 3. 36.; that his blood was the blood of the new covenant which was ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, Matth. 26. 28. even of that covenant in which God promiſes to be merciful to our unrighteouſneſs, and to remember our ſins no more, Heb. 8. 13. and 10. 17.; as alſo from what his apoſtles promiſed to win men to the faith of Jeſus, viz. remiſſion of ſins. Thus when the Jews were pricked to the heart, and ſaid, What ſhall we do? St Peter anſwers, Repent ye, and be baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, Acts 2. 37.; and again, Repent you, and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, Acts 3. 19. for him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remiſſion of ſins, Acts 5. 31.; St Peter begins his ſermon to Cornelius thus, The word which God hath ſent us to preach, is peace by Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 10. 36. To him give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believeth on him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins, Acts 13. 23.; St Paul declares, that God had raiſed up to Iſrael a Saviour Jeſus; and then he adds, Known therefore be it to you, that through this man is preached to you remiſſion of ſins; and in him every believer on him ſhall be juſtified from all things, from which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, Heb. 10. 1. 4. that law being not able to take away ſins, Rom. 3. 23. i. e. to free men from the guilt of ſin. Seeing then the benefit propoſed to the believer, is the remiſſion of ſins to be obtained through Chriſt, through his name; ſeeing we are ſaid to be juſtified through Chriſt, Rom. 5. 9. through faith in his blood, Eph. 1. 7. that blood which is ſo often ſaid to be ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins, Col. 1. 14. 20. and to procure our peace and our redemption; ſince, laſtly, we are ſaid by believing in Chriſt to be juſtified from ſin, Acts 13. 39. which phraſe can only ſignify exemption from the condemnation of it: I ſay, from theſe expreſſions it appears, that God's juſtification of a ſinner by faith, or through faith in the blood of Jeſus, is chiefly the remiſſion of the believer's ſins, and the exemption of him from the condemnation of the law, by virtue of Chriſt's blood ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins.

2. This we may learn from the reaſonings by which the apoſtle confirms his concluſion, or the arguments by which he proves, that both Jew and Gentile are to be juſtified by faith without the works of the law, or without works: His concluſion is laid down, Rom. 1. 17. thus, The righteouſneſs of God which proceeds from faith, is revealed in the goſpel, to beget faith in Jew and Gentile, ver. 16.; ſee the note there. And this way of obtaining righteouſneſs or juſtification he proves to be abſolutely neceſſary to them both, beginning firſt with the Gentiles, whom he pronounces ſubject to the wrath of God, for holding the truth they by the light of nature knew, in unrighteouſneſs, ver. 18. And this he proves to the end of that chapter, which concludes thus, that they knowing the judgment of God, that they who did ſuch things were worthy of death, not only did the ſame, but had pleaſure in them that did them. In the ſecond chapter he declares the Jews guilty of the ſame things the Heathens did, and ſo obnoxious to the ſame condemnation, and alſo guilty of violating the law of Moſes, and thence concludes, that as to this matter there was no difference between them, he having proved both Jews and Gentiles to be all under ſin, chap. 3. 9. and ſo both equally needing to be juſtified by faith, or to be juſtified freely by an act of grace, pardoning their ſins through faith in Chriſt, ver. 24.; his argument then is plainly this, Both Jew and Gentile lie under the guilt of ſin, there being none of them that is righteous, Rom. 3. 9. i. e. free from ſin, no not one, ver. 10. Neither of them can be juſtified by the law, becauſe they by the ſentence of it are ὑπόδικοι τῷ Θεῷ, guilty before God, ver. 19. 20. and obnoxious to puniſhment, as being both tranſgreſſors of it; therefore, ſaith he, by the law can no fleſh be juſtified, for by the law is the knowledge of ſin, rendering us obnoxious to condemnation; where then there remains the guilt of ſin, there can be no juſtification; where therefore there is remiſſion of ſin, and ſo a freedom from being guilty of it before God, there is juſtification. Again, All have ſinned, ſaith he, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God, ver. 23. that is, either of his approbation, as that phraſe ſignifies, John 12. 43. or of the fruition of the glory of God, as it imports, Rom. 5. 1. 2.; therefore abſolution from this ſin muſt be ſufficient to make us obtain this glory of God. We who have thus ſinned, ſaith he, are juſtified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, ver. 24. Now, what is this redemption? It is, ſaith the ſame apoſtle twice, remiſſion of our ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. The apoſtle argues to the ſame effect in the epiſtle to the Galatians, that juſtification cannot be by the law, becauſe the law cannot give life; and this it cannot do, becauſe the ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, Gal. 3. 21. 22. and ſo ſhut out that way of being juſtified. Our freedom therefore from the guilt of ſin muſt be ſufficient for our juſtification to life. In his fourth chapter to the Romans he deſcribes juſtification by the not imputing ſin, and the forgiveneſs of it, in theſe words, To him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs, ver. 4. As David ſpeaks of the bleſſedneſs of the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteouſneſs without works, ver. 5. 6. ſaying, Bleſſed are they whoſe unrighteouſneſs is forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered, ver. 7. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not ſin, ver. 8. Since then the bleſſedneſs of which the apoſtle was diſcourſing was that of juſtification, the juſtification of the ungodly; and ſince this bleſſedneſs is ſaid to conſiſt in the remiſſion, covering, the not imputing his ſins to him, it cannot reaſonably be denied that the bleſſedneſs of a juſtified perſon is here deſcribed by the bleſſedneſs of a pardoned perſon, as being one and the ſame thing.

3. This will be farther evident, from the conſideration of the phraſes the apoſtle uſeth as equivalent to juſtification, and interpretative of it. As,

1*ſt*, Reconciliation to God. That this is the ſame with juſtification, appears by theſe words: Much more being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath by him; for if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life, Rom. 5. 9. 10.; where, to be juſtified by his blood, and reconciled by his death, ſeem plainly the ſame thing. Now, that reconciliation is effected by the remiſſion of ſins, is evident from theſe words. God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them, 2 Cor. 5. 19.; and therefore juſtification alſo muſt be ſo obtained; for if, upon the not imputing ſin to us, God did not account us as righteous, he could not be reconciled to us, becauſe he cannot be reconciled to any man continuing unrighteous, or under the notion of a ſinner.

2*dly*, Juſtification ſtands directly oppoſed to condemnation, in theſe words: Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect, or to believers? τὶς ἐγκαλέσει κατὰ; who ſhall object a crime againſt them? It is God that juſtifieth: who is he that condemneth them? Rom. 1. 33. 34. And again, If the miniſtration of condemnation, i. e. the law, which chargeth us with guilt, and ſo rendereth us obnoxious to condemnation, was glorious, much more the miniſtration τῆς δικαιοσύνης, of juſtification, doth exceed in glory, 2 Cor. 3. 9. Now, what is it that mankind is accuſed of, and charged with by the law, but ſin? What is it that that they ſtand condemned for at God's bar, but the trangreſſion of his law? Juſtification therefore, which ſtands oppoſed to it, muſt be a clearing and diſcharging them from the guilt, or the condemning power of ſin.

3*dly*, Juſtification is ſaid to be from ſin: By him all that believe are juſtified ἐκ πάντων, from all thoſe ſins from which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, Acts 13. 39. And again, The judgment was from one ſin to condemnation, but the free gift to juſtification, ἐκ πολλῶν ἁμαρτημάτων, from many ſins, Rom. 5. 16. Now, what can juſtification from ſin ſignify, beſides our abſolution from the guilt of ſin?

4*thly*, The juſtifying the believer, and the remiſſion of his ſins, are divers expreſſions of the ſame thing, as is apparent from theſe words, God hath ſet forth Chriſt Jeſus to be a propitiation through faith in his blood. This he hath done, ſaith the apoſtle, to declare his righteouſneſs in the remiſſion of ſins, Rom. 3. 25. viz. to thoſe that have this faith, i. e. to manifeſt the way of juſtification by faith, which he alone admits of for the remiſſion of ſins. He did this, ſaith the next verſe, to declare his righteouſneſs, that he might be juſt, in requiring this propitiation for our ſins, and the juſtifier of him that believeth in Jeſus, ver. 26. Is it not therefore manifeſt, that to juſtify the believer, and to remit his ſins, muſt be the ſame thing?

5*thly*, We are juſtified, ſaith the apoſtle, through the redemption that is in Jeſus, through faith in his blood, Rom. 3. 24. 25. through his blood, Rom. 5. 9. Now, what doth this blood procure for us? Forgiveneſs of ſins, Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. ſaith the apoſtle, it being ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, Matth. 26. 28. He appearing in the end of the world to put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf, Heb. 9. 26. What benefit have believers by it? He hath loved them, and waſhed them from their ſins in his blood, Rev. 1. 5. He hath made peace for them by the blood of his croſs, Col. 1. 20. with a God only angry for ſin. He hath obtained eternal redemption from tranſgreſſions by it, Heb. 9. 12. 15. By all theſe equivalent expreſſions it appears, that God's juſtifying the ſinner, in St Paul's ſenſe of the expreſſion, is his abſolving him from the guilt of his paſt ſins, from puniſhment, and condemnation by the law for them, by an act of grace and free pardon of them through the blood of Jeſus; his being as fully reconciled to us, as if we never had offended againſt the former covenant we were all under, till the new covenant was eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus.

§ 5. 3. I add, that this juſtification is, by St Paul, aſcribed to faith alone, in oppoſition to works of righteouſneſs done, either by the Jew or Gentile. This plainly follows from that notion of juſtification, which I have eſtabliſhed as the true ſenſe of the expreſſion in St Paul; for how could Jew or Gentile be juſtified by the works of that law, whether Moſaical or natural, which rendered them both obnoxious to condemnation for ſin, and guilty before God? Could they receive remiſſion of ſins by compliance with that law, which left them under condemnation for it? Can any man imagine, after the charge he lays againſt the Gentiles, chap. 1. and againſt the Jews, chap. 2. and 3. he could have any inclination to aſſert they ſhould be juſtified, or abſolved from the guilt of thoſe offences by their works, and not by faith only? The miſtake in this matter ſeems to lie here, that men look upon juſtification, not as looking backward only, and procuring an abſolution from our paſt ſins, but as looking forward to our whole Chriſtian converſation, and importing our abſolution from all our ſins committed againſt the tenor of the covenant of grace, or the new covenant; whereas it only doth conſiſt ἐν τῇ ἀφέσει τῶν παραγινομένων ἁμαρτημάτων, in the remiſſion of our paſt ſins, Rom. 3. 25.; in the redemption of us from τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ πρώτῃ διαθήκῃ παραβάσεων, the ſins committed againſt our former covenant, Heb. 9. 15. in the purgation of the believer τῶν πάλαι αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτιῶν from his old ſins, 2 Pet. 1. 9.; and leaves us afterward to be abſolved or condemned, as we obey, perform, or violate the conditions of the new covenant, and ſo to be judged hereafter, not according to our faith, but works. See the note on Rom. 3. 25.

2*dly*, This is exceeding evident from the plain words of the apoſtle, and by the arguments by which he proves we muſt be juſtified by faith, and not by works. For, ſaith he, by the deeds of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in his ſight, for by the law is the knowledge of (that) ſin (which renders us obnoxious to condemnation). Now, this knowledge of ſin, being chiefly produced by the moral law, Rom. 7. 7. ſhews the apoſtle excludes as well that, as the ceremonial law, from juſtification. And evident it is, that the antitheſis runs all along not between ceremonial and moral works, or between works done by the law of Moſes, or by the tenor of the law of nature, but between works in general, and faith, the law of works, and the law of faith. Again, we are, ſaith he, juſtified freely by his grace, Rom. 3. 24. i. e. by a free act of grace in pardoning our paſt ſins, by which we had fallen ſhort of the glory of God. Now, a free act of grace is ſtill oppoſed to works. Thus, if our election or calling to the faith of Chriſt be of grace, then is it not of works, Rom. 11. 6. By grace ye are ſaved through faith, not of works, Eph. 2. 8. 9. See the note there. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we had done (before the goodneſs and loving kindneſs of God our Saviour appeared to us), but according to his mercy he ſaved us, Tit. 3. 5. See the note there. Moreover, we reckon, ſaith he, that a man is juſtified by faith without the works of the law, ver. 28. Where it is on all ſides granted, that the works of the law of Moſes are entirely excluded from juſtification by faith, and then much more the works of the Gentiles; it being the ſame God who juſtifies the circumciſion by faith, and the uncircumciſion through faith, ver. 30. In the next chapter he ſaith, To him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is reckoned for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 5. Now, how can the ungodly be juſtified by works, and by what words can works be more entirely excluded, than by not working?

3*dly*, That evangelical obedience, or works of righteouſneſs done by us after faith in Chriſt, are excluded from that faith which juſtifies, is evident, becauſe they follow the faith which juſtifies, i. e. procures the pardon of our paſt ſins. For, ſaith the apoſtle, we are ſaved (from the wrath due unto us for our paſt ſins, Rom. 5. 9. or we are put into the way or ſtate of ſalvation) by grace through faith, not of works; for we are created in Jeſus Chriſt to good works, which God hath ordained that we ſhould walk in, Eph. 2. 8. 9. 10. So that we muſt be firſt in Chriſt by virtue of this faith, before we can be fitted to do works of evangelical righteouſneſs. And this argument may be confirmed from many inſtances of perſons who believed, and were immediately baptized the ſame day: for, being baptized for the remiſſion of ſins, they muſt be juſtified. Thus, at St Peter's ſermon, three thouſand believed, and were baptized the ſame day, Acts 2. 41. Thus the Samaritans, upon the hearing Philip preach, concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of the Lord Jeſus, were immediately baptized, Acts 8. 12. So alſo was the eunuch upon his preaching to him, ver. 18. So was Cornelius, and all that heard St Peter's ſermon, Acts 10. 48. So was the jailor, and all his houſe ſtraightway, Acts 16. 33. See Acts 9. 35. 42. and 11. 21. and 13. 12. 48. 49. and 14. 1. and 17. 4. 12. 34. and 19. 18. Now what evangelical lical obedience could theſe men perform to render them juſtified by works?

4*thly*, This may be fairly argued from the example of Abraham's juſtification, and the paſſage whence St Paul concludes it. Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs: for it deſerves to be obſerved that Abraham had faith, or was a believer before this was ſaid unto him; for by faith, Abraham being called, obeyed, and went forth, Heb. 11. 8. And after by a ſtrong faith he offered up his ſon Iſaac, believing that God was able to raiſe him from the dead, ver. 17. But neither of theſe inſtances are pitched upon by the apoſtle, as fit for his purpoſe, becauſe in both obedience was joined with faith, whereas here was a pure act of faith without works; and of this act of faith it is ſaid, what is not ſaid of either of the other, it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs. If therefore thus it was in the example of the father of the faithful, we may hence conclude it was ſo alſo in the children of faithful Abraham.

Laſtly, The ſcripture is expreſs and frequent in this aſſertion, that believers are juſtified by faith; in which expreſſion either faith muſt include works, or evangelical obedience, or it doth not; if it doth not, we muſt be juſtified by faith alone. And that it doth not formally include works of evangelical righteouſneſs, appears,

1. From the plain diſtinction which the ſcripture puts btween them, when it informs us, that faith works by love, acts with our works, and is made perfect by them; when it calls upon us to ſhew forth our faith by our works, and to add to our faith virtue, knowledge, godlineſs, temperance, patience, brotherly kindneſs, charity; and when it ſpeaks of the works of faith, and the obedience of faith, Gal. 5. 6. Jam. 2. 18. 22. 2 Pet. 1. 5. 6. Rom. 16. 26. 1 Theſſ. 1. 3.

2. Faith in the nature of it is only an aſſent to a teſtimony; divine faith an aſſent to a divine teſtimony; faith in Chriſt an aſſent to the teſtimony given by God of Chriſt. Now, it is not reaſonable to conceive, that Chriſt and his apoſtles, making uſe of a word which had this known and fixed import, ſhould mean more by the word than what it ſignified in common uſe, as ſure they muſt have done, had they included in the meaning of the word the whole of our evangelical righteouſneſs. Though therefore faith is the ſpring and the foundation of that righteouſneſs, and where it is cordial and laſting, will moſt aſſuredly produce it, yet is not that righteouſneſs included in the very nature, or contained in the import of it.

Object. But doth not St James ſay expreſsly, that a man is juſtified by works, and not by faith only? chap. 2. 24.

Anſ. In anſwer to this capital objection, I ſhall firſt produce the words of the apoſtle James, with a ſhort paraphraſe, and then return a poſitive anſwer to the objection. The words I paraphraſe thus:

Ver. 14. (And let not any Jew or Chriſtian think his faith ſufficient to juſtify and ſave him, without thoſe works of charity and mercy here ſpoken of, ver. 8.—13. for) what doth it profit, my brethren, if a man ſay he hath faith, (i. e. in words profeſs to have faith in God, ver. 19. or in Chriſt, ver. 1.), and have no works (to evidence the truth of that profeſſion?) can (ſuch a naked fruitleſs) faith ſave him?

Ver. 15. If a brother or ſiſter be naked, or deſtitute of daily food;

Ver. 16. And one of you ſay unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled, (making profeſſion of compaſſion for, and good-will to them in your words, but) notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which be needful for (the clothing or feeding of) the body, what doth it profit (them to hear your kind words?)

Ver. 17. Even ſo faith (profeſſed with the mouth), if it hath not works (anſwerable to that profeſſion or conſequent upon it), is dead (and fruitleſs as thoſe words), being alone, (i. e. without works ſhewing the truth of it.)

Ver. 18. Yea, a man may ſay (to ſuch a ſolifidian), Thou haſt (in profeſſion) faith, and I have (real) works; ſhew me thy faith (which thou profeſſeſt) without thy works, (which thou canſt never do, faith being ſeated in the heart, and only diſcoverable by its effects), and I will ſhew thee by my works my faith, (as the cauſe is demonſtrated by the effect.)

Ver. 19. Thou (being a Jew) believeſt there is one God, thou (in this) doſt well, (but doſt no more than the very devils, for) the devils alſo believe and tremble, (and if thou haſt no better faith than they, thou haſt the ſame reaſon to tremble which they have.)

Ver. 20. But wilt thou know, O vain man, (who makeſt profeſſion of ſuch a naked faith), that faith without works is dead, (and ſo unable to juſtify or ſave thee: ſee it in the example of that very Abraham, in thy relation to whom thou ſo confideſt.)

Ver. 21. (For) was not Abraham (whom we ſtyle) our father juſtified by works (proceeding from his faith), when he had offered his ſon Iſaac upon the altar? (counting that God was able to raiſe him from the dead, Heb. 11. 17. 19.)

Ver. 22. Seeſt thou how (Gr. thou ſeeſt by this example, that) faith wrought with his works (to produce them?), and by works was faith made perfect, (and advanced in him to the greateſt height.)

Ver. 23.

Ver. 23. And the ſcripture was (again) fulfilled, which ſaith, Abraham believed in God, and it (viz. that faith which produced theſe works) was accounted to him for righteouſneſs, and (upon that account) he was called the friend of God.

Ver. 24. Ye ſee then how that by works (proceeding from faith) a man is juſtified, and not by faith only, (i. e. being alone, and without them.)

Now, in anſwer to the objection from theſe words, I ſay,

That when St Paul ſaith, We are juſtified by faith without the works of the law, and that to him that worketh not, but believeth in him that juſtifieth the ungodly, faith is imputed for righteouſneſs, or to juſtification; juſtification there aſcribed to faith without works, imports only our abſolution from condemnation by reaſon of our paſt ſins committed before faith in Chriſt, and our reconciliation to God by the pardon of them, or the not imputing them to thoſe who believe in him. This I have ſhewed already, and it is apparent from the chief argument the apoſtle uſeth to prove, that both Jew and Gentile ſhould be juſtified freely by his grace, and not by works, becauſe they were all under ſin, all become guilty before God, all having ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 9. 19. 23. whereas, ſaith he, being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 1. 2. Therefore, chap. 3. he muſt be ſpeaking of the condition both of Jew and Gentile before faith in Chriſt. So again when the apoſtle ſaith, The ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe (of juſtification) by (the) faith of Jeſus Chriſt might be given to them that believe (in him.) Wherefore the law was (then) our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith (in him.) But now, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter, (i. e. under the pedagogy of the law); for ye are all the children of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus, Gal. 3. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26.; he plainly inſinuates that we cannot be juſtified by the works of the law, becauſe the law leads us to Chriſt for juſtification. And again, We are juſtified by grace, not of works; for we are God's workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, Eph. 2. 10.; where the argument ſeems plainly to run thus, We cannot be juſtified by works preceding faith, becauſe we do no good works till by faith we are intereſted in Chriſt Jeſus; whereas St James ſpeaks plainly of thoſe works which follow faith, are wrought by it, and are the effects of it, and of their neceſſity in order to our continuance in a ſtate of juſtification, and our freedom from final condemnation. St James ſpeaks of a mere profeſſion of faith with the mouth, St Paul of believing from the heart; St James of a faith dead and fruitleſs when we have it, St Paul of a faith working by love when we have it, and of a perſon only juſtified without works, becauſe he had no faith to produce them.

§ 6. 4thly, It ſeemeth neceſſary from the nature of the thing, and the ſtate and condition of the perſons to whom the goſpel was firſt preached, that they ſhould be juſtified or abſolved from the guilt of their paſt ſins, without new obedience, or without actual obedience to all the commandments of Chriſt; though not without that faith which did engage them to it, and was ſufficient to produce it. For,

1. This was all that could be done by the convinced Jews or Gentiles, who at one ſermon or diſcourſe believed, and were baptized for the remiſſion of ſins. It is manifeſt they then knew but little of the commandments of Chriſt, and ſo could not be doers of them. Either then they were not juſtified, and then faith is not imputed to them for righteouſneſs, nor did baptiſm conſign to them remiſſion of ſins; or they were juſtified by that faith which did not include actual obedience to all the commandments of Chriſt as the condition of that juſtification. And ſeeing perſeverance to the end, and being faithful to the death, are by our Lord himſelf made the conditions of ſalvation, and of receiving from his hands the crown of life; if theſe be alſo the conditions of the juſtification promiſed to faith in Chriſt, no perſon is, or can be juſtified by faith till he dies. This faith therefore in Jew and Gentile thus converted, could only import three things: 1. By way of preparation for it, an owning the true God who gave this teſtimony to his Son, and ſo a turning from dumb idols to ſerve the living God, and a ſorrow for the ſins committed againſt him in the time of their ignorance; and in the Jews a ſorrow for their paſt ſins, and in particular for having crucified the Lord of life, and in this ſenſe repentance goes before faith; and Chriſt's apoſtles preached to the Jews repentance for the remiſſion of ſins through faith in his name, Acts 14. 15. and to the Gentiles, to turn from theſe vain things to the living God, who made heaven and earth; and to both, repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 20. 21. 2. As a means to obtain this remiſſion of ſins, faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. 3. An engagement for the future to ceaſe from ſin, and to give up themſelves to the ſervice of God, according to the rules and precepts delivered to them by his Son. Now, this engagement was virtually contained in their repentance, and their faith in Chriſt, and was ſolemnly made by them at their baptiſm, as will be proved hereafter. Now, this being all that they could then do, it muſt be all they were obliged to do, in order to their juſtification; and yet it is certain that a promiſe of obedience is not obedience, and that even the new covenant requires, in order to ſalvation, a ſincere and conſtant performance of the obedience thus promiſed. So that the conditions of ſalvation, and of juſtification from our paſt offences, can never be the ſame.

2. This will be farther evident, if we conſider that no man can enter into covenant with God, be reconciled to him, be admitted to his grace and favour, or be enabled to ſerve him acceptably, till his ſins be pardoned, for God cannot be reconciled to ſinners whilſt they continue under the guilt of ſin unpardoned; nor can he enter into covenant with them, or receive them to his grace and favour, or accept their ſervices, till he be reconciled to them. When God entered into covenant with his own people, a ſacrifice was firſt offered to make atonement for their ſins, and the blood of it was ſprinkled upon all the people, Heb. 9. 19. and the new covenant in which he promiſed to be merciful to our iniquities, and to remember our ſins no more, was eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus, ſhed for the remiſſion of our ſins. So that the ſins of a believer muſt be immediately pardoned upon his faith in Chriſt, or he can have no peace with God, no reconcilement to him, no intereſt in the new covenant, and be in no capacity to do him any acceptable ſervice. This is the import of theſe words, Chriſt ſuffered for our ſins, ἵνα ἡμᾶς προσαγάγῃ τῷ Θεῷ, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18.; for to bring us to God, in all other places of the New Teſtament in which this phraſe is uſed with reſpect to Chriſt, is to give us freedom of acceſs to God, who by our ſins were formerly excluded from it, and baniſhed from his gracious preſence. By him, ſaith the apoſtle, we have προσαγωγὴν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, admiſſion to the Father, Eph. 2. 18.; by him we do obtain a freedom εἰς τὴν προσαγωγὴν, of acceſs to God with confidence, Eph. 3. 12. This is obtained, ſaith the ſame apoſtle, by virtue of Chriſt's blood; for we who ſometimes were afar off, are by the blood of Chriſt brought nigh unto him, for he is our peace, ver. 13. 14. and he hath reconciled both Jew and Gentile to God by his croſs. If then the blood of Chriſt procured this freedom of acceſs to God, it is certain we had no freedom of acceſs to him without it; and it is as certain we muſt have it by that faith which giveth us an intereſt in the propitiation purchaſed by it.

To ſet this matter in the cleareſt light, and ſhew the reaſon why it was neceſſary that ſuch an act of grace in pardoning our paſt ſins upon our faith in Chriſt ſhould be vouchſafed, that ſo we might be reconciled to God, capacitated for his friendſhip, and fitted for his ſervice, let it be obſerved,

1*ſt*, That to come to God, is to approach him in the way of worſhip, as in thoſe words, He that cometh to God muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6. See Pſal. 42. 2. and 65. 2. 86. 9. 95. 26. Iſ. 1. 12.

2*dly*, That God being an holy God, none were to come into his preſence who had any pollution or defilement upon them, upon pain of death, till they were ſanctified or cleanſed from it by ſome purification or atonement made for them to God. He dwelt in the whole camp of Iſrael; and ſo thoſe lepers who were ſo unclean as to pollute the camp, were driven from it, Lev. 13. 46. Numb. 5. 2. 3. 2 Kings 15. 5.; and thoſe ſin offerings which were polluted with the ſins of the whole congregation, were carried out of the camp, Lev. 16. 21. 22. 27. Heb. 13. 11. God dwelt more eſpecially in the temple, and therefore they who had leſſer impurities, i. e. who were defiled by the dead, or by an iſſue, and all menſtruous women, were not to come thither till they were cleanſed from thoſe defilements, Lev. 12. 4. and 15. 31.; moreover, he being a God of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, they who had committed any ſin of ignorance, or lay under the guilt of it, were not permitted to come into the court of the God of Iſrael, till they had brought their offering of atonement. See Ainſworth on Numb. 5. 3.

3*dly*, They who had no ceremonial defilement to be purged away, and no known ſin to make atonement for, were admitted to come near to God, as being holy; they had προσαγωγὴν τῷ Θεῷ, a freedom of acceſs to God in his tabernacle, and in his temple; whence they are ſtyled ὁ λαὸς ἐγγίζων αὐτῷ, the people that draw near to God, Pſal. 65. 4. and 148. 14. Lev. 10. 3.; and God is ſaid to be ὁ Θεὸς ἐγγίζων αὐτοῖς, a God near to them, Deut. 7. 4. both by relation, as having owned them as his children, and entered into covenant to be their God, and by his more eſpecial preſence with them, for the Shechinah, or the glorious preſence dwelt among them in the holy place, and ſo to them belonged ἡ λατρεία, the privilege of coming to his court to worſhip him, and a promiſe of his bleſſing if they ſincerely did it: whereas the Heathens, who by reaſon of their idolatry were not permitted to ſerve him, are ſaid to be afar off, and ſo far without God in the world, as to have no freedom of acceſs to his ſervice, no ſuch converſe with him, or relation to him, Eph. 1. 12. 13. 17. 19.

Now, God being ſtill as holy a God as ever, and ſtill of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament ſeem as plainly to make our freedom of acceſs to God, to depend upon our being ſanctified in the ſacrifical ſenſe, i. e. our being purged and delivered from the guilt of ſin by an atonement made for us by the blood of Chriſt, that our ſins being thus pardoned through faith in his blood, we may have peace with God, and an acceſs to his favour. This plainly ſeems to be the import of thoſe words, If the blood of bulls and goats, and the the aſhes of an heifer, ſprinkling the unclean, ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh, (and by ſo doing procureth an admiſſion of the perſon cleanſed to ſerve God in the ſanctuary); how much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit offered himſelf without ſpot to God (for us), purge your conſcience from dead works, (or works expoſing you to death, the puniſhment of the perſon who came unclean into God's preſence, that ſo you may be admitted) to ſerve the living God? Heb. 9. 13. 14. See the notes there. So again, the apoſtle having ſaid that the covenant eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt, was this, That he would be merciful to our iniquities, and remember our ſins no more; and having thence inferred, that having thus obtained remiſſion for us, there was no need that he ſhould make himſelf again an offering for ſin, he adds, that therefore we may draw near to God with full aſſurance of faith, that we ſhall be accepted through the beloved, as having our hearts ſprinkled by his blood, and therefore cleanſed from all guilt of conſcience, and our bodies waſhed (by baptiſm) with pure water, Heb. 10. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21.

Two things obſerved by the judicious Dr Barrow, ſeem here conſiderable:

1. "That the apoſtle in this diſcourſe implies, "that no precedent diſpenſation had exhibited any "manifeſt overture or promiſe of pardon, and upon "that account were in a main point defective; for "the light of nature doth only direct to duty, con-"demning every man in his own judgment and con-"ſcience, who tranſgreſſeth; but as to pardon, in "caſe of tranſgreſſion, it is blind and ſilent: and "the law of Moſes rigorouſly exacteth punctual o-"bedience, denouncing in expreſs terms a condem-"nation and curſe to the tranſgreſſors of it in any "part; and ſo it was a law ὁ δυνάμενος ζωοποιῆσαι, not "able to give life, Gal. 3. 21. or ſave us from death. "Hence doth the apoſtle lay down this as the foun-"dation of this whole diſpute, that the goſpel alone "was the power of God through faith to the ſalva-"tion both of Jew and Gentile, Rom. 1. 16. 17. be-"cauſe in that alone was the righteouſneſs of God by "faith revealed to beget faith in them, even the "faith by which the juſt ſhall live, declaring, that "no precedent diſpenſation could juſtify any man, "and that a man is juſtified by faith, or hath an "abſolute need of ſuch a juſtification as that which "the goſpel tendereth. Λογιζόμεθα γὰρ, We therefore "collect, ſaith he, that a man is juſtified by faith "without the works of the law, whether natural or "Moſaical; which juſtification muſt therefore im-"port their receiving that free pardon which the "criminal and guilty world did ſtand in need of, "and without which no man could have any com-"fort in his mind, or peace with God: for if the "ſtate of man was a ſtate of rebellion, and ſo of "hainous guilt, of having forfeited God's favour, "and of obnoxiouſneſs to his wrath, then that ju-"ſtification which he needed muſt be a diſpenſa-"tion of mercy removing that guilt, and reſtoring "him to the favour of God."

And this may alſo ſtrongly be argued from the objections which the Jew and Gentile made againſt this doctrine of juſtification by a free act of grace, that it ſeemed to render it unjuſt in God to take vengeance on thoſe ſins which tended ſo highly to the glory of God's grace; ſee the note on Rom. 3. 5. and to encourage us to do evil that good may come; ſee the note on ver. 8.; and more eſpecially from the objections which he anſwers, chap. 6. 1. 15. for thus they run, τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; What do we ſay then? (do we ſay this), Let us (who have received this grace) continue (ſtill) in ſin, that grace may abound (towards us?) And ver. 15. What then ſhall we (go on in) ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, (which condemns us to death for every tranſgreſſion), but under (that covenant of) grace (which allows the pardon, and promiſes the forgiveneſs of it?) That is, do we by declaring that we are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, chap. 3. 24.; and that as ſin abounded, grace did more abound, give juſt occaſion for theſe inferences? Now, if the faith to which St Paul, in this diſcourſe, aſcribed our juſtification, did not only oblige us to, but even comprehend and include evangelical and conſtant obedience, what colour could there be for theſe objections? And therefore,

2. The Doctor, p. 83. propoſes it as his conjecture, That the apoſtle in this diſcourſe deſignedly ſets himſelf to anſwer this objection of the Jew and Gentile againſt this doctrine of Chriſtianity, viz. That it did, upon ſo ſlender a condition or performance as that of faith, tender to all perſons indifferently, howſoever culpable their former lives had been, a plenary remiſſion of their ſins, and reception into God's favour. The Jews could not conceive or reliſh, that any man ſo eaſily ſhould be tranſlated into a ſtate equal, or ſuperior to that which they ſuppoſed they did enjoy. The Gentiles themſelves could hardly digeſt it, that the Chriſtians ſaid, Believe, and ἡ πίστις σε σέσωκε σε, thy faith ſhall ſave thee: this is one of the exceptions which Celſus makes againſt it. And Zozimus having ſaid, "That the "Heathen prieſts having told Conſtantine, that "their religion afforded no purgation for his "crimes, he was perſuaded to embrace Chriſti-"anity, as being told the Chriſtian doctrine would "take away all ſin; and had this promiſe annexed "to it, That the ungodly who would embrace it, "ſhould preſently be abſolved from all ſins; inti-"mates, that he looked on this as a juſt exception

" againſt the Chriſtian faith (e)." " This prejudice " againſt the goſpel," ſaith he, " St Paul removes, " by ſhewing, that, becauſe of all mens guilt and " ſinfulneſs, ſuch an exhibition of mercy, ſuch an " overture of acceptance and remiſſion of ſins, was " neceſſary in order to ſalvation; ſo that without " it no man could be exempted from wrath and mi- " ſery, and that conſequently all other religions, as " not exhibiting ſuch a remiſſion, muſt be eſteemed " in a main point defective (f)."

§ 7. Object. 1. But againſt this it may be objected, That our juſtification ſeems to be connected with our glorification; for whom he juſtifies, them he alſo glorifies, Rom. 8. 30. Now, it is certain that our future ſtate of glory depends not only on our faith, but works; and by the ſame apoſtle, in the ſame epiſtle, is promiſed to him that worketh good, Rom. 2. 6. 7. 10. we being all to be hereafter recompenſed according to our works.

Anſ. 1. To this it may be anſwered in the words of the Reverend Dr Hammond, Pr. Catech. p. 89. " That whom God juſtifies, if they paſs out of this " life in a juſtified ſtate, them he will certainly " glorify;" or, as in his paraphraſe, " Whom he " called to ſuffer after the example of his Son, " them, upon patience and perſeverance under thoſe " ſufferings, he juſtifies, i. e. he approves of as ſin- " cere and worthy, as they ſuffer for, ſo to be glo- " rified with him, Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12. " 1 Pet. 4. 13.; and whom he thus juſtifies, them he " will alſo glorify." And according to this import of the words, juſtification doth not ſignify, as in the great diſpute of the apoſtle, the remiſſion of our paſt ſins committed before faith in Chriſt; but rather our juſtification at the great day of our accounts, as his ſincere and faithful ſervants. As it ſeems to import moſt clearly in thoſe words of the ſame apoſtle, I know nothing of myſelf (whereby to condemn myſelf of unfaithfulneſs in the diſcharge of my office), yet am I not thereby juſtified, but he that judgeth me is the Lord, 1 Cor. 4. 4.; and in thoſe words of the epiſtle to the Romans, Not the hearers of the law only ſhall be δικαιοι, juſt before God, but the doers of the law δικαιωθήσονται, ſhall be juſtified, Rom. 2. 13.; and ſo St James, Abraham was juſtified by works, and he was called the friend of God.

Anſ. 2. But, 2*dly*, there is another ancient interpretation of theſe words which cuts off the whole force of this argument, viz. " Thoſe he glorified, " by giving them that Spirit of glory," and of God, who is the earneſt of their future inheritance. " He " glorified them," ſay St Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact (g), " by the Spirit " of adoption, calling them ſons, and giving them " the grace of the Holy Spirit." To ſtrengthen this interpretation, let it be conſidered, that our Saviour is ſaid, whilſt he was on earth, to have wrought his miracles by the Spirit of God; and by theſe miracles he is ſaid ſometimes to be δεδοξάσθαι, glorified, Luke 4. 15.; ſometimes to ſhew forth τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ, his glory, John 2. 11.; and ſometimes it is ſaid, that God ἐδόξασε, glorified him, John 8. 54. and 11. 4. and 13. 31. 32. and 16. 14.; and when Chriſt gave to his apoſtles and believers the Holy Spirit, to enable them to work the like miracles, he expreſſes himſelf thus to his Father, The glory which thou gaveſt me I have given them, that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me, John 17. 22. 23. Moreover, by reaſon of this Spirit given with the goſpel, the miniſtration of juſtification is ſaid to be ἐν δόξῃ, with, or in glory, 2 Cor. 3. 8. 9. 10. 11. as being the miniſtration of the Spirit; and believers, by participation of this Spirit of the Lord, are ſaid not only to behold the glory of the Lord, but alſo to be changed into the ſame image with him, from glory to glory, ver. 18. and ſo to be conformed to the image of his Son. " And thus," ſaith Origen on this place, " they may be ſaid to be glo- " rified in this life (h)." Note alſo, that when the apoſtle ſpeaks of our final glorification in this chapter, he ſtill ſpeaks of it as a thing future, ſaying, We ſhall be glorified with him, ver. 17. 18. 21.; whereas here he ſpeaks of it as a thing paſt already, ſaying, οὓς δὲ ἐδικαίωσε, τούτους καὶ ἐδόξασε, whom he hath juſtified, them he hath alſo glorified; which confirms this interpretation. And, laſtly, thus it connects well with the foregoing words, The Spirit which helpeth our infirmities, intercedeth according to the mind of God for the ſaints: Οἴδαμεν δὲ, We know therefore that all things ſhall work together for good to them who love God, who are called according to his purpoſe (of making them the ſons of God by adoption, and giving them the Spirit of his Son in their hearts, Gal. 4. 6. Eph. 1. 5. 13.); for whom he (thus) foreknew, them he predeſtinated (or appointed) to be thus conformed to the image of his Son; and whom he (thus) predeſtinated, them he alſo called (to the Chriſtian faith); and whom he called, (upon their cordial embracing of that faith), he juſtified, (we being made the ſons of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus, Gal. 3. 26.); and whom he (hath thus) juſtified, them he hath alſo glorified.

§ 8. Object. 2*dly*, It may be ſaid, that not only our juſtification, but ſalvation is by the apoſtle aſcribed to faith: as when he ſays, By grace ye are ſaved through faith, Eph. 2. 8. 9.; and, If thou believeſt with the heart, thou ſhalt be ſaved, Rom. 10. 9. Tit. 3. 5.; whereas doubtleſs ſalvation dependeth on our works, which therefore muſt be included in this faith.

Anſ. To this objection I anſwer, That ſalvation may very well in ſcripture be aſcribed to faith upon theſe two accounts:

1*ſt*, Becauſe faith puts us in the way of ſalvation; that way of owning the Saviour of the world, and ſubjecting ourſelves to his government, which gives us a preſent right to ſalvation, ſhould God take us hence ſoon after baptiſm into this faith, or a ſincere belief in Chriſt; as in the caſe of thoſe many martyrs who believed and ſuffered the ſame day; and if we live by, and ſuitably to this faith, ſtill owning the Lord Jeſus, and ſtill ſubjecting ourſelves to his laws and government, will keep us in the ſtate of ſalvation; for he that (thus) believeth in the Son, hath eternal life, John 3. 36. ſee ver. 16. i. e. he hath a preſent right to it, and may rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, and by continuing ſo to do, he ſhall receive the end of his faith in the ſalvation of his ſoul. It puts us in a preſent ſtate of freedom from condemnation, by procuring the pardon of all our paſt ſins; for he that thus believeth, ſhall not come into condemnation, but is paſſed from death to life, John 5. 24. and 3. 18. It doth at preſent ſave us from the wrath of God, he being only angry with us on the account of ſin unpardoned; for being juſtified, ſaith the apoſtle, by faith in his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath by him, Rom. 5. 9. Now, this is all which very frequently is ſignified by the words ſaved and ſalvation: as when it is ſaid of Zaccheus, This day is ſalvation come unto this houſe; and the Lord daily added to the church τοὺς σωζομένους, the ſaved, Acts 2. 47. And again, The word of the croſs is τοῖς σωζομένοις ἡμῖν, to us the ſaved, the power of God, 2 Cor. 1. 18. See this farther proved in the notes on Eph. 2. 8. Tit. 3. 5.

2*dly*, Salvation may be well aſcribed to faith, not indeed in oppoſition to, or excluſion of works, but rather as the cauſe and the producer of all works of piety and righteouſneſs: and both the wiſdom and the excellency of this method for the procuring the great ends of Chriſtian piety, of purity of life, and of ſincere obedience to the whole will of God, will be extremely evident from theſe conſiderations:

1. That this faith conſigned by baptiſm, doth lay the higheſt obligations on us to a life of holineſs and obedience, under the pain of forfeiting all the bleſſings of the new covenant, or all the privileges of Chriſtianity. For, 1. Faith in him as the true Meſſiah, the Prophet ſent from God to declare his will, and make known his precepts, and to lay down the terms on which we may expect ſalvation from him, muſt ſurely oblige us to perform that will, and to ſubmit to the terms on which alone ſalvation is thus tendered to us, not only that we may not miſs of that ſalvation, but that we may not be condemned as deſpiſers of ſo great ſalvation.

Again, Faith in him as our Saviour, one who hath, by his death, purchaſed deliverance to us from death, and from the wrath to come, muſt ſure oblige us, as well in point of duty, as of gratitude, to live to him who died for us, 2 Cor. 5. 15.; and being bought with ſuch a price, to glorify him with our ſouls and bodies which are his, 1 Cor. 6. 20.; eſpecially when we conſider, that this was one great end of theſe his ſufferings; he having died for all, that they who live, ſhould not henceforth live to themſelves, but to him that died for them; that he might redeem us from this preſent evil world, Gal. 1. 4. and purify us to himſelf, a people zealous of good works, Eph. 5. 25. 26. and that we being dead to ſin, might live to righteouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 24. And ſurely, they cannot expect the bleſſings of his ſalutary paſſion, who defeat the deſign, and fruſtrate the purpoſe of it.

Faith in him as our Lord and King, as it doth preſuppoſe his right to require ſervice from and preſcribe laws to us, ſo muſt it engage us to the honour and ſervice of this Lord; for why, ſaith he, call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I ſay, Luke 6. 46.? to fear and to obey this King of Saints, as knowing he will ſay to all his diſobedient ſubjects, Bring theſe mine enemies, which would not I ſhould reign over them, and ſlay them before me, Luke 19. 27.

Faith, laſtly, in him as our judge and our rewarder, muſt cauſe us herein to exerciſe ourſelves always to have conſciences void of offence towards God and man, Acts 24. 16. as we deſire to be found blameleſs at that day, and to be ſtedfaſt and abounding in the work of the Lord, which will ſo plentifully be rewarded, 1 Cor. 15. 58.

In a word, to what other end can we think an holy God was ſo concerned that we ſhould firmly be perſuaded of, and yield a free aſſent to theſe things? Can it be only this, that he ſhould fill our heads with notions, but leave us ſtill at liberty to diſobey the meſſage ſent us from heaven by his only Son? Why then, ſaid he, This is my beloved Son, hear him, Matth. 17. 5.? Can he ſuffer us to ſlight the terms on which alone ſalvation is thus tendered to us? why then were they at all propounded? Can he permit us to be diſobedient to this Lord, or rebels to this King of ſaints? why then was this authority conferred upon him? Hath he made him the judge and the rewarder of all men at the great day? and will he not reward them all according to their works?

But then if we conſider further this faith, as it hath baptiſm annexed to it, according to thoſe words of Chriſt, He that believeth and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved, our obligation to obedience by it will ſtill be more evident: for is not our baptiſm in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, an entire dedication of ourſelves to the ſervice of the bleſſed Trinity, a ſolemn entrance into covenant that we will own no other God, will ſerve no other Lord, will not be led by the unclean, but by the conduct of the good and holy Spirit? Did not Chriſt command his diſciples to teach them whom they baptized, to obſerve all things which he commanded? Matth. 28. 20. and muſt they not be obliged to obey what they were to be taught in his name? What is it to baptize, but μαθητεύειν, to make diſciples to the holy Jeſus? And hath he not ſaid, Then only are you my diſciples indeed, when you continue in my word? John 8. 31. What is it to be baptized, but to make the ſtipulation of a good conſcience towards God? 1 Pet. 3. 21. And are not we obliged to be true to this ſolemn promiſe made to God? Or can we neglect to do ſo without mocking him, and taking his ſacred name in vain? Are we not baptized into the name of Chriſt? And are not they who name that name engaged to depart from all iniquity? 2 Tim. 2. 19. Hath not St Paul informed us, that as many as are baptized into Chriſt, are baptized into his death? Rom. 6. 3. and ſo are by that baptiſm obliged to die to ſin, ver. 6. 11. not to obey it in the luſts thereof; not to yield their members inſtruments of ſin to unrighteouſneſs, but to walk in newneſs of life, ver. 12. 13.; to live to God, and to preſent their members inſtruments of righteouſneſs to God, ver. 4. 10. 13.; and to have their fruit unto holineſs, that the end may be eternal life, ver. 22.; and that upon this conformity to Chriſt's death and reſurrection depends our hope that we ſhall live with him? ver. 8. So that it is evident to a demonſtration, that both our faith and baptiſm do lay upon us the ſtricteſt obligations to depart from all iniquity, and yield ſincere obedience to the laws of God and Chriſt, as we expect the bleſſings purchaſed by him for, or promiſed to believers. As then St Peter ſaith on this account, that baptiſm doth now ſave us, 1 Pet. 3. 21. ſo may ſalvation be on the ſame account aſcribed to our faith in Chriſt.

2*dly*, Faith is the ſpring and the foundation of all the obedience we afterwards perform, and therefore may be well ſaid to ſave as many as obtain ſalvation, becauſe it worketh in them that obedience by which they are ſaved, and moves them to perform thoſe conditions on which their actual ſalvation doth depend. Thus of faith in God, the apoſtle teacheth, that it muſt be neceſſarily laid as the foundation of all the ſervice we perform unto him; for he that cometh to God muſt believe that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek (to pleaſe) him, Heb. 11. 6. And thus he ſhews it was with all the patriarchs and holy people of God before the revelation of the goſpel; they by that faith, which was the expectation of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen, obtained teſtimony that they were righteous, Heb. 11. 4. and that they pleaſed God, ver. 5. 8. 18. 19. obeyed his call in the moſt difficult inſtances, choſe rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon; wrought righteouſneſs, and ſuffered death, not accepting a deliverance, ver. 25. 26. 33. 35. And ſo it is with faith in Chriſt; it is the foundation of all our obedience, which therefore is in ſcripture ſtyled the obedience of faith, Rom. 1. 5. and 16. 26. and of all our good works, they being all the work of faith, 2 Theſſ. 1. 11. It is by virtue of this faith that we are enabled to overcome the world, to reſiſt the devil, and to quench all the fiery darts of Satan, 1 John 5. 5. 1 Pet. 5. 9. Eph. 6. 16. It is faith that works by love to God, and to our brother; which love we teſtify to God by keeping his commandments, and to our neighbour, by fulfilling the laws of juſtice and charity. And this is very evident, even from the nature of faith; for can any man obey the precepts this Prophet hath delivered in his Father's name, unleſs he believes he was that Prophet which was ſent by him to reveal his will, and that King by whoſe laws we muſt be governed? Can he ſubmit to the terms of ſalvation propounded by him, till he believes he is the author of ſalvation to all that obey him? Can he herein exerciſe himſelf to have always a conſcience void of offence towards God and man, but by that faith which doth aſſure him, that he will judge all men by theſe laws, awarding glory and immortality to every man that worketh righteouſneſs, Rom. 2. 8. and puniſhing them with everlaſting deſtruction from his preſence that obey not his goſpel? 2 Theſſ. 1. 8. And is not then this faith the true foundation of all Chriſtian piety? Thus doth the juſt man live by his faith, and doing ſo, believeth to the ſalvation of his ſoul. As therefore we are ſaid

to be saved by hope, Rom. 8. 24. because it is the motive to stedfastness in our obedience, so may we be said to be saved by faith upon the same account. And,

3*dly*, We may be well said to be saved by faith, because where faith is hearty and constant, it will produce sincere obedience, and holiness will follow in the life; and when it doth not follow, this is to be ascribed to the want of faith. This will be evident, if we consider the material objects of our faith, the blessings promised to the obedient, and the evils threatened to the disobedient; for it is certain, that the blessings promised in the gospel do far exceed all other blessings that we can enjoy, and that the evils threatened there are far more lasting and intolerable than any other evils we can suffer; and it is no less certain, that these blessings are by our Lord confined to the obedient; for not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter, saith he, into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father which is in heaven, Matth. 7. 21. And it is as sure that these tremendous evils are entailed upon the wicked, Christ having solemnly declared he will say to them at the great day, Depart from me, I know ye not, ye workers of iniquity, ver. 23. And if we do believe our Saviour was a prophet sent from God, we must believe those revelations he hath made concerning both our future happiness and misery, and the conditions on which alone the one can be obtained and the other is to be avoided. Now, can a man at the same time believe these are the greatest blessings which he can enjoy, and yet prefer a lesser good before them? If not, whenever he doth this, he ceases in effect to have this faith. Can a man fully be persuaded, that what he is about to do will render him obnoxious to the worst of evils, and yet be moved to do it to avoid a lesser evil? If not, whenever he doth chuse to do what renders him obnoxious to the worst of evils, he ceaseth to believe they are so. When therefore we neglect to do that which is by our Lord declared absolutely necessary to obtain, and to secure our eternal interests, and venture upon that to which he threateneth everlasting misery, it is certain that we have no lively full persuasion of these truths then present to our minds, and therefore do not actually believe them then. So that although we may have still such an habitual assent to all that this great Prophet hath delivered, as that we do not doubt the truth of what he taught, yet doth not Christ dwell in our hearts by faith, nor have we any living sense or permanent persuasion of these truths on our souls, but faith is at the present dead, and so no more deserves the name of faith than a dead man can properly be called a man. Thus, for example, when Christ saith to his disciples fearing to perish in the storm, How is it that ye have not faith? Mark 4. 40. he lays this to their charge, not that they disbelieved his power to save them, for this they testify, by saying, Master, save us; but that they did not actually exert this trust by an entire commission of themselves to the protection of his providence. As therefore, when we do what is contrary to our love to God, or to our hope, and our affiance in him, there always is a want of love, and hope, and trust in God; so when we do what is opposite to the great objects of our faith, there must be in us a like want of faith; and so when this is customarily done, there must be a defect as to the habit, or the grace of faith.

2*dly*, This will be still more evident, if we consider all the glorious things which are ascribed in scripture to this faith, and do compare them with other passages of the same scripture: for instance, Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, saith the apostle John, 1 ep. 5. 1.; but then he adds in the same chapter, ver. 5. Whosoever is born of God overcometh the world, by virtue of this faith: and again, We know that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not, ver. 18. chap. 3. 9. Whence it must follow, that he believeth not, in the apostle's sense, that Jesus is the Christ, who overcometh not, by virtue of that faith, the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil. Whosoever confesseth, saith the same apostle, that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, 1 John 4. 15.; but then he also saith, He that abideth in him, ought also to walk as he walked, 1 John 2. 6.; that we do hereby know that we are in him, by keeping of his word, ver. 5.; that whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not, and he that sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him; that if we say we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie. So that if this faith doth not preserve us from sin, and engage us to walk in the light, and as he walked, it is not that faith in the Son of God the apostle speaks of. We are not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, saith St Paul to the Galatians, chap. 5. 6. and 6. 15.; but then it is, saith he, that faith which works by love, and renders us new creatures. The same he saith in the epistle to the Romans, declaring that his gospel was the power of God through faith unto salvation, Rom. 1. 16. ver. 5.; but then it is the obedience of faith, in the same chapter; obedience in word and deed, chap. 15. 18.; obeying from the heart the form of doctrine delivered to them, chap. 6. 16. which makes this faith become the power of God to salvation. Whence it is evident, that he esteemed that alone true faith, which was productive of obedience, and ſo doth virtually, although not formally, include obedience, as the effect is virtually contained in the cauſe. So that the difference between men of judgment, as to ſaving faith, is more in words than ſenſe, they all deſigning the ſame thing, that we cannot be ſaved by that faith which doth not produce in us a ſincere obedience to the laws of Chriſt.

An Advertiſement relating to the foregoing Preface to the Epiſtle to the Galatians.

ONE paſſage in the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians hath met with very hard uſage from different hands, but more eſpecially from one who ſtyles his book, The preacher, but gives full demonſtration that he is no Solomon. His words are theſe, p. 153. (a) "And can we imagine that that other "author hath a better opinion of the writings of "the New Teſtament, who tells us, That in all the "ſcriptures of the New Teſtament there is not to "be found one exhortation to believe in Chriſt, or "to act faith on Chriſt? And accordingly he adds "afterwards, Now what account can be given of "this thing by thoſe who are ſo zealous in their "ſermons to exhort Chriſtians to believe in Chriſt, "and are ſo full of motives to perſuade them ſo to "do? It ſeems we have been in a great error and "miſtake hitherto, and all our ſermons to our Chriſtian auditors, to perſuade them to exert faith in our "Lord Chriſt, have been idle and vain; and the "more zealous we have been in this matter, the "more fooliſh we have been; for Chriſtians are "no where exhorted in the New Teſtament to believe in Chriſt, they are only unconverted Jews "and Gentiles who are called upon to do this." And ſuch were the apoſtles and diſciples, when our Saviour exhorted them to believe in God, and to believe alſo in him; who ſees not that is abuſing the ſcriptures? Now here, 1ſt, Sure I have reaſon to complain of very hard meaſure, and of great injuſtice, that after all the pains I have taken to prove this propoſition, That the apoſtles and evangeliſts indited theſe ſcriptures by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt (b); and that therefore I allow no ſlips of memory, no ruies of human prudence without the guidance and direction of the Holy Spirit, § 3. I ſhould be publicly traduced as one that cannot be imagined to have a better opinion of the writings of the New Teſtament, than one who aſſerts, "That there are ſeveral re-"pugnances in ſeveral parts of it; that it is altered "in very many places, and ſome of the greateſt "moment; and hath too many diſagreements which "are material and weighty (c)." How far I am from thinking any thing of this nature, how zealous in my oppoſition to ſuch ſentiments, the world will ſhortly farther ſee. And that the words here cited by the preacher have no relation to, and contain no detraction either from the authority or veneration due to that inſpired book, is evident to all diſcerning perſons. Such vile and ſcandalous ſuggeſtions, without all ground or ſhew of reaſon, is that of which I hope I never ſhall be guilty.

2dly, I add, that the aſſertion here expoſed, as a viſible abuſe of ſcripture, is as certain and demonſtrable as any propoſition in the book of Euclid. Thus,

Definition. A Chriſtian is one that believes in Chriſt; nor can he ceaſe to do ſo whilſt he is a Chriſtian; as a man cannot ceaſe to have an human nature whilſt he lives.

Poſtulatum. It cannot be conſiſtent with the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt, or of the holy ſcripture, to exhort any Chriſtian to do what he knows every Chriſtian muſt do, and cannot chuſe to do, any more than a living man can ceaſe to have an human nature.

Ergo, It cannot be conſiſtent with the wiſdom of the Holy Ghoſt to exhort any Chriſtian to believe in Chriſt; this being the ſame in effect, as to exhort a living man to retain his human nature during life.

3dly, To the argument of the preacher, from John 14. 1. I have returned a full reply in my anſwer to a late pamphlet, p. 20. 21. 22. 23. to which I add, that it is not certain that theſe words contain any exhortation to believe in Chriſt; even the Synopſis informs us, that they may be rendered in the indicative mood thus: Creditis in Deum, et me creditis; in which ſenſe they contain no exhortation, but an aſſertion only of this great truth, that the diſciples of Chriſt believed in God the Father, and in Chriſt his only Son; and from that faith had ground of comfort under all the troubles they ſhould meet with in the world.

4thly, Had he not changed my words, he would have had no ſhew of ground for his vain imagination, that I count it a great error to perſuade Chriſtians

to exert faith in our Lord Christ. Now, this I no where say, but only that there is no exhortation in the New Testament to any Christian to believe in Christ, or (in the sense of the Presbyterians and Independents, against whom I there dispute) to act faith on Christ; to exert that faith we have in Christ, by shewing forth the fruits of it, and walking answerably to it, and comforting and supporting ourselves from the consideration of it; and the encouraging ourselves to the performance of all Christian obedience, is the duty of all Christians to which I there say the scripture doth exhort them; but to act faith on Christ for justification, or that Christians may be believers, which is the sense those writers put upon the phrase, is an unscriptural expression.

In fine, it might have reasonably been expected, that after all these hideous outcries, after these terrible accusations, that by this assertion I have visibly abused the holy scriptures, and made it unimaginable that I have any good opinion of the writings of the New Testament, some plain text should have been produced from those scriptures, exhorting those who were already Christians to believe in Christ; and though I judge my assertion a truth equally certain to a demonstration, yet when either the preacher or the pamphleteer, or any other bold condemner of it shall shew the contrary by one plain text, containing such an exhortation, I promise to renounce it publicly.

ON THE

EPISTLE to the GALATIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. (I) Paul (who am) an apoſtle, [a] not of man, neither by man, (for I received not my call, or my commiſſion to that office from man, nor was I choſen to it by man, as Matthias was), but by Jeſus Chriſt (appearing to me in perſon for that end, that he might ſend me to the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. and 26. 16. 17.); and God the Father, (who choſe me that I ſhould know his will, and ſee that juſt one, and be his witneſs to all men, of what I had ſeen and heard, Acts 22. 14. 15.; and revealed his Son to me, ver. 13. even that God) who raiſed him from the dead;

2. [b] And all the brethren which are with me, (and own the doctrine which I preach, ſend greeting) to the churches of Galatia.

3. (Wiſhing that) Grace (may be) to you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

4. Who gave himſelf (an expiatory ſacrifice) for our ſins, [c] that he might deliver us from (the wrath and condemnation of, or from conformity to) this preſent evil world, [d] according to the will of God, and our Father, (Gr. of our God and Father).

5. To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6. I marvel that ye are ſo ſoon removed [e] from him that called you to [f] the grace of Chriſt, to another goſpel.

7. Which (whatſoever ſome may ſuggeſt, who preach another thing under the ſpecious title of the goſpel) [g] is not (indeed) another (goſpel, nor would be ſo eſteemed by any of you); but (that) there be ſome who trouble you (with falſe ſtories), and would pervert the goſpel of Chriſt, (by mixing with it the neceſſary obſervance of the law of Moſes).

8. But (whatſoever they ſuggeſt to you of another goſpel, taught by Peter, James, and John), though we (apoſtles), or (even) an angel from heaven, (ſhould) preach any other goſpel to you, than that which we (Paul, and Barnabas) have preached to you, let him be accurſed.

9. (And that ye may not think this proceeds raſhly from me, but may the more regard it), as we ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again, If any man preach any other goſpel to you, than that ye have received (from us), [h] let him be accurſed.

10. (But this you cannot reaſonably ſuſpect concerning me); for do I now (in the execution of my apoſtleſhip) [i] perſuade (obey, or ſeek to appeaſe) men, or God? [k] Or do I ſeek to pleaſe men? (no ſure), for if I yet pleaſed men, (if I made that my buſineſs), [l] I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt (in that work of the Goſpel which creates me ſo much hazard from them).

11. But (howſoever others may leſſen my goſpel), I certify you, brethren, that the goſpel which was preached preached of me (i. e. by me to you, and others), is not after man.

12. [n] For I neither received it of man, (as the Jews do their traditions from their fathers), neither was I taught it, but by the (immediate) [o] revelation of Jeſus Chriſt.

13. (And of this you may be further ſatisfied from my former converſation, and my deportment, ſince I began to preach the faith of Chriſt; for (doubtleſs) ye have heard of my converſation in times paſt in the Jews religion, (which was ſuch) that beyond meaſure I perſecuted the church of God, and waſted it, (Acts 8. 3. and 9. 1. 13. 14. and 22. 4. and 26. 10. 11.):

14. And profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation, (or above many Jews of the ſame age with me), being more exceedingly zealous (than they were) [p] of the traditions of my fathers.

15. (Thus, I ſay, was my converſation in times paſt); but when it pleaſed God, who ſeparated me from my mother's womb, (as he had formerly done Jeremiah, to be a prophet of the nations, chap. 1. 5.), and (after) called me by his grace (to preach the goſpel, Acts 22. 14.),

16. To reveal his Son [q] (to) me, that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not [r] with fleſh and blood, (i. e. with any man ſo as to receive any miſſion from them to that work, or any inſtructions how to perform it).

17. Neither went I up to Jeruſalem to them that were apoſtles before me, (as, if I had wanted either authority or inſtruction, I ſhould have done); but I went from Damaſcus (the place of my converſion) to [s] Arabia, and returned again to Damaſcus, (preaching the goſpel there.)

18. Then after three years (of my converſion) I went up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19. But [t] other of the apoſtles ſaw I none, ſave James the Lord's brother, (and therefore could not learn my goſpel from them).

20. Now (of the truth of) the things which I write to you, (you may reſt aſſured, for) [u] behold, before God I lie not.

21. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria, (i. e. to Cæſarea, Acts 22. 17. 18.), and Cilicia, (to Troas, Acts 9. 30. and 22. 3. in Aſia Minor):

22. And was (all the while) unknown by face to the churches of Judea which were in Chriſt.

23. But they had heard only, that he which perſecuted us (Chriſtians) in times paſt, now preacheth the faith [x] which once he deſtroyed.

24. [y] And they glorified God (for the converſion he had wrought) in me.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Οὐκ ἀπ' ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ δι' ἀνθρώπου, not of men, neither by man.] It is no objection againſt the truth of theſe words, that the Holy Ghoſt, ſaying by the prophets at Antioch, Separate me Barnabas and Saul to the work of the miniſtry to which I have called them, they faſted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, and ſent them away, Acts 13. 2. 3. for that this was not a miſſion to the apoſtolical office, appears becauſe St Paul, at leaſt nine years before, was immediately called to it by God, and ſent to exerciſe it by Jeſus Chriſt; and becauſe Barnabas is here equally ſeparated to this office, and ſent with him, who yet was never an apoſtle properly ſo called. This ſeparation and miſſion therefore of them was only by way of prayer, and benediction of them in their miniſtry; or, by way of ſpecial commiſſion, to preach in the ſynagogues of the Jews, ver. 5. And this miſſion they preſently completed, and then returned to Antioch, declaring to them what they had done in purſuance of it, Acts 14. 26. 27.

Ver. 2. [b] Καὶ οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοὶ, and all the brethren that are with me]. It is the conjecture of the Reverend Dr Hammond, that the word brethren here denotes thoſe that accompanied St Paul in his travels, and aſſiſted him in preaching the goſpel; in which ſenſe Soſthenes is called a brother, 1 Cor. 1. 1.; as alſo Apollos, 1 Cor. 16. 12.; Timothy, 2 Cor. 1. 1.; Titus, chap. 2. 12; Tychicus, Eph. 6. 23.; Epaphroditus, Philip. 2. 25.; Oneſimus, Col. 4. 9.; Sylvanus, 1 Pet. 5. 12.; St Paul, 2 Pet. 3. 15. And, in this ſenſe, the word brethren ſeems to be diſtinguiſhed from that of ſaints, Philip. 4. 21. and mention is made of the brother whoſe praiſe is in the goſpel, 2 Cor. 8. 18.; of Titus, Paul's fellow-worker; of the brethren, who are the apoſtles of the church, ver. 25.; and of the brethren, who, for his name's ſake, went forth to preach the goſpel, taking nothing of the Gentiles, 3 John 3.—7.: or elſe it may be ſaid, that the apoſtle writes according to the form of epiſtles, uſed in the beginning of Chriſtianity, when biſhops ſent to other churches, not in their own names only, but in the name of the whole church where they reſided: So Clemens (a) begins his epiſtle to the church of Corinth thus, The church of God in Rome, to the Church of God at Corinth;

(a) Ἡ Ἐκκλησία Θεοῦ ἡ παροικοῦσα Ῥώμην τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ Θεοῦ παροικούσῃ Κόρινθον.

Corinth; and ſo this Epiſtle being writ from Rome, ſhews the conſent of that church with him in his doctrine.

Ver. 4. ᶜ Ὅπως ἐξέληται ἡμᾶς ἐκ τοῦ ἐνεστῶτος αἰῶνος πονηροῦ, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world.] That this preſent evil age ſhould ſignify the preſent Jewiſh conſtitution, and nation together, is very improbable: for did Chriſt die for our ſins, to deliver the Galatians and other Gentiles from the Jewiſh nation, or from that conſtitution they were never under? How much more natural is it to ſay, with the fathers, he died for our ſins, that he might deliver us ἐκ τῶν πονηρῶν πράξεων καὶ διεφθαρμένης ζωῆς, from the evil actions and corrupt manners of this preſent world, or age, from thoſe luſts of the fleſh, and that corruption of mind, in which the Heathens formerly lived, κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, according to that courſe of life the men of the world then led, Eph. 2. 2. 3. when they were guided by the wiſdom τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, of this world, 2 Cor. 4. 4. and under the power of the rulers τοῦ σκότους τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, of the darkneſs of this world, Eph. 6. 12.

Ibid. ᵈ Κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, according to the will of God.] Theſe words may refer to our deliverance ἐκ τῶν πονηρῶν πράξεων καὶ τῆς διεφθαρμένης ζωῆς, Oecum. from the evil manners of this world; this being the will of God, even our ſanctification, 1 Theſſ. 4. 3. and the great end of our Lord's ſalutary paſſion, who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works; and bare our ſins in his body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, might live to righteouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 24. 2 Cor. 5. 15. Eph. 5. 25. 26. Whence it is evident that Chriſt's inherent righteouſneſs is not imputed to us; for ſure he died not to this end, that we might do ourſelves what he already had done for us, and ſo what he had made it needleſs for us to do. Or elſe theſe words may be connected thus, Chriſt gave himſelf for us according to the will of God, viz. that he ſhould die for our ſins; and then the apoſtle here aſſerts, in oppoſition to the Judaizing Chriſtians, that our juſtification by faith in Chriſt's death is according to the will of God, and that he died in purſuance of his decree to eſtabliſh that new covenant in his blood by faith, by which we are tranſlated from that wrath, and ſtate of alienation from God, in which the world lies, and have obtained peace with God, and are become his church and people.

Ver. 6. ᵉ Ἀπὸ τοῦ καλέσαντος ὑμᾶς, from him that called you;] i. e. from God: for the apoſtle ſcarce ever aſcribes this work to himſelf, but conſtantly to God the Father. See Rom. 9. 24. 1 Cor. 7. 15. Gal. 1. 15. 1 Theſſ. 2. 12. and 4. 7. and 5. 24. 2 Theſſ. 2. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 9.

Ibid. ᶠ Ἐν χάριτι Χριστοῦ, to the grace of Chriſt;] or rather, by, or through the grace of Chriſt offered you in the Goſpel; for though ἐν be often put for εἰς, yet ἐν χάριτι, where it is elſewhere uſed, doth either ſignify, in the grace, or through the grace, as Rom. 5. 15. 2 Cor. 1. 12. 2 Theſſ. 2. 16. 2 Tim. 2. 1.: nor do I find where it is ever uſed in the epiſtles for εἰς χάριν.

Ver. 7. ᵍ Ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλο.] Theſe words cannot ſignify, which is not any thing elſe, or, which is not owing to any thing elſe, as one here thinks. For the pronoun ὃ hath no other antecedent but ἕτερον εὐαγγέλιον, ver. 6. Nor is it any objection againſt our tranſlation, that the apoſtle doth not ſay, ὃ οὐκ ἔστιν ἕτερον, as before, but ἄλλο; it being noted by Budæus, and others, that the Greeks uſe ἄλλο καὶ ἕτερον ἐκ παραλλήλου, theſe two words as equivalent. And when two allo's come together, the ſecond, is always rendered ἕτερος, another, ἄλλος πρὸς ἄλλον λέγοντες, ſaying one to another, Acts 2. 12. and 21. 34. So ἄλλη σὰρξ ἀνθρώπων, ἄλλη δὲ κτήνων, there is one fleſh of men, and another fleſh of beaſts, &c. 1 Cor. 15. 31. and again ver. 41. The apoſtle's meaning then is, that the preaching of the goſpel to you, παρ' ὃ εὐηγγελισάμεθα, beſides that which we have preached, would be the preaching of another goſpel; but that which theſe perverters of the Galatians taught as ſuch, was not indeed another goſpel, but rather a ſetting up of the law, in oppoſition to the goſpel. Note alſo, that εἰ μὴ here is uſed, as chap. 2. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 17. Rev. 9. 4. 21. 27.

Ver. 9. ʰ Ἀνάθεμα ἔστω, let him be Anathema.] Hence it follows, 1. That the doctrine of juſtification by faith, as it ſtands oppoſed to the contrary doctrine of the neceſſity of the obſervance of the Moſaical law to juſtification, is a fundamental doctrine, to which he that oppoſeth himſelf, maintaining the neceſſity of obſerving the law of Moſes to that end, deſerveth an Anathema, as introducing another goſpel. Whence commentators here obſerve, that the apoſtle calls not the Galatians ſaints, becauſe they had begun to decline from the goſpel, by ſeeking thus to be juſtified by the law; but ſpeaks of them as thoſe who had Chriſt yet to be formed in them; and who were to be born again, chap. 4. 19.

2*dly*, Hence it appears that a man may err fundamentally, not only by rejecting a fundamental article of faith, but alſo by maintaining, and teaching in the name of Chriſt, things unneceſſary, to be neceſſary, ſo as to ſay, ſalvation cannot be obtained without them: and herein conſiſts the great guilt of the church of Rome, and particularly of the Trent council, that they have added many unneceſſary articles to the true Chriſtian creed, and have defined them to be ſo neceſſary to be believed by all Chriſtians, that no ſalvation can be obtained without the belief of them: and ſo they ſeem plainly to have fallen under the Anathema of St Paul, more dreadful than all the vain anathema's they have thundered out againſt the Proteſtants.

Mr Walker and Grotius note, that the apoſtle ſpeaks here only of doctrines contrary to his goſpel. But this expoſition is, 1. Contrary to the very words of the apoſtle, who ſaith not, againſt, but παρ' ὁ, beſides what I have delivered. And it is contrary to the expoſition of the (b) Fathers, St Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, among the Greeks, and St Auſtin among the Latins, whoſe note is this. He ſaith not, if they preach things contrary, but if they preach things never ſo little different from the goſpel which I have preached to you. It is very true, as Eſthius ſuggeſts, that the apoſtle doth not pretend to propound an anathema againſt any man who ſhall ſuggeſt any thing farther in confirmation of Chriſt's goſpel, as St John after did, or give any further rules purſuant to the precepts of it, by the ſuggeſtion of that ſpirit, by which the goſpel was indited, for then he would have pronounced an anathema upon all that writ after him, and even upon himſelf, who writ many epiſtles after this; but yet he pronounceth an anathema upon all thoſe who preach a goſpel which differed from the goſpel which they preached; to whom alone it was by Chriſt committed to propound the terms of ſalvation; and this is that of which we do accuſe the church of Rome, that they propound terms of ſalvation no where delivered by Chriſt or his apoſtles.

2. This expoſition of Mr Walker will not free them from the anathema of the apoſtle; for by th i very thing, that they add any thing to the goſpel of Chriſt, as neceſſary to be believed, or done to ſalvation, they do no leſs oppoſe the doctrine of the apoſtle, than they did who joined the obſervation of the law of Moſes, as neceſſary to the faith of Chriſt; for therefore did they oppoſe his doctrine, becauſe they teaching this was needful to ſalvation, did thereby teach that what the apoſtle had taught, as ſufficient to ſalvation, was not ſo without their additions; which is the very thing the Papiſts do by their new articles, and traditionary doctrines; for if they be indeed neceſſary to ſalvation, what is delivered in the goſpel, in which confeſſedly ſome of their doctrines are not, cannot be ſufficient to ſalvation. Moreover, it is extremely evident, that prayer in an unknown tongue is plainly contrary to the apoſtle's doctrine, 1 Cor. 14. and that communion in one kind is oppoſite both to Chriſt's inſtitution, and to St Paul's diſcourſe upon that ſacrament, 1 Cor. 11.

Ver. 10. Πείθω, to perſuade.] The critics here obſerve, that the word πείθω ſignifies to pacify and appeaſe any one incenſed againſt us. So when David's ſoldiers, hunted and haraſſed by Saul, were earneſt when they found Saul in the cave, that they might have liberty to ſlay him, ἔπεισε Δαβὶδ τοὺς ἄνδρας αὐτοῦ ἐν λόγοις, David pacified his men with words, 1 Sam. 24. 7. So to induce the ſoldiers to own that Chriſt's body was ſtolen away by his diſciples from the ſepulchre, whilſt they ſlept, the chief prieſts and elders promiſe, that if this came to the governor's ear, πείσομεν αὐτὸν, we will appeaſe him, Matth. 28. 14. And Menelaus promiſed Ptolomy to give him much money, πρὸς τὸ πεῖσαι τὸν βασιλέα, if he would pacify the king towards him, 2 Mac. 4. 5. Or, 2. The word may ſignify to obey; for ſo the word is uſed by St Paul in this epiſtle, when he ſays, Who hath bewitched you, τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι, that you ſhould not obey the truth? chap. 3. 1.; and, Ye did run well, who hindered you τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι, that you ſhould not obey the truth? chap. 5. 7. and elſewhere: ſo τοῖς ἀπειθοῦσι μὲν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, πειθομένοις δὲ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, to thoſe who obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, Rom. 2. 8.: πείθεσθε τοῖς ἡγουμένοις, obey your governors, Heb. 13. 17. See alſo Acts 5. 36. 37. James 3. 3. And ſo is the word often uſed by Heathen authors when they treat of moral ſubjects: ſo (c) Plato ſaith, philoſophy compels the irrational affections to obey reaſon, and introduceth (d) Socrates ſaying, πείσομαι τῷ Θεῷ μᾶλλον ἢ ὑμῖν, I will obey God rather than you. (e) Plutarch ſaith, It is the ſame thing ἕπεσθαι Θεῷ, καὶ τὸ πείθεσθαι λόγῳ, to follow God, and obey reaſon. So (f) Arrian; This is to be placed among the higheſt pleaſures, ὅτι πείθῃ τῷ Θεῷ, that thou obeyeſt God: I am free, and the friend of God, ἵν' ἐκὼν πείθωμαι αὐτῷ, that I might willingly obey him. I know to whom I ought to be ſubject, τίνι πείθεσθαι, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ τοῖς μετ' ἐκεῖνον, and to obey God, and thoſe that are next to him. And Zeno, that it is fit τὸ πείθεσθαι παῖδας τοῖς παιδαγωγοῖς, that children ſhould obey their maſters, Diog. Laert. l. 7. p. 432. So then the import of theſe words is this, Do I in preaching the goſpel act in obedience to men, who every where perſecute me, and oppoſe me for it, or in obedience to that God, who called me to be an apostle of the Gentiles? ver. 15. 16. And this sense is confirmed by the verse following.

[k] Mr Clerc here is positive, that πείθω signifies only to persuade; whereas the lexicographers say expressly, Tria significat pareo, morem gero, suadeo, persuadeo (g). So Hesychius, πείθω σε τὸ δὲ τὸ πρᾶγμα, I obey thee in this thing; and πείθομαι σοι τοῦτο, saith Stephanus, ought to be rendered, Pareo tibi in hac re, or Pareo consilio tuo in hac re. And whereas he fancies an ellipsis of μὴ ἀγανακτῶν μοι, not to be displeased with me, making the sense to run thus, For do I now persuade men, or God, not to be displeased with me? he is still out; for who can see either any connection of these with the former words, or any force in the apostle's reason, according to this strained sense? If any man, saith he, preach any other gospel than that which ye have received from us, let him be anathema, ver. 9.; for do I in preaching this gospel obey men or God? saith our interpretation, making both the connection clear, and the reason strong; seeing God could not command him to preach one gospel, and others another: let him be anathema, saith Mr Clerc, for do I now persuade God not to be displeased with me? where, let him that can, shew either reason or connection. 2*dly*, How could St Paul say, he did not persuade men not to be displeased with him, when in this epistle he so often doth it? saying, Brethren, I beseech you be as I am, chap. 4. 12. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth? ver. 16. From henceforth let no man trouble me, chap. 6. 17. See chap. 5. 11. And, 3*dly*, Why should he tell the Galatians, he persuaded God not to be displeased with him, when he was so honestly discharging his office, that he knew nothing of insincerity by himself in the execution of it, 1 Cor. 4. 4. and surely had no mind to give them any reason to suspect he had displeased him.

Ibid. [l] Ἢ ζητῶ ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκειν;] These words, which Dr Mills saith crept in from the margin, are owned by all the Greek scholiasts, by the vulgar, the Cod. Alex. Hilarius Diac. and St Jerom. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ibid. [l] Χριστοῦ δοῦλος οὐκ ἂν ἤμην, I should not be the servant of Christ.] That is, say the Greek commentators, I should not have left Judaism to embrace Christianity, i. e. I should not have quitted honour, friends, and kindred, for dangers, persecutions, and dishonours, which I continually suffer for the cause of Christ. And this exposition is confirmed from those words, If I preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution, since then is the offence of the cross ceased, chap. 5. 11.? and from this account that others preached up circumcision only, lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ, chap. 6. 12.

Ver. 12. [m] Οὐ παρ' ἀνθρώπου, I received it not by man.] In the first verse he saith, he was not an apostle by man, but by Jesus Christ; here, that he was not taught his gospel by man, but by Jesus Christ; whence Chrysostom, Theodoret, St Jerom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact conclude, that our Lord was not only man, but God; and so Novatian, chap. 13. argued before the Nicene council, "If St Paul was not constituted an apostle of, or by man, and yet was "constituted such by Jesus Christ, merito Christus "est Deus, Christ must be God:" for though the scripture sometimes calleth magistrates and judges, gods, as Crellius here notes, it never saith that what was done by them, was not done by man. Crellius adds further, That our Lord being the only begotten Son of God, and having now obtained his celestial kingdom, was exempted from the common rank of men; "and from the state of mortal men," saith Grotius: and so the apostle might speak of him not as a man, as Samson saith of himself, If they bind me with wreaths, I shall be as a man, Judg. 16. 7. 11. 17.; but Chiachad Aadam, as one man, i. e. as weak as one man only, or having no more strength than another man. Crellius therefore hath not said any thing apposite in answer to this argument; nor doth the apostle here oppose man to man, or mortal man to those blessed spirits who are immortal, but only to Jesus Christ, and God the Father.

Ibid. [n] Δι' ἀποκαλύψεως, by revelation.] At what time this revelation was made to him, is uncertain; but it is probable it must be before he went to preach the gospel to the Gentiles; for the words following, I consulted not with flesh and blood, but preached at Damascus, seem plainly to imply this revelation was made to him before he preached there, or went to Jerusalem.

Ver. 14. [o] Τῶν πατρικῶν παραδόσεων, of the traditions of my fathers.] He being a Pharisee, and speaking of the traditions not of the law, but of the fathers, seems to mean the oral traditions that sect so highly magnified, even above the law and the prophets. See note on Mark 7. 3. Acts 27. 17. Now, there is reason to believe, that a man so exceeding zealous for the religion of the Jews, and so full of hatred to that of Christians, would not have renounced the religion he had so great a reverence for, to embrace that he was so incensed against, without some more than human motive.

Ver. 16. [p] Ἐν ἐμοί, to me.] So ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοί, He that speaketh to me shall be a barbarian, 1 Cor. 1. 11. See Mark 1. 15. Acts 4. 12. 1 Cor. 9. 15. 2 Cor. 4. 3. and 8. 1.

Ibid. [q] Σαρκὶ καὶ αἵματι, with flesh and blood.] This phrase

phraſe in ſcripture, and among Jewiſh writers, is only a periphraſis for man, as Matth. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 15. 20. Eph. 6. 12. Heb. 2. 14. Ecclus 14. 18. and ſo all other interpretations of it muſt be alien from the ſcope of the apoſtle.

Ver. 17. ᾽Εις Ἀραβίαν, into Arabia.] Of this journey into Arabia, St Luke, not being with him, ſaith nothing.

Ver. 19. ᾽Ετερον τῶν ἀποστόλων, other of the apoſtles.] Hence it appears,

1*ſt*, That only Peter and James were then at Jeruſalem, for Barnabas brought him to the apoſtles that were there, Acts 9. 27.

2*dly*, That James the Lord's brother was an apoſtle in the ſtrict and proper ſenſe of the word, ſince Peter, who is mentioned with him, was doubtleſs ſo, and Barnabas who brought him to Peter and James, is ſaid to bring him to the apoſtles; and Peter, James, and John, who are here called the men of reputation, and pillars of the church, chap. 2. 6. 9. ſeem plainly to be the ſame perſons, who, in his ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians, are called λίαν ἀποστόλοι, the chief of the apoſtles; and Origen ſaith expreſsly of James the Juſt (h), "This is that James whom "Paul in his epiſtle to the Galatians ſaith he ſaw," citing thoſe very words for the proof of it. See this confirmed in the preface to the epiſtle of St James. Note,

3*dly*, That the apoſtle's argument is to this effect, Having therefore preached the goſpel ſo long before I ſaw them, and ſtaying ſo little while with them, and going then only to ſee, not to learn of them, it cannot be conceived I ſhould receive my inſtructions how to preach the goſpel from them.

Ibid. Note alſo, that Nicephorus ſaith (i), this James was τῷ μνήστορι τῷ Ἰωσὴφ παῖς, the Son of Joſeph, the huſband of the mother of our Lord.

Ver. 20. ᾽Ιδοὺ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, behold before God.] Hence it is evident, that the apoſtle, when it was neceſſary to confirm the truth of the goſpel, or of his commiſſion to, or his ſincerity in preaching it, i. e. when the benefit of ſouls required him thus to atteſt to men, what otherwiſe they could not be aſſured of, refuſed not to ſwear, and ſo eſteemed not our Saviour's prohibition of an oath to be abſolute. See Rom. 1. 2. and 9. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 23. and 11. 31. 1 Theſſ. 2. 5. See the note on 2 Cor. 1. 23.

Ver. 23. ᾽Η πρὸς ἀπόρθησιν.] See this reading vindicated, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 24. [a] This teſtimony of the Jewiſh Chriſtians was a confirmation of his doctrine; for if they could have found any juſt exceptions againſt it, they would not have glorified God for his preaching of it.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. "THen fourteen years after (my firſt journey thither), I went up again to Jeruſalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me alſo (though uncircumciſed, to ſhew the liberty I took of converſing with perſons not circumciſed.)

2. And I [a] went up by revelation, and communicated to them (at Jeruſalem) that goſpel which I preach (every where) among the Gentiles; but (this I did) [b] privately to them which were of reputation, (or the chief men there, not that I diſtruſted my doctrine, or needed their inſtructions, but) leſt by any means (or falſe ſuggeſtions of the Judaizers, that my doctrine was contrary to what they who were called before me preached, and ſuch as they would not own) I ſhould run (hereafter), or had run (hitherto) in vain.

3. But (even then was nothing done by me which ſhewed any change in my doctrine or practice, or any oppoſition made by them to it; for) neither Titus, who was (then) with me, being a Greek, was (upon that account) compelled to be circumciſed, (as they would have contended he ſhould, had they thought circumciſion neceſſary to the Gentiles:)

4. And that (which concerns the bringing and retaining Titus with me uncircumciſed, was done) [c] becauſe of falſe brethren, (who came down to Antioch, Acts 15. 1.), unawares brought in, (Gr. introduced into the aſſembly, Acts 15. 5. or inſinuating themſelves into the church of Antioch, ver. 1.), who came in privily to ſpy out (Gr. to inſnare us in) our liberty (from the obſervance of the Jewiſh law) which we have in (and through) Chriſt Jeſus, that they might bring us into bondage (to it, they pleading for the neceſſity of circumciſing the Gentiles, and commanding them to keep the law, Acts 15. 1.)

5. [d] To whom we gave place by ſubjection, no not for an hour, (by ſubmiſſion to their demands, but continued firm to our reſolution, not to ſubject the Gentiles to this yoke of bondage); that the truth of the goſpel (of Chriſt, which frees the Gentiles from the obligation of the law) might continue with (or among) you.

6. But of thoſe who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, whatſoever they were, (or but whatſoever they were who ſeemed to be ſomewhat), it maketh no matter to me; (their ſeeming, or their real greatneſs affects not my doctrine): God accepteth no man's perſon, for they who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, in conference added nothing to me (or to my doctrine, nor corrected any thing in it; and ſo neither am I concerned for their greatneſs, nor doth God reſpect them the more upon that account.]

7. (They added, I ſay, nothing to my doctrine), but contrariwiſe (they approved of it; for) when they ſaw that the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed to me, (and I was authoriſed to preach to the Gentiles), as the goſpel of the circumciſion was to Peter, (he being appointed to preach to the Jews):

8. (As evidently it was), for he who wrought effectually in (with) Peter towards the apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion, the ſame was mighty in me (Gr. wrought alſo with me) towards the Gentiles, (Rom. 15. 19.)

9. [c] And when James, Cephas, and John, who ſeemed to be pillars (of the church), perceived the grace (of God) that was given to me (for the apoſtolic office), they gave to me and Barnabas the right hand of fellowſhip; (concluding) that we ſhould (ſtill) go (on to preach) to the Heathen, and they (ſhould ſtill continue preaching) to the circumciſion.

10. [d] Only they would that we ſhould remember the poor (Chriſtians in Judea); the ſame which (Gr. which ſame thing) I alſo was forward to do.

11. But when Peter was come to Antioch, [e] I withſtood him to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed.

12. For before that certain (brethren of the Jews) came from James, he did (freely) eat with the Gentiles; but when they were come, he withdrew and ſeparated himſelf (from them), fearing (to exaſperate or ſcandalize) them which were of the circumciſion.

13. And the other Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him; inſomuch that (even) Barnabas alſo was carried away with their diſſimulation.

14. But when I ſaw that (in this matter) [f] they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the goſpel, I ſaid to Peter before them all, If thou being a Jew, (one of that nation to which alone the law of Moſes was given), liveſt after the manner of the Gentiles, (converſing freely with them, and eating of their meats, as ſince the viſion which thou ſaweſt thou haſt done), and not as do the Jews, (abſtaining from their meats and perſons as unclean), why (now) compelleſt thou the Gentiles (by thy example) to live as do the Jews?

15. We who are Jews by (birth or) nature, and not [g] ſinners of the Gentiles, (not idolatrous Heathens),

16. Knowing that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, but (only) by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, even we have believed in Jeſus Chriſt; that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and (thereby have teſtified to our conviction, that we could) not (be juſtified) by the works of the law, (as indeed we cannot be): for by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.

17. [h] But if while we (thus) ſeek to be juſtified by Chriſt, we ourſelves alſo are found ſinners, (as we muſt be if we be ſtill obliged to obſerve that law we have renounced as unable to juſtify us), is therefore Chriſt (who taught us thus to renounce the law, and to ſeek juſtification by faith in him) the miniſter of ſin? God forbid (that we ſhould charge this on him.)

18. (And yet we by aſſerting the neceſſity that the Gentiles ſhould obſerve the law, and ſo much more the Jews, do in effect ſay, that Chriſt hath taught us to be ſinners): for if I (thus) build again the things that I deſtroyed, (urging the neceſſity of obſerving that law to juſtification, which I declared unable to juſtify, and therefore renounced for faith in Chriſt), I make myſelf a tranſgreſſor (by not obſerving it to that end.)

19. (But whatſoever others may think fit to do, far be it from me to imitate them); for I through the law (teaching me that it condemns all men to death, and bearing witneſs to the juſtification which is of God by faith, Rom. 3. 21.) am (become) dead to (the obſervance of) the law, that I might (for the future) live to God, (Rom. 7. 4.)

20. I am crucified with Chriſt, (and ſo dead to the law, Rom. 6. 4.): Nevertheleſs I live; yet not I (as formerly a Jew, and an obſerver of the law), but Chriſt liveth in me, (and I am acted by his Spirit, Rom. 7. 6.); and the life that I now lead in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.

21. I do not fruſtrate the grace of God, (as I ſhould do, did I ſeek for righteouſneſs by the law); for if righteouſneſs come by the law, then Chriſt is dead in vain, (there being then no neceſſity that he ſhould die to purchaſe juſtification for us, and no ſufficient virtue in his death to procure it.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. " Διὰ δεκατεσσάρων ἐτῶν, fourteen years after.] I cannot aſſent to thoſe critics, who for δεκατεσσάρων, fourteen, would read τεσσάρων, four years after; for not only all the manuſcript copies and verſions read fourteen, but Irenæus, l. 3. c. 13. doth confirm this reading in theſe words: " Then after fourteen years I went up to Jeruſa- " lem, &c. If any man carefully examine, by the " act of the apoſtles, the time mentioned of his " aſcent to Jeruſalem for the queſtion aforeſaid, he " will

« will find the years agreeing with thoſe mention« ed by St Paul." Now, theſe years muſt be reckoned from the time of his converſion, mentioned here, chap. 1. 18. which happened in the year of our Lord 35; his journey to St Peter was A. D. 38; and then between that and the council of Jeruſalem, aſſembled anno Chriſti 49, will be fourteen intervening years: for whereas ſome reckon theſe fourteen years from the third year of his converſion to the council met at Jeruſalem, and ſo make that council meet anno Domini 52, becauſe it is ſaid here ἔπειτα, afterwards, and πάλιν ἀνέβην, I went up again; it may be anſwered, that the word ἔπειτα, afterwards, doth not connect theſe words with the three years mentioned, chap. 1. 18. as is evident, becauſe there follows another ἔπειτα, afterwards, ver. 21.; nor doth πάλιν ἀνέβην, I went up again, relate to his firſt journey to Jeruſalem, mentioned chap. 1. 18. for he had been twice at Jeruſalem; three years after his converſion to ſee Peter, and nine years after that to carry alms to the brethren at Jeruſalem, Acts 11. 30. though, ſeeing then none of the apoſtles, he makes no mention of that journey here, as being nothing to his purpoſe; ſee Dr Pearſon's annal. Paulin, p. 8. 9. So that whereas he had ſaid, chap. 1. 18. that three years after my converſion I went up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter, he ſaith here, and fourteen years after it I went up again. Now, that the apoſtle here ſpeaks of the journey to Jeruſalem, mentioned Acts 15. will appear,

1. From the agreement of what he here relates, with what then happened, as that he communicated to them the goſpel which he preached among the Gentiles, ver. 2. as he then did, Acts 15. 4.; that circumciſion was not then judged neceſſary to the Gentiles, ver. 3. as we find, Acts 15. 24.; that when they ſaw the goſpel of uncircumciſion was committed to him, they gave to him and Barnabas the right hand of fellowſhip, ver. 9. as then they did, ſending their very decree with one conſent to the Gentiles by the hands of Paul and Barnabas, Acts 15. 22. 25. who were received by the whole church, ver. 4. and ſtyled beloved, ver. 25.

2. It ſeems not likely that the apoſtle writing this epiſtle about nine years after the decree of that council ſhould make no mention of a thing ſo advantageous to the cauſe he is pleading here, and ſo proper to confute the pretences of the adverſaries he diſputes againſt. And,

3. James, Peter, and John, being all the apoſtles that were preſent at the council then held at Jeruſalem, the mention of their conſent to his doctrine and practice was all that was neceſſary to his purpoſe, to be mentioned concerning that council. It is no obection againſt this opinion that we find no mention, Acts 15. of Titus's being with him, for he is not mentioned in the whole book of the Acts, during which interval this journey muſt have happened.

Ver. 2. ᵃ Ἀνέβην κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, I went up by revelation.] Made to the apoſtle, ſaith Dr Hammond, to comply with this determination of the church of Antioch, made to the prophets of the church of Antioch, to ſend them, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, which I do not gainſay. But the apoſtle doth not ſay he went up διὰ ἀποκαλύψεως, by revelation, but κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν, according to revelation. Now, he had ſaid before, he received not his doctrine or goſpel by men, or of men, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; and here he may be ſuppoſed to add, that in his journey he acted ſuitably to the revelation which conſtituted him the apoſtle of the Gentiles, telling the church of Jeruſalem what things he had done among the Gentiles in purſuance of it, not inquiring what they did, but declaring what God did by him, not permitting Titus a Greek to be circumciſed, not giving place for an hour to the falſe brethren, &c.

Ibid. ᵇ Κατ' ἰδίαν δὲ τοῖς δοκοῦσι, privately to them of reputation.] Not that his doctrine might be confirmed by the concurrence of St Peter, or others with him in it, as Eſthius from St Jerom and St Auſtin here ſuggeſts; for ſure that doctrine which he received by immediate revelation from Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, needed no farther confirmation from the authority of man, but only to obviate the cavils of thoſe who laboured to hinder the effect of his goſpel, by ſuggeſting that it was contrary to or diſowned by thoſe apoſtles who were called before him.

Ver. 4. ᶜ Διὰ τοὺς ψευδαδέλφους, becauſe of falſe brethren.] Theſe falſe brethren, ſaith Epiphanius (k), were Cerinthus, and thoſe of his party.

Ibid. Διὰ δὲ, &c.] Here alſo it ſeems neceſſary to ſupply the ſenſe from the firſt verſe thus: συνπαρέλαβον δὲ Τίτον διὰ τοὺς ψευδαδέλφους, and I took with me Titus, becauſe of the falſe brethren. Examples of the like ellipſis or deficiency to be ſupplied from the precedent words in the Old Teſtament are very numerous; ſee Glaſſius de figuris grammaticis, l. 4. tract. 2. obſerv. 11. So Matth. 2. 10. Ἰδόντες δὲ τὸν ἀστέρα, ſeeing the ſtar, ἐστὼς ἐπάνω ὅπου ἦν τὸ παιδίον, add, ſtanding over the place where the child was, ver. 9. they rejoiced. This addition was neceſſary, becauſe they before ſaw the ſtar going before them, ver. 9.; ſo John 9. 3. Neither hath he ſinned, nor his parents, add, from ver. 2. ἵνα τυφλὸς γεννηθῇ, that he ſhould be born blind, ἀλλὰ ἵνα, but add again, he was ſo born, that the works of God might be made manifeſt in him; 1 John 2. 19. They went out from us, but they (who thus went out) were not of us; for if they had been of us, they might have remained with us, ἀλλ', ſupple ἐξῆλθον ἐξ ἡμῶν, but (they went out from us), that it might appear they all were not of us.

Ver. 5. [a] Οἷς οὐδὲ πρὸς ὥραν εἴξαμεν τῇ ὑποταγῇ.] Here Dr Mills contends from the authority of the vulgar, Tertullian, and Hilary D. that οὐδὲ is an addition to the text, though Jerom poſitively ſaith, that this was only the reading quorundam Latinorum codicum reclamantibus Græcis, of ſome Latin copies againſt the authority of the Greek fathers. See this reading confuted, Examen Millii in locum. And there alſo οἱ δοκοῦντες, ver. 6. is proved againſt the Doctor, not to be irreptitious.

Ver. 6. Ὁι ἀπὸ δέ.] as ſome would read, if not ſuitable to the Greek idiom, begin the words as you muſt the conſtruction, ὁποῖοι δὲ ποτε ἦσαν ἀπὸ τῶν δοκούντων εἶναί τι, and the ſenſe is plain, but of what quality they were who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, or were of reputation, οὐδέν μοι διαφέρει, I was not the better for it; where note, that the ſcholiaſt on Thucydides ſaith thus, Διαφέρει, i. e. ὠφελεῖ, λυσιτελεῖ, the word ſignifies to profit or be advantageous. Phavorinus and Heſychius ſay, that it ſignifies βελτίον εἶναι, to be the better; ſo that the words may be thus rendered, It was no advantage to me; I was not the better for it; and this ſenſe is confirmed by the following reaſon; For they who were of reputation added nothing to me.

Ver. 9. [c] Note, That the beginning of this verſe from the Greek runs thus, And James, Cephas, and John, who ſeemed to be pillars of the church, knowing the grace, &c.

Ver. 10. [f] Note, That from theſe four verſes, the ſupremacy of Peter over the reſt of the apoſtles, and the whole church, may be by many arguments refuted. For,

1. James is here mentioned firſt among the apoſtles of the circumciſion, according to the common doctrine of the ancients, who ſtyle him the firſt biſhop, archbiſhop, prince, and biſhop of biſhops, τὸν τῆς νέας Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἀρχιεράτηγον, τὸν τῶν ἱερέων ἡγεμόνα, τῶν ἀποστόλων τὸν ἔξαρχον, τὴν ἐν κεφαλαῖς κορυφὴν, the chieftain of the New Jeruſalem, the leader of the prieſts, the prince of the apoſtles, the top of the heads (l). And this agrees with the eccleſiaſtical tradition mentioned by Euſebius (m), that the brethren and kinſmen of our Lord, whilſt they lived, were preferred before other apoſtles and biſhops; and that therefore Peter and John contended not with James the Lord's brother, but choſe him biſhop of Jeruſalem, and after his death judged Simeon his couſin-german worthy of that ſee, ὡς ἀπὸ γένους ὄντος τοῦ Κυρίου, as being of the kindred of our Lord.

2. He puts no difference betwixt theſe pillars or chief of the apoſtles, which no more agrees with the ſuppoſed ſupremacy of Peter than it would with the Pope's ſupremacy to be reckoned among, or after ſome of the cardinals; which, as it is never done by them who own the Pope's ſupremacy, ſo neither would this have been done by St Paul, had he owned the ſupremacy of Peter.

3. He ſays the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed to him, as was that of the circumciſion to Peter, by which words he ſhews himſelf equal to Peter, ſay the ſcholiaſts (n). By theſe words, ſaith Hilary the Deacon, "Plena authoritas Petri in prædicatione Judaiſmi data dignoſcitur, et Pauli perfecta authoritas in prædicatione Gentilium invenitur." So that then Peter's ſupremacy was not owned at Rome.

Laſtly, It makes no matter to me, ſaith he, what they were; which ſure could not fitly be ſaid of him whom Chriſt had conſtituted to be his head and judge.

Ver. 11. [e] Αὐτῷ ἀντέστην, I withſtood him, &c.] "Quis ergo auderet Petro, primo apoſtolo — reſiſtere, niſi alius talis qui fiducia ſuæ electionis, ſciens ſe non eſſe imparem, conſtanter improbaret quid ille ſine conſilio fecerat (o)?

Ver. 14. [b] Οὐκ ὀρθοποδοῦσι πρὸς τὴν ἀλήθειαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, they walked not uprightly.] By this action Peter is charged with a ſinful fear, ver. 13.; not walking uprightly according to the truth of the goſpel, ver. 14.; with hypocriſy and diſſimulation againſt his own knowledge and practice elſewhere, ver. 13.; with building again what he had pulled down, ver. 18. and with compelling the Gentiles to live as do the Jews, ver. 14.; where obſerve, that he is ſaid to compel, in ſcripture; not only who doth violently force, but who, being of authority, provokes by his example, as here. As alſo they who lay a neceſſity on others to do any thing, either by their deportment, as the Corinthians, who compelled St Paul to glory, 2 Cor. 12. 11. or by their doctrine, as did the Judaizers, compelling the Gentiles to be circumciſed, Gal. 6. 12. and in this ſenſe our Saviour ſays to his diſciples, Compel them to come in, Luke 14. 23.

Ver. 15. [i] Ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ſinners of the Gentiles.] This word in the ſcripture-phraſe ſignifies a great and habitual ſinner; and becauſe the Gentiles were by the Jewiſh nation ſtill eſteemed ſuch, and generally were ſo, therefore the word is uſed to denote the Gentiles that knew not God. So what is ἐθνικοὶ, the

Ver. 17. 18. [k] This expoſition of theſe two verſes, which I have taken from Hilary, and all the Greek ſcholiaſts, ſeems much better than that of late commentators, who make the 17th verſe to be an objection againſt St Paul's doctrine of juſtification by faith, and the 18th an anſwer to it; for which I ſee no ground in the apoſtle's words.

Ibid. Or theſe words may be paraphraſed thus, εἰ γὰρ ἃ κατέλυσα, if the things which (by Chriſt's authority committed to his apoſtles, Matth. 18. 18.) I have looſed (by declaring men abſolved from the ritual precepts of the law of Moſes), I again build up (by teaching they are to be obſerved), I make myſelf a tranſgreſſor.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. [a] O Foolish Galatians, [b] who hath bewitched you, (or envied your happineſs, and ſo endeavoured) that you ſhould not obey the truth, [c] before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth, crucified among you?

2. This only would I learn of you, Received you the Spirit (in his gifts and powerful operations) by (obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? (i. e. the belief of the goſpel: if by the latter, this is a manifeſt token that your juſtification and acceptance with God was the fruit of your faith, and not of your obedience to the law, ſince God, by giving you his Spirit whilſt uncircumciſed, as well as to believing Jews, bare witneſs to this very thing, that he puts no difference betwixt you and them on that account, Acts 15. 8. 9.)

3. Are ye (then) ſo fooliſh? having (thus) begun in the Spirit, (as to receive his miraculous gifts by faith without the works of the law), are you now (ſeeking to be) made perfect by the fleſh, (by circumciſion, and obſerving the carnal ordinances of the law?)

4. Have ye ſuffered ſo many things (from the perſecuting Jews, Acts 17. 5.) in vain? [d] if it be yet (or even) in vain.

5. (To reaſſume my argument), He therefore that miniſtereth the Spirit to you (in his extraordinary gifts), and [e] worketh miracles among you, doth he it by (virtue of your obedience to) the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? (i. e. that faith which taught you to believe in a crucified Saviour.)

6. (For we muſt be juſtified) even as Abraham (the father of the faithful was, who) [f] believed in God, and it was accounted to him for righteouſneſs.

7. Know ye therefore, that they who are of faith (and ſeek juſtification by it), the ſame are the (true) children of (faithful) Abraham.

8. And the (Holy Ghoſt in) ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the Heathen through faith, preached before (the giving of the law, and before his circumciſion) the goſpel to Abraham, (by) ſaying, (Gen. 12. 3.), [g] In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed.

9. So then they which are of faith, (and ſeek juſtification by it, Rom. 9. 32.), are bleſſed with faithful Abraham, (and as he was.)

10. (And not by the works of the law); for as many as are of the works of the law, (and ſeek to be juſtified by them), are under the curſe (of it, and ſo incapable of juſtification by it): for it is written (there), Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them, (Deut. 27. 26. Now, this being perfectly done by none, all that are under the law are under the curſe of it.)

11. But that no man is juſtified by (obſervance of) the law in the ſight of God, it is (farther) evident: for (the prophet Habakkuk ſaith, chap. 2. 4.), [h] The juſt ſhall live by faith.

12. And (now, or whereas) the law is not of faith, but (ſaith), The man that doth them, (i. e. that perfectly obſerves what is required by the law), ſhall live in (or by) them.

13. (This being ſo), Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, (by) being made (according to the ſentence of the law) a curſe for us; for (there) it is written, [i] Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree, (as you know he did upon the croſs.)

14. (And this he ſuffered), that the bleſſing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through (faith in) Jeſus Chriſt; that we (Gentiles believing in him) might receive the promiſe of the Spirit [k] through faith, (for we are all the ſons of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus; and becauſe we are ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, Gal. 4. 5.)

15. Brethren, I ſpeak after the manner of men, (uſing an example taken from the common practice of all men, and ſpeaking what is owned in all civilized nations[l]; ſee note on 1 Cor. 9. 8.); Though it be but a man's covenant (that is made), yet if it be (legally) confirmed, no man diſannulleth (it), or addeth any thing thereto.

16. Now to Abraham and his [l] ſeed were the promiſes made. He (God) ſaith not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as (ſpeaking) of one, And [m] to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt.

17. And this I (farther) ſay, that the covenant which was confirmed before of God in Chriſt, (i. e. the covenant made in Chriſt the promiſed ſeed, and confirmed by God to Abraham before the law was given), the law which was (given) [a] four hundred and thirty years after, cannot diſannul, (ſo) that it ſhould make the promiſe (be) of none effect, (as it muſt have done were juſtification to be obtained by the law, for then none could be bleſſed in, and by the promiſed ſeed only, or without the law.)

18. For if the inheritance (of the bleſſing promiſed to Abraham) be (to be obtained by obſervance) of the law, it is no more (the effect) of (the) promiſe; but (that cannot be ſaid, for) God gave it to Abraham by promiſe.

19. (But you will inquire), Wherefore then ſerveth the law? (I anſwer), It was added (after the promiſe made) [b] becauſe of tranſgreſſions, until the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; and it was ordained (or delivered, not as the promiſe immediately by God himſelf to Abraham, but) by angels, (it being the word ſpoken by angels, Heb. 2. 2.; not as the promiſe without a mediator betwixt God giving and Abraham receiving, but) in the hand of a mediator, (even Moſes, who ſtood between them, and the Lord, at that time, to ſhew them the word of the Lord, Deut. 5. 5. and ratify the covenant on the people's part.)

20. Now (but the promiſe required no mediator, for) [c] a mediator is not of one (party only); but God (who made the promiſe to Abraham) is one (only.)

21. Is the law then againſt the promiſes of God? (as it muſt be if it condemns them to whom the promiſe doth aſſign a bleſſing: or is it againſt thoſe promiſes, which ſay, The juſt ſhall live by faith, and the bleſſing of Abraham ſhall come upon us by faith? as it muſt be, provided we are to be juſtified, not by faith, but by the works of the law: but) God forbid (it ſhould be thought he had given a law which diſannulled his promiſes, as it muſt have done, had juſtification to life depended on the obſervance of it): for if there had been (ſuch) a law given which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs (i. e. juſtification to life, Rom. 5. 18.) ſhould have been by the law; (whereas it ſubjecting us to death, we may be ſure God never did intend it for that end.)

22. But the ſcripture hath concluded all (men of all nations) under ſin, (and ſo under condemnation by the law moral and ceremonial, and ſentenced, not to life, but death by it, and thereby ſhewed the neceſſity), that the promiſe (of juſtification) by faith of Jeſus Chriſt (the promiſed ſeed) might be given to them that believe (in him; and thus the law is not contrary, but ſubſervient to the promiſes of living by faith.)

23. But before faith came (to be revealed), we were kept under (the diſcipline of) the law, [d] ſhut up unto the faith, which ſhould afterwards be revealed.

24. [e] Wherefore the law was (then) our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, (and cauſe us, thus condemned by the law, to fly to him who is the end of the law for righteouſneſs, Rom. 10. 3.), that we might be juſtified by faith (in him.)

25. But (now) after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter, (being no longer children in minority, Rom. 7. 3.)

26. For ye are all the (adult) [f] children of God (and ſo heirs of God) by faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

27. For as many of you as have (believed in Chriſt, and upon that faith have) been baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt, (and ſo are become ſons of God; for to as many as believed in him, he gave power to be the ſons of God, John 1. 12.)

28. There is (under the goſpel-diſpenſation) neither (diſtinction made of) Jew nor Greek; there is neither (of) bond nor free; there is neither (of) male nor female, (as under the Jewiſh œconomy, the male only bearing the ſign of the covenant): for ye are all one (as to the privileges of the goſpel) in Chriſt Jeſus.

29. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye (indeed) Abraham's ſeed, (not from Iſhmael, but Iſaac), and (therefore) heirs [g] according to the promiſe.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Ὦ Ἀνόητοι, O fooliſh, &c.] The apoſtle, by calling the Galatians fooliſh, doth not contradict our Saviour's precept, becauſe he doth it not εἰκῇ, raſhly, and without cauſe, ſaith Theophylact, nor out of anger and ill-will to them, but from an ardent deſire to make them ſenſible of their folly.

Ibid. [b] Τίς ὑμᾶς ἐβάσκανε; who hath bewitched you?] τίς ἐφθόνησε; who hath looked upon you with an evil or envious eye, as envying you the bleſſings of the goſpel? So the Greek ſcholiaſts. The word alſo ſignifies, oculis præſtigia imponere, to put deluſions, or, as we ſay, miſts before the eyes, which import ſuits beſt with the following words. The Reverend Dr Hammond obſerves here, that this ſeduction may refer to the Ebionites, if the time would permit, as doubtleſs it will; for they were only a branch of the Nazarens, or Cerinthians, who were contemporary with St Paul; and all his epiſtles ſhew that then there were many who maintained, and eagerly promoted among the Gentile converts, the chief doctrine of thoſe ſects, viz. "That they were obliged to obſerve the legal "conſtitution, as being not capable of ſalvation "only by faith in Chriſt, and a life agreeable "to

" to it (p)." And if this once be granted, there will be no need of his Gnoſtics in this, and perhaps not in any other of St Paul's epiſtles.

Ibid. Τῇ ἀληθείᾳ μὴ πείθεσθαι;] Theſe words, ſaith Jerom, are not extant in exemplaribus Adamantii, in the copies of Origen; but they are extant in the Arabic verſion, the Vulgar, Hilary, D. Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact.

I cannot ſufficiently wonder at Mr le Clerc's wild conjecture, that the Ebionites were Samaritans, eſpecially after he had given us the words of Origen, in which he twice ſaith they were οἱ ἀπὸ Ἰουδαίων τὸν Ἰησοῦν πιστεύοντες, thoſe of the Jews that believed in Jeſus, l. 2. contr. Celſ. p. 56. Had he not read in Irenæus, that they did " prophetica curioſius expo- " nere, et Judaico charactere vitæ uti, et Hieroſo- " lymam adorare, quaſi domus ſit Dei," lib. 1. c. 26.? And could the Samaritans do this? Doth not St Jerom ſay of them, " Dum volunt Judæi eſſe, et Chri- " ſtiani, nec Judæi ſunt, nec Chriſtiani?" Ep. ad Auguſt. Yea, even his own Epiphanius informs us, hær. 10. anaceph. p. 240. that Ἰουδαῖοι ὄντες, being Jews, they uſed the goſpel.

Ibid. ᵉ Οἷς κατ' ὀφθαλμοὺς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς προεγράφη ἐν ὑμῖν ἐσταυρωμένος.] Theſe words may bear this conſtruction, Before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt crucified, hath been evidently ſet forth to, or among you, viz. in, and from the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament; for the words ἐν ὑμῖν are not in the Alexandrian manuſcript, and ſo may be here omitted, or conſtrued with the word προεγράφη; and ſo they accord both with the context, and with the way of preaching uſed by the apoſtles, whoſe cuſtom it was to prove, out of the Old Teſtament, that Jeſus was the Chriſt, and that Chriſt ought to have ſuffered for us according to the ſcriptures, Acts 17. 3. And then the argument runs thus, If he died to procure the pardon of our ſins, and ſo our juſtification, why do we render his death upon the croſs vain, by ſeeking to be juſtified by the law? He having, by his ſufferings, blotted out the hand-writing which was againſt us, and nailed theſe ordinances to the croſs, why is it that you who are dead with Chriſt, from theſe elements of the world, are ſtill ſubject to ordinances? Eph. 2. 15. 16. Col. 2. 14. 20.

Ver. 4. ᵈ Εἰ γε καὶ εἰκῇ, if it be in vain;] as it muſt be upon your hypotheſis of the neceſſity of the obſervance of the law, for then is the ſcandal of the croſs ceaſed, chap. 5. 11. and all neceſſity of ſuffering perſecution is removed; theſe deceivers themſelves doing and urging others to theſe things only, leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt, chap. 6. 12. For the firſt perſecutions which the church ſuffered, were either from the Jews in perſon, or by the incitation of the Jews, (Acts 8. 1.; 1 Theſſ. 2. 14. 15. 16.; Acts 13. 15. and 14. 19. and 17. 5. 13.), who, being every where diſperſed, ſent choſen men from Jeruſalem to all places, where they and the Chriſtians were, to ſtir up the Heathen governors againſt them, as Juſtin Martyr teſtifies (q). Note alſo, that they were chiefly ſcandalized at the doctrine of the croſs, 1 Cor. 1. 23. not only as it contradicted their pleaſant dream of a temporal Meſſiah, under whom they ſhould live gloriouſly and triumphantly, but as being that which put an end to the Jewiſh ceremonies, and taught men to expect juſtification, not by obſervance of the law, but by faith in the blood of Chriſt ſhed for us; upon which account they were incenſed againſt all who thus taught, or thus believed it.

Note alſo hence, that all the good actions we have done, will be done in vain, if we perſevere not in well-doing to the end.

Ver. 5. ᵉ Ἐνεργῶν δυνάμεις, he that worketh miracles among you.] This is the obſervation of all the ancients, who comment upon this and the ſecond verſe, That, to commend the beginning of the Chriſtian faith, the gift of tongues, prophecy, and working of miracles, were vouchſafed to believers, as to the apoſtles at the beginning, according to our Lord's prediction, Mark 16. 17. 18. (r)

And let thoſe that queſtion the truth of Chriſtianity obſerve, that this was the chief argument which carried the cauſe in the council at Jeruſalem, that the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt were equally vouchſafed to the uncircumciſed Gentile, and to Jews, Acts 15. 8. 9.; and that this is here urged by St Paul as a thing undeniable, to confirm the Galatians, and to confute thoſe who endeavoured to prevail on them to admit of circumciſion, and the obſervance of other legal rites. This confirmation therefore of the truth of Chriſtian faith, was ſuch, as none, concerned to do it then, were able to gainſay, much leſs can any now find reaſon to doubt of it.

Ver. 6. ᶠ Ἐπίστευσε τῷ Θεῷ, believed God.] Hence it is evident, that it is the act of faith, and not the object of it, which doth juſtify; for Abraham believed God יהשכה, et imputavit eam fidem, and he imputed that faith in him for righteouſneſs, Gen. 15. 6.

The bleſſed God, ſaith R. Salom, imputed this to Abraham for righteouſneſs, for the faith by which he believed in him.

Ver. 8. Preached the goſpel to Abraham, ſaying, &c.] Well might the apoſtle argue thus from the example of Abraham, he being ſtyled by the Jeruſalem Talmud, Abraham the Juſt, Gen. 15. 1. 18. 2.; and theſe words being paraphraſed thus; In thy righteouſneſs ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed. Here Jerom ſaith, "Hoc autem in omnibus "pene teſtimoniis, quæ de veteribus libris in Novo "aſſumpta ſunt Teſtamento, obſervare debemus, quod "memoriæ crediderunt evangeliſtæ, vel apoſtoli, "et tantum ſenſu explicato, ſæpe ordinem tranſ- "mutaverunt, nonnunquam vel detraxerint verba, "vel addiderint." For which wild note this verſe miniſters no occaſion; for tho' the words, in thy ſeed, occur not, chap. 22. yet chap. 12. 2. they are found expreſsly as they are cited here, only with the addition of ἀπὸ γῆς, of the earth, which adds nothing to the ſenſe. So again, on ver. 10. he makes this note, "Incertum habemus utrum ſeptuaginta "interpretes addiderint omnis homo, et in omnibus, "an in veteri Hebraico ita fuerit, et poſtea a Judæis "deletum ſit: in hanc me ſuſpicionem illa res ſti- "mulat, quod verbum omnis, et in omnibus apoſto- "lus, vir Hebrææ peritiæ, et in lege doctiſſimus, "nunquam protuliſſet, niſi in Hebræis voluminibus "haberentur:" whereas, as I have ſhewed, that nothing is here added, but what was neceſſarily included in the full ſenſe of the words, and therefore is in the verſion of the Septuagint; ſo to imagine, that all the apoſtles, who underſtood Hebrew, muſt have cited all that they produced out of the Old Teſtament, exactly according to the Hebrew, and not at all according to the Septuagint, is an imagination contrary to ocular demonſtration.

Ibid. ἐν σοὶ, in thee.] That is, in thy ſeed, ver. 6. So Acts 3. 25. Ye are the ſons of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with your fathers, ſaying, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed; that is, in Chriſt: for ſo it follows, ver. 26. To you firſt, God having raiſed up his child Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you. And this confuted them who, with the Jews, interpret theſe words as a form of benediction thus, God make thee like to Abraham.

Ver. 11. ὁ Ὁ δίκαιος, &c. The juſt ſhall live by faith.] Thus do the Jews themſelves expound theſe words of Habakkuk, Faith is the cauſe of bleſſedneſs, as it is the cauſe of eternal live, according to theſe words, The juſt ſhall live by his faith, Sepher Ikkarim, l. 1. c. 21.

Ver. 13. For it is written, Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς ὁ κρεμάμενος ἐπὶ ξύλου.] Here again St Jerom's note is, "Scire "non poſſum quare apoſtolus in eo, quod ſcriptum "eſt, maledictus a Deo omnis qui pendet in ligno, "vel ſubtraxerit aliquid, vel addiderit; ſi enim ſe- "mel authoritatem ſeptuaginta interpretum ſeque- "batur, debuit, ſicut ab illis editum eſt, et Dei "nomen adjungere; ſin vero, ut Hebræus ex He- "bræis, id quod in lingua ſua legerit, putabat eſſe "veriſſimum, nec omnis, nec in ligno, quæ in He- "bræo non habentur, aſſumere; ex quo mihi vide- "tur, aut veteres Hebræorum libri (libros) aliter "habuiſſe, quam nunc habent, aut apoſtolum ſen- "ſum ſcripturarum poſuiſſe, non verba, aut quod "magis æſtimandum eſt, poſt paſſionem Chriſti, "et in Hebræis, et in noſtris codicibus ab aliquo "Dei nomen appoſitum, ut infamiam nobis inure- "ret, qui in Chriſtum maledictum a Deo credimus." But to omit the incredible ſuppoſition, that the Jews ſhould have falſified both the Hebrew and Greek text, and the Samaritan copy ſhould agree with them in that falſation:

1. The words ἐπὶ ξύλου are no addition to the text, עַל עֵץ, being in the former verſe, which ſaith, Ye ſhall hang him on a tree; and ἐπικατάρατος is in effect, κατάρατος ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.

2. The buſineſs of the apoſtle here is, to ſhew that Chriſt had redeemed us ἐκ τῆς κατάρας, from the curſe, by being made a curſe for us, i. e. by ſuffering that death which by the law was counted execrable: now, to prove this, it was ſufficient to ſhew, that, by being hanged on the tree, Chriſt ſuffered that puniſhment which by the law was ſtyled execrable.

3. The Hebrew ſaith, Chilelah heloim, accurſed by the judges, is he that is hanged on a tree. Now, theſe judges being the ordinance of God, he that receives an execrable ſentence from them, may be ſaid to lie under the curſe of God, as receiving that execrable puniſhment, which his vicegerents do inflict upon him, by the determinate counſel of God; in which ſenſe Chriſt is ſaid to be ſmitten of that God, who made our ſins to meet upon him, Iſaiah 53. 4. 6. and to be delivered up for our offences; and he who ſuffers a death which the law ſtyles accurſed by the heloim, or magiſtrates, who are appointed to execute the judgment of the Lord, may be ſaid to undergo his curſe.

Ver. 13. ὁ Ἐπικατάρατος πᾶς, curſed is every one.] When all were obnoxious to the curſe of the law, ſaith Theodoret, he undertook that death which by the law was accurſed, to free us from the curſe. To reſtrain the words, he redeemed us from the curſe of the law, to the Jews only, is in effect to ſay, Chriſt only ſuffered for the Jews, ſeeing he only ſuffered by hanging on the croſs, the tree on which he did expire. The Gentiles were not indeed ſubject to the particular maledictions contained in the law of Moſes, becauſe that law was not given to them, but only to the Jews; but they were ſubject to that death which was the general puniſhment, threatened to the violators of the law, and was the curſe denounced againſt Adam, and his ſeed. And, ſince it was by virtue of Chriſt's hanging on the croſs, that the bleſſing of Abraham came upon the Gentiles, he muſt have been thus made a curſe for them alſo, and not for the Jews only.

Now, here ſeems to be a plain evidence that our Lord ſuffered in our ſtead, by way of ſurrogation, the puniſhment the law denounced againſt us for ſin: for we were obnoxious by the law to a curſe; he, that he might redeem us from it, did for our ſakes, and in our ſtead, willingly ſubmit himſelf to that death, which, by the ſentence of the law, did render any man accurſed; for he bare our ſins, in his own body, on the tree. Now, the law expreſsly ſaith, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree; and Crellius here is forced to own a double commutation, both of the perſon ſuffering, and of the evils ſuffered; for whereas we ought to have ſuffered, Chriſt, ſaith he, ſuffered for us; and whereas we ought to have ſuffered a curſe, Chriſt ſuffered a curſe for us. But then he adds, that we ought to have ſuffered a real curſe, Chriſt only ſuffered a curſe improperly ſo called for us. The curſe threatened by the law to us was death eternal, the curſe Chriſt ſuffered for us was only temporal death. But,

1. If the curſe threatened to us was only the curſe of the law, and Chriſt ſuffered the curſe of the law, both which things the apoſtle here affirms, what ground hath Crellius to put theſe differences betwixt the curſe Chriſt ſuffered, and the curſe threatened by the law? Or does he not hereby ſeem to make the apoſtle's argument ſophiſtical and unconcluding?

2. The ſins to which the curſe is threatened, Deut. 27. were either ſuch to which God elſewhere threatened death, or cutting off, or ſuch as he required them to abſtain from, that they might live, and not die. Now, ſeeing the Socinians ſo ſtiffly do contend, that the life promiſed to the obſervers of the law was only temporal, why ſhould they ſay, that the death threatened to the violation of it is eternal death? It is true all death muſt be eternal to them that cannot raiſe themſelves, and have no promiſe of a reſurrection: upon which two accounts our Saviour's death was not eternal, becauſe he had power to revive himſelf, and had a promiſe that he ſhould not ſee corruption; but the death threatened by the law, in its own nature, being only the ſeparation of the ſoul and body, this our Lord did as truly ſuffer, as they could do who ſhould never live again.

The diſtinction therefore which the caſe requires, is only that which reſults neceſſarily from the difference of the perſon; i. e. we ſhould have ſuffered the curſe of the law, for our own ſins, and conſequently ſhould alſo have been accurſed in the ſight of God. Chriſt actually ſuffered the legal curſe to obtain pardon for the ſins of others, and therefore only was accurſed in the eye of the law, and in the ſight of men; but being in his own perſon wholly innocent, he could not be accurſed in the ſight of God. And thus it is, and muſt be, in all vicarial ſufferings; the perſon ſinning, and he that undertakes to ſuffer for him, are both guilty in the eye of the law, and ſuffer the puniſhment the law requires, but one of them alone is guilty in the ſight of God. Chriſt therefore was ſo made a curſe, as he was made ſin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 20.; not by contracting the guilt, but by ſuffering the puniſhment of our ſins, by being numbered with tranſgreſſors, and condemned with them to the death which the law ſtyles accurſed.

Ver. 14. [k] Διὰ τῆς πίστως, through faith.] It ſeems to follow from theſe words, and from 2 Cor. 2. 7. 8. that the miniſtration of the Spirit belonged not to the law, but to the goſpel, the law being rather the miniſtration of death; hence the apoſtle here oppoſes to the curſe of the law, the bleſſing of Abraham, which, ſaith he, is the promiſe of the Spirit through faith.

Ver. 15. Ὅμως ἀνθρώπου κεκυρωμένην διαθήκην οὐδεὶς ἀθετεῖ ἢ ἐπιδιατάσσεται.] Here I would read ὁμῶς, which ſignifies ὁμοίως, ſimiliter, in like manner; in which ſenſe ὅμως is plainly uſed in theſe words, ὅμως τὰ ἄψυχα, and is tranſlated, in like manner, 1 Cor. 14. 7.

Ver. 16. [l] Αἱ ἐπαγγελίαι, the promiſes] Made to Abraham, Gen. 12. 3. and repeated Gen. 22. 18. and to Iſaac, Gen. 26. 4.

Ibid. [m] Καὶ τῷ σπέρματί σου, And to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt.] This interpretation is owned by the Jews, who obſerve, that it is not written here, thy ſons, but thy ſeed, that is, the King Meſſiah (f). And as Theodoret obſerves, the words are capable of no other ſenſe; for by Chriſt only was the promiſe fulfilled, and in him alone did the Gentiles receive this bleſſing. He therefore in whom alone this promiſe was verified, muſt be the perſon of whom it was chiefly, if not only, intended. And ſo St Peter, aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt, interprets theſe words, ſaying, You are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God hath made to your fathers, ſaying, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed. To you firſt, God having raiſed up his child Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you. This child therefore is the ſeed. We need not the gloſs of Mr. Cl. that St Paul here argues according to the allegorical interpretation of that age; but if it be conſidered in itſelf, it cannot be thought of any force by thoſe who have other ſentiments, becauſe the Hebrew Zerah is a collective name: for this is the very objection of R. Iſaac, that great enemy of the Chriſtian faith, and is anſwered by the Reverend Biſhop of Bath and Wells, by ſhewing that the Hebrew word is uſed of one, Gen. 3. 15. and 4. 25. and 15. 3. and 38. 8. 9.; and that the Jews themſelves ſo expound it, Demonſtrat. of the Meſſiah, part 2. p. 256. Nor his other corrupt gloſs, that by Chriſt is meant Chriſt's diſciples; for is this ſenſe, In thy ſeed, i. e. in Chriſt's diſciples, ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed? Is not this to aſcribe that to Chriſt's diſciples which belongs to him alone? and to make them the ſaviours of the world? And why does he ſay that nothing was promiſed to Chriſt, when the apoſtle tells us, that in thee, and in thy ſeed, ſignifies Chriſt, who was to be the bleſſing both of Jew and Gentile? for though indeed the promiſe was to Abraham, the firſt ſubject of it was Chriſt, which is all the apoſtle here intends.

Ver. 17. [n] Μετὰ ἔτη τετρακόσια καὶ τριάκοντα, four hundred and thirty years after.] Hence it is evident, that the apoſtle here refers primarily to the promiſe made, Gen. 12. 3. ſince from that only are the four hundred and thirty years to be computed; for then Abraham was ſeventy-five years old, Gen. 12. 4.; from thence to the birth of Iſaac, which happened when Abraham was a hundred years old, Gen. 21. 5. is five and twenty years; from his birth to the birth of Jacob was ſixty years, for Iſaac was ſixty years old when Rebekah bare him, Gen. 25. 26.; from Jacob's birth to his deſcent into Egypt, were one hundred and thirty years, as he ſaith to Pharaoh, Gen. 47. 9.; the abode of him and his poſterity in Egypt, was two hundred and fifteen years; for that, with their ſojourning in Canaan, was four hundred and thirty years, Exod. 12. 40. according to the Septuagint.

Ver. 19. [o] Τῶν παραβάσεων χάριν, becauſe of tranſgreſſions.] Maimonides, in his More-Nevochim, acknowledges, that the ceremonial law was given for the extirpation of idolatry: "For," ſaith he, "when "God ſent Moſes to redeem his people out of E-"gypt, it was the uſual cuſtom of the world, and "the worſhip in which all nations were bred up, to "build temples in honour of the ſun, moon, and "ſtars, and to offer divers kinds of animals to them, "and to have prieſts appointed for that end: there-"fore God, knowing it is beyond the ſtrength of "human nature, inſtantly to quit that which it hath "been long accuſtomed to, and ſo is powerfully in-"clined to, would not command that all that wor-"ſhip ſhould be aboliſhed, and he ſhould be worſhip-"ped only in Spirit; but that he only ſhould be the "object of this outward worſhip, that theſe temples "and altars ſhould be built to him alone, theſe ſa-"crifices offered to him only, and theſe prieſts "ſhould be conſecrated to his ſervice (t)," Exod. 20. 24. and 25. 24. Lev. 1. 2. Exod. 22. 19. and 34. 14. Exod. 22. 41. And the like is ſaid by Cedrenus, of their feſtivals, ſeparations, purgations, oblations, decimations, that God injoined them, that τῆς πολυθέου πλάνης ἐκτήσοιντο, being employed in doing theſe things to the true God, they might abſtain from idolatry (u). And thus, ſaith Dr Spencer, were they kept or guarded under the diſcipline of the law, and ſhut up from the idolatrous rites and cuſtoms of the Heathen world, by the ſtrictneſs of theſe legal obſervations, and the penalties denounced againſt the violators of them. And it is well known that all the ancient fathers were of this opinion, That God gave the Jews only the decalogue, till they had made the golden calf, and that afterwards he laid this yoke of ceremonies upon them to reſtrain them from idolatry. Thus when God firſt brought them out of Egypt, and commanded them not to defile themſelves with the idols of Egypt, Ezek. 20. 7. he is ſaid to have given them his ſtatutes, and ſhewed them his judgments, which if a man do, he ſhall live in them, ver. 11. But, ſaith he, ſtill their hearts were after their fathers idols, the Egyptian Apis, &c. Wherefore I gave them ſtatutes which were not good, and judgments whereby they ſhould not live, ver. 24. 25. that is, that law of carnal commandments, which, ſaith the apoſtle, was aboliſhed for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it, Heb. 7. 16. 18. And thoſe words of Maimonides give us a clear reaſon why theſe rituals were called by St Paul, στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, the rudiments of the world, Gal. 4. 3. Col. 2. 28. namely, becauſe, for matter, they were the ſame which Heathens uſed before to their falſe gods. This is a very ancient expoſition, and is partly true, but it containeth not the whole truth; for the apoſtle, in the epiſtle to the Romans, which is the beſt expoſitor of this, informs us, That the law entered that ſin might abound, Rom. 5. 20. i. e. that it might appear to abound unto death, that ſin might appear ſin, working death in us, chap. 7. 13. and that the law worketh wrath, chap. 4. 15. and 3. 20. by giving us the knowledge of that ſin which deſerveth it: and this anſwers to that which the apoſtle here ſaith, That the law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, viz. to diſcover them, and their puniſhment; that the ſcripture hath concluded all men under ſin, viz. by virtue of the law; that as many as are under the law, are under the curſe, ver. 10.; and that upon, theſe accounts, the law is our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, that we may be juſtified through faith in him, who are condemned by the law, ver. 24. Chriſt being the end of the law for juſtification to every one that believeth, Rom. 10. 3.

Ver. 20. ὁ δὲ μεσίτης.] Perhaps theſe words may better be expounded thus: "But this mediator," viz. Moſes, "was only the mediator of the Jews, "and ſo was only the mediator of one party, to "whom belonged the bleſſing of Abraham, ver. 8. "14.; but God who made the promiſe, That in one "ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed, is "one (x)," the God of the other party, the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, and ſo as ready to juſtify the one as the other; ἐπείπερ εἷς ὁ Θεὸς, ſeeing he is one God who will juſtify the circumciſion by faith, and the uncircumciſion through faith, Rom. 3. 30. To ſtrengthen this expoſition, let it be noted, That the ancient Jews thought, that in theſe words, The Lord thy God is one God, Deut. 6. 4. was contained this myſtery, that God ſhould be owned and celebrated not by the Jews only, but by all the Gentiles; that he ſhould be the King over all the earth, and in that day, the Lord ſhould be one, and his name one. So Jarchius on theſe words, The Lord our God is one God, ſays, "It is intimated, that Je- "hovah, who is now our God, and not the God of "the Gentiles, ſhall hereafter be one God; as it is "written, Zeph. 3. 9. Then will I turn to the na- "tions a pure lip, that they may all call upon the "name of the Lord; and Zech. 13. 9. The Lord "ſhall be King over all the earth; and in that day "ſhall the Lord be one, and his name one." See Campegius Vitringa de ſynag. vet. l. 3. part 2. c. 17. p. 1084. 1086.

2*dly*, This expoſition is confirmed from the place parallel to this, Rom. 4. 14. 16. For as there it is argued, That if οἱ ἐκ νόμου κληρονόμοι, they that are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promiſe is of no effect: ſo here he argues, ver. 18. That if ἐκ νόμου κληρονομία, the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promiſe. And as there the apoſtle adds, ver. 16. That therefore the inheritance is of faith, that the promiſe might be made firm to all the ſeed; not to that of the law only, but to that part alſo which becomes ſo by the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all: ſo here he muſt be ſuppoſed to argue, That the inheritance could not be by the law delivered by Moſes to the Jews, as the mediator betwixt God and them, becauſe he was not the mediator παντὶ τῷ σπέρματι, to all the ſeed of Abraham; but to that part of it only, which was of the law, that is, to the Jews only; or the words may be paraphraſed thus: "The promiſe, I ſay, was made to the ſeed "of Abraham, ὡς ἀφ' ἑνὸς, as of one, ver. 16. ὁ δὲ μεσί- "της, but this mediator, Moſes, is not the mediator "of one, i. e. of that one ſeed Chriſt, which was to "bring the bleſſing, but God, who made the pro- "miſe, that in this one ſeed all the nations of the "earth, whether Jew or Gentile, ſhould be bleſſed, "is one and the ſame, always true to his word." So Dr Allix.

Ver. 23. ὑπὸ συγκλεισμένοι.] The apoſtle having ſaid in the foregoing verſe, συνέκλεισεν, the ſcripture hath ſhut up all, both Jew and Gentile, under ſin, it ſeems moſt reaſonable to interpret the word here, of men ſhut up as priſoners, condemned by the law to death, the puniſhment of ſin, till that faith came to be revealed, by which we obtain an happy freedom from condemnation to death.

Or this may be ſpoken of the Jews, who only were under the law; and were, by virtue of the peculiar obſervations it required, an incloſed people, ſeparated from communion with all other nations, till the Meſſiah, the great object of their faith, ſhould be revealed.

And having thus explained the apoſtle's argument, it ſeemeth neceſſary a little to conſider what Mr le Clerc here offers in his notes upon this chapter, from ver. 10. to the end.

1. Therefore when he ſays, "It was very difficult "indeed to obſerve all the rites of Moſes, yet he "ſuppoſes his law might be obſerved, and that it "did not require a degree of holineſs above human "ſtrength:" I anſwer with the diſtinction mentioned, note on ver. 24. This is all true, as to ſuch a ſincere performance of it as God would accept of; but it is not true as to the moſt exact, perfect, and unſinning obſervation of it in the higheſt import of the words.

Object. But doth then God command what is impoſſible? Is it not abſurd to make laws that cannot be kept, and to puniſh men for what they cannot do?

Anſ. God never commands what is naturally impoſſible, and which when we offend againſt, we can juſtly plead, that had we uſed our utmoſt ſtrength and diligence, we could not have avoided the doing what was forbid, or leaving undone what was commanded; for of what is ſo impoſſible no man can rationally repent, nor can his conſcience condemn him for it; but he may require what, through the weakneſs of the fleſh, is morally impoſſible to be always done or avoided; v. g. an infinitely holy God cannot but command, that we ſhould not ſin againſt him, ſin being a tranſgreſſion of his law: but though there be no particular ſin of which we can truly ſay, it is impoſſible we ſhould have avoided it; yet, through the infirmity of human nature, we have too much cauſe to ſay, that it is morally impoſſible we ſhould live without, or always free from ſin.

2*dly*, When he ſays, "The laws of Moſes are not "ſo ſevere, as not to pardon the leaſt ſin, God ha-"ving inſtituted ſacrifices for ſome ſins:" This alſo I grant, according to the diſtinction mentioned, viz. That God for the ſake of thoſe ſacrifices cleanſed them from ceremonial defilements, and freed them from the civil and eccleſiaſtical puniſhments, which by the law of Moſes they would have been ſubject to, had no ſuch ſacrifice been offered for them. God alſo fully pardoned the ſins of the upright Jews, and freed them from the puniſhments of the other life, but not by virtue of the blood of bulls and goats, for the reaſons there alledged, but by virtue of their faith in the Meſſiah, owned by them to be Meſſiah their righteouſneſs.

3*dly*, When he ſays, "That the Jews in St Paul's "time had got quite another notion of it than the "law of Moſes, as it is ſet down in the Pentateuch, "had, and boaſted it to be the moſt complete and "perfect pattern of ſanctity imaginable; as appears "by ſeveral places in Joſephus, and particularly in "his books againſt Appio:"

Anſ. I anſwer, That neither is Joſephus in this matter of much credit; neither ſaith he more than Moſes had ſaid before him in theſe words, What nation is there ſo great that hath ſtatutes and judgments ſo righteous as all the law which I ſet before you this day, Deut. 4. 8.? and much leſs than David, when he ſaith, The law of the Lord is perfect, Pſal. 19. 8.; beſides, our Saviour ſeems to give us a contrary account of this matter, in his ſermon on the mount, where though it be diſputed whether he added to the law itſelf, yet no man queſtions but that he added to the groſs ſenſes the Jews had then of it, and had upon it.

4*thly*, When he adds, "That the Rabbins uſed," as appears by the verſion of the Septuagint, and the citations of St Paul in this place, "to interpret "Deut. 27. 26. as if the meaning of Moſes was "there, that God required of them the moſt per-"fect holineſs, which if they did not perform, they "muſt expect to be curſed by him; but, in reality, "all that Moſes ſays, is only, that the people were "to curſe him that did not confirm the words of the "law to do them:"

Anſ. In all this there is ſcarce one word of truth. For, 1. The Rabbins were ſo far from expounding this, or any other text of Moſes in ſo high a ſenſe, that they thought it ſufficient to exempt them from God's curſe, that they were of the ſeed of Abraham, and had him for their father, Matth. 3. 8. 9.; that they ſhould be accepted for the merit of circumciſion, and that it was enough to be hearers of the law, though they were not doers of it, James 1. 22.; and that the obſervation of ſome precepts of the law would excuſe their neglect of the reſt. See note on Rom. 2. 13. and James 2. 10. 11. and the note there.

2. Whereas he ſaith, "This appears by the ver-"ſion of the Septuagint:" If that way of arguing be of any force, then the contrary appears from the Targum of Onkelos, and B. Uziel, who have added nothing to the words. Moreover, what hath the Septuagint here added, which is not neceſſarily contained in the ſenſe of the words, as they lie in the Hebrew? For, 1. Whereas they add, πᾶς ἄνθρωπος, every man; do not all interpreters add he, and is not that the ſame in ſenſe? ought not every man, who committed the ſins againſt which any of theſe curſes were denounced, to think himſelf ſubject to theſe curſes? 2. Whereas they add ἐν πᾶσι to the Hebrew, doth not the context plainly lead them to that addition? when it ſaith, ver. 3. and ver. 8. Thou ſhalt write, כל דברי, all the words of this law; were not the Jews obliged to do all the words of the law, i. e. all things commanded by the law of Moſes, Deut. 19. 9.? yea, are not the bleſſings in the next chapter promiſed to them only who obſerve to do all the commandments, ver. 1. and the curſes denounced againſt them who do not obſerve to do all his commandments and ſtatutes, ver. 15.? Doth not the Holy Ghoſt, aſſiſting the ſacred penmen, warrant this addition in other places? See that thou make according to the pattern, ſaith the Hebrew and the Septuagint, Exod. 25. 43.; ſee that thou make πάντα, all things according to the pattern, ſaith St Paul, Heb. 8. 5. At the mouth of two or three witneſſes ſhall a word be eſtabliſhed, ſaith the Hebrew; καθίσεται πᾶν ῥῆμα, ſhall every word be eſtabliſhed, ſay the Septuagint and St Paul. Nor, 3. Hath St Paul added any thing to the ſenſe of the words; for all the words of the law being written by Moſes in the book of the law, it is plainly the ſame thing to ſay, all the words of the law, and all the words written in the book of the law.

4. When he ſaith, Doubtleſs St Paul would never have altered any thing in the words of Moſes, nor followed the Septuagint at all, but rendered the Hebrew himſelf exactly, if he had reaſoned from the bare authority of the prophet, and not from the opinion of the Jews: I anſwer,

1*ſt*, That he caſts the vileſt imputation on St Paul, by ſaying here, that he argues only upon the falſe ſuppoſition of the Jews: for St Paul lays down this general propoſition, As many as are under the law, are under the curſe; this is falſe, ſaith Mr Clerc: "For in reality all that Moſes ſays is only, that the "people

" people were to curſe him that did not confirm the " words of the law to do them." It is ſo, ſaith St Paul, γέγραπται γὰρ, for it is written: by your good leave St Paul, you are out again, there is no ſuch thing; but you are guilty of adding to the word of God; if you underſtand yourſelf, you do not, and if you underſtand the words of Moſes, you cannot in this argument depend upon what is written, but only on the falſe and rotten notion of the Jews, touching theſe words. So le Clerc.

2*dly*, Through the ſides of St Paul here he wounds our bleſſed Saviour and all the ſacred penmen; for if it be true of St Paul, it muſt be alſo true of them, that if they had reaſoned from the bare authority of the prophets, and not from the opinion of the Jews, (not grounded on the true ſenſe of the prophets), they would have rendered the Hebrew exactly, and never have altered any thing in the words of Moſes, nor followed the Septuagint at all; which ſeeing ocular demonſtration ſhews, that both our Lord and his apoſtles have often done, you muſt not think, ſaith Mr Clerc, that they have given us the true ſenſe of the prophets, but only ſome corrupt opinions which the Jews had of them. And let Mr Clerc ſay as dogmatically as he pleaſes, that it is common with St Paul to cite the Old Teſtament, ſo as it was uſually alledged by the doctors of the Jews, whom they call Darſchanim, that is to ſay, with little regard to the circumſtances of the place, or the proper ſignification of the words, and to argue from them ſo alledged, I cannot but look upon it as a very bad ſuggeſtion.

Ver. 24. Note, for the right explication of theſe words from verſe 21. to this verſe:

1*ſt*, That it cannot be denied that good and holy men under the law were juſtified and obtained the pardon of their ſins, ſince otherwiſe they could not be accepted by God here, or ſaved hereafter.

2*dly*, It alſo ſeemeth evident from the diſcourſe of the apoſtle in this and the epiſtle to the Romans, that they could not be juſtified by the obſervance of the law; for he lays down this as the foundation of his diſcourſe, that by the works of the law no man is juſtified, Rom. 3. 20. and no fleſh ſhall be juſtified, Gal. 2. 16. The proofs he offers to confirm this poſition, do equally concern all times and perſons, from the giving of the law to the revealing of the goſpel; as v. g. 1. Becauſe by the law is the knowledge of ſin condemning us to death, Rom. 3. 20. and 7. 9. 10. 11. 13. Gal. 3. 22. 2. Becauſe the juſt, ſaith the prophet Habakkuk, ſhall live by his faith, chap. 2. 4. whereas the law is not of faith; whence he infers, That no man is juſtified in the ſight of God by the works of the law, Gal. 3. 11. 3. Becauſe as many as are under the law are under the curſe, ver. 10. 4. Becauſe it was impoſſible, through the weakneſs of the fleſh, that the law ſhould juſtify, Rom. 8. 3. or that it ſhould give life, Gal. 3. 21. and ſo it never was deſigned for that end. It had indeed its expiatory ſacrifices, but they procured only pardon of that guilt which rendered them obnoxious to the violent death threatened by the law to ſuch and ſuch offenders, but gave no remedy againſt natural death by the promiſe of a reſurrection to eternal life, and ſo exempted no man from the puniſhment of Adam's ſin; or they only releaſed offenders from the obligation to civil and eccleſiaſtical puniſhments, but could not free them from the puniſhments of the other life; for the apoſtle aſſures us, that the blood of bulls and goats could not take away ſin, Heb. 10. 4. and that they did only ſanctify to the purifying of the fleſh, Heb. 7. 13. See the note there.

Now, 3. Hence it follows, that they alſo muſt be juſtified by faith from all thoſe ſins by which they could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes, Acts 13. 39.

Object. But are not the Jews ſtyled righteous before God, by virtue of their obedience to the law of Moſes? As in theſe words of David, The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs, Pſal. 18. 20. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God, ver. 21. For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his ſtatutes from me, ver. 22. I was alſo upright before him, and kept myſelf from mine iniquity, ver. 23. Therefore hath the Lord recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs, ver. 24. Is it not ſaid of Zacharias and Eliſabeth, that they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameleſs? Luke 1. 6. Yea, doth not our apoſtle ſay, Not the hearers of the law are δίκαιοι, juſt before God, but the doers of the law δικαιωθήσονται, ſhall be juſtified? Rom. 2. 13.

Anſ. Now, to this I anſwer, That there is a double juſtification of which the ſcripture ſpeaks: 1. That which conſiſts in the abſolution of a ſinner from the guilt of ſin, by God's free pardon or remiſſion of it, or his not imputing it to the ſinner. And thus no man is or can be juſtified by the law, either ceremonial or moral, ſince neither of them do contain any promiſe of the pardon of it. Now, all men being ſinners, this juſtification muſt be neceſſary to all men to put and keep them in a ſtate of favour with God. And this is that juſtification which St Paul aſcribes to faith, and which, ſaith he, could never be obtained from the works of the law. But,

2. There is a juſtification to be undergone by all men at the great day of their accounts; and this is only the pronouncing them ſincere in the performance of their covenants, legal or evangelical, or in compliance with the laws of nature, Moſes, or of grace, the providence of God had placed them under; and in this ſenſe we find mention of men working righteouſneſs under the law of nature, Job 1. 1. Acts 10. 35.; under the law of Moſes, Luke 1. 6. Pſal. 18. 20.—24; and under the law of grace, 1 John 3. 7, Rev. 22. 11. And thus all pious perſons, who made it their ſincere endeavour to obey the law of Moſes, were righteous before God, though ſtill the imperfections which cleaved to their obedience were pardoned through faith.—To explain this, note,

1*ſt*, That the whole nation of the Jews believed in the promiſed Meſſiah, or the Meſſiah that was to come, and that in the ſeed of Abraham ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed; this being one of their fundamental articles.

2*dly*, They believed that this Meſſiah ſhould confer upon them, not only temporal, but ſpiritual, yea, eternal bleſſings; they expected ſpiritual bleſſings from him, even remiſſion of ſins. So Zacharias ſpeaks of the Baptiſt, that he ſhould go before the Lord to prepare his way, to give knowledge to his people of ſalvation through the remiſſion of ſins, Luke 1. 76. 77. To him, ſaith Peter, give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name all that believe in him ſhould receive remiſſion of ſins, Acts 10. 43. So the Jews ſay, that the Meſſias (y) was to remove חטא כולל, the general ſin of mankind, or the ſin of the firſt man. 2. They expected by him juſtification, he being ſtyled by the prophet, The Lord our righteouſneſs, and by the Jews משיח צדקנו, Meſſiah our juſtification. Now, this, ſay the ancient fathers, might be a juſtifying faith in them, without explicitly believing that Chriſt ſhould die for their ſins, though we have no reaſon to think that they who were ſo plainly taught this by the prophet Iſaiah, by the type of Iſaac, the lifting up of the ſerpent, and by their ſacrifices, ſhould be wholly ignorant of it.

Ver. 26. ᵗ Υἱοὶ διὰ τῆς πίστεως, the ſons of God through faith.] Hence, ſaith the Antipædobaptiſt, it appears, that infants cannot be made the ſons of God by baptiſm, becauſe we are all made the ſons of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus. Now, infants have no faith. Anſ. They might as well argue thus, By grace are ye ſaved through faith, Eph. 2. 7. but infants have no faith; therefore they cannot be ſaved. Or thus, He that believeth not, ſhall be damned, Mark 16. 16. no infants do believe; ergo, all infants ſhall be damned. The apoſtle plainly ſpeaks here of perſons converted from Heatheniſm to Chriſtianity, who were therefore baptized, being adult perſons, as he doth in the goſpel of St Mark, and the epiſtle to the Epheſians. This place can therefore with no more reaſon be applied to the caſe of infants, than the places cited from St Mark and that epiſtle.

Ver. 29. ᵘ Κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν κληρονόμοι, heirs according to the promiſe.] It is to be obſerved for the explication of many places in theſe epiſtles, that there is frequent mention in the New Teſtament of the promiſes in the plural number; to the Iſraelites belong the promiſes, Rom. 8. 4.; Jeſus Chriſt was a minſter of the circumciſion to confirm the promiſes, Rom. 15. 8.; To Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made, Gal. 3. 16. and ver. 21.; Is the law then againſt the promiſes? Theſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſes, Heb. 11. 13. 17. and ver. 39.; They all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promiſes.

Now, there is mention made in the New Teſtament of three ſorts of promiſes:

1*ſt*, The promiſe of a ſeed in which all the families of the earth ſhould be bleſſed, viz. in Chriſt, Acts 3. 25. and 12. 23. 33. and 26. 6. Rom. 4. 13. 14. 20. and 9. 9. Gal. 3. 21. 22.; ſee the note there.

2*dly*, The promiſe of the Holy Spirit in his extraordinary gifts and operations, Acts 2. 33. 39. by which believers were then ſealed up to the day of redemption, Eph. 1. 13. and this is called the promiſe of the Father, Luke 24. 49. Acts 1. 4.; and this promiſe was not immediately made to Abraham, but was the conſequent of the bleſſing which God had promiſed to his ſeed, the bleſſing of Abraham being firſt to come upon the Gentiles, that they might receive the promiſe of the Spirit, i. e. that being made the ſons of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus, the ſeed promiſed, God might ſend the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father, chap. 4. 6.

3*dly*, The promiſe of a future reſt, and an eternal inheritance, there being a promiſe made of entering into reſt, Heb. 4. 3. 9. (ſee the note there), peculiar to believers, and to the people of God, after the reſt which God had given them in Canaan, and a promiſe of an eternal inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. and 10. 36. For that the patriarchs did by faith expect a city having foundations, whoſe builder and maker was God, and an heavenly country, we learn from Heb. 11. 9. 14. 15. yea, they expected to obtain a better reſurrection, ver. 35. viz. by virtue of their Meſſiah, this being their common ſaying, The Meſſiah ſhall raiſe up thoſe that ſleep in the duſt (z); and one of their fundamental articles is this, That the Meſſiah will come מחיו אמותא, and will raiſe the dead, and bring them into Paradiſe. This faith generally obtained among them before our Saviour's advent, as we learn, not only from the book of the Maccabees, but from St Paul's plain words, Acts 24. 15. and 26. 7. 8. If you inquire where any ſuch promiſe was made to Abraham or others? I anſwer, That ſuch a promiſe was made to him and to the patriarchs, we are aſſured from this, that they by faith expected ſuch things, all faith being built upon a promiſe; this promiſe therefore might be made to Abraham, Gen. 17. 7. where God ſaith, I will eſtabliſh my covenant betwixt thee and thy ſeed after thee in their generations, for an everlaſting covenant, to be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee: for that to be the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, is to be the God that will raiſe them up from the dead, we learn from our Saviour's argument, Matth. 22. 32.; ſee the note there; and that he therefore was called their God, becauſe he had prepared for them a city, from Heb. 11. 15. And in reference to this future recompenſe, it is that the apoſtle ſaith, Theſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſe, God having provided ſome better thing for us, that they without us ſhould not be made perfect, Heb. 11. 39. 40.; ſee the note there. Now, this ſeems to be the promiſe mentioned here, of which Chriſtians are ſaid to be the heirs, they being heirs of God, joint heirs with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 15. Gal. 4. 7.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. NOW I ſay, (to ſhew how you who are heirs of the promiſes, ſhould be kept in bondage under a ſchoolmaſter, chap. 3. 23. 25.), that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing (as to the poſſeſſion and free uſe of his eſtate) from a ſervant, though he be (by right of inheritance) lord of all (his father left:)

2. But is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed by the father (in his laſt will and teſtament.)

3. Even ſo we (the ſeed of Abraham), when we were children, (as till faith came we were), were in bondage under the [a] elements of the world, (as ſervants were of old to their maſters.)

4. But when the fulneſs of the time (appointed for the appearance of the Meſſiah for the benefit of Jew and Gentile, that they might be made ſons by him), was come, God ſent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under (ſubjection to) the law,

5. To redeem them that were under the law (from the bondage of it), that we (together with them) might receive the adoption of ſons.

6. And becauſe ye are (now made) ſons (of God by faith, chap. 3. 25.), God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father, (i. e. witneſſing to your ſpirits that ye are the ſons of God, and that he is your Father, Rom. 8. 15. 16. and enabling you to uſe the language, not of ſervants, but of ſons.

7. Wherefore thou art (after this redemption wrought) no more a ſervant, [b] but a ſon; and if a ſon, then an heir of God through Chriſt.

8. (I ſay thou art no more a ſervant), howbeit, then when ye knew not God, [c] ye did [d] ſervice to them which by nature are no gods.

9. But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, (being made his ſons by adoption), how (after this freedom purchaſed by Chriſt) turn ye [e] again to the weak and beggarly elements (of the law), whereunto you deſire again to be in bondage?

10. (For) ye obſerve (the Jewiſh ſabbath) [f] days, and months, (the new moons), and times (of their ſolemn feſtivals), and (ſabbatical) years.

11. [g] I am afraid of you, leſt I have beſtowed on you labour in vain (in preaching the goſpel to you.)

12. Brethren, I beſeech you, be as I am; for [h] I am as you are: ye have not injured me at all.

13. Ye know how (that) through infirmity of the fleſh I preached the goſpel to you at the firſt.

14. And (notwithſtanding) [i] my temptation which was in my fleſh, ye deſpiſed (me) not, nor rejected (me); but received me (rather) as an angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus, (thinking yourſelves very happy in having ſuch an apoſtle.)

15. Where is then the bleſſedneſs ye ſpake of? (in having me for your apoſtle, who taught you no ſuch thing as this, that you were to be juſtified by the obſervance of the law); for I bear you record, (you had once ſuch a great affection for me), that if it had been poſſible, you would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16. (And after this), am I therefore become your enemy, (or looked upon as ſuch), becauſe I tell you the truth?

17. They (who ſeduce you, do indeed) zealouſly affect you, but not well, (and in a due manner); yea, they would exclude us (from your affection), that you might affect them (only.)

18. But it is good (for you) to be zealouſly affected always in a good thing, (as your affection to me, and to the truth I preached, is), and not only when I am preſent with you.

19. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, (to renew you in the faith from whence ye are fallen), till Chriſt be (fully) formed in you, (as the child is in the womb,)

20. I deſire to be preſent with you now, and to [k] change my voice, for I ſtand in doubt of you.

21. Tell me, ye that deſire to be under the [l] law, do ye not hear (what is contained in the Pentateuch, the book of) the law?

22. For it is (there) written, that Abraham had two ſons; the one (to wit, Iſmael) by (Hagar) a bond-maid, the other (to wit, Iſaac) by (Sarah) a free-woman, (a lady or princeſs, as her name imports.)

23. But he that was of the bond-woman [a] was born after the fleſh, (and ſo was not to be accounted for the ſeed); but (whereas) he of the free-woman was by promiſe, (and ſo was only to be accounted for the promiſed ſeed, Rom. 9. 8.)

24. Which things are an allegory, (expreſſing one thing, and by that hinting another to us); for theſe (two, Hagar and Sarah) are (intended typically to repreſent to us) the two covenants, the one (viz. that of the law given) from Mount Sinai (is that covenant) which gendereth to bondage, (i. e. ſubjects its children to bondage, and is the covenant) which is (typified by) Hagar (the bond-woman.)

25. [b] For this Hagar (whoſe name ſignifies a rock) is (in the allegory) Mount Sinai in Arabia, (whence the law was given), and (ſo ſhe) anſwereth to (that) Jeruſalem which now is, (they living long in the wilderneſs, and receiving the law from Mount Sinai in Arabia), and is in bondage with her children (to the law given there.)

26. Thus it was and is with the terreſtrial Jeruſalem); but (the) [c] Jeruſalem which is (from) above, (and is ſignified by Sarah, the type of the ſecond covenant), is free, (is the free-woman, and ſo her children cannot be in bondage to the law, as the Jews were, and it is this Jeruſalem) which is the mother of us all.

27. For (of this Jeruſalem, Iſ. 54. 1.) it is written, Rejoice thou barren which beareſt not, break forth and cry, thou that travaileſt not, (and ſo in this art like to Sarah); for (now) the deſolate hath many more children than ſhe that hath an huſband, (the Gentile than the Jewiſh church.)

28. Now, (to apply theſe things to us), we brethren, as Iſaac was, are the children of the promiſe, (as being born, not of the fleſh, but of the Spirit, by virtue of the promiſe, In thy ſeed ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed.)

29. But as then he that was born after the fleſh, (i. e. Iſhmael), [d] perſecuted him that was born after the Spirit, (i. e. Iſaac, the ſeed produced by the Spirit of God, and the repreſentative of us who are born of the Spirit, John 3. 3. 5.); even ſo it is now, (the Jews, the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh, every where perſecuting us Chriſtians, 1 Theſſ. 2. 14. 15. 16.)

30. Nevertheleſs, what ſaith the ſcripture? (i. e. what is contained in the ſcripture? even theſe words approved by God, Gen. 21. 12.), Caſt out the bond-woman and her ſon; for the ſon of the bond-woman [e] ſhall not be heir with the ſon of the free-woman.

31. So then, brethren, we (being children of the promiſe, ver. 28.) are not children of the bond-woman, (and ſo in ſubjection to the law), but of the free-(woman, and therefore at liberty from the obligation or bondage of it.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 3. [a] Στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, the elements of the world,] i. e. the Jewiſh rites ſo called; becauſe, as was obſerved, chap. 3. 19. they were for matter moſtly the ſame which had before obtained in the world, only they were directed to a better object, and a better end.

Ver. 7. [b] Ἀλλ' υἱὸς, but a ſon.] That the notion of adoption includes a ſtate of immortality; and that the ſons of God were to be ſons of the reſurrection, I have ſhewed upon the parallel place, Rom. 8. 16.—23. And that the Jews were not ignorant of this import of the phraſe, we learn from the author of the book of Wiſdom, chap. 2. 12. who introduced the wicked Atheiſts ſpeaking thus: "Let us lie in wait for the "righteous, for he calleth himſelf a child of God. "He maketh his boaſt that God is his Father. Let "us ſee if his works be true.——For if the juſt man "be the ſon of God, he will help him.——Let us "condemn him to a ſhameful death; for by his own "ſaying he ſhall be reſpected. Thus, ſaith he, were "they deceived, neither hoped they for the wages "of righteouſneſs, nor diſcerned a reward for "blameleſs ſouls. For God created man to be immortal, and made him an image of his own eternity.——The ſouls of the righteous are in the "hands of God, and their hope is full of immortality. Having been a little chaſtiſed, they ſhall be "greatly rewarded; for God tried them, and found "them worthy of himſelf." And chap. 5. he introduced the ſame wicked perſons, ſaying, "We fools "counted his life madneſs, and his end to be without honour; how is he numbered among the "children of God, and his lot is among the ſaints!" Where,

1. The righteous are repreſented as the ſons and children of God; and it is farther ſaid,

2. That as ſuch they are to be rewarded in their ſouls, which are to be received into the hands of God, and to be at reſt; and in their bodies, which are to be immortal.

3. That, at the day of recompenſe, they ſhall ſtand in great boldneſs, and ſhall, as being the ſons of God, have their lot and portion with the ſaints, ὁ ἅγιος ὁ κλήρος αὐτῶ, that is, he ſhall be ὁ κληρονόμος, an heir with the ſaints.

Ver. 8. [c] Ἐδουλεύσατε, ye did ſervice.] Hence we learn learn how frivolous is the diſtinction of the Papiſts, that latria is indeed ſervice proper to God, but dulia is ſuch worſhip as may be paid to ſaints and angels; for ſeeing ſaints and angels are by nature no gods, the giving dulia to them muſt be the thing condemned here in the Heathens, that being only this, that they did δουλεύειν, give dulia to them which by nature were no gods.

Ibid. Τοῖς μὰ φύσει οὖσι θεοῖς, to them which are not gods by nature.] Hence we learn the conſequence of the Socinian hypotheſis, that Jeſus Chriſt is not by nature God, and yet is to be honoured with the ſame worſhip which all Chriſtians give to him who is by nature God, ſeeing it teacheth us to do what St Paul here condemneth in the very Heathens. And ſurely it muſt be abſurd to make that an article of Chriſtian faith, and a part of Chriſtian worſhip, which the apoſtle here makes a great crime of the Heathen world, and a certain evidence of their ignorance of the true God. That the Socinians cannot anſwer this objection, appears from what they here return to it, viz. That gods by nature, is not here oppoſed to gods by grace, or to thoſe who have received their divinity from the one true God; for to ſerve and worſhip ſuch a god, by reaſon of the empire which he hath received from God, is not proane and wicked, but pious and neceſſary (a). Now in anſwer to this, I ſay,

1. That it is very evident from the text, that thoſe who are not gods by nature, are oppoſed to him who s God by nature, viz. to him whom the Heathens knew not, and to him whom the Galatians, being Chriſtians, knew, and by whom they were known. Since then the Socinians god by grace is not a god by nature; ſince he is not the God intended in theſe words, ye know not God; he muſt be ranked among thoſe which are here oppoſed to him.

2. I have elſewhere ſhewn that the Heathens had the very ſame ſentiments with the Socinians, as to the worſhip of their inferior deities; and it is wonderful to ſee how they concur in ſenſe, and almoſt in words.

Indeed, there is ſcarce any plea they uſe for the worſhip of Jeſus Chriſt, as a made God, which was not before uſed by the philoſophers for the worſhip of their inferior deities (b).

2. Hence alſo it appears to be a miſtake, to ſay that the Galatians, to whom the apoſtle here writes, before they received the goſpel, were, as to the greateſt part of them, proſelytes of the gate, or alſo of righteouſneſs; ſeeing it is plain that they were Heathens, not knowing the true God, but ſerving them which by nature were no gods, chap. 4. 8. 9. and by the goſpel were to be delivered ἐκ τῦ ἐνεστῶτος αἰῶνος πονηρῦ, from the preſent evil age, chap. 1. 4 from which they who were made proſelytes of the gate, and worſhipped the true God, were in a great meaſure delivered. 2. The great endeavour of the Judaizers that crept in among them, was to perſuade them to be circumciſed, Gal. 5. 2. and 6. 12.; whereas all the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, all the Gentiles which had before been ſubject to the Jewiſh rites, muſt be circumciſed when they were admitted to be proſelytes of righteouſneſs, they being made ſuch by circumciſion, and a promiſe of obedience to the law of Moſes.

Object. It is the Jewiſh law which is ſtyled the elements of the world, to which they were in bondage, chap. 4. 3.

Anſ. The Jewiſh law is indeed ſo called, but it was for this reaſon, that it was made up of ceremonies, which for the matter were the ſame with thoſe which had been uſed by other nations of the world, the object of them only being changed. See the note on chap. 3. 19. and they are no where called the elements of piety, as Mr le Clerc ſuppoſes.

Ver. 9. Πάλιν ἐπὶτὰ ἀσθενῆ ᾧ πτωχὰ σοιχεῖα, again to weak and beggarly elements.] Here interpreters find great difficulty to ſhew, how the Galatians, who were never under the law, can be ſaid to be again, and anew, in bondage to theſe elements. But the obſervation made on chap. 3. 19. that the rites of the Jews and Heathens were for the matter moſtly the ſame, removes that difficulty; and ſhews that they are ſaid to return to theſe elements, not becauſe they before obſerved the Jewiſh ceremonies, but becauſe the ceremonies of the law, being for the matter moſtly the ſame with thoſe the Gentiles uſed to their Heathen deities, by returning to them they returned to thoſe elements. Theſe rites are alſo weak and beggarly elements, in compariſon of the riches of the Holy Ghoſt, and the power of the Holy Ghoſt. They are weak, as having no power to cleanſe the ſoul; and beggarly, as not being able to confer upon us the ſpiritual riches of the goſpel, pardon of ſins, adoption, the gifts and graces of the Spirit, eternal redemption.

Ver. 10. [f] Ἡμέρας καὶ μῆνας, days and months.] That this verſe is to be interpreted of the Jewiſh ſolemn times, and the feſtivals obſerved by them, as far as they could be obſerved out of Judea, the whole drift of this epiſtle ſhews, which is to bring off the Galatians from thinking they were obliged to obſerve the rites and ceremonies of the law. For that the Jews did ἑορτάζειν, keep their feaſts in Egypt and Alexandria, and where-ever they were ſettled among the Heathens, we learn from Philo, in his oration againſt Flaccus (c). That they were very numerous in Aſia Minor, of which Galatia was a part, ſee the note on James 1. 1. That in thoſe places where they dwelt that had converted a great many to the Jewiſh worſhip, and made them, as it were, a part of themſelves, Joſephus teſtifies; ſee note on 1 Pet. 1. 1.; and if it were ſo at Galatia, this might make them ſo ready to relapſe to their old Jewiſh rites.

Ver. 11. [g] Φοβοῦμαι ὑμᾶς, I am afraid of you.] As well he might, for by this practice they muſt revolt again from Chriſt to the Jewiſh ſynagogues; for it belonged only to their great ſanhedrim (d), or to the doctors of the law, to ſtate the certain times of their new moons, and other feſtivals; ſo that, for the due obſervation of them, they muſt entirely depend upon the Jewiſh ſanhedrim.

Ver. 12. [h] Ὅτι κἀγὼ ὡς ὑμεῖς, I am as you are.] That is, ſay the fathers, I was once zealous for the law as you are; but now I live as do the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews; do you who are not Jews but Gentiles, live in like manner, as men exempted from the law. But this expoſition ſeems not to cohere with theſe words, Ye have not injured me at all. They may therefore be thus interpreted: Brethren, be ſtill as affectionate to me as I am to you, and count me not your enemy, becauſe I tell you the truth; for I am ſtill as affectionate to you, as ever you were to me, ver. 14. I do not look upon you as perſons who have done any thing with an intent to injure me; and though your falſe teachers have done you this injury, by their pernicious doctrines; yet have they not prevailed on you ſpeak evil of me, or act injuriouſly towards me.

Ver. 14. [i] Τὸν πειρασμόν μου τὸν ἐν τῇ σαρκί, my temptation which was in the fleſh.] It is the opinion of the Greek commentators, and of the Reverend Dr Hammond, that the ἀσθένεια τῆς σαρκὸς, the infirmity of the fleſh, ver. 13. and the temptation in the fleſh, here, only ſignify the perſecutions the apoſtle ſuffered for preaching the goſpel. But that this cannot be the full import of the words, is evident from theſe conſiderations: 1. That the perſecutions which he ſuffered for the cauſe of Chriſt, could miniſter no reaſon to the Galatians, ἐξουθενῆσαι καὶ ἐκπτύσαι, to contemn, vilify, deſpiſe him as nothing, and even to ſpit upon him who preached the goſpel, with ſuch great demonſtration of the Spirit, and ſuch power of miracles under all his perſecutions. Moreover, the apoſtle, in the epiſtles to the Corinthians, repreſents theſe ſufferings as a vindication of the truth of his apoſtleſhip, yea, as an argument of the life and power of that Jeſus, who did ſuch mighty things by his apoſtles under all their ſufferings, and as that which ſhould create the greater reſpect to him; and gives them a large catalogue of them, confirming it with an oath, 2 Cor. 11. 31. which ſhews, that though he ſometimes feared the greatneſs of his tribulations might make them faint, or ſhake them, who were taught that they muſt alſo be partakers of the like ſufferings; yet did he not conceive himſelf more contemptible, or vile in his own perſon for his perſecutions. And therefore as he mentions this to the Theſſalonianss as a proof of his ſincerity, That having before ſuffered, and been ſhamefully intreated at Philippi, he was ſtill bold to preach the goſpel to them, 1 Theſſ. 2. 2. As he mentions his ſufferings to the Epheſians, as their glory, chap. 3. 13.; ſo here he declares to his Galatians, That he ſtill ſuffered perſecution; and he concludes his epiſtle thus, From henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus, Gal. 5. 11. inſinuating that theſe ſufferings were ſo far from giving any perſon a juſt reaſon to deſpiſe him, that they were rather an inducement to a more honourable treatment of him.

2. Though ἀσθένεια and πειρασμὸς, infirmity and temptation, abſolutely put, do ſometimes ſignify afflictions, or perſecutions; yet do we never elſewhere read, that ἀσθένεια σαρκὸς, πειρασμὸς ἐν σαρκὶ, σκόλοψ ἐν σαρκὶ, an infirmity, temptation, or thorn in the fleſh, is uſed in that ſenſe. Nor was it only the ſufferings he endured in his body, but the very preſence of his body, which was weak: ſee note on 2 Cor. 12. 7. 8. 9. Having therefore in that place proved, that, beſides his perſecutions, he had a weakneſs and imperfection in his body, which rendered both his perſon and his ſpeech contemptible, I think it reaſonable to refer theſe words to it.

Ver. 18. Ἐν καλῷ.] It is thought, that by this expreſſion St Paul means himſelf; but it ſeems not reaſonable to think, that he would call himſelf a good man, when he was ſpeaking to them who had ſo bad an opinion of him; but he might ſay this of his doctrine, nor will the Greek bear the other ſenſe.

Ver. 20. Ἀλλάξαι τὴν φωνήν.] To temper my voice to you, as your affairs require; lamenting the fall of ſome, and ſtriving to recover them, and commending the ſtedfaſtneſs of others in the faith.

Ver. 21. Τὸν νόμον οὐκ ἀκούετε; Do not you hear the law?] i. e. Do not you, Chriſtians, to whom the law and the prophets are read every Lord's day, and which you have the liberty to read at all times, hear what the law ſpeaks? Here, ſaith Mr. Cl. it is to be noted, that St Paul argues from ſome received Midraſh vulgarly known; for if that allegory whereof he here ſpeaks, had not been before heard of, he would have had no reaſon to wonder, that the Galatians had never collected any ſuch thing from the ſtory which he refers to.

Anſ. 1. To this I anſwer, That no ſuch interpretation of this paſſage was vulgarly known among the Jews, is apparent from the ſilence of all the Jewiſh paraphraſters upon the place, and of all thoſe interpreters who have converſed moſt in the writings of the Jewiſh rabbins; and yet produce not the leaſt hint of any ſuch thing, nor can Mr Cl. do it. It is true indeed, that the Jews had this canon, that proles ſequitur matrem, and ſo allowed that the offſpring of a bond-woman muſt be born in bondage, the offſpring of a free-woman muſt be free; but it is not true, that they ever deemed Hagar the repreſentative of thoſe under the firſt, or legal covenant; and Sarah only of thoſe who were under the new, and goſpel covenant.

2. This ſuppoſed Midraſh is contrary to their known and avowed principle, That their law was to be eternal, and ſo that there was no new covenant to ſucceed for the aboliſhing of it; as is plain from the apoſtle's diſpute againſt them, both here, and in the epiſtle to the Romans, and in that to the Hebrews. Moreover, doth not Mr Clerc tell us in his annotations on the former chapter, That the law, and a perfect pattern of holineſs, was the ſame in the opinion of the Jews? And muſt this perfect pattern of holineſs here, in the opinion of the ſame Jews, be only a covenant gendering to bondage, and repreſented by Hagar a bond-woman?

3. The apoſtle doth not wonder, that the Galatians had collected no ſuch allegory, from the ſtory referred to; but only aſks if they had not heard the words he doth thus allegorically expound to them. He proceeds thus:

Object. "Farther, ſeeing this interpretation "could not be urged againſt thoſe who might de- "ny that the ſcripture ought to be ſo underſtood, "and the apoſtle doth not make uſe of his autho- "rity to confirm it; it is evident, that he argues "here from what was generally allowed, which "kind of things it is not material ſhould be true, "or well grounded, as long as they contain nothing "prejudicial to true piety, and are believed by "thoſe againſt whom we diſpute. So that from "St Paul's uſing ſuch an allegory againſt the Ju- "daizing Galatians; it does not follow, that we in "this age are bound to admit it as a ſecret re- "vealed from heaven to the apoſtle.

Anſ. To this I anſwer, 1. That it is too confidently ſaid, that the apoſtle doth not make uſe of his authority to confirm this interpretation; for is it not, Paul an apoſtle, not of man, but of Jeſus Chriſt, and of God the Father, chap. 1. 1. who writes thus to the Galatians? And had not the apoſtles from the Holy Ghoſt the word of wiſdom and of knowledge, to direct them in the underſtanding the myſteries of the Old Teſtament? Does he not declare they ſpake the wiſdom of God in a myſtery? 1 Cor. 2. 7.; that wiſdom which God had revealed to them by his Spirit, ver. 10. That they had received the Spirit which is of God, that they might know the things which are freely given us of God; which things they alſo ſpake, not in the words which man's wiſdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth; comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual; ſee the note, ver. 12. 13. there. And is not this a ſufficient confirmation of all which they declared they writ, as the apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt?

2. I add, that it cannot reaſonably be ſaid, "He "argues here from what was generally allowed," not only becauſe I have proved, that nothing of this nature ever was, or could be allowed by the Jews; but alſo becauſe no one inſtance can be produced, where the apoſtle uſeth any ſuch argument ad hominem, or from their own miſtaken principles; but where it is evident from his own words, and declarations, that he doth ſo. Had the apoſtle ſaid, as he is forced in his paraphraſe to make him ſpeak, "Theſe things uſe to be allegorically explained by "the Jews, and may be interpreted ſo as to ſignify "what I a little before ſaid:" or, as he begins his Chriſtian allegoriſt, "We take you at your word, "O Jews!" there might have been ſome probability in this fancy: but, the apoſtle having not given us the leaſt hint of any thing of this nature, it muſt paſs paſs for mere romance. And the other things he adds can be no better than a reflection on the authority and writings of the apoſtles; for do you not hear the law? ſaith the apoſtle: No, ſaith Mr Cl. that they do not; yea, they cannot in this caſe; "it being not at all neceſſary that the words of "ſcripture ſhould have any ſuch allegorical interpretation, as that which is ſuppoſed (here) to be-"long to them." Do you not hear the law, for it written? ſaith the apoſtle. "What then," ſaith Mr Cl. "you groſsly impoſe upon us in theſe words, "connecting them to the former by a γὰρ, for, and "ſaying gravely, It is written; when indeed you "argue not from what is written, but from ſome "whimſies of the Jews, perhaps neither true nor well "grounded." Theſe things are an allegory, ſaith the apoſtle. "So you ſay, St Paul," quoth this critic; "but if we thoroughly conſider it, we ſhall find, "that moſt that hath been ſaid by learned men "againſt this way of interpreting ſcripture in the "general, may be objected againſt this particular "allegory." Theſe are the two teſtaments, ſaith St Paul: "You are very dogmatical, St Paul," ſaith Mr Cl.; "but we of this age are not bound to ad-"mit this as a ſecret revealed from heaven to you:" and, by your good leave, "this interpretation "cannot be urged againſt thoſe who deny that the "ſcripture ought to be ſo underſtood."

To conclude, What ſhall we ſay to the unbelieving Jews, objecting thus from this interpretation? "Finding that your apoſtle hath produced againſt "us a weak argument, falſe, and ill grounded, you "pretend to help him out, by ſaying, it is a Jewiſh "midraſh, vulgarly known. This we muſt take "for an officious lie, till you can ſhew that either "we, or our fathers, or Philo the allegoriſt, who "ſpeaks of Hagar and Sarah in a quite different "way of allegory, had any ſuch ſentiments. And "if your apoſtle hath impoſed upon you here, with "ſuch ill-grounded arguments and interpretations, "without giving you the leaſt hint, that he was "arguing only from our conceſſions: how know "you that he hath not often done the like in all "his other writings?"

Ver. 23. [m] Κατὰ σάρκα γεγέννηται, was born after the fleſh.] i. e. by natural generation, and the ſtrength of the fleſh, before Abraham's body became dead, Rom. 4. 19. The other by virtue of the promiſe made to him by God, when his lody and Sarah's womb were both dead, ver. 20. and only quickened by that Spirit, which is the power of God.

Ver. 25. [n] Τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐστὶν, for this Hagar is mount Sinai in Arabia.] i. e. ſhe repreſents it, 1. In her name; for הגר, in the Arabian language, ſignifies a Rock, as Mount Sinai is called. 2. By her flight, ſhe flying twice into Arabia from her miſtreſs, Gen. 16. 7. into the wilderneſs of Shur, called by the Chaldee Chagra, there, and Gen. 25. 18. and after flying again into the ſame wilderneſs. And, 3. by her ſtation; for there dwelt the poſterity of Iſmael, called from her name Hagarens; as the oriental writers witneſs; ſee Bochart. Geogr. Sacr. l. 4. c. 11. p. 255. cap. 27. p. 312. and Grotius here.

Ibid. Τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐστὶν ἐν Ἀραβίᾳ.] Note, that it ſeems very unreaſonable to me, to expunge theſe words, Σινᾶ ὄρος ἐστὶν ἐν Ἀραβίᾳ, againſt the plain evidence of all the ancient verſions, and the concurrent ſuffrage of all the ancient interpreters, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, among the Greeks, Ambroſe and St Jerom among the Latins, who take not the leaſt notice of any various reading here; and to add δὲ for γὰρ, only to ſalve a difficulty: for, if this liberty may be allowed, we may take the ſame liberty in all other places, and ſtrike out ſuch words as ſpurious, or ſuſpected, which create the difficulty. And this is leſs to be allowed, when the words rejected, according to the deſcants of the ancients, give a plain reaſon, why Agar is made the ſymbol of the covenant given from Mount Sinai, viz. τὸ γὰρ ὄνομα τῆ Ἄγαρ, becauſe the name Agar, ſaith Bochart, is by interpretation a Rock; and, ſay the Greek interpreters, is the name given to Mount Sinai, ἐν Ἀραβῶν γλώσσῃ, in the Arabian tongue. But we need here no various lection, the interpretation which Dr Mills hath excellently given us of this place, being very clear, only by adding καθ' ὑποστάσιν, by repreſentation, after the word ἐστὶν, which is the ſenſe it uſually bears in allegorical propoſitions, and by referring συστοιχεῖ δὲ τῇ νῦν Ἰερουσαλὴμ, not to the mountain, but to Agar; for then the ſenſe of the whole runs thus. Theſe two ſons of Abraham, Iſmael, born of Agar his handmaid, and Iſaac, born of Sarah the free-woman, contain an allegory, in which the name is put for the thing ſignified or repreſented by it; for theſe two women, and their children, are by repreſentation the two covenants; the one covenant being that from Mount Sinai, gendering to bondage, ἥτις ἐστὶν, which is, by repreſentation, Agar, the bond-woman, and ſo bearing a child, which alſo was in bondage, τὸ γὰρ Ἄγαρ, for that which is ſignified by Agar, from whom Iſmael deſcended, is Mount Sinai in Arabia, whence the law was given; and this Agar anſwers to Jeruſalem, that now is, and is in bondage, with her children, to the law, as the bond-woman and her child was to Abraham; but the Jeruſalem which is above, ἐλευθέρα ἐστὶν, is by repreſentation Sarah, the free-woman, whoſe ſon was born, not according to the fleſh, but according to the promiſe; and this woman is the mother of us all; for we brethren, as Iſaac was, are the children of the promiſe, and ſo the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, ham, and heirs according to the promiſe. And this interpretation is confirmed by the concluſion of the whole allegory thus: So then, brethren, we are not the children of the bond woman, but of the free. O ſi ſic omnia!

Ver. 26. ᵒ Ἡ ἄνω Ἰερουσαλὴμ, the Jeruſalem which is above.] As the ſtate of the church, under the goſpel, is ſtyled, by the evangeliſts, the kingdom of heaven; ſo here the Jeruſalem which is from above, the goſpel-ſtate, or new kingdom, being erected by the Holy Ghoſt, ſent down from heaven, and leading us to it, is ſtyled the heavenly Jeruſalem. Note alſo, that the Jews tell us, "That the inferior "Jeruſalem is a type of that which is above (e).

Ver. 27. Note, that the Jews themſelves interpret theſe words, cited from Iſaiah 54. 1. of the times of the Meſſiah. Midraſh ſhir Haſhirim ad Cant. 1. 5.

Ver. 29. ᵖ Ἐδίωκε, perſecuted.] St Jerom here ſaith, Iſmael ſtruck Iſaac; but the text, Gen. 21. 9. ſaith only, that he mocked him. This deriſion, therefore, muſt be reputed, as a perſecuting him with the tongue.

Ver. 30. ᵠ Οὐ κληρονομήσει, ſhall not be heir.] Hence we may learn, what that perſecution mentioned, ver. 29. was, even a deriſion of Iſaac's pretenſions to be the heir of Abraham; (ſo among the Jews, Rabbi Salom, cited by Cartwright on Gen. 21. 9. (f), and St Jerom in his Queſtions and Traditions upon Geneſis): even as the carnal Jews contended with the believing Gentiles, that they muſt be the true heirs of the promiſe made to Abraham, who were his ſeed according to the fleſh.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. STand faſt therefore in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us (Chriſtians) free; and be not intangled again with the yoke of bondage (to the law, Acts 15. 10.)

2. Behold, I Paul ſay unto you (Galatians), that if ye be circumciſed, (in order to your juſtification), Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing, (chap. 2. 1. 3. 4.)

3. For ᵃ I teſtify again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor (by virtue of that circumciſion) to do the whole law.

4. Chriſt is become of none effect to you, whoſoever of you are (ſeeking to be) juſtified by the law, (and not by faith in him only); ye are fallen from (juſtification by) grace.

5. For we (Chriſtians), through the Spirit (which we have received), wait ᵇ for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith.

6. (We expect it, I ſay, by that faith which miniſters this Spirit, and not by circumciſion); for in (the œconomy of) Chriſt Jeſus, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, (as to our acceptance with God, and our reward from him), but ᶜ faith which worketh by love.

7. Ye did run well, (in the beginning of your Chriſtian race); who did hinder you, that ye ſhould not (continue to) obey the truth?

8. This perſuaſion (of the neceſſity of your being circumciſed, and obeying the law of Moſes) cometh not of him (i. e. that God) that calleth (Gr. callea) you (to the faith of Chriſt).

9. (Nor ought this circumciſion to ſeem a little thing to you, nor are theſe Judaizers to be diſregarded, becauſe they are few, for they are like to leaven; now, ye know), a little leaven leaveneth (and ſo corrupteth) the whole lump. (See the note on 1 Cor. 5. 6.)

10. (But) I have confidence in you through the Lord, that (after conſideration of what I have written) you will be no otherwiſe minded (than I exhort you to be): but he that troubleth you, ſhall bear his judgment, (τὸ κρῖμα, the ſentence or condemnation due to him on that account), whoſoever he be.

11. And (whereas ſome of the Judaizers have ſuggeſted, that) I (elſewhere preach up that circumciſion I oppoſe in you), brethren, (you may learn the falſehood of that ſuggeſtion from my ſufferings; for) ᵈ if I yet preach circumciſion, why do I yet ſuffer perſecution (from the Jews? ſince) then is the offence (they take at preaching) of the croſs ceaſed.

12. ᵉ I would they were even cut off (from the communion of the church) that (do thus) trouble (and unſettle) you.

13. For, brethren, ye have been called (by Chriſtianity) to liberty (from the Jewiſh yoke); only (be careful that ye) uſe not (your) liberty ᶠ for an occaſion to the fleſh, but by love ſerve one another.

14. For all the (moral) law (reſpecting our neighbour) is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.

15. But ᵍ if you (in contradiction to this law) bite (calumniate) and devour one another, take heed that ye be not (in the iſſue) conſumed one of another.

16. ʰ This I ſay then (to prevent theſe miſcarriages), Walk in the Spirit, (i. e. according to the motions of the Holy Spirit, Rom. 8. 1. 2. 9. 12. 13. 14.), and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh; (i. e. theſe carnal motions, ver. 13. and theſe uncharitable contentions, ver. 15.)

17. For the fleſh (indeed) luſteth againſt the Spirit, (and ſo incites you to theſe things), and (but) the Spirit (luſteth) againſt the fleſh: and theſe (two principles) are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye (who are led by the Spirit) cannot do the things that ye would (according to the fleſh; nor ye who are led by the fleſh, the things that ye would according to the Spirit).

18. But if ye are led by the (conduct of the Holy) Spirit, ye are not under the law, (and ſo ſin ſhall not have dominion over you, Rom. 6. 14.).

19. [1] Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs,

20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, ſtrife, ſedition, hereſy,

21. Envyings, murthers, drunkenneſs, revellings, and ſuch like: of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in times paſt, that they who do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith,

23. Meekneſs, temperance: againſt ſuch [a] there is no law, (that can condemn, or render them obnoxious to the wrath of God.)

24. And they that are Chriſt's have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts (of it).

25. If (then) we (pretend to) live in (and by) the Spirit, let us alſo walk in the Spirit, (according to the motions, not of the fleſh, but of the Spirit).

26. Let us not be deſirous of vain-glory, (Gr. vain glorious), [1] provoking one another, envying one another.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 3. [a] Μαρτύρομαι πάλιν, I teſtify again.] Theſe words muſt not be thought to import, that he had teſtified this before in this epiſtle, and now did it again; there being nothing ſaid before of this matter, but thus, I Paul ſay to you, that if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing; and again, I teſtify that you are debtors, by admitting this circumciſion, to yield obedience to the whole law of Moſes: for as by baptiſm we Chriſtians do oblige ourſelves to obſerve all the inſtitutions of the Chriſtian faith, ſo did the Jews, by circumciſion, oblige themſelves to yield obedience to the whole law of Moſes. This the apoſtle elſewhere intimates, by ſaying to the Jews, Circumciſion verily profiteth, if you keep the law, Rom. 2. 25. to which thou art obliged by it; and by objecting to them who were ſo zealous for the circumciſion of others, that they acted inſincerely in that zeal, becauſe they themſelves did not keep the law, Gal. 6. 13. When any one became a proſelyte of juſtice, or turned from Heatheniſm to Judaiſm, they firſt inſtructed him in the law of Moſes; and when he declared himſelf reſolved to obey it, then they circumciſed him, and ſo admitted him into the congregation, and he became as one of them. For circumciſion being the ſign by which they entered into covenant with God, when the Moſaical law became the covenant betwixt God and the ſeed of Abraham; that circumciſion by which they entered into covenant with him, muſt lay an obligation on them to obſerve the law of Moſes. And hence the Judaizing Chriſtians, who held that the law of Moſes was an everlaſting covenant, thought that the believing Gentiles were to be dealt with as their proſelytes; that is, unleſs they were circumciſed, and obſerved the law, they could not be ſaved, Acts 15. 1.

But ſtill it remains a great inquiry, Whether the words contained in the ſecond, third, and fourth verſes, are to be taken generally, ſo as to exclude all believing Jews from any benefit by Chriſt, or by the covenant of grace, who ſought for juſtification by the works of the law? or whether they are to be reſtrained only to the believing Gentiles? Now, in anſwer to this queſtion, let it be noted,

1. That it is not the being circumciſed, which is here ſaid to exclude from grace and ſalvation, but the being circumciſed to obtain juſtification and ſalvation by it; as is apparent from the words, Chriſt is become of none effect to you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law. Had the bare uſe of circumciſion rendered Chriſt unprofitable to the Jew and Gentile, or put them under the curſe of the law, St Paul would not have circumciſed Timothy, nor have owned the believing Jews as Chriſtian brethren, who were ſtill zealous for the law.

2. Obſerve that the law of Moſes being given to the Jews, and ſome of its precepts being ſtyled everlaſting covenants, and commandments, and they having all engaged to obſerve it; they might think themſelves obliged ſtill to be circumciſed, and obſerve the law, by virtue of God's precept, till it was more ſolemnly by God declared to be abrogated; though they expected not to be juſtified by it: for ſo we find it was with the believing Jews. They all continued zealous of the law, Acts 21. 20. and thought all Jews obliged to obſerve it, ver. 24.; but then they thought to be ſaved, not by the law, but by

by the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 15. 11. as the believing Gentiles were; and they believed in Chriſt, that they might be juſtified by faith in Chriſt, and not by the works of the law, Gal. 2. 16. But now the Gentiles being not under the obligation of the law of Moſes, they having firſt believed in Chriſt, and received, upon that faith, the Holy Ghoſt, they could not afterwards ſubmit to the obſervance of the law; but, by ſo doing, they muſt teſtify they thought not faith in Chriſt ſufficient to juſtification, or acceptance with God, without the obſervation of the law; and therefore muſt ſubmit to it for theſe ends, and ſo muſt in effect deny that faith in Chriſt would juſtify them; or that the giving of the Holy Ghoſt was a ſufficient evidence of their acceptance with God; which was a tempting or diſtruſting of God, after ſo full a demonſtration of his grace and favour to them, Acts 15. 8. 9. 10.

I therefore think theſe words concern as well thoſe Jews as Gentiles who ſought for juſtification ſtill, not by their faith in Chriſt, but through the works of the law, Rom. 9. 31. 32. and held circumciſion neceſſary to all; not by way of precept only, but as a neceſſary means of ſalvation; for by theſe things, ſaith the apoſtle, they in effect declared, that Chriſt was dead in vain, and fruſtrated the grace of Chriſt, Gal. 2. 21. and ſo fell from it. Nor is it eaſy to perceive how they ſhould have juſtification and ſalvation from him, from whom, after the revelation of him, they did not expect it; or have faith in him to juſtification, by whom they thought not that they ſhould be juſtified.

Ver. 5. ᵇ Ἐλπίδα δικαιοσύνης, hope of righteouſneſs,] or juſtification, i. e. the hope of glory, the conſequent of our juſtification; for being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. It is through the Spirit that we wait for, and expect this glory; for he is the pledge and earneſt of it; by him we are ſealed up to the day of redemption, and wrought up to the expectation of it; and therefore are not aſhamed of our hope, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad into our hearts, by the Spirit he hath given us, Rom. 5. 1. 2. Eph. 1. 14. 2 Cor. 1. 22. Eph. 4. 33. 2 Cor. 5. 5. Rom. 5. 5. And thus do we who have the firſt fruits of the Spirit, wait for the redemption of our bodies, and the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, Rom. 8. 21. 23.

Ver. 6. ᶜ Πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη, faith working by love.] There be great diſputes about, and divers interpretations of theſe words, which I think may be rendered, faith working, or made active by love, or excited to perform our duty to God, and to our neighbour, for his ſake, by that love which we bear to him; or from conſiderations of his great love to us, according to thoſe words of the apoſtle, The love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, 2 Cor. 5. 14. And here, The life I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me, Gal. 2. 20.

Ver. 8. This perſuaſion cometh not of him that calleth you.] Here Jerom's note runs thus: "Perſuaſio noſtra non eſt ex eo qui vocavit nos, ſed "ex nobis qui conſentimus, vel non conſentimus "vocanti; aliud quippe Dei opus, aliud hominum: "Dei opus eſt vocare, hominum credere, vel non "credere; et ſicubi aliter de ſcripturis liberum ho- "minis affirmatur arbitrium, ut ibi ſi volueritis, et "ſi audieritis me, Exod. 19. 2. et iterum, Et nunc, "Iſrael, quid petit a te Dominus Deus tuus? Deut. "10.; et ex hoc loco vel maxime comprobatur.

"Accuſat enim, quare non obediverint veritati, "oſtendens in eorum arbitrio poſitum vel obedire "vel non obedire." And in this he ſpeaks the ſenſe of all the ancients till St Auſtin's time.

Ver. 9. A little leaven, &c.] That is, ſaith Chryſoſtom, circumciſion, though it be but one command, brings us under an obligation to obey the whole Jewiſh law, as the apoſtle teacheth, ver. 3.

Ver. 11. ᵈ Εἰ περιτομὴν ἔτι κηρύσσω, If I yet preach circumciſion.] All the Greek interpreters ſay, this verſe returns an anſwer to the ſuggeſtions of the patrons of the law, viz. that he was an hypocrite, in ſome places preaching up circumciſion, in others not (g). See the note on chap. 3. 4.

Ver. 12. ᵉ Ὄφελον καὶ ἀποκόψονται, I wiſh they were even cut off.] The interpretation of all the Greek fathers, and of St Ambroſe, Auſtin, and Jerom on this place, is this, Utinam non ſolum circumcidantur, ſed etiam abſcindantur, I wiſh not only they were circumciſed, but even made like the prieſts of the mother of the gods, worſhipped formerly by you of Galatia, who had that member cut off. But if this interpretation ſeem too light to be affixed to the words of the apoſtle; I rather chuſe to interpret them as a wiſh, that they were cut off from the communion of the church, becauſe this ſeems agreeable to a like paſſage, 1 Cor. 5. 6. 7. where having ſaid, as here, A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, he adds, Purge out therefore the old leaven, i. e. put away from yourſelves the wicked perſon, which he himſelf here would not do alone; becauſe he ſaw his authority among them was impaired, and he feared this rather might exaſperate, than cure their diſtemper; ſee note on 2 Cor. 10. 16. That ὄφελον is ſometimes joined with an aoriſt, and ſometimes with an imperfect of the indicative mood, we learn from theſe examples, ὄφελον ἐν ᾅδῃ με ἐφύλαξας, I wiſh thou wouldſt hide me in the grave, Job 14. 13.; ὄφελον γὲ ἐβασιλεύσατε, I wiſh you did reign, 1 Cor. 4. 8.

Ver. 13. Εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκὶ, for an occaſion to the fleſh.] This is done, 1. By a carnal uſe of it, to gratify the motions of the fleſh, as they who turned the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs; and thought they might ſin more freely, becauſe they were not under the law, but under grace, Rom. 6. 1. 15. Or, 2. By an uncharitable uſe of it, to the ſcandal of their weak brethren; or the contempt of thoſe who did not fully underſtand their liberty; or by contending with, or biting one another, ver. 16.; which was an evidence that they were carnal, 1 Cor. 3. 3. Or, laſtly, By refuſing obedience to their maſters, (ſee note on 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2.), and ſubjection to ſuperiors, (ſee note on 1 Pet. 2. 16.); the remedy of which diſtempers is true Chriſtian love; for he that loves ſincerely, will not refuſe to ſerve him whom he loves (b).

Ver. 14. The whole law is fulfilled in this, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.] So that if thou be ſtill deſirous to fulfil the law, thou mayſt do it by obſerving this comprehenſive law of love. So Oecumenius.

Ver. 15. Εἰ δὲ ἀλλήλους δάκνετε, if ye bite, &c.] Theodoret here notes, that the contentions and quarrels which aroſe betwixt them that ſtood firm, and thoſe who warped to the legal obſervances, gave occaſion to theſe words. And as I have obſerved, that the zeal of the Jews would not ſuffer an uncircumciſed perſon to live among them; ſo might it be alſo with theſe zealous Judaizers.

Ver. 16. 17. [b] Note, that I have interpreted theſe verſes, as moſt commentators do; but I conceive, they may be beſt interpreted from Rom. 7. thus:

Ver. 16. But this I ſay, (to take you off from this bondage to the law), Walk in the Spirit, (in newneſs of the Spirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter, Rom. 7. 6.), and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſts of the fleſh, (i. e. the motions of the fleſh ſhall not have dominion over you, and bring you captive to the law of ſin, as it doth in them; becauſe ye are not under the law, but under grace, Rom. 6. 14.)

Ver. 17. For (in them) the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, (or the inward man not renewed, ver. 23. 25.), and the Spirit luſteth againſt the fleſh (ver. 19. to 22.): and theſe two are contrary; ſo that ye (who are under the law, and walk not in newneſs of the Spirit) cannot do the things that ye would; (for the good that ye would, ye do not, ver. 19.).

Ver. 19. [i] Τὰ ἔργα τῆς σαρκὸς, the works of the fleſh.] That ſome of theſe may very properly be called works of the fleſh, cannot be doubted; but ſeeing ſome of theſe ſins ſeem chiefly to conſiſt in errors of the mind, as hereſy and idolatry, and others of them to derive from evil diſpoſitions of the ſpirit, as envy, malice, witchcraft, it ſeems not eaſy to perceive with what propriety they are here called works of the fleſh. But,

1. That ſtrife, contentions, bitter zeal, are indeed the works of the fleſh, we may diſcern from a reflection on the uſual objects of them; for we do not uſe to contend with, or envy men on the account of things truly ſpiritual, becauſe they bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, or have the pleaſures of an upright conſcience; but our contentions generally are about worldly carnal things, the pleaſures, honours, or enjoyments of the preſent world; for whence comes zeal and envy? ſaith St James, come they not from your luſts which war in your members? James 4. 1. 2.

Moreover, murder and witchcrafts, or φαρμακίαι, as that word imports, thoſe poiſonous ingredients which are uſed to deſtroy human life, are the fruits of this hatred, envy, malice, and ſo muſt have their riſe from the ſame ſenſual luſts.

The idolatry of the Heathens, not only as it was attended with revellings and uncleanneſs, but as it repreſented God to corporeal eyes in images, and brought him down unto the ſenſes, may well be deemed a ſenſual crime.

And, laſtly, hereſy, according to the ſcripture-notion, being not a pure miſtake of judgment, but an eſpouſing a falſe doctrine out of diſguſt, pride, or envy, or from worldly principles, or to avoid perſecution or trouble in the fleſh, may well be ranked among carnal luſts. Hence are ſuch men ſaid, not to ſerve God, but their own belly, Rom. 16. 17. 18.; to teach what they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake, Tit. 1. 11.; to account gain for godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 5. and through covetouſneſs with feigned words to make merchandiſe of others, 2 Pet. 2. 3. And therefore the apoſtle doth not adviſe us to convince, but only to admoniſh and reject the heretic, as knowing that he ſins, being convinced of his own conſcience. See note on Tit. 3. 10.

Ver. 23. [k] Οὐκ ἔστι νόμος, there is no law.] The expoſition of thoſe who ſay, Such perſons had no law, is not to be approved, becauſe it ſuits not with the word κατὰ τούτων, againſt ſuch there is no law. Moreover, the law of liberty they are under was given to oblige them to the practice of thoſe virtues, and ſo was needful to that end.

Ver. 26. [l] Ἀλλήλους προκαλούμενοι, provoking one another, &c.] Theodoret here obſerves, that they who ſtood firm in the faith, and ſo enjoyed their ſpiritual gifts,

gifts, might be apt to contemn, and glory over the weak on that account, and others might envy their gifts: and this ſhews the ſeaſonableneſs of this exhortation, and connects theſe words with the beginning of the following chapter, where the apoſtle condemns them who had high thoughts of themſelves, and upon that account were apt to overlook and to neglect their fallen brother.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. BRethren, if any man be overtaken with [a] a fault, [b] you that are ſpiritual, (endowed with thoſe ſpiritual gifts which enable you for the public miniſtrations in the church), reſtore ſuch a one [c] in the ſpirit of meekneſs, (to a right underſtanding of his duty, and a ſuitable practice); conſidering thyſelf, [d] leſt thou alſo be tempted, (and ſo fall as he did.)

2. Bear ye one another's burdens, (infirmities in judgment or in manners), and ſo fulfil the law of Chriſt, (which requires you by love to ſerve one another, chap. 5. 13.)

3. [e] For if a man think himſelf to be ſomething, when (wanting charity, 1 Cor. 13. 2. 3.) he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf.

4. But (to avoid this deceit) [f] let every man prove his own work, and then ſhall he have rejoicing in himſelf alone, and not (only) in (comparing himſelf with) another.

5. For every man ſhall bear [g] his own burden.

(The apoſtle having thus inſtructed their teachers, or ſpiritual men, not to deſpiſe or undervalue their Chriſtian brethren; proceeds now to inſtruct theſe brethren how to behave themſelves towards their teachers, ſaying),

6. Let him that is taught in the word, [h] communicate to him that teacheth, in all good things (he ſtands in need of, as God's bleſſing may enable him.)

7. Be not deceived (by your falſe teachers); God is not mocked: for whatſoever a man ſoweth, (of) that (kind) ſhall he alſo reap.

8. For he that ſoweth to the fleſh, (by doing the works of the fleſh, chap. 5. 20. 21.), ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, (by bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit, mentioned ver. 22. 23.), ſhall of the Spirit (raiſing him up to it, Rom. 8. 11.) reap life everlaſting.

9. And (but then) let us not be weary of well-doing, (or of exerciſing theſe fruits of the Spirit); for [i] in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap (the rewards of them), if we faint not, (but hold out unto the end.)

10. As we have therefore opportunity, (ability), let us do good (and charitable offices) to all men, eſpecially to them who are of the houſehold of faith.

11. [k] Ye ſee how large a letter I have written unto you with my own hand.

12. As many as deſire to make a fair ſhew in (things concerning) the fleſh, (endeavouring to gratify men and avoid their diſpleaſure), they (would) conſtrain you to be circumciſed; only leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution (from their hands) [l] for the croſs of Chriſt.

13. (I ſay, it is upon this account, and not out of regard to the law, that they ſo zealouſly plead for circumciſion, and the obſervation of it); [m] for neither do they themſelves who are circumciſed, keep the law; but deſire to have you circumciſed, [n] that they may glory in your fleſh.

14. But (whatſoever they may glory in) God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the (knowledge and in the profeſſion of the) croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by whom the world is crucified to me, and I unto the world; (chap. 2. 20. as being dead to ſin, Rom. 6. 3. 4.; to the fleſh, Gal. 5. 24.; to the law by the body of Chriſt, and ſeparated from the world to live unto God.)

15. For in (the œconomy of) Chriſt Jeſus, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature; (one dead to ſin, the fleſh, and the world, but living unto God.)

16. And as many as walk according to this rule, (being chiefly concerned that the new creature may be formed in them), peace (ſhall) be upon them, and mercy, and (or, that is) upon the Iſrael (not of the fleſh, but) of God.

17. From henceforth [o] let no man trouble me (with their contentions againſt my office, becauſe I renounce circumciſion, and my legal righteouſneſs); for I bear in my body the marks of (a ſervant, not of the law, but of) the Lord Jeſus; (theſe wounds and ſtripes which teſtify me to be a faithful ſervant of that Jeſus, for whoſe ſake I ſuffer them.)

18. Brethren, the grace (favour and good-will) of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be [p] with your ſpirit. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Verſe 1. [a] Προλημφθῃ, with a fault.] They ſeem not well to have conſidered the uſe of this word in ſcripture, who ſay it is lapſus hominis ex improviſo impingentis, a fault committed unawares, or for want of circumſpection; ſince the apoſtle applies it to all the ſins of the Heathen world, ſtyling them, them, νεκροὶ ἐν τοῖς παραπτώμασι, dead in treſpaſſes, Eph. 2. 1. 5. Col. 2. 13. and to all the ſins forgiven us through faith in Chriſt, Rom. 4. 25. and 5. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 19. Eph. 1. 7. The word προλήφθῃ ſeems rather to import ſuch a ſurpriſe.

Ibid. [b] Ὑμεῖς οἱ πνευματικοὶ, you that are ſpiritual.] I have noted on 1 Cor. 14. 32. that in the beginnings of Chriſtianity, when churches were firſt converted, they had for a time no ſettled church-governors, but all their church-offices were performed by men who had ſpiritual gifts, and by them are ſaid to propheſy in the church, to their edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 2. So I conceive it was when St Paul writ to the Galatians: for here is no direction of this epiſtle to any ſtated church-governors; no ſalutation of any in the cloſe; no charge againſt any for ſuffering theſe great miſcarriages in the church; no exhortation to them to take heed of their miniſtry, and to oppoſe themſelves to theſe deceivers. And then the ſpiritual men here mentioned muſt be the prophets, who then performed all ſpiritual offices among them.

Ibid. [c] Ἐν πνεύματι πραΰτητος, in the ſpirit of meekneſs,] 2 Tim. 2. 24. that ſo they may not provoke them to fly off to Judaiſm, chap. 5. 26. whom they ſhould reſtore to a right underſtanding of their Chriſtian liberty, and to a freedom from that yoke of bondage.

Ibid. [d] Μὴ καὶ σὺ πειρασθῇς, leſt thou alſo be tempted,] i. e. leſt thou fall by temptation: for to ſtand firm againſt temptation when it aſſaults us, is not a proper conſideration to engage us to pity thoſe that fall by it. This is the import of the word, when we are taught to pray, that we enter not into temptation, Matth. 6. 13.; when the apoſtle bids the married perſons live together, that Satan tempt them not for their incontinence, 1 Cor. 7. 5.; when he is ſolicitous for the Theſſalonians, leſt the tempter ſhould have tempted them, and rendered his labours vain, 1 Theſſ. 3. 3.; and when St James ſaith, Every man is tempted, when he is led away by his own luſts, chap. 1. 14.

Ver. 3. [e] Εἰ γὰρ δοκεῖ τις εἶναί τι, μηδὲν ὤν, if a man thinks himſelf ſomething, being nothing,] of himſelf, but by the grace of God being what he is, 1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Cor. 12. 11.: ſo ſome truly, but not ſo pertinently to the ſcope of the text. Say others, Being nothing in the ſight of God; who regards him not for his knowledge, but his charity, 1 Cor. 13. 2. 3. i. e. If upon this account he overlooks and deſpiſeth his weak offending brother, not ſympathiſing with him, ver. 2. or endeavouring to reſtore him, ver. 1. but rather glorying in this, that he is a ſtrong Chriſtian in compariſon of others; he is then nothing in the ſight of God.

Ver. 4. [f] Δοκιμαζέτω ἕκαστος, let every man prove;] i. e. let him approve his actions to God and his own conſcience, and then he may take comfort ſimply in himſelf, that he is a good man, and not in this only that he is better than others. So the word ſignifies, Rom. 1. 28. οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν, they approved not of God, Rom. 2. 18. δοκιμάζεις, thou approveſt the things which are moſt excellent, Rom. 12. 2.; Be transformed by the renewing of your mind, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, that you may approve the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God; and chap. 14. 22. Happy is the man who doth not condemn, or act againſt his conſcience, ἐν ᾧ δοκιμάζει, in that which by his actions he approves of. See Eph. 5. 10. Phil. 1. 10. 1 Theſſ. 2. 4. 1 Tim. 3. 10. and note on 1 Cor. 11. 28.

Ver. 5. [g] Τὸ ἴδιον φορτίον, his own burden;] i. e. This every man is concerned to do, viz. to make his own work good and approved in the ſight of God; for another man's greater ſins will not excuſe thee from bearing the burden of thy own.

Ver. 6. [h] Κοινωνείτω, let him communicate.] This he elſewhere ſtyles communication, εἰς λόγον δόσεως, καὶ λήψεως, by giving their good things, and receiving his good inſtructions, Philip. 4. 15.; by ſowing ſpirituals, and reaping of them carnal things, 1 Cor. 9. 11. And if this was their duty towards ſuch teachers as had no need of books or ſtudy to fit themſelves for the work, they being enabled for it by immediate aſſiſtance and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt; how much more towards them who ſpend much time and money to fit themſelves for that work, and muſt be ſtill employed in ſtudying and reading, to make themſelves ſuch workmen as need not to be aſhamed?

The following words, ver. 7. are by moſt interpreters referred to the ſame ſubject thus, Make no vain excuſes in this caſe, God will not be mocked with falſe pretences. But I rather think the apoſtle proceeds to a new general exhortation againſt the carnal doctrines of their deceivers, the hidden things of diſhoneſty, which he charges them with, 2 Cor. 4. 2. and 7. 1. 2. and 12. 21. whoſe exhortation was attended with uncleanneſs, 1 Theſſ. 2. 2.; ſee note on 2 Cor. 4. 2.; againſt which doctrines this is his uſual preface, Let no man deceive you with vain words, Eph. 5. 6. 1 Cor. 6. 9. James 1. 16.

Ver. 9. [i] Καιρῷ ἰδίῳ, in due ſeaſon;] i. e. in the proper time of recompenſe; for the encouragement Chriſt gives unto the works of charity is this, Thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt, Luke 14. 14.

Ver. 10. Let us do good to all men.] By this precept, ſaith Chryſoſtom, he extends the love of the Chriſtian beyond that of the Jews, which was confined πρὸς τοὺς ὁμοφύλους, to men of their own nation and religion.

Ver. 11. [k] Ἴδετε πηλίκοις ὑμῖν γράμμασιν ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρί, See how large a letter I have written to you with with my own hand.] It is true that γράμματα ſometimes ſignifies epiſtles, as when the Jews ſay to Paul, Ἡμεῖς οὔτε γράμματα περὶ σοῦ ἐδεξάμεθα, we have received no letters concerning thee, Acts 28. 21.; but then it is alſo true, that St Paul elſewhere uſes ſeventeen times the word ἐπιστολαὶ, but never the word γράμματα, when he ſpeaks of his epiſtles. Though therefore it be true that St Paul wrote his other epiſtles by an amanuenſis, Rom. 16. 22. adding only in the cloſe of them the ſalutation with his own hand, as an indication that he indited the epiſtles; ſee note on 2 Theſſ. 3. 17. whereas this whole epiſtle was written with his own hand for their greater aſſurance, and as a teſtimony of his great affection and concernment for them; yet πηλίκα γράμματα, what kind of letters, may not refer to that, but, as the Greek ſcholiaſt conceives, to the largeneſs or inelegancy of the characters in which it was written, this unaccurateneſs in writing or forming the Greek characters being the moſt probable account, why all his other epiſtles were written by another hand.

Ver. 12. [l] Τῷ σταυρῷ, &c. for the croſs of Chriſt.] I have ſhewed, note on chap. 5. 11. that this was the great ſtumbling-block of the Jews, partly becauſe their law pronounced a curſe on thoſe that hanged on a tree; ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 23.; partly becauſe the croſs, and ſufferings of Chriſt on it, was the foundation of the doctrine of juſtification by faith in his blood, of the ceſſation of the ceremonial law, and the removal of the partition-wall betwixt the Jew and Gentile, Col. 2. 14. 16. on which account chiefly they were ſcandalized at it, and perſecuted thoſe who thought that this was the reſult of our Lord's death and ſufferings. St Jerom here ſaith, that Octavianus Auguſtus, Tiberius, and Caius Cæſar had made laws, that the Jews diſperſed through the whole Roman empire ſhould live according to their own laws and ceremonies; whoſoever therefore was circumciſed, though he believed in Chriſt, was by the Gentiles deemed a Jew; but they who had not this token of a Jew, viz. the circumciſion of the fleſh, were perſecuted both by Jews and Gentiles; "Has igitur perſecutiones hi, qui Galatas depravaverant, declinare cupientes, circumciſionem pro defenſione diſcipulis perſuadebant;" and hence they who perverted the Galatians, perſuaded them to be circumciſed, that they might avoid perſecution.

Ver. 13. [m] Οὐδὲ γὰρ νόμον φυλάσσουσιν, for neither do they keep the law.] This was unqueſtionably true of theſe Judaizing Chriſtians; for how, ſaith Theodoret, could they in Galatia regularly obſerve the Jewiſh feaſts, or offer ſacrifice, or cleanſe themſelves from their defilements, by touching any thing that was unclean?

Ibid. [n] Ἵνα ἐν τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ σαρκὶ καυχήσωνται, that they might glory in your fleſh;] i. e. might boaſt of this among the Jews, that they promoted circumciſion even among the Gentiles, and by that pretence might avoid perſecution from them.

Ver. 15. Ἐν γὰρ Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ οὔτε περιτομή τι ἰσχύει.] Dr Mills omits the words ſcored, and reads ἡ περιτομή τι ἐστιν· but the words as they are in the text, are not only owned by the Vulgar, Arabic, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, but are exactly the ſame in chap. 5. 6. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 17. [o] Let no man trouble me, ἐγὼ γὰρ τὰ στίγματα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus;] i. e. Let no man henceforth queſtion whether I truly ſtyle myſelf, Paul the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, or fight the good fight of faith, as a good ſoldier under this Captain of ſalvation; ſeeing whereas ſervants and ſoldiers have only one στίγμα, as a mark of their relation to their maſters and generals, in their hands or wriſts, I bear many marks of theſe relations to the Lord Jeſus throughout my whole body, in thoſe many wounds and ſtripes I have received for his ſake.

Ver. 18. [p] Μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν, with your ſpirit;] that is, with you; for in other epiſtles it is μεθ' ὑμῶν, with you, 1 Cor. 16. 23. Col. 4. 18. 1 Theſſ. 5. 28.; or μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν, with you all, Rom. 16. 24. 2 Cor. 13. 13. Philip. 4. 23. 2 Theſſ. 3. 18. Tit. 3. 15. Heb. 13. 25.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to the EPHESIANS.

§ 1. THAT this epistle to the Ephesians was indeed written by St Paul, and directed to them, and not to any other church, we cannot doubt, if we believe either the epistle, or St Paul himself. For,

1. It begins thus, Paul an apostle (writeth these things) to the saints that are at Ephesus. And in this reading all the versions and all the manuscripts agree.

2. In the close of this epistle he speaks thus to them, That you may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus a beloved brother, and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things, whom I have sent unto you, chap. 6. 21. 22. And in the second epistle to Timothy, he saith, Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus, 2 Tim. 4. 12.

Moreover, all antiquity agrees in this, that this epistle was written by St Paul. Ignatius (a) is express for it in his epistle to the Ephesians. Irenæus, Clemens of Alexandria (b), Tertullian (c), and Origen (d), in divers places of their works. We learn indeed from the argument of this epistle in Oecumenius, and more fully from Theodoret (e), that some of the ancients thought this epistle was writ by St Paul before he had seen the Ephesians, or at least before his three years converse with them; but not any of the ancients, excepting Marcion, ever thought that this epistle was not written among other churches to that of Ephesus, but of Laodicea; and therefore Tertullian (f) takes notice of it as a thing proper to those heretics, though indeed both might be true. For this epistle being writ, not only to the saints at Ephesus, but also to the faithfull in Christ Jesus, might be writ also to the Colossians, the Laodiceans, and others, who had not seen his face, Col. 2. 1. See note on Col. 4. 16. And this observation gives a sufficient answer to the arguments from chap. 1. 15. chap. 3. 2. from which some have conjectured, that this epistle could not be writ to them after St Paul had staid three years in Asia, though they more fully are considered in their respective places.

§ 2. That this epistle was written when St Paul was prisoner at Rome, is evident from chap. 3. 1. where he is styled, Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ; and chap. 4. 1. a prisoner in the Lord. Now, it must be at soonest in the third year of Nero that he was sent prisoner to Rome; for Felix was made procurator of Judea by Nero in his first year, saith (g) Jo-

Josephus;

Ephus; and after two years he left Paul priſoner at Cæſarea, Acts 24. 27. Portius Feſtus ſucceeds him, and after ſome time hears him twice at Cæſarea, and ſends him afterwards to Rome; which interval, if we conſider how long it was ere he reached Rome, may very well be ſuppoſed to take up another year. He therefore could not write this epiſtle till the fourth or fifth of Nero. He did not write it, ſaith Biſhop Pearſon, till the eighth of Nero, A. D. 62.

§ 3. That this epiſtle was writ againſt Simon Magus and his followers, as Eſthius hints, none of the ancients ſay. More probable is the conjecture of Grotius, that the apoſtle rather deſigned by it to arm them againſt the doctrines of the philoſophers, and of thoſe Jews who endeavoured to bring them to the obſervation of their rites; for that there were then many Jews at Epheſus, and throughout Aſia, we learn both from the Acts of the apoſtles, which inform us, that Paul being at Epheſus, entered into a ſynagogue of the Jews, Acts 18. 19. and 19. 8. 9. 10. and diſcourſed with them, till by their perverſeneſs he was forced to ſeparate from them; and that, by his preaching, all that were in Aſia heard the word of the Lord, both Jews and Greeks; as alſo from Philo (b), who informs us, that the Jews inhabited the moſt and beſt cities in the provinces and iſlands both of Europe and Aſia. And that theſe Jews were diſturbers of the churches of Aſia, and of Epheſus in particular, and ſticklers to introduce a mixture of Judaiſm with Chriſtianity, we learn from both the epiſtles to St Timothy. Againſt their doctrine of the neceſſity of the obſervance of the law of Moſes to juſtification and ſalvation, he ſeemeth to oppoſe theſe words, By grace are ye ſaved, not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt, chap. 2. 8. 9. which manifeſtly anſwer to his diſcourſe upon that ſubject, Rom. 3. where he aſſerts, that we are juſtified freely by his grace, ver. 24. and not by the works of the law, ver. 20. and that all boaſting is excluded, not by the law of works, but of faith (i). Againſt that other notion of theirs depending on the former, that the Gentiles ſhould be admitted into the church only as proſelytes, and not aſſumed to the ſame privileges with the Jews, he declares himſelf more largely, chap. 2. from ver. 12. to ver. 20. chap. 3. 6.—10.

PARAPHRASE

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

* EPISTLE to the EPHESIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. PAUL an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, (calling me to that office), [a] to the saints that are at Ephesus, [b] and to the faithful in Christ Jesus (throughout all Asia:)

2. [c] Grace be (given) to you, and peace from God our Father, and (from) the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. Blessed be (that) God, and (who is) the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with [d] all spiritual blessings in heavenly places (or things) in (and through) Christ:

4. According as he hath [e] chosen us (Gentiles, chap. 3. 6.) in him before the foundation of the world, (chap. 2. designing) that we (thus chosen) should be holy, and without blame before him in love, (by virtue of our faith in Christ, and love to one another, chap. 3. 17. Gal. 5. 6.):

5. Having predestinated (or foreappointed) us to the [f] adoption of children by (through) Jesus Christ unto himself, (Gr. εἰς ὑοθεσίαν εἰς αὐτὸν, unto the adoption of sons to him through Christ Jesus, we being all the sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 26. John 1. 12.), according to the good pleasure of his will;

6. (And this he hath done) to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted (or, with which he hath favoured us, ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς) in (and through) the beloved:

7. In whom we have [g] redemption (from the curse of the law, Gal. 3. 13. and from the condemnation due to us for sin, Rom. 3. 24. 25.) through his blood, (the blood of atonement shed for) the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace.

8. Wherein (or, in which dispensation) he hath abounded to us in [h] all wisdom and prudence,

9. Having made known to us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself, (viz. his secret purpose to chuse us Gentiles to be fellow-heirs of the same body, chap. 3. 6.):

10. That (so) in the dispensation (which was to be accomplished by sending of Christ) in the fulness of time, he might [i] gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are in earth, even in him:

11. In whom also we (believing Jews) have [k] obtained an inheritance, (or are become his portion), being predestinated (or foreordained to it) according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

12. That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ, (the glorious gifts he hath beſtowed upon us, and the eminent graces he hath wrought in us, tending highly to the glory of his grace, ver. 6. and Philip. 1. 11.)

13. In whom ye alſo (truſted) after that ye heard (or, hearing) the word of truth, the goſpel of your ſalvation; in whom alſo, after that ye believed, (or believing), ye were ſealed with that Holy Spirit of promiſe, (i. e. the Spirit promiſed to the ſons of God; for becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, Gal. 4. 6.),

14. Who is the earneſt of our inheritance, until the [f] redemption of the purchaſed poſſeſſion, (for the procuring this ſalutary redemption), to the praiſe of his glory.

15. Wherefore I alſo, [g] after I heard (Gr. having heard) of your (ſtedfaſt) faith in the Lord Jeſus, and (your increaſing) love to all the ſaints, (i. e. that the faith and love wrought in you continue ſtedfaſt, and abound),

16. Ceaſe not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers;

17. (Praying,) that the God of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Father of glory, may give unto you (in greater meaſure) [h] the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, in the knowledge (or to the farther acknowledgment) of him:

18. The eyes of your underſtanding being enlightened, (or that he would give you underſtandings enlightened), that ye might know what (i. e. how glorious) is the hope of his calling, (i. e. to which he hath called you), and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the ſaints, (i. e. how great is the inheritance he hath deſigned for the ſaints),

19. And what is the [i] exceeding greatneſs of his power (which he will exert) towards us who believe, (by raiſing us up to the enjoyment of this inheritance), according to the working of his mighty power;

20. Which (power) he (hath already) wrought in Chriſt (our head), when he raiſed (Gr. raiſing) him from the dead, and ſet him (whom he hath ſet) at his own right hand in heavenly places,

21. Far above all principalities, and powers, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, [k] not only in this world, but alſo in that which is to come:

22. And (he) hath put all things under his feet, and hath given him to be the head over all things to (the benefit of) the church,

23. Which is his body, (and ſo) the fulneſs of him (even that Jeſus) who filleth [l] all in all.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Τοῖς ἁγίοις, to the ſaints.] See the note on 1 Cor. 1. 1.

Ibid. [b] Καὶ, and, that is.] See note on Col. 1. 3.

Ibid. Καὶ πιστοῖς, and (that is) to the faithful.] So οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς πιστοὶ, are the believers of the circumciſion, Acts 10. 45. τίς μέρις πιστῷ μετ' ἀπίστου; what portion hath a believer with an infidel? 2 Cor. 6. 15.; ſo Acts 16. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 3. 10. 12.; 5. 16.; 6. 2.; Tit. 1. 6. yet it is very probable, as Mr L. here ſuggeſts, that here, and Col. 1. 2. theſe words may particularly relate to ſuch Chriſtians as kept the doctrine of Chriſt from the corrupt mixtures of thoſe Judaizers, who went about καπηλεύοντες, 2 Cor. 2. 17. τὸν δολοῦντες τὸν λόγον, corrupting, and handling the word of God deceitfully.

Ver. 2. [c] Χάρις, grace.] This grace is given by the communication of the Holy Ghoſt from the Father and the Son to the church, John 14. 23. which is the reaſon that the Holy Ghoſt is not mentioned in theſe ſalutations.

Ver. 3. [d] Ἐν πάσῃ εὐλογίᾳ πνευματικῇ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις.] Theſe words ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly places, may probably refer to the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt then conferred upon the church, and ſtyled by the prophet, εὐλογίαι Θεοῦ, the bleſſings of God: Fear not Jacob my ſervant, and Iſrael whom I have choſen, for I will put my Spirit on thy ſeed, καὶ τὰς εὐλογίας μου, and my bleſſings on thy children, Iſ. 44. 2. 3. where the word in the Hebrew and Chaldee is ברכתי, and my benediction; and ſo well correſpondeth with the words of the apoſtle, God hath bleſſed us with all ſpiritual bleſſings. The ſame apoſtle ſtyles theſe gifts εὐλογία τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, the bleſſing of the goſpel; for having ſaid to the Romans, I long to ſee you, that I may impart unto you χάρισμα τι πνευματικὸν, ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end you may be eſtabliſhed, chap. 1. 11. he adds, When I come ſee you, I ſhall come in the fulneſs τῆς εὐλογίας, of the bleſſing of the goſpel, chap. 15. 29. And the promiſe of the Spirit is ſtyled εὐλογία τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ, the bleſſing of that Abraham in whom all the families of the earth were to be bleſſed, in theſe words, That the bleſſing of Abraham might come upon the Gentiles through Jeſus Chriſt, that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith, Gal. 3. 14. Theſe gifts are alſo called ἐπουράνια, heavenly things; thus when our Saviour had diſcourſed of the Spirit to be received in baptiſm, he ſaith, he had told them τὰ ἐπουράνια, heavenly things, John 3. 12.; and they who were made partakers of theſe gifts, were ſaid to have taſted τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, of the heavenly gift, Heb. 6. 4. Or, 2. God's bleſſing us ἐν ἐπουρανίοις, with heavenly things in Chriſt Jeſus, may ſignify his exalting us to a bleſſed ſtate of immortality in the heavens through him; his giving us an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, 2 Cor. 5. 1. 2. and clothing us with an houſe from heaven; his giving us an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, reſerved in the heavens for us; on the account of which incorruptible and immortal bodies we are ſtyled ἐπουράνιοι, heavenly, as Chriſt is, 1 Cor. 15. 48.; and the apoſtle ſaith, That as we have born the image of the earthly Adam by our mortal bodies, ſo by our bodies made immortal, we ſhall bear εἰκόνα τῦ ἐπουρανίυ, the image of the heavenly Adam, ver. 49.; and hence we are ſaid to be partakers κλήσεως ἐπουρανίυ, of our heavenly calling. In a word, Chriſt having delivered us from that death and mortality, which came upon us by the ſin of Adam, hath bleſſed us with this heavenly bleſſing, having made us ſit together with him in heavenly places, Eph. 2. 6. And this is the hope of our calling, ver. 18. of this chapter.

Ver. 4. [a] Ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς. It was the opinion of the Jews, that God in framing the world had a particular regard for them, and that the world was made for their ſakes, Eſd. 2. 55. 59. and that the Meſſiah being created before the world, God entered into covenant with him, that he ſhould redeem the world, and them eſpecially. "The holy bleſſed God, ſay "they, began to covenant with the Meſſiah when "he created him, and ſaid unto him, The ſins of "thoſe who are laid up in ſecret with thee will "make thee to come under an iron yoke, and make "thee like to this young heifer, whoſe eyes are "dim, and fill thy ſpirit with anguiſh; and becauſe "of their iniquity thy tongue ſhall cleave to the "roof of thy mouth: wilt thou undergo their con"dition for them? The Meſſiah ſaid, I undertake it "with joy and exultation of heart, on this condi"tion, that not one of Iſrael may periſh; and that "not only they may be ſaved who live in my days, "but alſo they who are dead from the days of the "firſt man to this very day (a)." And again, "When "God created the world, he held forth his hand un"der the throne of glory, and created the ſoul of "the Meſſiah and his company, and ſaid to him, "Wilt thou heal and redeem my ſons after ſix "thouſand years? He anſwered, Yes. God ſaid to "him, If ſo, wilt thou bear chaſtiſement to expiate "their iniquities? according to what is written, "Iſ. 53. 4. Surely he bare our griefs. He anſwered, "I will endure them with joy (b)." Now, becauſe the Jews held, that God thus elected them from the beginning of the world, and ſent the Meſſiah, that none of them ſhould periſh, the apoſtle, to take from them all cauſe of boaſting againſt the Gentiles upon that account, declares the Gentiles were thus elected in Chriſt Jeſus, even before the foundation of the world, i. e. that he deſigned then to chuſe them to be his church and people, i. e. an holy people to the Lord.

Ibid. That we may be ſancti et immaculati, holy and unblameable.] There is a difference, ſaith St. Jerom, betwixt theſe two things, Parvuli quippe immaculati ſunt, quia integro corpore nullum fecerunt peccatum, et tamen non ſancti, quia ſanctitas ſtudio et labore comparatur: "So children are unblame"able as having done no ſin in the body, and yet "they are not holy, becauſe holineſs proceeds from "the will and the endeavour." This in other men would be ſtyled Pelagianiſm.

Ver. 5. [c] Εἰς υἱοθεσίαν, to the adoption of children.] This, in the ſcripture-phraſe, imports adoption to a bleſſed reſurrection, and a ſtate of immortality both of ſoul and body: For being ſons of God, ſaith St. Luke, chap. 20. 36. we are ſons of the reſurrection; and if ſons, ſaith the apoſtle, then heirs of God, and joint-heirs of Chriſt, Rom. 8. 16. 17. The revelation of the ſons of God is their future glory to be revealed at Chriſt's appearing, ver. 18. 19.; ſee Col. 3. 4. Their adoption is the redemption of their bodies from corruption, ver. 23. This being ſo, God's electing us in Chriſt before the foundation of the world, is his purpoſe before the world was made, or from the fall, to give to thoſe that ſhould believe in Chriſt this adoption, i. e. the redemption of their bodies from that mortality to which the fall of Adam had ſubjected them, Gen. 3. 15.; whence he is here ſaid to have elected us, προορίσας ἡμᾶς εἰς υἱοθεσίαν, foreordaining us to this adoption, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν, according to the good pleaſure of his will, or his free grace and favour, there being nothing in us, or even in our faith, that could deſerve this glorious adoption.

Ver. 7. [d] Τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν, redemption.] All mankind lying under a ſentence of condemnation on the account of ſin, all having ſinned, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God upon that account, Rom. 3. 23. it was neceſſary that ſomething ſhould be done to take away the guilt of ſin, and reconcile us to a God diſpleaſed with us for it, that ſo we, as to our perſons and performances, might find acceptance with him. This could not be done by any righteouſneſs of our own before faith in Chriſt, we being in Chriſt Jeſus created to good works, Eph. 2. 10. and therefore was neceſſary to be done by an act of grace on God's part, accepting us as righteous through faith in Chriſt, and juſtifying us freely through faith in his blood. Hence do the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament ſeem plainly to make our reconciliation, and ſo our acceſs to God depend on our being purged from the guilt of ſin by an atonement made by the blood of Chriſt for our iniquities, that ſo, they being pardoned, we may have peace with God, and freedom of acceſs to him. Chriſt ſuffered, ſaith St Peter, ἵνα ἡμᾶς προσαγάγῃ τῷ Θεῷ, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. i. e. to give us freedom of acceſs to God, for by him we have προσαγωγὴν, admiſſion to the Father, Eph. 2. 18.; ſee the note there. And God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes to them, 2 Cor. 5. 18. 21. and this reconciliation was effected by making Chriſt ἁμαρτίαν, a ſin-offering for us, though he knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God, or righteous with that righteouſneſs which God only will accept through faith in him; ſee the note on that verſe. And the author to the Hebrews having ſaid, that the covenant eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt was this, that he would be merciful to our iniquities, and remember our ſins no more, Heb. 10. 16. 17. and having thence inferred, that having thus obtained remiſſion for us by his blood, there was no need that he ſhould again make himſelf an offering for ſin, ver. 18. he adds, that therefore we may draw near with full aſſurance of faith, that we ſhall be accepted through this beloved, as having our hearts ſprinkled by his blood, ver. 19. 20. 21. 22. and therefore cleanſed from any guilt of conſcience on that account. And this remiſſion was alſo neceſſary that we might obtain that adoption of ſons, to which believers were afore appointed, becauſe into the new Jeruſalem can nothing enter that is defiled, or unclean; nor can there be any enjoyment of God till the blood of Chriſt hath cleanſed us from all ſin; and therefore, ſaith the apoſtle, he became the Mediator of the new covenant, that having ſuffered death for the redemption of us from the ſins we formerly had committed under the old covenant, they that were called might receive the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, Heb. 9. 15.

Ibid. Redemption through his blood.] Here St Jerom ſaith, Dupliciter ſanguis Chriſti, et caro intelligitur; vel ſpiritualis iſta atque divina de qua ipſe dixit, Caro mea eſt verè cibus, et ſanguis meus verè eſt potus; niſi manducaveritis carnem meam, et ſanguinem meum biberitis, non habebitis vitam æternam; vel caro et ſanguis quæ crucifixa eſt, et quæ militis effuſa eſt lancea; where he plainly diſtinguiſhes the fleſh and blood received in the ſacrament from the fleſh of Chriſt crucified and his blood ſhed upon the croſs, calling the firſt ſpiritual, in oppoſition to his material fleſh and blood.

Ver 8. ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ φρονήσει, in all wiſdom and prudence;] that is, ſay ſome, in the ſpiritual gifts of wiſdom and prudence. But though σοφία be reckoned among ſpiritual gifts, I find not that φρόνησις is ſo. Moreover, he hath thus abounded towards us in all wiſdom and prudence, ſaith the apoſtle, by making known to us the myſtery of his will; which leads to the other expoſition, that refers this to the manifold wiſdom of God, ſhewed in contriving this diſpenſation, chap. 3. 10. and his prudence in executing the counſel of his will by this means, viz. by ſending of his Son to be our Saviour. And whereas the Deiſts ſeem to ſide with the Socinians, in denying the wiſdom of this diſpenſation of God in ſending his Son into the world to ſuffer for our ſins, and by his ſufferings to make an atonement for them, it ſeemeth eaſy to demonſtrate, as well the manifold wiſdom, as the rich graee and favour of God to us in this diſpenſation. For,

1. It ſeemeth abſolutely requiſite, either that the ſubſtitution of another to ſuffer in our ſtead ſhould be admitted, or that we ourſelves ſhould ſuffer the reward of our iniquities, or that a full remiſſion and free pardon of our ſins ſhould be vouchſafed us without any ſuffering. Now, the admiſſion of another to ſuffer in our ſtead, is the thing pleaded for; if therefore that be granted, the wiſdom of that God who acteth all things according to the counſel of his will, muſt alſo be acknowledged in this diſpenſation: if we ourſelves muſt ſuffer the reward of our iniquity, that being death eternal, or death without recovery from it by a bleſſed reſurrection, all mankind muſt inevitably be ſubject to that puniſhment, all having ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 23. And, 3*dly*, Should God have iſſued out a free pardon, and given us a full remiſſion of our ſins, without any thing required by way of reparation for the violation of his law, he muſt have pardoned ſinners without any thing required to ſhew his hatred of ſin, and his reſolution not to let it go unpuniſhed, and ſo without ſufficient motive to deter us from it for the future; which ſeems not well conſiſtent with his holineſs and juſtice, and the relation of a governor, which ſeemeth plainly to require the vindication of his honour, and the preſervation of the laws he hath eſtabliſhed from contempt: it was then an act of grace not to require we ſhould perſonally ſuffer the reward of our iniquities; it was an act of wiſdom not to afford a full remiſſion of our ſin, without requiring any thing by way of reparation for the violation of his law; it muſt be therefore an act of wiſdom alſo to admit another to ſuffer in our ſtead; eſpecially if we conſider,

2. That, by the obedience of our Lord Chriſt to the death in our ſtead, all the great ends of puniſhment, deſigned by governors, were very ſignally obtained, and that with more advantage to God's glory, than if the puniſhment of our offences had been inflicted upon us, and ſo God by it may be truly

ſaid to have been ſatisfied; ſeeing that juſtice, which conſiſts in puniſhing for the tranſgreſſion of a law, is truly ſatisfied, when all thoſe ends for which the puniſhment of the offenders could be deſired are obtained. Now, the ends of puniſhment are,

1. Παραδειγμα, that they who ſuffer may be exemplary to others; and may, by what they endure, deter others from the commiſſion of the offences for which they ſuffer.

2. Νουθετια, that the offender may learn wiſdom by the rod; that the remembrance of what he ſuffered for it might prevent the repetition of his ſin, and that he may be fitted to embrace the counſel of our Saviour, Sin no more, leſt a worſe thing come upon thee.

3. Τιμωρια, the vindication of the prince's honour, and the preſervation of the laws he hath eſtabliſhed from contempt.

Now, 1. God, by this diſpenſation, hath given us the moſt effectual example to deter us from ſin. For, 1. By what our Saviour ſuffered in our ſtead, we ſee that God is certainly in earneſt when he threateneth death to ſinners; that he is thoroughly reſolved upon the puniſhment of ſin, ſince he inflicted ſo great puniſhment on the beloved of his ſoul, when he became our ſurety; for if, on this account, God ſpared not his only Son, Rom. 8. 32. we may be ſure he will not ſpare his ſtubborn enemies. But let us ſay with the Socinians, that Chriſt ſuffered all his bitter agonies, his ignominious and painful death, not as the puniſhment of ſin, or to make an atonement for it, but from a pure act of God's dominion; how will it follow hence, that God will ſurely puniſh ſin, and, with ſeverity, avenge the tranſgreſſions of his law, if he laid none of theſe ſufferings on Chriſt for the puniſhment of ſin? Seems it not ſtrange to ſay that the ſeverities laid on Chriſt without reſpect to ſin, ſhould be deſigned as an inſtance of God's ſeverity againſt ſin? "This ſhews," ſaith Crellius, "that he who laid ſuch bitter ſuffer-"ings on his innocent and well-beloved Son, will "inflict the ſevereſt puniſhments on wicked men (c)."

I anſwer, This will indeed follow in reſpect to ſufferings for the ſame cauſe; for if the righteous be recompenſed upon earth, much more the ſinner, and the wicked, Prov. 11. 31. If good Eli and holy David ſuffered ſo great puniſhments for their ſins, much more ſhall a wicked Cain, and profane Eſau. But will it follow, that becauſe holy Job ſuffered ſo much by way of trial, or St Paul for propagation of the Chriſtian faith, that therefore ſinners ſhall be obnoxious to greater puniſhment? Crellius (d) himſelf ſaith, Chriſt's ſufferings cannot be an exemplary puniſhment, becauſe abunde fuerint a Deo compenſatæ, they were ſo abundantly rewarded by God; and doth not the ſame reaſon ſhew they could not be a warning to us, if he only ſuffered with reſpect to the recompenſe of reward? for are the light afflictions which Chriſtians ſuffer here in proſpect of an eternal recompenſe, ever made an inſtance of God's ſeverity againſt ſin? Moreover, this example ſhews how inſupportable the puniſhment will be, which juſtice will inflict upon the ſinner; for if the apprehenſion of it produced ſuch agonies and conſternations in the ſoul of Chriſt, that God ſaw need to ſend an angel to ſupport him, Luke 22. 43. how muſt the ſinner ſink under the burthen, when it is laid upon his ſhoulders? If he who was the well-beloved Son of God, found it ſo dreadful to lie under the burden for ſome hours, to lie expoſed for ever to it muſt be far more intolerable.

2. Whereas inevitable ruin muſt have followed upon the execution of the deſerved puniſhment on the offending perſon, God, by this method, hath taken a fit way for reformation of the ſinner, which was the ſecond end of puniſhment; for what can be a more effectual motive to abſtain from ſin than this example, which repreſents the greatneſs of the provocation in the greatneſs of the puniſhment, and ſhews it is impoſſible the guilty perſon ſhould avoid the ſtroke of God's vindictive juſtice, or bear the weight of his almighty arm. But the Socinian tenet, which denies that God was angry with us on the account of ſin, or that he did require any puniſhment, or ſatisfaction, in order to the pardon of it, ſo far obſtructs this reformation, as it affords the ſinner hopes that he may not hereafter be angry with him on that account, or require any puniſhment or ſatisfaction in order to the pardon of his future ſins.

3. God by this diſpenſation hath ſufficiently conſulted the preſervation of his honour, and ſecured the reverence and obſervation of his laws; which was the third great end of puniſhment. He by declaring that he would not pardon our offences, without a ſatisfaction made for the violations of his law, hath fully vindicated his inſtitutions from contempt; ſeeing, by this example, he hath let all men know, that though he be a God of mercy and long-ſuffering, he will by no means clear the guilty, or let the tranſgreſſor of them go unpuniſhed.

Again, God by this diſpenſation hath vindicated

his honour more than if he had deſtroyed the ſinner, having more evidently ſhewed his hatred of, and great diſpleaſure againſt ſin, by puniſhing it ſo ſeverely in his own Son; for the greater is the inducement to remit the puniſhment of ſin, the greater muſt be his hatred of it who inflicts it. That therefore this conſideration, that he who ſuffered was his only beloved Son, would not induce him to remit the puniſhment, muſt be the ſtrongeſt demonſtration of his moſt perfect hatred of all iniquity.

But now remove this ſuppoſition, and ſay, with the Socinians, That God pardoned all mens ſins againſt him without any valuable conſideration, and with an abſolute freedom forgave men all the puniſhments his law had threatened to them, and ceaſed from all his anger and diſpleaſure againſt ſinners, without any atonement made unto or required by him; and how will it appear God was at all concerned to vindicate the honour of his laws, or ſhew his hatred againſt ſin? Hence Crellius (e) ſaw it neceſſary to own, that "the ſufferings of Chriſt are "a demonſtration of God's hatred of iniquity, be"cauſe our ſins were the cauſe of them;" but then he means not that they were the meritorious, but only that they were the final cauſe of his ſufferings; not that he ſuffered to prevail with God to pardon ſinners, but only to prevail with ſinners to break off their ſins. Now, hence indeed we may conclude, that God is very deſirous that ſinners ſhould deſiſt from ſin; but it follows not hence, that they muſt certainly expect the moſt heavy puniſhments if they do not; for if God could freely pardon the ſins of the whole world, without any ſatisfaction made to his offended juſtice; if there be nothing in God, as Rector of the univerſe, that requires he ſhould puniſh ſin, or ſhew his diſpleaſure againſt it; if the puniſhment of ſin depends purely upon his arbitrary will; why may not ſinners hope, notwithſtanding all that Chriſt hath ſuffered for their good, for a like act of his free grace hereafter, in the remiſſion of their ſins, without a reformation; and that God may be reconciled to them again, whilſt they continue in their ſins?

Since then no laws require the puniſhment of the offender himſelf, rather than of another, who is willing to be his ſurety, and ſuffer for him, on any other account than this; that the puniſhment of the offender, and not another for him, will only anſwer the forementioned ends of puniſhment; when that can equally be done by what another ſuffers, the law given muſt equally be ſatisfied, becauſe the ends of the law are equally obtained.

Ver. 9. From this ninth verſe it appears, that the election and fore-appointment, mentioned ver. 4. 5. is as large as is his manifeſtation of his will to the Gentiles; for as προώρισεν, he fore-appointed them to ſonſhip by Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 5. ſo here, προέθετο, he purpoſed before to make known his will unto them; ἐν αὐτῷ, in him, according to the ſame pleaſure of his will. Note alſo, that the words being not ἐν ἑαυτῷ, but ἐν αὐτῷ, ſhould not have been rendered in himſelf, that is, in God the Father, but in him, that is, in Chriſt, ver. 4. as the following and preceding verſes ſhew.

Ver. 10. [i] Ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι, to gather together in one.] i. e. God hath now, by the goſpel, accompliſhed the ſecret purpoſe of his will, to make the Gentiles fellow-heirs of the ſame body and privileges with the Jews; having reconciled both Jew and Gentile to him, in one body, on the croſs, Eph. 2. 14. 16. and ſo gathered together in one all things on earth; and by procuring for us that adoption, which is the redemption of the body from mortality, Rom. 8. 23. and making us like to the angels, by being children of the reſurrection, he hath ſummed up in one all things in heaven; for they being ſtyled the ſons of God, Job 1. 6. and 2. 1. and 38. 7.; becauſe they live already in their Father's houſe, and are an image of his immortality; when the reſurrection hath put us into that happy ſtate, that we can die no more, but are equal to the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the reſurrection, Luke 20. 35. 36. then ſhall we be made one with them. The interpretation of the ancient fathers ſeems to give this ſenſe, that God hath by this diſpenſation gathered under one head, viz. Chriſt, the head of the church, all things on earth, i. e. Jews and Gentiles; and all things in heaven, Chriſt being the head over angels and principalities, they being all miniſtering ſpirits to him. And this ſenſe ſeems agreeable to the like words, Col. 1. 20. See the note there.

Ver. 11. [k] Ἐκληρώθημεν, we have obtained an inheritance.] The Jews were before choſen of God, to be a people of inheritance, Deut. 4. 20. and a peculiar people, Exod. 19. 5. and as ſuch God provided for them an habitation and inheritance in the land of Canaan; but the Jewiſh church, being now to be diſſolved, the Jews being to be baniſhed from their own land, and the unbelieving Jews cut off from their relation to God as his people; the believing Jews were through faith in Chriſt to be choſen again, to be God's portion and inheritance, and his peculiar people, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Tit. 2. 14.; and to be admitted to a better inheritance, εἰς μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ φωτι, viz. to the portion of the in- heritance of ſaints in light, Col. 1. 12. And to this, ſaith the apoſtle, they believing were appointed, God having foreordained, that this inheritance ſhould be the portion of believers, and the conſequent of faith in Chriſt; by virtue of which we become the ſons of God.

Ibid. Ἐν ᾧ καὶ ἐκληρώθημεν.] Note alſo, that here the Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac, read ἐκλήθημεν, we are called; and the note of St Jerom here is this: "Vult Deus quæcunque ſunt rationis plena "et conſilii, vult ſalvari omnes, et in agnitionem "veritatis venire; ſed quia nullus abſque propria "voluntate ſervatur, liberi enim arbitrii ſumus, "vult nos bonum velle, et cum voluerimus, vult "in nobis ipſe ſuum implere conſilium."

Ver. 12. Τὸς προηλπικότας, who before truſted in Chriſt.] I ſee no reaſon why us and we, in the firſt ten verſes, may not ſignify believers in the general, and then us and we, ver. 11. may ſignify the believing Jews, who literally were προηλπικότοι, believers in Chriſt before the Gentiles; nor could any thing tend more to the eſtabliſhment of the freedom of the believing Gentiles from Judaical obſervances, than this conſideration, that the Jews themſelves could only obtain the benefits of Chriſtianity, by being choſen anew to be God's people, through faith in Chriſt.

Ver. 14. [1] Εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως, till the redemption of life.] There is a twofold ἀπολύτρωσις, redemption, mentioned here, and in other places of the New Teſtament. The firſt conſiſts in the remiſſion of ſin, or our redemption from the guilt of it; and of this we have mention, ver. 7. Rom. 3. 24. Col. 1. 14. The ſecond in the redemption of the body from corruption, that it may be partaker of eternal life; and of this the apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 8. 23. calling it the adoption, and ἀπολύτρωσιν τῦ σώματος, the redemption of the body; or the glorious deliverance of the ſons of God from the bondage of corruption, ver. 21. Thus, 1 Cor. 1. 30. Chriſt is made to us juſtification, καὶ ἀπολύτρωσις, and redemption; where redemption being diſtinguiſhed from, and following juſtification and ſanctification, it muſt import the redemption of the body from corruption. And Eph. 4. 30. where we are ſaid to be ſealed by the Spirit, εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως, to the day of redemption; the firſt delivers us from the guilt which condemns us to death; the ſecond confers the promiſe of eternal life on them who are thus delivered: Heb. 9. 15. περιποιῆν, is to ſave alive, and περιποίησις is preſervation, περιποίησις ψυχῆς, the ſalvation of the ſoul, Heb. 10. 39. So Gen. 12. 12. they will kill me, σὲ δὲ περιποιήσονται, but they will ſave thee alive; Numb. 22. 23. I had killed thee, ἐκεῖνον δὲ περιποιησάμην, but him I have ſaved alive; Joſhua 6. 17. As for Raab, περιποιήσασθε αὐτὴν, ye ſhall ſave her alive. Go ſlay Amalek, καὶ περιποιήσασθε ἐξ αὐτῦ, ye ſhall ſave none of them alive, 1 Sam. 15. 3. but Saul περιποιησάτω, ſaved Agag alive, ver. 9. 15. 2 Chron. 14. 13. The Ethiopians were overthrown, ὥστε μὴ εἶναι ἐν αὐτοῖς περιποίησιν, ſo that none of them were left alive. So Phavorinus, περιποιήσασθαι ἀντὶ τῦ διασώσασθαι. See alſo Pſal. 79. 11. Exod. 1. 16. Whence it appears, that ἀπολύτρωσις τῆ περιποιήσεως, is fitly rendered the redemption of life; or the redemption of thoſe who are to be preſerved from death.

Ibid. Ὅς ἐστιν ἀρραβὼν, who is the earneſt of our inheritance.] It was the cuſtom both of the Jews and Heathens, to confirm a promiſe or a bargain, by giving ſomething as an earneſt of, or obligation to perform it. This the Latins ſtyled arra, the Greeks ἀρραβὼν, καὶ ἐνέχυρον; ſee Plaut. Moſtell. act. 3. ſc. 1. Moles Glorioſ. act. 4. ſc. 1. The Jews Eraban: ſo when Judas had promiſed Tamar a kid, he gives her ἀρραβῶνα, an earneſt, that he would perform his promiſe, Gen. 38. 17. 18. And in like manner, God having promiſed to his faithful ſervants an eternal inheritance, gives them his Holy Spirit as the earneſt of it.

Ver. 15. [m] Ἀκούσας, having heard.] Hence ſome infer, That St Paul could not write this to the church of Epheſus, where he abode about three years, Acts 20. 31. and had converted many to the faith, throughout moſt parts of Aſia, Acts 19. 26. He therefore could not need to hear of their faith.

To this it is anſwered by the Reverend Dr Hammond, That the word ἀκούειν, as the Hebrew שָׁמַע, not only ſignifies to hear, but to underſtand and know; and therefore ſhould be rendered here, cum ſciverim, knowing, or having known your faith. And, indeed, the word bears this ſenſe undoubtedly in thoſe words, 1 Cor. 14. 2. He that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, ſpeaketh not to man, οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἀκούει, for no man underſtands him. So Gen. 11. 7. Let us confound their language, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσωσιν, that they may not underſtand one another's ſpeech. And chap. 42. 23. They knew not ὅτι ἀκούει, that Joſeph underſtood them, for he ſpake to them by an interpreter; ſee Deut. 28. 49. 2 Kings 18. 29. Jer. 5. 15. Ezek. 3. 6. But,

2. I anſwer, That this epiſtle was writ, not only to the metropolis of Epheſus, but to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus in the general, and more eſpecially to thoſe of the Leſſer Aſia; among whom many might have been converted by Apollos, and others, and St Paul might have only heard of it; he preaching only at Epheſus, and they of Aſia hearing the goſpel only by their reſort unto him there; ſee the note on Acts 19. 10. Yea, he inſinuates, that this epiſtle was read at Laodicea, and gives order for the reading of it at Coloſſe, Col. 4. 16; ſee the note there: at both which places he had never been, Col. 2. 1. And,

3. From the epiſtle of St Paul to Timothy it appears, pears, that a dangerous, and almoſt epidemical apoſtaſy from the purity of the Chriſtian faith happened among the Jewiſh churches in Aſia; which verified St Paul's prediction concerning them, That after his departure, not only grievous wolves ſhould enter in among them, but that among themſelves ſhould ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them, Acts 20. 29. 30.; and made it proper for him, after eight years abſence, to give thanks to God for the ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith, which he had heard of in the reſt. See 1 Theſſ. 3. 6.

Ver. 17. ᵃ Πνεῦμα σοφίας, the Spirit of wiſdom.] St Paul having aſſerted the neceſſity of the revelation of the Spirit, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God, they being not naturally to be perceived, 1 Cor. 6. 2.—12. doth therefore pray, that the Spirit of wiſdom, knowledge, and revelation, may be imparted to Chriſtians for that end.

Ver. 19. • Τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, the exceeding greatneſs of his power.] Some interpret theſe two verſes, of the power of God, working faith in believers, making it equal to that which effected the reſurrection of our Lord, and thence concluding, that we are merely paſſive in the whole work of our converſion: but as this power is not conſiſtent with perſuaſion, and a rational choice, and if it were exerted, would not render it praiſe-worthy in us to turn to God; nor could it truly and properly be ſaid, that we turned, but only that we were turned to God; ſo is not this expoſition agreeable to the words. For the apoſtle ſpeaks not of the power exerciſe on us, to render us believers, but of the power which ſhall be exerciſed on us who believe already: not of the power exerciſed upon our ſouls, to raiſe them from a death in ſin; but of the power to be exerciſed upon our bodies, to give them a glorious reſurrection to eternal life.

Ibid. Καὶ τί τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος, and what is the exceeding greatneſs of his power towards us.] The apoſtle doth not here pray, as Mr L. ſuggeſts in his paraphraſe, that the Epheſians might have the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation, that they might know the exceeding greatneſs of that power God "had "employed already in bringing them to the faith," for that they knew already; it being the mighty power of thoſe miracles they had ſeen done before their eyes, which induced the Gentiles to believe, Rom. 15. 18. 19. But he prays, that, by theſe means, they might know what at preſent they had no experience of, viz. how glorious was the object of their hope, how great their future inheritance, and how excellent was the power God would ſhew in raiſing them up from the dead, as he had done Chriſt, to the enjoyment of it.
